

MANY COMMENTARIES IN ONE:

UPON,

Joshuah.

Judges.

Ruth.

1 and 2 of Samuel.

1 and 2 of Kings.

1 and 2 of Chronicles.

1 Ezra.

1 Nehemiah.

1 Esther.

Setting forth,

The literall sence (according to the Hebrew) and therby correcting Translations where need requires, and clearing all obscure passages; reconciling differences, and diving into the mysteries:
The furth fetcht, and lesse usefull, being rejected; the divers Expositions of divs being examined; the best preferred, and others confuted; and where none satisfieth, new propounded.

Here are also many Observations for the use of edifying in Grace, all along inserted.

Being for all his, instar omnium, for the singular benefit of all that be studious of the Holy Scriptures.

Whereunto is added,

A Continuation of the History of things most memorable (after NEHEMIAH his Principality) amongst the Jews, and the Monarchs of the world, till the time of our SAVIOUR'S Passion; and Ierusalem's destruction.

Being both profitable for the understanding of divers Prophecies, and the manifest examples of Gods judgements occurring in those times, upon the notoriously wicked: And delightfull for the variety of matters.

By John Mayer, Doctor of Divinity.

LONDON,

Printed by John Legatt, and Richard Cotes; and are to be sold by William Leak, at his shop, the signe of the Crown in Fleetstreet, between the two Temple Gates. MDCXLVII.

TO THE HIGH AND HONOURABLE COURT OF PARLIAMENT:

And by Name,

(As to them, to whom he is most obliged)

TO

*Sir Herbottle Grimstone, Knight and Baronet.
Mr. Maurice Barrow, Esquire, his ever honoured patron.
And Mr. Herbottle Grimstone, Esquire.*

JOHN MAYER, doth in all humility, dedicate this his labour in the Lord.

He saying it true (Right Honourable) in divine things, of that which is good we cannot have too much; and if a light in a dark room be good, the accession of more light is better and more delightfull. My hope therefore is, that to you, who have expressed your desire to have the Church of England furnished with Books in this kinde, the addition of another will not be unacceptable. This work of mine, both in this part and another that should have come out before it, from the beginning of the Bible hitherto, was well nigh, if not altogether finished, before any other speaking in the English tongue in this kinde, upon so many Books of Scripture together: but there were enemies like Tobiah and Sanballat, who envied the coming out of any thing,

The Epistle Dedicatory.

whereby the Laitie might attain too much light of knowledge, that hindered it, till some years expired under worthy Darius, who set his minde more upon the building of the Temple, then any of his predeceffours the Kings of Persia. For although under your auspicious government, the Presses have been open for publishing any good Books for illumination and edification, yet the times have been troublous almost hitherto, so that there hath been little encouragement to publish Volumes in this kinde, however they have swarmed with Pamphlets of all sorts. Therefore having now by Your meanes through Gods blessing, more tranquillitie, which he for his mercies sake establish and perpetuate, and through tranquillitie, opportunitie to set up our lights before hid under a bushell, how can I, but in gratitude for so great a benefit through which mine comes now forth, inscribe it to so Honourable and worthy a Senate; and so devote it first to your use and service, and then of all well-affected Christians, who I know upon your approbation, will be excited the rather to look after it for their own good. Be pleased then (Right Honourable and Worshipfull) at your vacant times to reade it, as a piece, wherein haply yee may see more into the Oracles of God, then in any one Book yet extant, and if Kings must by Gods precept be daily in reading the Book of God, whereupon David made it his continuall meditation, and Alphonsus King of Aragon and Sicilia, read the whole Bible with the ordinarie Glosses 14. times over; Yee must not think it beneath your greatnesse, but that it stands well with it, to sequester some time daily, to reade both the text and glosses, which ye have as helps to more illumination, that Ye may the better know, how all things ought to go according to Gods will in Church, and Common-wealth, and order them accordingly. Wherein if this of mine may be any help unto You, or to build You up, or any of Gods people in knowledge and grace, I shall much rejoyce, and that it may be so, shall not cease to pray to Him who is able to make you abound in all wisdom and spirituall knowledge more and more.

Deut. 17.

Your honours most humbly devoted in all duty and service,

JOHN MAYER.

TO THE READER.

IF any that make account of my unworthy labours, (as many I know do) shall marvell, why after so long expectation of a more full body, only one part is at length brought forth, and that a Pharex, Zarah, who made offer to come forth, first plucking in his hand again. This is come so to passe, because they to whom the Midwives office belonged to help to bring forth these children of the mind into the world, were unwilling for the greatnesse of the charge and instability of the times, to do their office herein. So that unlesse I had met with a kinde friend, who most willingly supplied their defect, it had stuck in the birth, and not come into the light to this day, either in whole or in part. Moreover, it is by some doubted, that as in time of plenty even the poorest buyers are scornfull, and taking up in their hands very good wheat, cast it down again and depart, letting it stand as not good enough for their use, so there being now plenty of books of this kinde, Readers will do, by such as are published more, as counting them superfluous. So that I thought it not good by bringing too much into the Market at once, to cause a nausea and scornfull disdain, but by bringing some of my grain forth at once, and that not ordinary, but most scarce in our Book-markets, to whet buyers on hereby, intending, as I shall see this to take amongst them, either to bring forth the other upon the Pentateuch, or to reserve it for my own particular use. For I hear some saying, that they will buy no English Cōmentaries, because there be enough Latin ones upon all parts of the holy Scriptures, and they count it some disparagement to have English in their Libraries. To such I say, it is to bee granted indeed, that for a theologue to have none but English books is a disparagement, as arguing one that knowes none other but his mother tongue, and therefore illiterate, and an intruder into the ministeriall office, sith as Ierome hath it, he cannot be counted learned, that doth not callere Lin-

Eff. 3. 8. 12.

A. 2.

quam Latinam, Græcā & Hebræam, as not being able to see into the sense of the letter of the Word with his own but with others eyes, and therefore he must be forced to take up things of greatest moment, committed to his dispensation upon trust, which for any seer is a shame to do. Yet to reject Bookes written upon the Word, hoc nomine, because they are English, is as an intimation to the people of dislike, that they should know what is written, as not being safe for them, as Eliakim, and Shebāh were grieved at Rabsakeh his blasphemies uttered in a language understood by all men, whereas they do most Apostlike, who open divine mysteries so as that every one may hear, and read them in their own language. Therefore in avoiding disparagement to themselves, they disparage the holy Word of God, and the opening of it, as being of matters dangerous, and of evill consequence for the common sort to know, yea they hereby bring upon themselves the thing feared, seeing there cannot be a greater disparagement to a protestant Minister, then to seem to side with Hosw and Harding, & other popish Doctors, in averring that it is dangerous for the people to read the Scriptures, or to have them in their mother tongue, who yet for matter of annotations hereupon, come somewhat short of such, as appears by the Rhemes Testament, being common in their Libraries. And whereas they say, there are Commentaries enough in Latin and Greek, there are not so many though Hebrew of the Rabbins be added also, but that the writing of more in any language, may be usefull both to the learned and unlearned, if they be not idem per idem, as indeed the manner of many Expositours is, one to follow another, as Oecumenius, Theophilact, and he Chrysostom, Gorran, Thomas Aquinas, and all the ancients almost, Ierom; and the new Writers, Calvin. But who so shall please to peruse this of mine, shall finde besides the light set up by Commentatours ancient and modern, of which I confesse, I have also made great use, some new light, enabling to judge and chuse the best, and in many particulars, leaving them all to go a new way more right right, hitherto untraced, to his more full satisfaction and enlightening, by more diligent taking heed to the original, and avoiding all seducement by Translations. Some others there are that say, we have already Bookes lately come out upon all the Bible, and therefore they shall suffice us. And I deny not, but that some good light is given by them, as writing in such brevity can do, yet whosoever would read to fill himself with more perfect knowledge of the divine mysteries, and to gather most comfort from them, hath need to read others also, which are presented in this to spare the Readers paines, and improved in fine to bolt out the truth in all things, so as hath not yet by any one been done. Lastly, there be others that content themselves with the Bible, not caring for any other light, then what they can finde by the reading thereof. But in thus doing, there is danger either of reading and not understanding, and so not profiting, for legere & non intelligere est negligere, or else of perverting the holy Scriptures for want of a right knowledge, to damnation. Wherefore let us all reade the Scriptures with all assiduity, according to Ioh. 5. 39. Revel. 1. 3. and to improve our reading to our most illumination and comfort, and setting in the truth against errours, so abounding in these times, labour to understand what we reade, by the help of Annotations or Commentaries, such as whose means and leisure will afford it, furnishing themselves with and reading more, although abundantly supplied already; they of lesse meanes who cannot have variety, with one, which may be unto them equivalent to all, in which name I do, non iactando, sed veritatem dicendo, humbly commend this unto thee, as Luke his to Theophilus, after many written by others. And I doubt not, but whosoever thou art, who shalt purchase and make use of it, thou wilt receive so full satisfaction hereby, that thou wilt say, as he who hath drunken new wine, I will drink no more old, for the new is better.

To the Reader.

Vale.

A Ca-

Act. 8.

2 Pet. 3. 16.

Elz. 38. 12.

Ag. 1.

quam Latinam, Græcam & Hebraicam, as not being able to see into the sense of the letter of the Word with his own but with others eyes, and therefore he must be forced to take up things of greatest moment, committed to his dispensation upon trust, which for any seer is a shame to do: Yet to reject Bookes written upon the Word, hoc nomine, because they are English, is as an intimation to the people of dislike, that they should know what is written, as not being safe for them, as Eliakim, and Shebāh were grieved at Rabshakeh his blasphemies uttered in a language understood by all men, whereas they do most Apostlike, who open divine mysteries so as that every one may hear, and read them in their own language. Therefore in avoiding disparagement to themselves, they disparage the holy Word of God, and the opening of it, as being of matters dangerous, and of evill consequence for the common sort to know, yea they hereby bring upon themselves the thing feared, seeing there cannot be a greater disparagement to a protestant Minister, then to seem to side with Hosiu and Harding, & other popish Doctors, in averring that it is dangerous for the people to read the Scriptures, or to have them in their mother tongue, who yet for matter of annotations hereupon, come somewhat short of such, as appears by the Rhemes Testament, being common in their Libraries. And whereas they say, there are Commentaries enough in Latin and Greek, there are not so many though Hebrew of the Rabbins be added also, but that the writing of more in any language, may be usefull both to the learned and unlearned, if they be not idem per idem, as indeed the manner of many Expositours is, one to follow another, as Occumenius, Theophilact, and he Chrysostom, Gorran, Thomas Aquinas; and all the ancients almost, Ierom; and the new Writers, Calvin. But who so shall please to peruse this of mine, shall finde besides the light set up by Commentatours ancient and modern, of which I confesse, I have also made great use, some new light, enabling to judge and chuse the best, and in many particulars, leaving them all to go a new way more right right, hitherto untraced, to his more full satisfaction and enlightening, by more diligent taking heed to the original, and avoiding all seducement by Translations. Some others there are that say, we have already Bookes lately come out upon all the Bible, and therefore they shall suffice us. And I deny not, but that some good light is given by them, as writing in such brevity can do, yet whosoever would read to fill himself with more perfect knowledge of the divine mysteries, and to gather most comfort from them, hath need to read others also, which are presented in this to spare the Readers paines, and improved in fine to bolt out the truth in all things, so as hath not yet by any one been done. Lastly, there be others that content themselves with the Bible, not caring for any other light, then what they can finde by the reading thereof. But in thus doing, there is danger either of reading and not understanding, and so not profiting, for legere & non intelligere est negligere, or else of perverting the holy Scriptures for want of a right knowledge, to damnation. Wherefore let us all read the Scriptures with all assiduity, according to Ioh. 5. 39. Revel. 1. 3. and to improve our reading to our most illumination and comfort, and settling in the truth against errors, so abounding in these times, labour to understand what we read, by the help of Annotations or Commentaries, such as whose means and leisure will afford it, furnishing themselves with and reading more, although abundantly supplied already; they of lesse meanes who cannot have variety, with one, which may be unto them equivalent to all, in which name I do, non iactando, sed veritatem dicendo, humbly commend this unto thee, as Luke his to Theophilus, after many written by others. And I doubt not, but whosoever thou art, who shalt purchase and make use of it, thou wilt receive so full satisfaction hereby, that thou wilt say, as he who hath drunken new wine, I will drink no more old, for the new is better.

To the Reader.

Vale.

A Ca-

Act. 8.

2 Pet. 3. 16.

A Catalogue of Commentatours and other Authours cited upon Joshua, Judges, Ruth, and 1 and 2 Sam. Sec.

A ugustine.	Damasce.	R. Iosaphan.	Rabbini.
Ambrosius.	Dionys. Carthuf.	R. Kimhi.	Rupertus.
Anastafius.	Dion.	Lyra.	Quinquarboreus.
Appianus.	Dorotheus.	R. Levi.	Salianus.
Arrianus.	Diodorus Sicul.	Livius.	Salustius.
Aristotle.	Dymianus.	Mafius.	Serrarius.
Abricomius.	Ensebius.	Magellianus.	Septuagen.
Arius Montanus.	Eliaius.	Melchior Gann.	Sereus.
Aulus Gellius.	Estius.	Mercerus.	Sigonius.
Angelomus.	Eutropius.	P. Martyr.	Sulpitius.
Apuleius.	Epiphanius.	Macrobius.	Stephanus.
Ammianus.	Ferus.	Munster Cosm.	Rab. Solomon.
R. Abraham.	Freculphus.	Mercator.	Rab. Samuel.
T. Aquinas.	Fundanus.	Menander.	Synabo.
Bernardus.	Florus.	Nazianzen.	Suttonius.
Beda.	Gloss. Ordin.	Naucterus.	Tacitus.
Berosus.	Gratian.	Origen.	Theodore.
Bonfrerius.	Ben. Gerson.	Paulus Orasius.	Tertullian.
Brocardus.	Gregorius.	Osiander.	Tostatus.
Burgensis.	Genebrard.	Pagninus.	Thurpinus.
Borrbau.	Genev. Notes.	Plato.	Tigur. interp.
Benjamin. Ind.	Fr. Georgius.	Pierius.	Tormellus.
Comestor.	Gorion.	Pineda.	Tranquillus.
Calvin.	Georg. Genist.	Plutarch.	Traditione Hebr.
Clayfostome.	Hugo de Sant. viff.	Procopius.	Thucydides.
Cald. paraph.	Herodotus.	Patriarchs travels.	Vasquez.
Catullus.	Hieronym.	Prosper.	Varabius.
Cajetan.	Hugo Cardin.	Plinius.	Valesius.
Cicero.	Iunius.	Philastrius.	Velleius.
Clemens Alexand.	Iosephus.	Pellicanus.	Willet.
Cyprian.	Idorus.	Pausanias.	Wolpinus.
Ctesias.	Ionathas Syru.	Polybius.	Xenophon.
Serhus Calvisius.	Iohannes Hierosol.	Rabanus.	Zonaras.
Q. Curtius.	Iustinus.

A COMMENTARY
UPON THE BOOKE OF IOSHUAH.

The PREFACE.

According to the title of this Book, the Hebrewes hold, that Iosuah was the Author of it, so likewise Comestor, Lyranus, and many other Learned men. And this is proved, First, from Chap. 24. 26. where Iosuah is expressly said to have written all these words. Secondly, from Ecclesiasticus 46. 1. where Iosuah is said to have been the successor of Moses in prophecies, and to write the sacred History is a kind of prophecy; wherefore by the Hebrewes, this Book of his is numbred amongst the Prophets; of whose Books they number eight, Iosuah, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Isaiab, Jeremiab, Ezekiel, and the Booke of the twelve smaller Prophets. For they distinguish the Canonick Scriptures, as Comestor hath it, into three ranks, 1. Of the Law, by which name they call the five Books of Moses. 2. Of the Prophets before-named. 3. Of the Hagiographa, or holy Writings, which are nine, Daniel, David, Hester, Esdras, Job, Chronicles, and three Books of Solomon. Hereupon, and upon the Apocryphall Books, Hugo hath these Verses following:

Schol. Niss.

Hugo Card.

*Quinque libros Moses, Iosua, Judicum, Samuelem, Et Ma'achim, tres precipuos, bis sexque Prophetas, Hebraei censet reliquis praeellere libris.
Quinque vocat Legem, reliquos vult esse Prophetas.
Post Hagiographa sunt Daniel, David, Hester, & Esdras, Job, Paralipomenon, & tres libri Solomonis.
Lex vetus his libris perfectè tota tenetur.
Restant Apocrypha, Iesur, Sapientia, Pastor, Et Machabeorum libri, Judith atque Tobias.
Hi quia sunt dubii, sub Canone non numerantur;
Sed quia vera canonicus ecclesia suscipit illos.*

Junius.

Calvin.

But here, unlesse Ruth be understood under the Judges, and Ezra and Nebemiah by Esdra, this will be no perfect enumeration: but Ruth is by Ierome reckoned with Judges, who numbeth as many Books in the old Testament, as there be Letters in the Hebrew Alphabet, viz. 22. Prolog. in Sam. And as for Esdra, hereby are commonly understood Ezra and Nebemiah, and the two Books of Esdra, which are amongst the Apocryphal, being called the first, second, third, & fourth books of Esdra; but the two latter are justly put amongst the Apocryphal, and not amongst the Canonical books, as being not found, as Junius hath it, either in Hebrew or Greek; and the one of them almost nothing else, but a repetition of that set forth in Ezra; & the other erreth so far in the very entrance in setting down the Genealogie of Ezra so diversly from that in Ezra, that any man may easily perceive that not to be the true, but a supposititious Esdra that wrote it. But to return again to Ioshuah, why should not he most probably be thought the Author of this Book, seeing he was a most godly Judge, and set up in the roome of Moses, who so carefully had written the gifts of God before for the people of Israel, and therefore it might well be expected, that he should doe the like for the famous things wrought in his time. Calvin contrariwise thinketh, that Eleazar wrote this book, and not Ioshuah; because, Chap. 15. there is somewhat set down of the expugnation of Hebron, which was not done till after the death of Ioshuah, and the death of Ioshuah, Chap. 24. But the inserting of this, and supplying of that by some other holy Writer, is no argument, that the book was not written by Ioshuah, no more then the supplying of some things by others in the Books of Moses.

CHAP. I.

V. 1.

After the death of Moses the Servant of the Lord, it came to passe, that the Lord spake to Joshua the son of Nun, &c.

Scholast. Hist.
Lyra.
Ferus.

Ioshuah was otherwise called Osheab, Numb. 13. 8. 16. Moses called him Ioshuah, he was of the Tribe of Ephraim, the Septuagint call him Iesw the son of Nan; and it is to be understood that Ioshuah and Iesw are all one, these two names come of the same Hebrew Radix, signifying to save, and Nan and Nun, saith Comestor, are one. It is noted by Lyra, that he was the first that ever was called by this name, and likewise by Ferus, the providence of God being singular herein, that a Iesw, a figure of our Iesw and Saviour should bring the people of Israel into the Land of promise. He was a figure of Iesw, saith Ferus, 1. In subduing the Amalekites. 2. In bringing the people into Canaan. 3. In dividing that Land amongst them. There was another Iesw afterwards the son of Sirach, a figure of Christ for his learning and wisdom; and Iesw the son of Iosedek the High Priest, a figure of his Priesthood: Of others also thus called, see 1 Chron. 24. 11. 2 Chron. 31. 15. and my notes upon Numb. 13. 16. This Ioshuah was also a figure of Christ's victorious rising and ruling over all his Enemies; as his death and passion had been in the books of Moses figured out seven times. 1. In Cains killing Abel. 2. In the troubles of Noah. 3. In the sacrificing of Isaac. 4. In the afflictions of Ioseph. 5. In the killing of the Paschall Lamb. 6. In the striking of the rock to bring out waters. 7. In the brazen Serpent, so Ferus. And Origen noteth, that the name of Ioshua, or Iesw, is first mentioned, Exod. 17. when Moses sent him to fight against the Amalekites whom he overcame, and not Moses; Iesw, and not the Law subduing spirituall enemies, being noted hereby. And he admireth the Divine Providence, in that none of the holy ones that lived before, was called by this name, but he first of all others, that brought the Israelites into Canaan, evidently shewing both him and his gifts here related in this book to be mystically, figuring out our Iesw and his acts. At the beginning of this verse is a conjunction copulative, rendered [now] to shew this to be a continuation of the former History of Moses by his successor Ioshuah. For the time when this was spoken, Lyra will have it to be before the dayes of mourning were ended; but Hugo, the mourning for Moses being now ended, which seemeth the most probable, because

Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.

cause Deut. 34. 8. Before this it is said, the dayes of mourning for Moses were ended. And if we compare the time of Moses his death, which I have there shewed, according to the Hebrews, was the seventh day of the moneth Adar, which was their last moneth; with the time of the peoples coming over Jordan, which was the tenth day of the fifth moneth, Josh. 4. 19. we shall find that there were passed 30 dayes of mourning, and 3 dayes for their preparing and passing over Jordan, according to the time set, Chap. 1. 11. [The Lord spake to Joshua] twice before this Joshua was appointed to this Office of ruling and leading the people, Numb. 27. 18. and Deut. 31. 7. and to encourage him the more, the Lord speaketh to him again; and as Ferus hath it, that the people might the more readily obey him; and lastly, that hee might the more diligently goe about this his office; and in that hee the Minister of Moses is thus preferred, he noteth mystically, that onely such as subject themselves to the law of God, are fit to rule: and therefore Jesus himself first served and washed his Disciples feet. And herein Joshua figured Christ, who was the Minister of Moses, when he was made subject to the law, Gal. 4. for the law is called Moses, Luke 16. 31. so Origen.

Moses my servant is dead: now therefore arise, &c.

Here both Lyra and Hugo take occasion to confute those that say Moses was damned for his sin at the waters of Meribab, because we read not of his repentance; for the contrary appeareth by this honorable testimony which the Lord giveth of him, calling him his Servant. And August. Qu. 1. gathereth hereupon, that God punisheth with death his deare servants corporally, and yet taketh them to himself as vessels of honour. Likewise Comestor confuteth both them, and those that held Moses not to be dead, but translated, as Enoch, and Elias; for the Lord saith, he is dead. And unto these Ferus addeth a third error, which is also here confuted, viz. that the law was not of God, but of the Devil; for the Lord himselfe testifieth, that Moses who gave it, was his servant. Mystically by Moses, understand the law of Moses, which is as an husband dead, Rom. 7. 1. under the Gospel, and now Jesus commeth in his place. [Arise, passe over this Jordan, thou and all the people.] Some thinke that Joshua was now humbled in prayer, and so God biddeth him [arise,] which is not improbable; but by this speech he quickneth him to a diligent care in executing the weighty Office whereunto he called him. By all the people, are not meant all without exception, for some had their possessions on this side Jordan, Numb. 32. but all the rest were now to go over, & al the men of War of those Tribes, that remain as hereafter followeth, v. 12, 13, &c.

Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, have I given unto you, &c.

The very words of this verse, and the next are had before, Deut. 11. 24, 25. where Moses speaketh unto the people, as the Lord here to Joshua. And he saith, I have given you, to note the certainty, as if they were already in possession thereof. The Hebrews, (saith Lyra) by all places that they should tread upon, understand all Countreys of the world; and this was in part fulfilled in Solomon, when he reigned over all, and shall perfectly be fulfilled in the dayes of the King Christ, of whose earthly Kingdome they dreame; but how false this is, the next words declare, From Lebanon and the wilderness to the great River, &c. of which bounds, see Deut. 11. 2.

Be strong and of a good courage, &c.

The Lord knew that the people now to be led by Joshua, were very perverse, and the enemies to be subdued many and mighty; and therefore he confirmeth Joshua with many words, and most ample promises; and the rather, because Moses so holy a man, yet in the time of provocation by the people had shewed great weaknesse. The Lord saith, that none should be able to stand before him all the dayes of his life; for after his death, the people finned, and then their enemies prevailed, as is shewed sundry times in the book of Judges.

That thou mayest observe to doe according to all the law that Moses my servant commanded thee, &c.

That Joshua might not be pusillanimous, but courageous, he hath a speciall charge

Ferus.

Note.

V. 2.

Lyra.
Hugo Card.

Schol. Hist.

Ferus.

V. 3.

Lyra.

V. 4.

V. 6.

V. 7.

Calvin.
V. 3.

charge given him to attend to the law of God, and to do it in all things with all care and diligence. And hereby obedience to God, and subjection to his law, is shewed to be the ground of all true fortune, the adventures that are made without this, being nothing but temerity & rashness; which howsoever it may prevaile at the beginning, yet it shall never be able finally to bring any thing to good effect, as Calvin noteth. And to the end, that the law of God may be observed by him, he is charged to read and to meditate thereupon day and night, and so it is promised that he should prosper in all his undertakings: See the like charge given to Kings, Deut. 17. 18, 19.

V. 9.

Bee strong and of a good courage, have not I commanded thee?

Masius.

Hebrai.

Serrarius.

Hugo, Carpini.

Calvin, Iunius.

Masius, Pagnin.
Chald.

V. 10, 11.

When God is the Author of any expedition, men may be courageous indeed, and feare nothing, as being sure to prevaile. For the words and phrases here used; [that thou maist observe to doe:] some distinguish betwixt these two words expounding [observe] of abstaining from the evill forbidden, and to doe of performing things commanded; but Masius better understandeth the first word of that study and care, which maketh way to performance; and the second of the due execution thereof. Turne not from it to the right hand or to the left; By turning to [the right hand,] the Hebrews understand any adding to the Word of God; and by turning to the left, any taking away therefrom. Serrarius by the first understandeth any going out of the way of Gods commandments for gaine; by the second any going out for feare of danger or adversity suffered: So likewise Hugo, for prosperity or adversity, the first seemeth to be grounded upon Deut. 4. 2. and therefore is rather to be approved, [that thou maist prosper;] the Vulgar Latine for this hath, that thou maist understand all that thou dost, or doe wisely in all things; thus also the Septuagint, and the word תִּשְׁכִּיל here used, signifieth first and chiefly to understand; and it is used also for to prosper, as 1 Sam. 18. 14, 30. Calvin and Junius are rather for prospering, but because there is another word for prosperous, v. 8. then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, או תַּצְלִיחַ this is better expounded of understanding; and there, that thou maist make thy way prosperous, and be wise, or doe wisely; and to keep the law, and to cleave to it, is said to bee wisdom and understanding, Deut. 4. 6. thus also Masius and the Tygrine interpreters, and Pagnine, but the Chaldee is for prospering. This booke shall not depart from thy mouth; that is, thou shalt be frequent in reading and speaking thereof, and in instructing others therein. And this duty, as it is first and chiefly commended to Rulers, so it is to all people, Deut. 13. 9, 16. Exod. 6. 6. Deut. 11. 18, &c.

Then Iosuah commanded the Officers of the people, saying, Passe through the Host, and command the people that they prepare Victuals, for within three dayes ye shall passe over this Jordan, &c.

August. qm. 2. in Josh.

Lyra, Calvin

The word שׁוֹמְרֵי here rendred Officers, is in the Vulgar Latine Princes, Augustine calleth them Scribes, and so doe the Septuagint, but of this enough before upon Exod. 18. they were some set to rule over the rest; and therefore are bidden to command them. St. Augustine understanding this to have been before the sending out of the Spyes to Jericho, moveth a question how they could within three dayes from hence goe over Jordan, when as the spies must have some time to goe and search, and returne, and it is expressely said before their return, that they hid themselves three dayes in the mountaines, Chap. 2. 22. and three dayes after this, the people have direction to passe over, Chap. 3. 2. And he answereth, that Iosuah thought happily, that the spies would have returned sooner; and presuming upon this, hee set three dayes, and not by direction from the Lord, but it fell out that the dayes before their passing over, were many more. And Moses he saith, in like manner erred once, doing as a man, when he took the burthen of hearing all causes upon himselfe, untill that he had better direction; and this is followed by Hugo and many others. But Lyra and Calvin more soundly weighing the premises, how seriously the Lord promised to be with Iosuah in all things, hold that hee would not now suffer him him to erre in the beginning of his rule, lest his credit should hereby bee infringed amongst the people, and therefore that this of his appointing the people to be ready against the third day to passe over Jordan, is here set downe by anticipation, the spies being sent out six or seven dayes before this, even whilst the dayes of mourning for Moses lasted, and at their returne, and not before, this preparation was commanded against the third day; and so all things done, Chap. 2. come in by a parenthesis, that which was done before, being set down after, and accordingly it may be read, Joshuah the son of Nun, had sent out of Shittim two men, &c. Chap. 2. 1. and the number of three dayes spoken of againe, Chap. 3. 2. thus agreeth excellently with this, as a repetition hereof, and a more distinct declaration of his proceedings; and being thus understood, the former count of the time spoken of from the death of Moses till their coming over Jordan will hold, which otherwise cannot. Moreover, it had been a point of temerity, and of no wisdom in Joshuah, to set a time of passing over into the land of Canaan, before the way prepared by sending out spies; an error, that a man so full of the spirit of wisdom could not possibly fall into. [Prepare you victualls,] seeing they were fed with Manna from day to day, even till the fifth day after that they had passed over Jordan, Chap. 5. 12. it may be doubted what victualls Joshuah would have them to prepare; for if Manna, that might not be kept all night, if any other sustenance, where should they have it, or what need had they of it, when as they were fed with Manna? Masius saith that they might buy some other victualls of the Edomites or Moabites. Bonfrerius, that they had taken the spoiles of two Kings of the Amorites, amongst which doubtlesse they found good store of corne and cattell for food, and of these victualls he speaketh. The first is most improbable, because Edom and Moab were most infense against them: the next cannot be disliked, for by reason of their passage, they had no time that day to gather Manna, and therefore they must be otherwise supplied. If it be said, seeing they had other victualls now, what needed Manna still? I answer, it is likely that they had not sufficient of the prey taken for so great a multitude, but onely for a short time, for so soone as they came where they might have enough, the Manna ceased, Chap. 5. 12, 13.

And to the Reubenites, Gadites, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, spake Joshua, &c.

Here is nothing but a commemoration of the condition set by Moses before to these Tribes, and by them yeelded to, viz. that they should goe armed over Jordan before their brethren, all the men of warre amongst them, their wives, children and cattell being left in the land already given them for an inheritance. But whereas Moses required that they should all goe to these Warres, Numb. 32. 20, 21. to which they yeelded, Joshuah here requireth onely all the mighty men of valour to goe, and Chap. 4. 13 there went but about 40000; whereas of the tribe of Gad alone there were numbred of able men to beare Armes 40000, of Reuben 43000, and of halfe Manasseh 26000: so that the greater part went not, herein Joshuah did according to the meaning, which was, that a sufficient company of the most able should go, the rest staying at home to defend the Countrey newly conquered against their enemies, who might otherwise soon have gathered together, and subdued those parts againe, and have made a prey of their wives, children, and cattell, as was touched before upon Numb. 26.

Ye shall passe before your brethren armed.

He requireth them not to follow, but to goe before the rest to the warre to shew their alacrity, as Calvin hath it. The words כִּפְנֵי אֶחָיִכֶּם signifie in the sight of your brethren, but the event Chap. 4. 12. sheweth, that it was meant in the forefront, and that they should bee the first to assault the enemy. And to this doe they assent, and to whatsoever Joshuah should command them, promising to obey him in all things as they obeyed Moses. If this shall seem, saith Calvin, to have been a point of vain-glory in them, and not true, for they had often rebelled against Moses; hee answereth well, that they were their Fathers who had been rebellious, and were consumed in the wilderness; but they

Qu.

*And. Masius.
Bonfrerius.*

V. 12.

V. 14.

Calvin.

V. 16. 17.

V. 18.

Nic de Lyra.
The mystery.

Ferus.

they their children being taught by their example were made more obedient : neither is this a vain-glorious ostentation of their obedience to Moses, but a declaration of their readinesse to subject themselves to Joshuah, whom they thus acknowledged to bee his successor appointed by the Lord ; and therefore worthy of all praise. And they conclude most piously, praying the Lord to be with Joshuah, as he had been with Moses, and exhorting him to bee of a good courage, and menacing such amongst them as would not obey him, with death. Of all this an excellent Allegory is made thus by Lyra. Joshuah or Jesus was a figure of our Jesus, both in his name and gestis, as hee must passe over Jordan; so Jesus was baptized of John in Jordan; and as all the people must passe over with him, so all the people of Jesus are baptized: the victualls which they must prepare, are the rudiments of faith, wherein all that are adultis, must be instructed before their baptisme; the third day setteth forth the time of grace, for the time of the Law of nature, and of the Mosaicall Law, were the two first dayes, upon this third all are baptized, and so passe into the heavenly Canaan, in hope here, and in soul, being delivered from all guilt and punishment at the time of death, and the whole compositum of soule and body at the end of the world. By the Reubenites, signifying Seers, are set forth the Prophets; by the Gadites, the Patriarchs; and by the Manassites, other saints under the Old Testament, who all passed through Baptisme in a figure, 1 Cor. 10. Note here, that Lyra held no paines to bee suffered in Purgatory after death. Ferus will have the three times of instituting Joshuah to his Dukedome, to figure out, 1. The conception of Jesus by the holy Ghost. 2. His Baptisme with the holy Ghost. 3. His resurrection, when all things were put under his feet, and none were able to resist him.

CHAP. II.

V. 1.

Rabbini.

Hieronym.
Testam.

And. Masius.

Calvin.

AND Joshua sent two men out of Shittim, to spy secretly, saying, Go view the Land, even Jericho, &c.

The Rabbins say, that these two were Caleb and Phinees, but that is uncertaine, the place, from whence, is otherwise called the plaines of Moab. At what time this was done, hath been already shewed upon Ch. 1. v. 10, 11. [to spy secretly] here, because the word סְרִישׁ put for secretly, signifieth also to feigne ones selfe dumb, the Rabbins expound it some of them thus, saying, that hee biddeth them feigne themselves dumbe, lest by their language they should bee discovered: some because סְרִישׁ signifieth an earthen vessel, that they should carry such, pretending to come to sell them; and some otherwise; but the most received exposition, which is best, is secretly, or silently, so Jerome, Iostatus, Vatablus, &c. But whether is it meant that he sent them secretly, the people not knowing of it, or that they should conceale themselves, that they might not be known by the men of Jericho, whence they were? The Hebrew Text will resolve this presently, where it is said thus, he sent two men searchers secretly: He did it therefore closely, and not openly, as when twelve men were sent before to search the land, Numb. 13. all the congregation consenting to it: for seeing that succeeded so ill, he thought it better now to take another course, of which there might come no scandall; and so it is most probable, that the spies returning, certified Joshua alone what they had done, thus also Masius: Yet it is not to be doubted, but that they went also secretly about Iericho. Come for faith they feigned themselves fooles, but there is no ground for that. But what went they to espy? Ans. Onely the way into Iericho, whether it were open or not, and whether the people of Iericho were fearefull, and what preparations they made against the Israelites coming. If it shall seeme that Joshuah shewed himselfe too cautelous herein, seeing the Lord had so greatly incouraged him? Calvin answereth well, that it is not likely but he had direction from the Lord thus to doe, although it bee not expressed; for neither is it expressed that the Lord directed him about the provision of victualls, and appoint-

pointing the third day to passe over Jordan, C. i. v. 10, 11. And this sending out to spy Jericho tended further to the encouraging of Ishuab and of all the people, when it was made knowne unto them, what the spies related of their timerounesse, as Gedon was encouraged by doing the like afterwards about the Host of Midian, Judg 7. 9, 10. Ferus saith, that although God had made him so gracious promises of prevailing, yet he knew, that meanes must be used, and that he must not proceed rashly in these Warres; and therefore hee doth as any provident Captaine would doe in the like case. And they came into an harlots house named Rahab, and lodged there. The Chaldee for [harlot] hath an Inne-keeper or victualler, and so Jonathan in Targum. But the word זונת here used, is every where put for an harlot, and the Septuagint render it an harlot, and so all the Fathers expound it, and Jam. 2. 25. wherefore the Rabbins in seeking to avoid this exposition, as tending to the discredit of their nation, vent but their owne imagination, as they are bold to doe in many other things. Some, because they thinke it infamous to our Lord, that such a woman should be put in his line, say, that it was not this Rahab, but some other, which is named in that Genealogie, Mat. 1 but the time agreeth so unto her being married afterward to Salmon, the son of Naasson, which was the Prince of the Tribe of Judah, Numb. 2. 3. as that she cannot be held to be any other woman, and there is none other named in all the Bible by this name: & lastly, if there be any infamy by this Rahab, why not by Thamar and Bathsheba also? Now although Rahab was a wicked harlot, yet happily she might be one that sold victualls also, that under this colour men might resort unto her; and therefore it is most probable that the spies came to her house, standing also in an outer place upon the wall of the City, as is noted, Vers. 15. where there was least frequency of people, and so they thought themselves most out of danger of being seen and discovered. Lyranus and Ferus hold that shee was no harlot, but a victualler. Hugo is indifferent for either, or that she had been an harlot, but now was not; yet because the houses of such are open to commers in the night, hee finally thinketh her to have been an harlot now.

And it was told the King of Jericho, saying, There came men in hither in the night of the children of Israel, &c.

This maketh for that which was noted before out of Hugo, viz. that this was the cause of their coming to Rahabs house, because harlots have their houses open for men to resort unto in the night, when as the doores of others are shut. They therefore having been about the City in the day, at night come hither to lodge, not seeking to her, as other wicked men, because shee was an harlot, but for their necessity to have harbour till the morning. Here is not then, as Ferus noteth, any colour for lewd men in their frequenting of whore-houses, but the wonderfull mercy of God is set forth in converting and saving such an one onely in all that City, that none touched with a sense of their sins might despaire.

These men could not be long at Rahabs house, but the King of Jericho hath intelligence of it, and sendeth to have them brought forth; but it is said that she hid them, and said, there came men unto me indeed, & I witt not whence they were; And when it was darke, they went out, &c. Thus she said, but she had brought them up to the rooffe of the house, and hid them with stalkes of flax. Here, whereas she is said to hide them, when the men came from the King to inquire for them, before she answered, it is to be understood, that she had done that before, suspecting what would follow, as is expressed, v. 6. where the same thing is again repeated for further explication, v. 4. where this is first spoken of, it is said she tooke and hid him, not them, for it is הַצִּנֵּן but it is said thus, per exallagen numeris: now lest there should be some error in the Reader finding it thus set down, it is more fully declared againe, v. 6. Shee had brought them up and hid them, &c. Yet some of the Rabbins hereupon gather, that shee hid onely one of them, viz. Caleb, and not Phinees, who was an Angel in a bodily shape; and therefore could stand before them and not be seene, when he would. Others

V. 2.

Ferus.
Not.

V. 3.

V. 4, 5.
V. 6.

Rabbini.

of Lyra.

Qu. 1.
Hieronym. Orig.
Chrysost. Cyr.
Tostat. qu. 30.

Aug. ad Consen-suum. lib. de Mendacio, c. 20.

C. 21. Quisquis esse aliquod genus mendacii, quod non sit peccatum putaverit, decepit seipsum turpiter, cum honestum se pu-tat esse decepto-rem aliorum.
Plato lib. 3. de Repub.
Calvin.

Ferus:

Matth. 1.
Heb. 11. 31.
Jam. 2. 25.

Qu. 2.

Calvin.

of them, yet more tolerably, that the place was so little, that onely one of them could bee hidden there, and not the other, to signifie which the singular number is used [Shee hid him.] Lastly, others say with us, that the singular number is put for the plurall, as is usuall in the Hebrew tongue: as, Exod. 8. It is said, God brought the fly upon Egypt, when as a great multitude were brought; this is recited by Lyra. Here it may be demanded, 1. Whether Rahab may be excused in her lying to save these spyes? 2. Whether shee sinned not against nature in concealing them that came to betray her native Countrey?

To the first, many Learned Writers hold, that to make an officious lye to save life, is no sinne; as, Jerome, Origen, Chrysostome, Theodoret, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Cassianus, and Tostatus goeth further, that to save the life of the innocent, a man is bound to lie, if hee seeth no other meanes; and that God sometime moveth the minde hereunto. S. Augustine disputeth much about the lawfulnessse of some kind of lying, and at length determineth, that a lye may be made which doth not violate the doctrine of piety, nor piety it selfe, nor innocency, nor benevolence for the chastity of the body. But drawing nearer to a conclusion of this tract, he numbrell eight kinds of lyes which are sinfull bringing in even that which is to preserve chastity, or the bodily life: and then concludeth, if any man thinketh any kind of lye lawfull, he doth fully deceive himselfe, whilst hee thinketh that hee may honestly deceive others. And then comming to that which Tostatus speaketh, hee saith, such is the blindness of some, that they doe not onely maintaine some kind of lying to be lawfull, but that it is a sin in some case not to lye. Plato saith, sometime it is profitable to lye, and that it is to be used as a Medicine. But of lying, whether it bee in any case tolerable, I have already treated at large upon Gen. 27, 6, 7. upon the dissimulation used by Jacob. Calvin, as he censureth that, so hee doth this also; but because of Rahabs faith, hee saith, that her lying was not imputed to her; whereas for prooffe, that any kind of lying is a sinne, he saith, that it is contrary to the nature of God, who is truth: it may bee said as he is truth, so he is love; and therefore love being also commended to be the most eminent of all graces, when truth and love cannot stand together, truth must rather give place in our speaking to love, then love to truth. Wherefore Ferus saith well, if any man shall object that Rahab lyed, charity excuseth her, which covereth a multitude of finnes. Again, it is Justice not to betray them, that have committed themselves to our custody. Shee shewed also great faith in that, which shee spake of their God, and repentance in saving your terror hath false upon us, which was upon her to repentance, and providence both for her owne safety and salvation, and the safety of her kindred, and in so wisely advising the spyes to fly and hide themselves three days in the mountaines, for which shee was worthy to bee married to a Prince amongst the people of God, Salmon the sonne of Naasson, and to bee a mother of our Lord Jesus; thus he. And both Paul and James do highly commend her for this fact, and lay no blame at all upon her, and therefore it should be farre from us to censure her whom God justifieth, as I have also touched in my Praxis upon James.

For her favouring of those, that went about to betray her Countrey, it is to be granted that every one is bound in nature to seeke the preservation of his native Countrey, but for so much as Rahab through faith, which God wrought wonderfully now in her heart, was by a spirituall calling segregated from Jerieho, and joyned unto Israel, shee did nothing unnaturall, or blame-worthy in seeking the preservation of those to whom she was more nearly allyed in the Lord, although against her native Countrey, which shee beleevd was before by the Lord appointed to destruction, and to bee given to Israel for a possession for the finnes of the present inhabitants, seeing the Lord is over all Countreys and people to dispose of them according to the good pleasure of his own will. Thus also Calvin and Bonferius a Jesuite, &c. Moreover the last named saith, that happily shee was directed by God thus to doe, and and if not, yet knowing by faith that God had adjudged her people to destruction, to have sought by betraying the spies to save her City; she should both have opposed God, and gone about a worke which could never have bene effected. By this example wee may learne, that although a man may not do any thing positively, as shee did not, against those that be most deare and near unto him; yet if he knoweth certainly that it is the will of God that they should bee put to death, he ought not to seeke to hinder, but permit it.

But shee had brought them up to the rooffe of the house, and hid them with the stalkes of flax, which shee had laid in order upon the rooffe.

Hebr. Here for rooffe is זר, which the Vulgar Latine rendreth solarium, a place open to the Sun, for such was the rooffe of every house there, plaine, and fit to stand on or walk upon, for which cause to prevent the danger of falling, a battlement is commanded to be set round about it, Deut. 22. 8. and here shee laid stalkes of flax to dry, wherewith they might well bee hidden.

And the men pursued after them to Jordan, in the way to the foords; and as soon as they were gone, they shut the gate.

Why they pursued them to the Foords of Jordan, may easily be conceived, because they were places to come and goe over the River by ferrying, although God afterwards, to shew his power, divided the River for the whole Army, and all their retinue to passe through; and because otherwise it would have required too long a time for so great a company to passe over. This way that the pursuers went, was about six miles. They shut the gate, that is doubtlesse the Gate of the City, the time of night requiring it, especially this being a time of danger; and that if the spies were yet about the City, they might not get out, as Calvin hath it; and Lyra, to keepe the pursuers out, that thus they might be forced to follow after them: Yet Lyra saith also, some will have the shutting of Rahabs doore meant, but without all reason.

But before they were laid downe, shee came up unto them, &c.

The Vulgar Latine [before they were asleepe] according to the sense, hereby it appeareth, that they were not long placed there to rest that night, but that shee gave them this advice following, to hasten away to the mountaines. Lyra saith, it was through feare that they slept not.

And she said unto the men, I know that the Lord hath given you the Land, and that the scourge of you is false upon us, &c.

Here Rahab sheweth her faith, for which shee is so much commended, and which made her to hide the spies, and with such a courage to stand for the protecting of them. Shee saith, that shee knew, that the Lord had delivered, not would deliver, to expresse the certainty of her faith. But how came shee to know this? because their terrour was fallen upon that people, and their hearts fainted. They feared, and fainted, and yet prepared to resist, but shee onely humbleth her selfe, and sueth for mercy, whereby wee may note, how infidelity worketh, and how a true faith, so Calvin; that maketh obstinate, and to rush on desperately in sin to destruction, this humble and submisle, and to flee to prayer and other good means of preservation. If it be demanded, how Rahab attained to such certaine and saving faith, when as shee heard no more but a rumour of things done by the Lord for Israel, and saw with what feare they of Jericho were smitten, which were onely naturall meanes, which all had as well as shee? I answer, God wrought grace supernaturally in her heart, by these meanes to know and beleeve in him, as hee hath done divers times in whom hee pleaseth. The terrour which shee speaketh of, came upon them doubtlesse, not onely by a naturall apprehension of the danger, wherein they were, but being in judgement sent of God into their hearts, to make the subduing of them the more easie to the Israelites, according to his promise made Exod. 23. 27. Deut. 1. 25. and the like is threatened to the Israelites for sin, Levit. 26. 36. If a question be made how they could understand the language wherein shee spake? it is answered, that in all likelihood the Canaanites spake the same language with the Hebrewes, which is implied, in that their names were Hebrew, as Rahab, Adonibezek, Abimelech, &c. And the names

Note.

V. 6.

V. 7.

Lyra.

V. 8.

Lyra.

V. 9.

Calvin.
Note.

V. 10, 11.

names of their Cities, as Iericho, Salem, Sichem, Bethlehem, &c. and therefore the Hebrew tongue is called the language of Canaan, Esa. 19. 18.

Here Rahab sheweth, how their hearts were made to tremble and melt because of them, viz. they had heard of the drying up of the red Sea, and of the destruction of the two Kings on the other side of Jordan, concluding with a most excellent confession, The Lord your God, he is God in heaven above, and in the earth beneath; and he giveth God his title Jehovah.

V. 12, 13, 14.

Next Rahab requireth them to sweare unto her, that they will save her and her Fathers house, and all that they had, and give her a true token, to which they willingly agree, conditioning that shee should still conceale their business. The forme of words used by them, is, Our life for yours, and thus they sweare unto her; as if they had said, God strike us with death, if wee be not truly carefull of your preservation, so that by our neglect, any of you perish; but they give her warning againe and againe not to utter this matter, lest, as Calvin hath it, by speaking of this pact, shee should put her selfe into danger from her owne people. But what need was there that they should sweare? For her greater assurance, because otherwise being busied in the fight, they might have forgotten her, and their promise to her.

Calvin.

V. 15.

Then shee let them down by a cord through the window, for shee dwelt upon the Town wall, &c.

Lyra.

Lyra saith that some of the Hebrewes, who hold, that Rahab was an harlot, say, that by this cord men went downe and came up, that used in times past to resort unto her to satisfie their wicked lusts: but now shee used the same to save both these spies and her selfe, by tying it upon the window, as they appointed: And if so, this served notably to set forth, that one converted, useth that now as an instrument of good, which before hee used as an instrument of evill, as is spoken of our members, Rom. 6. 16. In this manner, S. Paul is said afterwards to have bene let downe to save his life. Whereas some, saith Calvin, hold the going over City walls to be shameful & unlawfull: he answereth well, that it is not so in the case of necessity, but in contempt, or deceit, or tumultuously, alledging Cicero himselfe, who granteth that the walls of Cities are sacred for the defence of the Citizens, but yet no man counteth it a fault, to goe up unto them for the defence of the City.

Nota.

Afr. 9. 25.

Calvin.

V. 16.

And shee said unto them, Go and hide your selves three dayes in the mountaines, till the pursuers bee returned, &c.

Masius

These speeches had betwixt Rahab and the spies, saith Masius, most probably were before her letting them downe, for after that was no time or place to stand to parley further; whereas the speech used by them, v. 18. The cord whereby thou didst let us downe, may seeme to make for the contrary; it is answered, that they may bee understood speaking so before this was done, making account that it was as good as done already, when they were now about to bee let downe hereby. And in holding thus, although these speeches are set downe after, nothing is held touching this place, but that which is usuall in many other, viz. that the order of the History is a little inverted. Touching the mountaines, Adricomius saith, that the field of Iericho was compassed in with mountaines like a Theater, so that they might soone get behinde one of them and be hidden. For food, it is not unlikely but that they carryed so much with them as might serve for their sustenance that time. But why should they hide themselves so long, seeing Iericho was not above 2 or 3 houres journey from Jordan; and therefore the pursuers might well returne the same day? Answer. It was likely, that going about a business of so great moment, they would stay some time there, to observe the comming of passengers to those Fords, if happily they might find out these men: or as Lyra hath it, search about the lurking places for them. The Rabbins say it was revealed to Rahab, that the pursuers would not returne till the end of 3 dayes, and this was revealed for the safety of the spies. The men seeing Rahab's care of their safety here appoint her for a signe, the scarlet line wherewith shee had let them downe, which shee must tie upon the window: and then they pro-

V. 17, 18, 19.

pro-

propound two conditions, wherein if there were a faile, they would not bee bound by their oath: 1. If any were at their comming out of her house, and not within it. 2. If shee uttered this matter abroad, wherein shee resteth, and tyeth the line or cord upon the window, as they had appointed. The cord here spoken of, as it is mentioned three times, so every time with some diversity in the Hebrew, v. 15. the word חבל is used, v. 18. חקוה חוט השני a line of scarlet thred. v. 21. חקוה חוט the word חוט being left out, whereupon some have thought that the same cord was not tyed to the window, with which shee had let them downe, but another; and therefore these words, by which thou didst let us downe, are both by the Septuagint and Jerome, referred not to the line, but to the window, per quam demissi sunt nos. But the demonstrative ה, that line, maketh it plaine that it is meant of the same, although divers words are used to expresse it, and a cord is a little line, and such had this need to bee, that it might bee of strength sufficient to hold them, whilest they descended by it.

Here a question is further moved, whom they doe promise to save alive, when they enumerate her father and mother, brethren and sisters, and all her fathers household? To this Tostatus answereth, that all even Grandfathers, and great Grandfathers, and Mothers, if any of them were living, were also understood, but not any other kindred, as Uncles and Aunts, and their children. But the Vulgar Latine, for fathers household, hath omnem cognationem tuam, all thy kindred. And Chap. 6. v. 22. besides father and mother, brethren and sisters, all her families כל משפחות are said also to have been brought out and saved, which implyeth all her kindred. Shee indeed requested but for her father and mother, brethren and sisters; but who knoweth not that under the name of brethren, are comprehended all the kindred, although two or three degrees removed, according to the use of the word in those times?

But why did shee tie a scarlet line to her window rather then any other? This was doubtlesse done by a singular providence for the mystery that lay hid herein, as by and by shall be shewed. But when did shee tie it to the window? Most probably at this time, or being fastened there to let them downe, shee let it hang till Jericho was taken: For shee knew not the time when the Campe would come thither, and if she had deferred it, it might have been forgotten, and therefore the surest way was to doe it instantly.

The spies after three days lurking in the mountaines, return to Joshua with joyfull newes of the fearfullnesse of the people of Canaan, gathering hence, as Rahab had told them, the deliverance of all into their hands. A farre different issue of their going out to search, from that of the 12 sent out by Moses, Numb. 13. for they brought newes of discouragement, these of encouragement to all that heard it, that if any were faint hearted and feared, they might now be full of courage: thus God in his providence ordered it, providing hereby for the strengthening of the weakest faith.

Mystically by Rahab, the Church of the Gentiles may bee understood, which before committed fornication with Idols; but the Apostles being sent out two and two, as here were two spies sent out, and comming into the world of the Gentiles, set forth by Jericho, which signifieth the Moone, being before mutable as it, a Church is built unto God, Rahab receiveth them. But the Devill, set forth by the King of Jericho, by and by persecuteth them, but shee, that is, the Church of the converted seeke to preserve and save them, and they save her, by bringing her to Christ. Thus Lyra, the Ordinarie Glosse following Origen, by the spies sent out, understandeth John the Baptist, in whose dayes Publicans and Harlots are said to enter into the Kingdome of heaven. Rahab signifieth dilatation, for so the Church is now enlarged; the spies being placed above shewed, that the Apostles sent out, were lifted up in their hearts to heavenly things, and the like is shewed in their going to the mountaines. The scarlet red cord figured out the blood of Christ, by which both Pastors and people are saved. But who so goeth out of the house, that is, the Church, is not saved, but onely such as abide therein. The window whe-

V. 20, 21.

Tostatus qu. 55, 56.

V. 23, 24.

The Mystic.

Lyra.

Glosse Ordin.

Esa 54. 2 Dilata locum tentorii tui. &amp;c.

Ferus.

Añ: 27.

where the cord was tyed, set forth the light in the Church, whereby wee see the Lord, but through a window as it were, and not so fully, as wee shall hereafter. All this also almost hath Ferus, but by the spies he understandeth the Apostles, and in fine addeth, the return of the spies with joyfull news, figured the good news told by Paul at Ierusalem, of the great things God that had done by him amongst the Gentiles. But as Rahab should not bee saved but by keeping the cord in the window, and her selfe in the house, so we are not saved, but by having the blood of Christ continually in our hearts, and cleaving to the Church to the end. And in Paul the Apostle the like was done, that here, by the care of the Church he was let downe at a window.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

AND Joshuah rose early in the morning, and they returned from Shittim, and came to Jordan, &c.

For [early in the morning] the Vulgar Latine hath, [in the night,] but against both the Hebrew, Septuagint, and Chaldee, all which have it in the morning. It sheweth Joshuah his diligence and forwardnesse in the execution of his office. At what time this remove to Jordan was made, I have shewed upon Ch. 1. 11.

V. 2, 3.

And after three dayes, the officers went through the Hoff, and commanded the people, saying, When ye see the Arke, &c.

Lyra.

Hereby it is not meant three dayes after they came to Jordan, but after the warning given before, Ch. 1. 11. and therefore it is to be understood, that in one of those dayes they came to Jordan, and so went over in the time before limited by Joshua. The Vulgar Latine, for these words, they lodged there, v. 1. hath these, they carryed there three dayes, and of this stay, saith Lyra, some yeeld this reason, because the waters did then overflow, that they might be somewhat abated, before they passed; but he rejecteth this, and yeeldeth another, because God had not yet revealed to Joshuah, how they should passe over, but this was done after 3 dayes. But there being no mention of three dayes stay in the Hebrew, but onely that they lodged there, it is rather to be held, that they passed over the next day, even when the waters of Jordan were at the highest, as is shewed, v. 15. which served the more to magnifie the miracle here following. The Officers that had before, Ch. 1. 11. warned them of this passage within three dayes, the time being now come, direct them in their marching, to goe after the Arke carryed by the Priests, keeping yet a distance of 2000 Cubits from it, that seeing it as farre off, they might hereby be directed in the way. This marching on, as Lyra noteth, was different from others in former times, because then some of the Tribes went before, and some followed after, the Arke going in the midst; but now all must follow after it: whereby it seemeth that the cloud went before them no more, as in times past to direct them, Exod. 13. but the Arke supplied that office; and it is generally held, that the cloud vanished at the death of Moses, so Augustine, Tostatus, Masius, Ferus, &c. But why do the Priests carry the Ark, when as that Office was before assigned to the Cohathites, Levites, Numb. 4. 15? Ans. Because of the miracle that was now to be wrought: Ordinarily the Levites carryed it, but when any thing extraordinary was to bee done, the Priests, as more holy and nearer to God, bare it themselves, and thus the peoples eyes were drawn to be more attent to some great worke to bee wrought. So likewise at the destruction of Jericho the Priests againe bare it, Ch. 6. and into Solomons Temple, 1 Kings 8. The distance of 2000 Cubits was, as to bee the better directed in the way, so for reverence to the Arke, the signe of Gods presence; thus also it was appointed, Numb. 2. 2. that they should keepe farre off from the Tabernacle, which most probably was the distance here named, 2000 Cubits, that is, a mile, v. 5. Some hold this distance mystically to set forth 2000 years to the time of Christ. Calvin, besides the reverence for which this distance was set, will have another end to be, that they might hereby understand that Gods presence is not limited within such strait bounds, but that it is with his

Numb. 10. 2, 17

Aug. Qu. 3.
Toft. Qu. 1. 6.
Masius
Qu.

his people, even when he seemeth to be farre off. And by this meanes the way was made by the Arke going so farre before them through Jordan before their entrance, and they had time to see and consider, and admire and believe the power and presence of God with them.

And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctifie your selves, for to morrow the Lord will doe wonders amongst you.

How the people were to sanctifie themselves, we may see before, upon Exod. 19. where the like command is given, viz. according to the rites of those times, by washing and abstaining from their wives. The word rendred [sanctifie] saith Calvin, doth as well signifie [prepare] but that of sanctifying is more proper, and by sanctifying themselves men are prepared for God by his miraculous power to come neare unto them, which otherwise might turne to their destruction; see also, Josh. 12. Some, he saith, too restrainedly understand the putting away of all filthinesse, that there might be nothing to hinder their passage; Yet by their outward sanctifying the purging of the conscience from sin, the opening of the heart, and putting away all things that might hinder the work of grace, was set forth, as Ferus hath it, shewing the like in John the Baptists preparing the way of the Lord, and Iam. 1. 21. 1 Pet. 2. 1, 2. For to morrow will the Lord doe wonders amongst you. The Lord holdeth them still in suspence, and doth not particularly declare what he would doe, that they might reverently expect his good pleasure. Yet it is most probable that hee had before revealed it to Joshua.

Then Joshua spake to the Priests, saying, Take up the Arke of the Covenant, and passe over before the people.

Bonfrerius the Jesuite here maketh a question how Joshua could command the Priests, seeing they are not under the secular power, but onely under the High Priest: and answereth that Joshua was not onely a Prince, but a Prophet; and therefore all were to be directed by him. But he speaketh thus because of that Popish Tenet, that Priests are not subject to the King, but onely to the Pope, which is contrary to Rom. 13. 1. where every soule is bidden to be subject to the King. Because Joshua was now Ruler over all next under God, he was directed by God, and so commanded all both Priests and People. For his bidding them to take up the Arke, and passe over, but not declaring how they should doe this, it is to be understood that Joshua privately communicated unto them, what the Lord would doe, as he doth by and by to all the people, v. 9. 10, 13.

And the Lord said to Joshua, This day will I begin to magnifie thee before the people, &c.

That is, by the great miracle, which I will now worke in dividing the waters of Jordan, as for Moses the red Sea was divided; that thus Joshua might be known to be gracious with the Lord, as Moses had been. That by his conduct the people should passe over Jordan, it is not to be doubted but Joshua was before certified, but particularly by what meanes, it is not probable, that it was revealed till this morning.

Command the Priests, saying, When ye are come to the brinke of the waters of Jordan, ye shall stand still in Jordan, &c.

Here because it is ordered, that the Priests bearing the Arke should stand still when they came at the brink of Jordan, but v. 17. they are said to have stood in the midst of Jordan, whilst all the people passed over, so likewise Chap. 4. 10. a great question ariseth, how the act done, answereth to the precept here given? Masius saith, that by the word νῦν rendred brinke, the further part of the River is to be understood, because it signifieth either extreame, and so the Priests came thither, before the people entered, there being betwixt the entrance and it 2000 Cubits. But Serrarius will have the entrance meant, and therefore determineth that they made two stations, one at the brinke of the River, where they staid a while till the waters wee gone away, which was not done instantly, but by degrees, and the other, when removing further, they came into the midst. The Hebrewes, saith Lyra, hold, that they stood at the entrance, till all

V. 5.

Ferm.

V. 6.

Bonfrerius.

V. 7.

V. 8.

And. Masius.

Serrarius.

Lyra.

the people were gone over, but this he saith, is against the Text, seeing they stood in the midlt. That of Serrarius is most probable of all these, and in making another stand in the midlt, they followed a further direction from the Lord so to doe, although it bee not expessed. And this direction to stand still in the midlt, till all things were done, seemeth to have beene given long before by Moses to Josua, by that which is said, Chap. 4. 10. according to all that Moses commanded Josua. He therefore most probably first informed Josua of this miraculous dividing of the waters to come, and directed him about the Priests bearing of the Arke in this way, and standing still in the midlt of the River, and the setting up of 12 stones for a monument hereof, which because it was not hitherto mentioned, as being spoken to Josua in private, and not yet to bee divulgod, it is there commemorated. Thus, if wee hold two stands, but the words inforce us not to hold any more then one, and that in the midlt of Jordan; for hee saith not, yee shall stand still upon the brinke, but, when yee are come to the brinke, yee shall stand still [in Jordan:] that is, when yee bee come to the brinke, and the waters giving way, yee descend into the bottome of the River, yee shall stand still there: wherefore both Lyra and Toftamus acknowledge but one stand in the midlt of Jordan. For the distance of 2000 Cubits before appointed to bee kept from the Arke, if it bee doubted how it could be kept, seeing the Arke stood still, and they passed by? That of Masius, saying, that the River was thus much over, satisfieth not, for neither is it probable that in the greatest overflowing it was 2000 Cubits over, seeing ordinarily it is reported by such as have seen it in that place, not to be above 30 Cubits over, and if it were so many at this time, yet the people when they came by it, were nearer. It is therefore to be held, that the space being great, that was now dried by the falling of the waters downward, from which the waters upward were cut off, as is shewed, v. 16. That they went this distance from the Arke on that side, the Arke standing towards that part of the River which was gathered on heapes, as a bulwarke to keep them from flowing all the time that they passed through.

Toftamus.

V. 9. And Josua said to the children of Israel, Come hither and heare the words of the Lord your God; &c.

Lyra. That is, saith Lyra, to their Rulers, for he could not speake to all the people to be heard. Hereby wee may see, that Josua went in all things according to the direction which he had from the Lord, although it be not before expessed.

V. 10. Hereby yee shall know, that the Lord will drive out before you the Canaanites, Hivites, &c.

V. 11, 12. The thing, that he calleth them here to attend unto, is the miracle now to be wrought, so soon as the Priests feet that bare the Arke, should touch the waters of Jordan, he saith, they should be divided, those below being cut off, and those higher in the River being gathered into heapes, and hereby they should bee assured of the expulsion of the seven Nations by Gods almighty power from before them.

V. 13. And he biddeth them to have 12 men in a readinesse, of each Tribe a man, not telling them here for what cause, but meaning, that they should take up each one a stone out of Jordan, to be set up for a monument, as he leaveth it to be expessed, untill Chap. 4. 2. In numbring the 7 Nations, hee mentioneth the Amorites for one, but they with their two Kings were already subdued; wherefore it is to be understood that there were others of them which dwelt together with the Canaanites, who are here meant; for they dwelt in Jericho, Josh. 24. 11. For these words, v. 11. Behold the Arke of the Covenant of the Lord of the whole earth goeth before you. Hebr. the word הברית signifying Covenant, hath two prickes above it, which is a note of distinction; and therefore Masius hath, The Arke of the Covenant, the Lord goeth before you. But the Chaldee, Septuagint, and Jerome render it, the Arke of the Covenant of the Lord: so likewise Pagnine, Arias Montanus, Tigurini interpretes, &c. not regarding those prickes of the Masoreths: yet if that reading be followed, it may carry a good sense, thus, The Arke of the Covenant, and with it the Lord of the whole earth earth goeth before you, a signe of whose presence it is. Joshua telling them of the miracle that God would now doe upon Jordan, labourerth to confirme their faith about his expelling of the heathen before them; for if they should see his power to be so great, as that he could stay the course of that great River, the waters being now at the highest, and that hee did it for their sakes; what doubt could they make of his expelling the heathen, and putting them in possession of the land of Canaan, which hee had also promised? And hereby we are taught upon the marvellous things done by the Lord for us, to build our confidence touching his promises of things to come.

A. Masius.

Note.

As Joshua had foretold, so it commeth here to passe, when the Priests bearing the Arke touched the brink of the River, The waters that came downe from above, stood and rose up upon an heape, very farre from the City Adam, which is beside Zaretan; and those that came downe towards the Sea of the plaine, even the salt Sea failed, and were cut off. And to increase the miracle, it is inserted, v. 15. For Jordan overflowed all his banks in the time of harvest.

V. 14, 15, 16

This may seem strange, saith Augustine, seeing our harvest is not till long after this time, & harvest time commonly is no time for waters so much to abound in. But it is to be understood, that in those parts corn was so forward, that it began even in that month, which was the first to be ripe, witnes their bringing the morrow after the Passeeover, which was the 16 day of this moneth, a sheafe of first fruits of their Corne to the Lord, so that this time there was a time of waters abounding by the falling of the latter raine, which usually fell plentifully but twice in a yeer, after the Corne sown, and towards the ripening thereof. For the time of harvest, here the Septuagint have σισυμον ἔσπον, the harvest of wheat; but the Hebrew, Chaldee, and all others, speake of the harvest onely; and it is certain that in those parts the barley harvest was long before the wheat harvest, as hath beene noted in speaking of the sheafe of first fruits, Deut. 16. and ויעס signifieth not onely wheate, but all kinde of bread corne.

Aug. Qu. 3.

Levit. 22.

Deut. 16.

There is beside the cause forementioned, another cause by some spoken of, why the waters of Jordan overflowed at the spring time, viz. the melting of the snow upon mount Libanus, which lay there in great quantity, and now being melted, fell into this River, and from the whitenesse of the snow lying there, it was called Libanus, signifying white, according to Jerome, and the snow of Libanus is spoken of, Jer. 18. 14. For the waters rising up upon an heape, this was a wonderfull worke of God, not onely staying them from their course, but keeping them still within their bounds, when such an huge quantity came flowing continually downe, all the time that the children of Israel passed over: for had a stop onely of their current been made, it might have been thought that this was done by diverting the streame some other way, which might bee by the labour of men, or the flood would have spread it selfe all over the plains thereabouts, to the great detriment of that Countrey, it being now harvest time almost. But they being made to rise up upon an heap, like an huge mountaine, they daring not, as it were, for reverence to come nigh the Arke, the immediate and mercifull hand of God appeared herein, and all the people, before they came nigh, could not but see and be affected at so great a wonder. Very far off from the City Adam, beside Zaretan: this reading [from Adam,] is in the margin, it being in the line in Adam; but the meaning is, that the swelling of Jordan up like a mountaine, extended from Adam to the place where the waters were cut off, and so it is indifferent whether it be read from, or in, or by Adam. This City is little spoken of, and therefore so obscure, that it is described by another, Zaretan neare unto it. Adami is mentioned, Josh. 19. 33. in the Tribe of Naphthali, and by this name it is rendred here by some Copies of the Septuagints Translation, but that is so farre from Jordan, being on the north of Canaan, that it cannot be meant. Adricomius saith, that this City was in the Tribe of Reuben, a little above Bethabara; and againe, that Bethabara was between it and Zaretan, Adam being more north and Zaretan more south, but both upon the east banks of Jordan. Of a City called Zartanab by Jezreel, we read 1 King. 4.

Adricomius.

12. and of Zartan in the plaines of Jordan by Succoth, 1 Kings 7. 46. which last, although rejected by Adricomius, seemeth to bee the City here meant, and not another no where named in the Scriptures, for so obscurum should be described per obscurius. How farre off this City was from the place of the peoples passing over, I cannot find, but sure we are, that it was very farre by the words of the Text, and so the swelling of Jordan very great, and extended in a great length, so that many more might to their terror see this miraculous thing, and not the Israelites onely, for whom it was wrought.

The salt Sea, this is otherwise called the dead Sea, the Sea of Sodome, into which the waters of Jordan did run, for nothing lived in this Sea; and if any fishes were brought out of Jordan in hither, they dyed. It is thought by some that the place thus dyled for the people to passe over, was that where Beihabara afterwards stood, signifying the house of passage, in which place Iuhu was baptizing when Iesus came to him. Mystically by the cloud now vanished, which before, in the time of Moses was set to guide the people in their way, but now the Arke went before them, was set forth that in the time of the Law all things were obscure; but under the Gospel, when Iesus came, they were made manifest, to be beheld with open face. And morally, that whilst we live here, wee are as it were under a cloud, and see but darkly, in comparison of that wee shall doe after death, for then we shall see face to face: And as the Arke went into Jordan before them, so Iesus goeth before us in Baptisme and in death, that wee might not feare. Again, as they were bidden to looke at the Arke, and follow it; so we must not looke at the examples of men, for they may erre, but altogether at Christ his Word, our most sure direction: And therefore as the Ark was so placed that all might see it, and not the foremost onely; so the Word must be handled, that all may understand it. Lastly, as for reverence to the Arke all kept farre off from it; so Christ and his Word must bee revered, neither may we over-curiously pry into his Mysteries; Thus Ferus. Gods saying to Ioshua, This day I will begin to magnifie thee, figured out his magnifying of Iesus, when he went into Jordan to be baptized by the voyce coming from heaven, and the Spirit upon him, after which he was also magnified by many miracles. The Priests going before and bearing the Ark, which had three things in it, the Testament, the Pot of Manna, and Aarons Rod, did figuratively teach, that Ministers should goe before the people in teaching the Law, administering the bread of life, and directing them through the holinesse of their owne lives. Lastly, their passing through water into Canaan, figured out the afflictions through which the faithfull must passe into the heavenly Canaan, in the way, especially when they are nearest the entrance, they seeing the huge floods of temptations ready to overwhelm them, but then we must specially fixe our eyes upon the Arke Christ by faith, and so wee shall bee preserved.

CHAP. IV.

TAke you 12 Men, out of every Tribe a man, and command them, saying, Take ye bence out of the place, where the Priests feet stood firme, 12 stones, and yee shall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging place, where yee shall lodge this night, &c.

The Lord having done this great miracle for Israel, now taketh order that it might never be forgotten by them or their posterity afterwards by commanding 12 stones to bee erected for a monument hereof, and they should tell their children of it, that all might bee excited from generation to generation to feare and serve him; and to put their trust in him; as the like charge was given before touching the Pascheover and first borne. The 12 men appointed to carry these 12 stones were doubtlesse chosen of the strongest, that each man might carry a great stone, out of the place, where the Priests feet stood: that is, as all understand it, neare their feet, as the 12 stones set up by Ioshua in the midst of

Jordan,

The Myserie.
Ferus.

1 Cor. 13.

Origen, Hom. 4.

Ferus.Ferus.

V. 2, 3.

Exod. 12. 26.
& 13. 14.

Jordan, v. 9. were set up neare the place of their feet, for it is not likely that the Priests removed, that they might take up the stones under their feet, but stood still till all things were done, v. 10. That of telling their children afterwards, is againe repeated, v. 21, 22, 23, 24. and this is set forth to bee the end, the glorifying of God amongst all people of the earth, and that Israel might feare him.

And these stones shall be a memoriall to the children of Israel for ever. This is not to be understood simply, world without end, as Augustine sheweth; for both the heaven and the earth passe away; but a long time, the end of which is unknown to men, for that with the Hebrews is לעולם for ever.

And Joshua set up 12 stones in the midst of Jordan, where the feet of the Priests stood, &c. The Vulgar Latin for further explication hath it 12 other stones, the 12 stones before spoken of were set up in Gilgal by the 12 men that carryed them; but these were other, as Lyra hath it, most probably farre greater stones, in the setting up of which Joshua used the helpe of others; that although they stood in the river, yet sometimes when the water was at the lowest, they might be seen of men, and of these stones, he saith, it is commonly held, that the speech of John the Baptist is to be understood, Matth. 3. God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham, for hee was baptizing there. Calvin thinketh, that being even under the water and not seen, but talked of from generation to generation, they might be a memoriall, as the things in the Arke, which were covered, and hidden from the sight of the people. But I preferre the former, because there was not the like reason of hiding these from the sight of the people, that there was of hiding the Arke, which was done for reverence to God represented hereby. And there they are till this day: Hence some doe argue, that Joshua wrote not this Booke, but some other holy man long after; but this proveth not the contrary, for this clause might bee afterwards added, they appearing to be there still many yeares after, that men might bee stirred up to goe and see them, and make use of it, as a thing not fained, but really in being.

For the Priests which bare the Arke, stood in the midst of Jordan, till every thing was finished, that the Lord commanded Joshua to speake to the people, as Moses commanded Joshua, &c. Because for [every thing] here spoken of, Hebr. it is every word, some will have it precisely to bee expounded so, till Joshua had commanded the 12 stones to be taken up out of Jordan, and 12 more to be brought in. But who knoweth not, that by כָּבֵד a thing is meant, as well as a word? and how absurd were it, that the Priests should stay no longer, but till the words were spoken, and not till it was done accordingly, seeing that so soone as they were come out of Jordan, the waters returned to their naturall course immediately againe? Masius therefore and David Kimchi are rather herein to be followed, who stand for the doing of all things commanded. But why is it added, as Moses commanded Joshua? Calvin, and some other thinke, that it is onely meant, as he commanded him, when hee charged him to attend diligently to the Word of the Lord in generall: But for so much as we read not of any word of the Lord in particular to Joshua for the setting up of 12 stones in Jordan, or of the Priests standing in the midst of Jordan till all things were done: it is probable that hee had direction herein from Moses, before his death; and that we might not thinke that he did this of his owne head, these words are here added, as Moses commanded Joshua. Ferus from the setting up of these stones gathereth, that they doe ill that are against images, which bee set up in Churches for a memoriall; onely willing that Pastors should teach the people the right use of them, and to keep them from being abused: For the stones set up in Gilgal were afterwards abused by the peoples comming and sacrificing upon them, as also was the brazen Serpent set up by Moses. Thus he. But Images in Churches are not like unto these stones, and they are by Gods commandment forbidden for the errors which cannot but bee in them; and therefore the onely way to keep men from sinning hereby, is to pluck them downe, as Hesekiah did the brazen Serpent.

V. 7.
August. qu. 4.

V. 9.

Lyra.

Calvin.

V. 10.

Bonfrerius.

Masius.
R. David Kimchi
Calvin.

Ferus.

Heb. 2. 18.

V. 11.

And when all the people were cleane passed over, the Arke of the Lord passed over, &c.

This was not done till the Lord commanded it, as is expressed, v. 16. which sheweth the great faith of the Priests bearing the Arke, although they saw the waters ready to overwhelme them, and all the people were gone out of the danger, but they remained alone, yet they stirred not from their place, till they were directed by the Lord to passe over.

V. 12.

And the children of Reuben and of Gad, &c. passed over armed before the children of Israel, as Moses commanded, &c. Of this order taken before by Moses for their going over before the rest, and that the 40000 here said to have gone over, were not all the men of Warre in these two Tribes and an half, see upon Chap. 1. 12, 13. and the Mystery of this, v. 14, 15, 16. Here it is noted, that by this miracle God magnified Ioshua, as he had said, Ch 3. 7. and so the people were moved to reverence him, as they had done Moses. Here the Lord biddeth Ioshua to command the Priests to come up out of Jordan, &c. The

V. 14.

V. 16, 17.

Lyra.

Hebrews, saith Lyra, hereupon saigne, that they standing upon the further brinke of the River, went up upon that side, because he saith not, passe over, and then Jordan returning to his wonted course, they were miraculously transported upon the Ark, and set beyond all the people. But to let passe so grosse a fiction; this comming over Jordan is noted, v. 19. to have been the 10 day of the first moneth, the singular providence of God appearing herein, to bring the people of Israel into Canaan at the best time of the year, when the harvest was now at hand, thus granting them immediately to reape that which others had sowed, and this was 40 full yeares within 5 dayes, after their comming out of Egypt; so that they could no sooner be prepared after this by circumcising, but the time came of eating the Passeeover, viz. the 15 day of this month.

V. 19.

And they pitched in Gilgal, on the east border of Iericho; that is, in a place, which was afterwards called Gilgal, Ch. 5. 9. but here it is so called by anticipation. This place was famous for the Circumcision made there, for the first Passeeover kept there, for Ioshua his abode there at sundry times afterwards, and the remaining of the Arke long there, and Sauls inauguration there to the Kingdome. It was directly between Jordan and Iericho, saith Iosephus, but within 10 furlongs of Iericho, and 50 from Jordan: and Ierom saith it was 2 miles from Iericho. But Adricomius, that it was nearer to Jordan then to Iericho, and that to goe from Bethabara to Iericho, a man must decline to Gilgal to come thither.

1 Sam. 11.

Ioseph. lib. 3. de bell. Iudai. c. 1. Hieron. in loc. Hebr.

V. 20.

V. 21, 22.

Here Ioshua is said to pitch the 12 stones, that is, appointed them to be pitched by the 12 men that brought them out of Jordan; and now he sheweth the use of them to all the people, as he had done before to the 12 bearers, v. 6, 7. hereupon they must from time to time take occasion to tell their children of the dividing of Jordan for them to goe through on dry ground, and also of the Red sea, that all the world might know the power of the Lord, although they profit little by it, but Israel might learne hence to feare him. And this is the different effect of the marvailous workes of God in the wicked of the world, and his faithfull people; they are onely moved to wonder, and so passe them over without further profiting; but these are edified in the feare and grace of God hereby; to this effect Calvin.

Note, Calvin.

The mystery.

Mystically by the 12 stones set up in Gilgal, saith Fernus, are set forth the 12 Apostles, and their preaching, manifesting all things, by those in Jordan, the Prophets, in whose writings they are more obscurely contained, as it were under the water, but both tend to the setting forth of the same, as both these monuments did. And as the Israelites came not empty out of the water of Jordan, but brought up stones with them; so the truly baptized come up out of the water of Baptisme, laden with the fruits of the Spirit. The Priests bearing the Arke going in before all the people, and then comming up and going againe before them; when they were to fight against their enemies, shewed, that the Ministers of Gods Word are a defence unto his people, who so soone as they are baptized shall be assaulted with spiritall enemies. Their comming up the 10 day of the first moneth, which was the day that the Paschall

Lamb

Lamb was taken, Exo. 12. shewed, that when we are baptized, we must straightway prepare to fight under Christs banner, who is the true Paschall Lambe, against the world, the flesh, and Devill. And as Origen hath it, be exercised in vertue, which is the very entring into the promised Land. Isidor by the stones carried out, will have the examples of the Apostles understood, which wee must carry in our minds, that we may imitate them in their vertuous actions. The 12 stones set in Jordan, saith Lyra, are the 12 fruits of the Spirit in the truly baptized, recited Gal. 5. 19.

Origen.
Isidor.

CHAP. V.

Here saith Ferus, beginneth the second part of Josua, wherein is shewed how the people of Israel were put in possession of the Land of Canaan, not by their owne, but by the power of God, who did all for them. Yet hee would have them to fight: to shew, that onely through his grace wee attaine the heavenly Canaan, and not by our owne workes, yet wee must labour and fight, and run, that we may obtaine, but it is God that fighteth in us, and by us, and from whom all our strength cometh, and which crowneth at the last his gifts in us.

Ferus.

And when the Kings of the Amorites heard, &c. their hearts melted, neither was there spirit any more in them. In this example we may see the case of all the wicked, who have an evill conscience, before judgement, they feare nothing, but encourage one another in their evill wayes, but then their hearts utterly faile, and they see that all their multitudes, and munitions, and riches are of no force to defend them. But as for the people of God, their very confidence in him, is their victory against all their spirituall enemies. If hee bee on our side, who can be against us? The Devill himselfe quailleth and fleeth, if we by faith in God resist him. And the singular providence of God herein appeared, as Lyra noteth, to strike such terrour at this time into the people of the Land, that they durst not come forth to fight with Israel, when as they were to be circumcised, and so made unfit for battell, as we may see in the Scobemites, Gen. 34. Of the melting of their hearts, see before Chap. 2. 11.

V. 1.
Nere.

Rom. 8. Jam. 4.
7. 1 Pet. 5. 9.

Lyra.

Make thee sharp knives, and circumcise againe the second time the children of Israel, &c. The reason why this was now done, is rendred in the verses following, viz. because all they that had been born since their coming out of Egypt, which was 40 yeares, were hitherto uncircumcised, and these were now the greater part of the people, for all that came out of Egypt from 20 yeares old and upward, were dead, except two, as was threatned, Numb. 14. 29. and noted to be accomplished, Numb. 26. 64, 65. and except the men of the Tribe of Levi, as Lyra noteth upon Numb. 14. But what meaneth hee by saying, Circumcise them the second time? Lyra answereth well, not that the same men who had been circumcised before, should now againe bee circumcised; but that there should now be a solemne circumcising of many together the second time, as there had been a first in the dayes of Abraham, Gen. 17. Augustine more fully, the children of Israel are considered as one people, of which some were hitherto uncircumcised; wherefore hee biddeth here, Circumcise the children of Israel the second time, that is, in them, who had not yet bene circumcised, so that here is no ground for baptizing any twice over, Qu. 6. in Josh. The Rabbins fondly imagine, that the first circumcising, in regard of which, this is called the second, was of many other people that came with them out of Egypt at the time of their departing thence, but this is so absurd, both for that no such thing is mentioned, and because there was no time to doe it; and being done, it would have made them unfit for travaile, that it falleth in the very naming.

V. 2.
V. 4, 5.

Qu.

For the reason why they remained uncircumcised, it is generally held, saith Calvin, that they circumcised not all the time of their travaile in the wilderness, because circumcising maketh unfit for travaile; and although they stayed long in some places, yet they were alwayes uncertaine when they should remove, but hee rejecteth this, as not being a reason sufficient to neglect so holly an ordinance so strictly injoynd, and rendreth another; viz. because upon their murmuring, Numb. 14. the Lord was so offended with them, that hee had in a manner cast them off from being his people; and therefore they durst not all this while use the signe of his Covenant, till that they had againe an expresse command from him so to do. Whereas it is said against this, that the time of their remaning uncircumcised did not then first begin when they murmured, but immediately upon their comming out of Egypt; hee answereth, when it is said, all the people that were borne after their comming out of Egypt by the way, they had not circumcised. It is not to be understood but of them that were borne after that murmuring, because they are said to bee the children whom God raised up in the stead of those Rebels: wherefore he affirmeth them that were borne in the way till that time, to have beene circumcised; but this is plainly against the Text, saying, All that were borne after their comming out, were not circumcised. Whereas it is further said, that this could not bee a reason of withholding Circumcision from them; because although their Fathers were rejected, yet they were the people to whom the Lord promised, after the destruction of their Fathers, that hee would give them the land of Canaan; hee saith it was done for a chastisement to their parents, the signe of Gods Covenant being onely suspended from their children for a time, being afterwards brought forth; and other pledges of his Grace being in the meane season supplied unto them. With Calvin agreeth Vasquez herein, and Masius and Peterinus upon Gen. 17. saying, that their being in travaile upon the way continually, could be no reason of deferring, because Hippura circumcised the sonne of Moses upon the way, Exod. 4. and stayed not for his healing. St. Augustine and Comestor say, that the men that perished in the wilderness, were rebellious & disobedient, and would not circumcise their children. But if so, Moses would certainly have reproved them therefore, which we do not read that he did. Jerome, Theodore, and Damasen say, that the reason why they circumcised not in this time, was because Circumcision was a note of distinction to distinguish the Israelites from other peoples of the World; wherefore in Egypt, when there was danger of mingling with others, they diligently circumcised all their children, and when they came now into Canaan; but in the wilderness there being no such danger, they circumcise not any of them. Lyra, Tostatus, Masius, & Tho. Aquinas render the first reason, because of their travail, against which Calvin and Vasquez doe argue so earnestly, shewing, that the offence taken by the Lord at the rebellion, could not bee the reason.

Calvin.

ed

1. Because they being all consumed, their posterity should then doubtlesse have been circumcised, which was four or five months before this.

2. Because the Levites were not in that rebellion, and therefore it could bee no cause why their children should not be circumcised.

3. The children of all that were under 20 yeares of age at the time of that rebellion, should not have been suspended from Circumcision all this time, if that had been the reason, because God was not so offended with them for their minority; but when he threatned their Fathers with consumption in the wilderness, he promised that they should possesse the land of Canaan. Rejecting then this reason, I hold, that neither their being in travaile was the sole cause, nor because Circumcision was not necessary for a note of distinction all this time, because there was more in Circumcision then to distinguish, viz. to signify Gods Covenant of Grace, and to seale it unto them. But partly for this reason, and partly out of a Fatherly indulgence towards them, that the children borne in the time of their travaile, might not bee put in danger of their lives; but chiefly because all this time they were under the cloud, a new pledge of Gods favour, so that whilst that remained, they had no need of any other outward right to seale it up unto them, but so soone as it was taken away, then Circumcision must be used againe. Their being under the conduct of that cloud, is by Saint Paul called a being baptized in the cloud; wherefore to shew that

Vasquez in 3
Part. Disp. 64.
c. 2. A. Masius.

August. qu. 6.
Schol. Historia.

Hieron. in Gal. 6
Theod. qu. 2. in Job.
Damas. lib. 4. de fide, c. 26.

Lyra, Tostatus, Masius, Tho. A.
quin. part 3. qu.
7. art. 4.

that Baptism comming, circumcision should give place unto it, and then cease, It ceased now all the time of this baptizing. Burgeni, saith Lyra, objecteth against the former determination, that this is called the second times circumcising, with reference to Abrahams circumcising, because it is said, Circumcise the children of Israel the second time, whereas then there were no children of Israel; and saith, that there were many out of an inordinate love to their children, fearing lest death should ensue, that did not circumcise them in Egypt, as is intimated in Moses, who circumcised not his Son till hee was forced to it; therefore before the Passeeover kept in Egypt they were all circumcised, and in respect of that is this called the second time. But Lyra answereth well, that this is but an imagination, and that Israel was in Abraham when he circumcised.

But to returne to the matter in hand: Ferus rendreth the two former of these reasons, and approveth also of that of Augustine, taken from the pertinacy of their parents; and finally addeth another, viz. to beate downe the glorying of the Jewes in their Circumcision, and to commend Gods grace towards the uncircumcised: For what were they, when God shewed so many favours unto them, and gave them victory over the Midianites, and the two Kings of the Amorites, and brought them miraculously through Jordan into the very land of Canaan, but an uncircumcised people? Wherefore it was hereby taught, that Circumcision is nothing, neither were they hereby commended, as deserving any thing, but grace alone is that from which all favours flow, and which bringeth to the heavenly Canaan. When Joshua is said to circumcise the people, it is to be understood, that it was done by his direction; for he alone could not possibly in this time circumcise so many, being most probably 1000000, and the time to doe it but one day, for they came up out of Jordan the 10 day, and three dayes they must have to heale them againe before the Passeeover, and the 14 day they kept the Passeeover, v. 10. before the eating of which they must needs be circumcised, for no uncircumcised person might eate thereof. Once onely doe we read of their keeping of it, since their comming out of Egypt, viz. Numb. 9. which was within one yeare, but never after, till this time, and then there were none uncircumcised to eat of it, for such as had been born since their comming out of Egypt, till that time, were but sucking Infants: and this may be another reason of the delay of their Circumcision hitherto: viz. because Circumcision was a preparative to the Passeeover, to make men fit to eate it, but in this regard there was no need of it all that time. If it shall seeme that there was all that time then a great defect in the Church, they being without a Passeeover 39 years, it is to be understood that they had a more divine Sacrament in stead of it, viz. the Manna which came from heaven, and the waters flowing out of the Rock, touching which it is said, they did all eate of the same spirituall meat, and dranke of the same spirituall drinke, 1 Cor. 10. 2, 3. If a question be made, how so many thousands could be circumcised all in one day? It is easily answered, some circumcising themselves, as Abraham, and all, both men and women helping to circumcise the rest, the women, infants, and men those of a greater age.

Touching the sharpe Knives which he is bidden to take to circumcise withall, enough hath been spoken upon Exod. 4. 25. whether they were sharp stones, as the Septuagint have it, or sharpe knives, as in our Translation. The words here used are חרבות צוריות, gladii acierum, or gladii petrinor, and for knives made of sharpe stones out of the rock, Theodoret rendreth 2 reasons. 1. Because the Hebrews after this long travaile, had but few knives amongst them, but sharpe stones were obvious every where in the wilderness. 2. Because Christ our rock was most aptly set forth hereby, in whom we are circumcised with a circumcision not made with hands. But his literall reason is of no force, because if there had been such a scarcity of Swords at this time, how should they have armed themselves to fight? And it is of as little force, which is brought by Bonsferius the Jesuite, that although wee are ignorant of knives of stone, yet amongst the Americans they are altogether used, and Catullus maketh mention of gelding with a flint. Devolus ipse acuto sibi pndera filice, and Ferus.

Theod.

Canul Carm. de Berecinthia.

Juvenalis

Calvin.

Note.

Ferus.

Col. 3. 5.

Joh. 83.

V. 9.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Ferus.

Juvenalis with a shell; Mollia qui rupta secuit genitalia testa; and Pliny likewise lib. 35. c. 11. de Gallis Sacerdotibus; and Arnobius, lib. 5. contra gentes, and in the Epigrams of the Greeks we read of Pens to write withall, made with sharpe stones. For seeing the Jews used not stones, but rasors to circumcise withall, as appeareth by their practice at this day, nothing can bee inferred upon those testimonies for circumcising with flints. Touching the time of their circumcising, when they were now entred into Canaan, and their enemies were neare unto them, to prepare them to battell, by making them unfit to defend themselves if they had beene assaulted, is strange. But thus God would prove their faith, saith Calvin, and teach them to trust in his aide onely, and not in their owne strength. Wherefore hee let all the time of their being in the plaines of Moab passe without circumcising, and now calleth them to it; neither did they disobey, for feare of being thus exposed as a prey to their enemies, but through faith submitted themselves to his command; which shewes that they had well profited by the judgements of God upon their rebellious parents; and we are taught by their example, not to consult with flesh and blood, but in all things to obey God commanding us, as being the safest for us. Ferus saith that they were now circumcised for three Reasons: 1. To shew that they held, and would continue in the same faith with their Father Abraham, to whom this signe was first given. 2. That they would be separated from the wicked manners of the heathen Canaanites, into whose Land they were now come, and would have nothing common with them. 3. For the mystery which was chiefly respected herein, viz. our Jesus his bringing of us into the Land of life, by our drawing the sword, and fighting as it were with our selves. For as they first cut their owne bodies, and shed their owne blood, and then the blood of their enemies; so must we fight against our selves, and mortifie our members upon earth; for there lurk within us most wicked enemies, pride, lust, covetousnesse, hatred, and luxury, these must first be mortified, or else we shall never get the victory over the Devill, and come into the possession of the promised Land. It is true, it is painfull by penitency thus to subdue our selves, so it was painfull to be circumcised, but it is thus irrecoverably decreed, either the paine of circumcising thus the heart must bee indured with the Israelites, or else we must perish with the Canaanites. And this second circumcising, shewed a second washing to be necessary for every one that would be saved, of which the Lord speaketh, saying, He that is washed, needeth not save to wash his feet. We must not wash by being againe baptized, but by cleansing us from the filthinesse of sinne by repentance from time to time continually. And this circumcising cannot be made but by Christ, and his Word and Spirit, set forth in the sharpe stones now prepared to circumcise withall; thus Ferus, following that translation, Take thee sharpe stones,

And the Lord said, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you: wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal.

What is meant here by the reproach of Egypt divers conjecture diversly. Lyra having mentioned some, goeth with the Hebrews, saying, that before the going of the people out of Egypt, the Astrologers of Egypt said unto them, Miserable people, whither will ye goe from us? for we doe find, that if ye goe, your blood shall be shed: so that hereupon they were condemned as doing foolishly to bring themselves to destruction by their going out: but now their blood was shed in Circumcision to their honour, and so they could no more be cast in the teeth herewith. Hugo by the reproach understandeth originall sin, a remedy against which was Circumcision, which the Egyptians wanted, and therefore it was their reproch. Or their servitude under the Egyptians, from which they were not fully delivered, til they were circumcised, and therefore the place is called Gilgal, signifying liberty. But this of expounding Gilgal, liberty, is rejected both by Lyra and Calvin, although taken from Iosephus, seeing it signifieth no such thing, witnesse both Jerom and Remigius. Ferus hath none other exposition but mysticall, I have taken away sin from you, which is the reproach of the wicked: who shall be upbraided hereby, but the truly circumcised not, be-because none of their finnes are imputed unto them. Calvin saith, that some hold their uncircumcision hitherto to be meant by the reproach of Egypt, and of other Gentiles, because this was by the Hebrews held to be ignominious in them and others, that the Egyptians hitherto might object unto them, that they went not out to serve the Lord, but other Gods, which reproach was now done away, by this their so ready submitting to Gods ordinance. But he preferreth another; viz. That it was held by the Egyptians to be reproachfull to them, to goe rebelliously away from under their King, this reproach was done away by renewing the old signe of their subjection to the Lord, it being hereby declared that they were not Pharaohs servants, but wrongfully by him subjected, and that of old, long before their coming into Egypt, they were the Lords inheritance, and his peculiar people; so that this signe hereof being againe renewed at this time, the same was publicly testified, and none could henceforth any more impute rebellion unto them, and justly blame them thereby. To mee it seemeth rather, that by this reproach was meant the Egyptians traducing them, that howsoever they pretended piety to their God in their going out of Egypt, yet this was but a pretext, and that by conjuration Moses wrought those wonders to deliver them, as appeared hitherto by the sequel: for when they were gone forth, they sacrificed not to God, as they pretended, but to other Gods, as is testified Act. 7. 42. Neither did they now any more circumcise their children, as they said before they had commandment from him to doe; and therefore the Lord accordingly dealt with them, consuming them in the Wildernesse, and not bringing them to the promised land, which they boasted of. For these things might all this while seem most ignominious to Israel; but now they being brought through Jordan miraculously into Canaan, when Moses was dead, and religiously circumcising themselves and their children, this reproach was taken away. As for that of the Hebrewes and Lyra, it is grounded upon a fable; The second of Hugo hath been already confuted, and his first, as that of Ferus is rather allegoricall then literall. For the first mentioned by Calvin, uncircumcision could not bee meant by the reproach of Egypt, because, as Herodotus hath it, and Origen, they also circumcised, as I have shewed upon Gen. 17. The second is the same briefly with this of mine. The last, which is Calvins owne, is not so probable, because their bringing out of Egypt with so mighty an hand, ringing in the eares of all men, did sufficiently vindicate them from the imputation of a rebellious revolt, that being not their act, but the act of the Almighty. For the name [Gilgal] given to this place, it is so plainly taken from גלגל I have rolled, that it is a marvaile that any should seeke out any other derivation, as from גלגל a Spheare, or a wheel, for the round figure of the foreskins cut off, or from liberty; as was before noted. This name Gilgal was the second name of this place, being called, Verse 3. the hill of Foreskins.

And the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal, and kept the Passover the 14 day of the month at even in the plaines of Jericho. This was the time appointed at the first institution, Exod. 12. and that they should eate it with unleavened bread, as here it was done. Some inquire here whether the people left on the other side of Jordan did now also eate the Passover, and whether they were circumcised before as these were, because nothing is said of them? And it is answered, that they did not, neither was it yet required of them, because it must be eaten onely in the place which the Lord should choose, after the state of the Church settled in Canaan, that they might know whither to resort to eate it. And for circumcising, that it is not to bee doubted, but that now, or soone after, order was taken that they also should be circumcised, as their brethren had been.

Further, it is inquired with what bread the Passover was now eaten? Thomas answereth, they might eate it with Manna; but the Text saith expressly, That they eate unleavened bread, and parched corne, of the old corne of the Land the morrow after the Passover: And therefore most probably they wanted not such corne at this time to make unleavened bread. If they did, it was

Calvin.

V. 10.

Qu.

Qu.

V. 11.

V. 12.

was celebrated with such as they had, as before at Mount Sinai, Numb. 9.

Note.

Calvin.

V. 13.

Ferus.

1 John 4. 1.

V. 14.

Ephes. 6. 12.

Gen. 17.

2 Sam. 7.

V. 15.

Calvin.

Lira.

Mafiu

And the Manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corne of the Land, &c. That is, the 16 day of that moneth, for the Passeeover was kept the 14 day at even. They erre then, who will have this cessation of Manna, to be the 15 day, when as indeed the 15 day was the day of eating the Passeeover, the even at the end of the 14 day being the beginning thereof, as hath been shewed upon Exod. 12. And herein the great mercy of God appeared, that howsoever they were rebellious against him, yet as long as need required, he supplied them with bread from Heaven; and therefore hee will much more provide for all that put their trust in him. And by the cessation of Manna at this very time, saith Calvin, the Lord taught them, that Manna fell not by any naturall meanes from the clouds, but that he by his singular providence gave it them.

And when Joshua was by Jericho, he lift up his eyes, and looked, and behold there stood a man over against him with a sword drawne in his hand, &c. Joshua, saith Ferus, now expecting further direction from God what to doe, this Angel with a drawne sword appeareth unto him for his comfort, by the very apparition shewing that it was not the sword of man, but of God, whereby the Canaanites should be destroyed; as it is not ours, but the power of God, whereby the Devill is subdued. And he noteth, that the Lord at divers times appeared diversly, as the condition of his people required. 1. When they were in Egypt, in a flame of fire to Moses. 2. In the Wildernesse in a cloud. 3. In this place with a sword. Joshua goeth to him, and asketh, Art thou for us, or for our adversaries. Wherein the boldnesse of the just appeareth, and that they feare nothing; and in his example we are taught to try the Spirits, whether they be of God or no. He answered, As a Captaine of the Lords Host am I come: teaching both that the Angels of God are over Countreys and peoples to defend them, and that they are Warriors to fight for them, and that all the faithfull are Souldiers under them, and to fight against their spirituall enemies. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth and worshipped. Thus the servants of God, seeing his great care over them, ought in thankfulnesse to humble themselves, and worship before him, so Abraham did before, and David. And not onely to worship, but to be ready to obey, as Joshua was; wherefore hee saith, What saith my Lord unto his Servant?

And the Captaine of the Lords Host said, Loose thy shooe from off thy foot, &c. Of this see before, Exod. 3. 4. This is commanded for reverence, and as a signe of humility, and resigning a mans selfe to the will of God, to be guided by him. Calvin thinketh that Joshua now went out alone to view Jericho, and to see in what part he might best assault it, but not unprepared to fight if he should meet with any enemy: At this time Christ appeared unto him in the shape of a man, for otherwise he could not have called himselfe a Captaine of the Lords Host, which is both in heaven and in earth. And this apparition was not onely for the present, but ever after to teach the people, that they gat the possession of the land of Canaan, not by their owne sword, but the Lord fighting for them. His bidding Joshua to put off his shooes was for reverence, and in saying, that the ground whereupon hee stood was holy ground, hee commended that Land in speciall, as sanctified to the pure Worshipping of God there. And he saith, that Joshua lifted up his eyes and saw a man, to note the certainty of the Vision, Joshua being herein graced, as Moses had been, with familiarly conferring with the Lord, to procure more hono ur to him before the people.

This Angel, say the Hebrews, was Michael, Dan. 10. called their Prince; and his affirming of that ground to be holy, saith Lira, was in respect of the apparition of the Angel in the likenesse of a man. I hold with Calvin that he was the Sonne of God; and his appearing now like a man, was a preludium of his future incarnation, for otherwise he would not have suffered Joshua to worship him, as an Angel appearing to Daniel, and to John, straightly forbade it: Thus also Mafiu, and Origen. And Chap. 6. 2. hee is called יהוה

by

by a name proper to God; when being demanded whether he were on Joshua his side, or his enemies, he answered, nay, it is commonly expounded, I am not on your enemies side; but by Calvin and some others, I am not either of the Hebrews or Canaanites, for I am no mortall man. But the common exposition agreeth better, seeing the question was not, whether hee were of them, or of their enemies, but of what side he was. For these words, When Joshua was by Jericho, Hebr. is in Jericho, which Jerome expresseth thus, in the field or Jericho, which is called Jericho, as the ground belonging to any other City is called by the name of the City.

Mytically, the terrour bricken into the Amorites and Canaanites, when Joshua had led the people through Jordan, shewed the weaknesse of our spiritual enemies before us through Jesus, who is more mighty then they all, so that we may confidently fight against the Devill, being sure through him our leader of the victory. The Lords appointing Circumcision before they fight with their enemies, shewed, as hath been already noted, that we must fight first with our selves, and cut off our evill lusts, the enemies within us. Joshua his circumcising of them, that Jesus onely by his spirit can doe this, and by his Word, that we may seek to him. The second time of circumcising, before the promised Land could be possessed, a second washing after Baptisme by repentance. Their staying in Gilgal till they were healed, shewed the weaknesse of Christian people at the first, for which cause they must seek to be more confirmed, and not till then put themselves upon any great attempts, as the Apostles were bidden to stay at Jerusalem, till they had received the holy Ghost; and the Lord told Peter, thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me hereafter. The rolling away from them the reproach of Egypt shewed our deliverance from sinne, and the ignominy thereof, when we are circumcised in heart. The keeping of the Pascheover before they proceed to battell, our seeking to God and for his favour, before we goe upon any great enterprize. And this Pascheover was the third, which they kept, for they kept one in Egypt, when they were delivered from the bondage of Pharaoh. 1. At Mount Sinai, when they had received the Law. 3. Being now entred into Canaan, to shew that we must praise God; 1. For our deliverance by the blood of Christ. 2. For the holy Ghost sent downe to instruct us. 3. For the heavenly Canaan now made our possession. The ceasing of Manna when they had eaten of the Corne of Canaan, shewed the ceasing of the meanes of grace when we come to heaven. The Israelites were fed with three kinds of food; 1. With that which they brought out of Egypt. 2. With bread from heaven. 3. With the fruit of Canaan: and that which they brought out of Egypt failed, when they had Manna from heaven, and Manna failed when they had the fruits of Canaan: so wee are fed at the first with worldly wisdom, but this bringeth not to life, wee feed thus no more, when Manna commeth, then with the Word of God, all the time of our being in the Wildernesse of this World; lastly, with heavenly light and joy, when that which is in part, ceaseth, faith and hope vanish, and charity onely continueth.

The appearing of a man to Joshua with a sword did set forth Christ, the Captain of the Lords Armies, who being with us, we shal not need to fear who can be against us; his bidding Joshua to loose his shooes from off his feet, the charge given unto us, not to live after the manner of other Gentiles, as formerly we have done, and to humble our selves before God, and to resign our selves to his government, being hereunto moved, because the Church, of which we are is holy; otherwise as the polluters of his house, the Lord will whip us out, and this Land will prove a Land unto us devouring the Inhabitants thereof, if we live wickedly, as it was said of the Land of Canaan; thus Ferus. By circumcising the second time, the Ordin. Glosse understandeth the Gentiles conversion unto Christ, as the first, of their forsaking of Idols, and now truly is the reproach of Egypt removed; sinne, which is shamefull, is no more imputed; but if thou returnest to sinning againe, a farre greater reproach cometh upon thee, viz. the crucifying againe of the Lord of Life, and the taking

D

The Myserie.
Ferus.

Numb. 9.

1 Cor. 13.

Matth. 21.

Numb. 13.

Glosse Ordin.

Origen.

king of his member, and making it the member of an harlot. Their keeping of the Pascheover after Circumcision and the reproach of Egypt removed, saith Origen, shewed, that no unclean person can keep a feast unto the Lord, or come to his Supper. Their feeding upon bread brought with them out of Egypt, he also understandeth of the knowledge gotten by humane learning, which helpeth a little at the first towards Divine knowledge.

CHAP. VI.

V. 1, 2.

Now Jericho was shut up straitly, because of the children of Israel, &c. And the Lord said to Joshua, see, I have given into thine hand Jericho, &c.

V. 3, 4.

Jericho was two miles from Gilgal, being otherwise called the City of Palms for the abundance that grew there. It is said, that none went in or out. They durst not, saith Lyra, either goe in to defend Jericho, or they that were within flee out to save themselves. But the Lord now appearing to Joshua, instructed him how he should subdue it. He and all the men of Warre must goe about the City once a day, six dayes together, and seven times upon the seventh day, seven Priests blowing with Trumpets of Rams hornes before the Arke, promising that thus the walls should fall downe.

Jeru.

Note.

The men of Jericho, saith Ferus, omitted no worldly meanes to defend themselves, but all in vaine, seeing God was against them, against whose judgements they could not bee fenced, although they were fenced against men. And thus doe all carnall men, in the time of danger, they flee to carnall meanes, but that which should chiefly be intended, is by them neglected, viz. the pacifying of Gods wrath by repentance; and therefore all their preparations are in vaine. To expugne this City, no Warlike preparation is appointed, but onely to compass it about, that the Victory might bee acknowledged to come of the Lord, and so we must confesse doth every good thing. For these words Jericho was straitly shut up, Hebr. is סוּרָה וּמִסְתָּרָה shutting, and shut up; that is, as Masius hath it, shutting up those that were within, that none could goe out, and shut up against all others, that none could enter. The Chaldees, shut up with Iron doores, and strengthened with brazen barres. This, saith Calvin, is thus exactly set downe: that the miracle in opening the way, the walls being cast downe, might be the more magnified, and that the stupidity of that people might appeare, thinking that gates and barres could defend them against his power which dried up the waters of Jordan.

Masius
Chal. paraphra.
Calvin.

Lyra.

In compassing the City, the men of Warre went before, then the Priests with Trumpets, and after them the Arke, which all the people followed, v. 9, 10. and every of the six dayes they did thus once, the Priests onely sounding, but no voice else being uttered by any; but upon the seventh, having compassed the City seven times, at the last sounding with Trumpets, all the people shouted, and the walls fell downe. In mans reason this was no way to subdue a strong City, for what could going about it doe, and sounding with Trumpets, all the rest being silent, as though they were affraid; and the seventh day going seven times about, being a meanes to weary them, and to make them unfit for the assault? But herein God both tryed their faith and obedience, and provided the more for the glorifying of his owne power. The Hebrews, saith Lyra, by the men of War, understand only those of the two Tribes and an half; but the Text saith, All yee men of Warre; and therefore that assertion is without ground. Some others, because it is said, v. 9, The reverend came after the Ark, say that the Danites, Asaph, and Nephthalim are meant; and therefore all the armed men went not before, but Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun; according to the order prescribed, when they marched in the Wildernesse, Numb. 10. 15. halfe the Army going before the Arke, and the other halfe after, which half that followed, is set forth by the same word that is here used סוּרָה. But because this word signifieth the gathering, or Congregation shutting up the whole troope behinde, it may better here be understood of all the people; because it is ex-precisely said, that all the armed, or Warriors should goe before. And whereas, Numb. 10. that part of the Army which followed the Arke, is set forth by this Word, it is because together with them went all the weaker sort, the aged, women and children. And therefore סוּפְרוֹת is here rendred by Jerome, reliquum vulgus. Yet Lyr. argueth against this, holding, that onely the Tribe of Dan, and the rest of the reeward of souldiers, are hereby meant; because the Lord biddeth that all the armed men should compass the City, and not the Women, &c. Let the Reader follow which of these he pleateth. Whereas it is added in our Translation, The Priests going on and blowing with Trumpets, Hebr. it is, The reeward followed the Arke, going on, and blowing with Trumpets. But because it is certaine that none blew with Trumpets but the Priests, the word Priests is inserted for more expression; or it may be rendred, The Arke going on, and the blowing with Trumpets, which was by the Priests going before it. For Trumpets of Rams horns wherwith they sounded, Hebr. is סוּפְרוֹת וכלים Trumpets of Jubilees, of which, that they were of Rams horns, see Levit. 25. Note here, how easie it is with the Lord to beat downe the Walls of any City, so that there is no resistance to be made against him. And when he caused such weake meanes to be used, the Inhabitants, when this was done from day to day, and nothing else, waxed now secure when their destruction was nearest, and so it is with all the wicked, when they thinke the evill day furthest off, it shall suddenly come upon them.

pressely

The people shouted with a great shout, and the wall fell downe flat. For these words fall downe flat, Hebr. is fall downe under it; and so it is rendred by the Septuagint and Chaldee, fell downe, and was swallowed up under it. Hereupon the Rabbins hold, that it sunke into the ground: But rather it is meant, that it fell, the foundation under it being dissolved, and falling away, or it fell into the ditch without it, said to be under it because it was much lower, and so the ditch being filled up with the wall, the passage into the City was made plaine. Now when the wall is said to have falne downe, it must not be imagined that every part of it fell, but so much as whereby a sufficient way was made for all the men of Warre immediately to enter in, for Rahab house stood upon the wall, which must needs be excepted from this ruine. And this was upon the seventh day, but whether upon the Sabbath day or no, as the Rabbins hold, is uncertaine, but in one of these seven dayes of compassing the City, it is certaine that there was a Sabbath, upon which no man might travaile; but God, who is above his owne laws, could at this time dispense with the rest of the Sabbath at his pleasure. For the seven Priests, seven Trumpets, seven dayes compassing Jericho, and seven times blowing with Trumpets upon the seventh day; this was all done to make the number of seven the more famous, that the day of this number sanctified from the beginning, might still be had in more honour.

When Ioshua had taken order for this great shout making, by all the people at the last sounding, he withall told them that the City of Jericho with all in it, should be accursed to the Lord, onely Rahab and her company excepted, warning them to take heed that they tooke not any accursed thing upon paine of making themselves accursed, and the whole Campe, and troubling it.

But all the silver and gold, and Vessels of brasse and iron are consecrated to the Lord, and they shall come into the Lords treasury. Ioshua could not speake to be heard, saith Lyr. when it is said he bade them shout, because the people were so many, and the Trumpets continually sounded; therefore it is to be understood, that he spake unto them by giving some signes. The word rendred accursed here, is חָרָם, cut off, so that the meaning is, it should be destroyed to the glory of God, the glory of his justice in taking revenge upon so sinfull a place, to the utter destruction thereof for ever; and if any presumed to take any thing in it to his owne use, it should bee a חָרָם, or cutting off to him. Of this word see more, Levit. 27. 28. and Deut. 13. 17. For the mettall, silver and gold, brasse and iron reserved for the Lords Treasury, the meaning is, that they should be brought into the Tabernacle to be used for the service therein, or to be laid up as Monuments of this miraculous victory, and that none should convert any

Note.

V. 20.

Rabbini.

V. 17.

V. 18.

V. 19.

of them to their private use, no not the Priests themselves, as they might doe other devoted things called by this name of חֶרֶם, Numb. 18. 14. Besides these mettalls, Tinne and Lead are mentioned, as reserved out of the spoiles of the Midianites, Numb. 31. 22. but that which was then reserved was for common use, this for the Tabernacle onely; and therefore there being herein, or in the Temple built afterwards no use of these mettalls, they are not reserved. The word חֶרֶם saith Lyra, signifieth both accursed and consecrated, and so it is here to be taken; for the best and most precious things were consecrated to God, the rest devoted to destruction.

V. 21.

Ferus.

And they utterly destroyed all that was in the City, both men and women, young and old, &c. They did not thus to other Cities of the Canaanites which they tooke afterwards, but preserved them for their owne habitation; why then was this severity used against Jericho above all other Cities? Ans. Because it is most probable that this place was the most wicked of all others; and here it seemeth were a miscellany multitude of all the peoples to destroyed, ready first of all others to resist the Israelites, as appeareth Josh. 24. 11. and because this was the first City of Canaan subdued, it was necessary that the richest spoiles thereof should be consecrated to the Lord, before they tooke any for themselves; and that all things that had life should be killed, and the rest burnt with fire for the greater terror of the rest; so Ferus. Here was a great temptation, saith Calvin, to the Israelites, in that expecting now to be enriched with the spoiles of Jericho, they are thus prevented, and likewise when they were made to goe about the City seven dayes, and to doe nothing but blow, and that not with the silver Trumpets, but Trumpets of Rams hornes, wherein they might thinke themselves mocked, but they obeyed in all things to prevaile.

V. 26.

Calvin.

And Joshua adjured them at that time, saying, Cursed be the man before the Lord, that riseth up, and buildeth Jericho, he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first borne, and in his youngest he shall set up the gates thereof. This City was thus severely proceeded against, as for the reasons before rendered, so that herein the utter destruction of the wicked world for ever at the last day might be figured out. This prophesie is noted to have taken effect in Hiel, 1 King. 16. 34. who was deprived of his children, when hee presumed to build Jericho againe, both eldest and youngest, and so most probably had his name put out in Israel therefore, according to the meaning of this curse against such a builder. To this effect Calvin saith, he shall lay the foundation in his first borne, being overwhelmed with the stones of this building, so audaciously erected without regard to so solemne a curse, &c. and thus he shall be deprived of his issue, and thus all others understand it also: For God would have Jericho to lye in the ruines for a monument of this miraculous overthrow, that his people might always hereby be put in minde of that which he had done for them, and bee accordingly thankfull. And touching Rahab and all hers now preserved according to the oath taken by the searchers, he saith that Joshua did nothing herein contrary to the will of God, for he acknowledged God moderating in all that businesse, and so although he was not sworne, yet that hee was bound by that oath to shew this humanity to her, in whom such faith had appeared: Whereas shee and her kindred being brought out from this destruction are said, v. 23. to be left without the Campe of Israel, this was because of their uncleannesse, they being yet Gentiles, till they should by being made Profelytes bee fit to come into the Assembly of Gods people, and bee made one with them.

The mystery.

Mystically by Jericho the world is set forth, as both Lyra, Origen, Isidor, and Ferus: for Jericho signifieth the Moone, like unto which the World is, for the mutability thereof, and therefore Christ restored to fight the blind in Jericho, and called Zachaeus the Publican there, and hereby he instituteth that parable of one travelling from Jerusalem to Jericho. This Jericho is strongly fenced with riches, power and glory, and hath for King, the Devill, for he is the God of this world. To subdue this Jericho, Jesus sendeth seven Priests to sound with with Trumpets of the Jubilee, that is, base ones of Rammes hornes, and not with silver ones intituled Numb. 10. which was done, when the Apostles were sent out to Preach the Gospel to all Nations, which was the sounding with Trumpets of a Jubilee indeed, but this was counted as poore and ridiculous a meanes to subdue Nations to the Gospel, as going about Jericho with such blowing to overthrow the walls thereof, and after the Trumpets the Arke is carried, when Christ figured hereby is present to his faithfull Ministers, and is born by them in heart and mouth: Lastly, a shouting of all the people is added, when Prayers are made unto God by his people with one consent, and so the walls of this Jericho fall down, the pride, and pompe and errors of the world. That Preaching may well bee understood by blowing with Trumpets, wee may see in Isa. Cry aloud, lift up thy voice as a Trumpet. The people following the Arke must make no noise to bee heard, that is, no tumultuating noise, but in shouting the seventh day, that is, in Prayer; or they must not break out through zeale in any action, but by direction from the Word of God, as Calvin hath it. When the walls of Jericho fall down, all are destroyed, but Rahab and her house, because shee received the Spies, so when at the sounding of the last Trumpet the world shall fall, all shall bee destroyed, but the Church converted from spirituall whoredome with divers lusts to the true Faith, and these are such as receive the Ministers of the Word, they being sometime of the city of the devill are now joyned unto and inherit with the Israel of God. Jericho is made an Anathema to God, by killing all things living, and burning the rest, but dedicating the best things unto him, to shew, that whatsoever evill liveth in us must bee mortified, whatsoever is dead, must have the fire of the spirit put to it, and whatsoever is good, must bee offered to God. Nothing of Jericho is taken by us, when wee have no communion with the wicked world in the evill manners and fashions thereof. And lastly, the builder of Jericho again, is accursed, God would never have it built again, as neither Sodome nor Babylon, to set forth hereby the perishing of the wicked for ever in hell fire, as their sudden destruction, by the sudden falling of these walls. And morally hee is accursed, saith Ferus, that bringeth in Idolatry, cherisheth superstition, nourisheth impiety, defends injustice, or brings in carnall living. And in speaking of their compassing Jericho seven dayes, he saith also it is morally taught, how wee should compass the world to destroy it in our selves. 1. By meditating upon the vanity of worldly things. 2. Upon their instability. 3. Their brevity. 4. Their taking of us from God. 5. From a blessed life. 6. Upon the labour in getting them, and care in keeping. 7. By hearing the Word of God and Prayer.

CHAP. VII.

BUT the children of Israel committed a trespasse in the accursed thing: for Achan the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, &c. took of the accursed thing, and the anger of the Lord was kindled against the children of Israel. Here was fulfilled, that which was threatned Ch. 6. 18. if any man should take of the accursed or consecrated thing, the whole Army should bee troubled. But how justly the sin of one is imputed to all, and all suffer for it, is the question; especially seeing in the Law it is determined, every one shall bee put to death for his own sin, and not the children for the Fathers, &c. Augustine answereth, that thoe Laws was made for men that are judges, the Lord reserving still a Liberty to himself, to extend his punishments further, as hee in his divine wisdom seeth cause, who seeth into all secrets, which are hidden from men. Hee knoweth by his high and invisable counsell, how farre to extend his temporall punishments, and wholsome terrour. For in the generall administration nothing hard befalleth mortall men, if they bee smitten with a bodily death, but through terrour thus stricken into them; Discipline is established, that one may seek to prevent sin in another, and as Members of one body, bee diligent and 24.

V. 1.

Deut. 24. 16.

August 24. 8.
in Josh.

solicitous one for another. It shall not bee so in respect of everlasting damnation, none shall suffer this for another. 2. There is a community amongst men that are of the same Society, every one being a part of the body, and so what evill hee doth, hee doth not as one alone by himself, but as a part of the body whereof hee is a Member. Calvin saith, both the same with Augustine, touching Achans being a member of the body, and happily that they were not so carefull to prevent this sin, as they should have been, which made Achan bold to commit it, and thus became guilty; or if wee cannot perceive how, yet wee must beleve that they were guilty, because the Lord hath so pronounced of them. Lastly, by this example singularly hee would reach, that one mans sin maketh all guilty, that wee might all bee the more watchfull over one another. And, as Ferus hath it, that sinners may not bee spared, but diligently searched out and taken away from amongst us, that wrath come not upon us all therefore. It is cruelty and no pity to hide or to spare an offender, as to spare one member to the indangering of the whole body; for if the right hand offend, it must bee cut off, &c. wherefore Rulers and Magistrates ought to consider this, and to doe justice to every one, that this evill may bee rooted out from amongst us. Besides this, Ferus rendreth also two other reasons. 1. That it might appear, how heinous a known sin is, when any one presumeth to doe that which is expressly forbidden him. For this one thing only was given in charge, to take heed of the accursed thing, and therefore herein to transgresse, this charge being so fresh in every ones memory was most abominable. 2. That sinne committed in the Church of God, doth draw a farre greater punishment, then committed by any without. It is to bee noted here and admired, that amongst such a multitude all resisted the temptation of covetousnesse so, as that but onely one man was led hereby, and that to the shame of these times, wherein so many defile themselves with sacrilege.

But how are the children of Israel said to have committed a trespass, when as but one onely sinned? Ausw. It is a phrase common in the Scriptures, when one doth evill, who is of a society, to attribute it to that society in common, so when Judas onely envies at the costly ointment powred upon the head of Jesus, it is said, that the Disciples murmured at it, Matth. 26. 8. and when one Theef onely railed upon our Lord, that the theeves railed upon him, &c. so Lyra. But here more is implied, viz. that the guilt of this sin, overspread all the Congregation, and all were subject to wrath therefore, for the reasons before rendred, especially because they were no more vigilant one over another in a matter of so great moment.

Achan, that sinned, is described by his pedigree and Tribe Judah, the principall Tribe to aggravate the fault the more, and to humble them of his consanguinity, to whom hee was a blot and blemish especially, as Calvin hath it.

And Joshua sent men from Jericho to Ai, which is beside Bethaven, on the East of Bethel, &c. One place, saith Lyra, is thought by some to bee called by both these names, Beibei so named by Jacob, when God appeared there unto him, and Bethaven, for the calves of Jeroboam afterwards set up there, for Bethaven signifieth the house of wickednesse, as it was then made by Idolatry, and Beibei the house of God, as it was before. But hee rejecteth this, because the Beibei, where God appeared to Jacob, was not here, but at Jerusalem, and Jeroboam was long after Joshua his time, so that from his fact no place could have the name of Bethaven in his dayes. Wherefore hee determineth, that this Beibei was the place, where Abraham had worshipped, said to bee between Bethel and Ai, from his worshipping towards the West, to which part it stood, having this name, and the same place had the name of Bethaven, from the Idolatry committed by the Canaanites there, and therefore Hos. 10. 5. the Calves of Bethaven are spoken of, which Jeroboam is said to have put, the one in Beibei, and the other in Dan, implying both these to bee one. But this question touching Bethel by Ai, hath been before handled, Gen. 28. 11. and that opinion of Beibei and Jerusalem being all one confuted. Of the Wildernesse of Bethaven, and Bethel it is spoken, Josh. 18. 12, 13. as being upon the borders of Benjamin, said

Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

Qu.

Joh. 12.
Lyra.
Matth. 27. 44.

Calvin.
V. 2.

Lyra.

said to bee extended from Jericho thither, whereby it appeareth, that they were two places, but one a Wildernesse, the other a City, and Bethel was that so called by Jacob, but the name Bethaven is afterwards applyed unto it for the sin there committed, Hos. 10. 5. The dwelling of Abraham and serving God here, could bee no reason of the name Bethel: for hee dwelt not in Bethel, but between it and Ai, neither had it the name of Bethel then, but being written of Moses after Jacobs time, hee called it so according to the name given it by Jacob, by anticipation. Ai, to view which, Joshua sent men now from Jericho, was foure miles from Jericho. For Joshua to send to view the passage to Ai, saith Calvin, was a point of good policy, that thus hee might know, how the more safely to lead his Army thither, but to send only 3000 men, when the whole Army was by & by to passe on, was no policy, but a preparative to an overthrow, the enemies being by their paucity inboldned to come against them, which they durst not have done, if many thousands more had shewed themselves. But this doubtlesse came of God, for the castigation of the sin committed, and to drive him to search it out. Ferus having commended the policy of Joshua also in sending, and in his example circumspection to all Captaines, and the use of meanes to subdue their wicked Enemies, and not to cast themselves upon miraculous Victories, discommendeth the presumption of the men, that were sent by him, in that trusting to the power of man, they would have 3000 only sent, as deemed by them enough to have subdued Ai, and in their example hee condemneth mens presuming upon their own strength, which it is just with God to punish with making them to flee before their Enemies. For presumption upon their own strength was shewed in that they went without the Priests and the Arke. The 10 Tribes also going against Benjamin in this vain confidence were overthrown, and Sennaberib the proud King of Asbur.

And the men of Ai smote of them about 36 men, for they chased them from before the gate even unto Shebarim, and smote them in the going down, &c. In smiting the Innocent for wicked Achan God did nothing unjustly, for none are innocent before him. It was a great mercy in him, that no more were slain, and by this punishment of some to benefit them and us all, in making it an admonition to us to bee carefull to prevent sin both in our selves and others. Unto Shebarim, that is, as Lyra hath it, following the Hebrews ad contractionem, because either they were weary of pursuing, or the children of Israel fell down through faintnesse, as they fled before them. But hee saith, Expositours commonly holds Shebarim, to bee the proper name of a place. The Septuagint for these words, Unto Shebarim, have ἐν οὐρεσι τῶν ὄρεων, they brak them. But it is more probable, that the place, where this was done, had the name from breaking, because their hearts were by this defeat broken. And they are said to have smitten them in the going down, because, as Adricomius hath it, Ai stood upon a Mountain, whereby they fleeing down were smitten.

And Joshuah rent his clothes and fell upon his face before the Arke, untill the evening, &c. a right godly part, and the onely way to obtain help in the time of distresse, to humble our selves in Prayer, and to persevere, as they did untill the evening, and that in Faith, and being solicitous for Gods glory, as Joshua his Prayer shewed that hee was.

And what wilt thou doe unto thy great Name? Thus Ferus. But Calvin although hee praiseth Joshua for making the Arke his refuge, humbling himself in Prayer, and adding, as the manner amongst the people of God was, renting of his garments, and putting dust upon his head, in token of sorrow and repentance, and for his Faith beleieving, that this overthrow came not to passe without God, and for his solicitude about the glory of his name: yet hee saith, there was somewhat herein to bee taxed, viz. his expostulating with God out of troubled affections: Why hast thou brought us over Jordan, to deliver us into the hands of the Amorites to destroy us? when as only a few had yet been beaten back, and God had made such ample promises to bee with him, and his thwarting of God in his proceedings, saying, Would to God wee had been content, and dwelt on the other side of Jordan. Whereby it appeareth with what infirmities

Gen. 12. 8.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Judg. 20.

V. 5.

Lyra.

Adricomius.

V. 6. 7. 8

Ferus.

V. 9.
Calvin.

the

Lyra.

the Prayers of the best are sometimes accompanied, but for his faith and zeale for Gods glory, all this is passed over, and his prayer is heard. Lyra likewise faith, that Joshua spake ill out of passion, as he would not have done otherwise, being so greatly favoured by the Lord. And hee feared that the name of God would be exposed to ignominy, the heathen objecting that he could not bring his people any further into that Land. Of rending garments see before, Levit. 10. 6. Numb. 14. 6. and of putting dust upon their heads, 1 Sam. 4. 12 Job 2. 12. Esai. 47. 1. Joshua in praying thus, did no otherwise then Moses had done before, Exod. 32. 12. Numb. 14. 13. Deut. 9. 28. and what he said may bee interpreted so, as to free him from sinning herein, which is the rather to bee held, because he was heard, and is not taxed therefore. His expostulating with the Lord is onely to move him not to deliver them into their enemies hands, but as he had done mightily in bringing them over Jordan, so still to shew his power by defending them; it is the voice of one seeking counsell and helpe from the Lord. And whereas hee wisheth that they had been content rather to have dwelt on the other side of Jordan, the meaning is, rather then he should now withdraw his helpe from them, they would have preferred to have been pent up there in narrow bounds, and rather then any ignominy should come to his great and glorious name.

V. 10.

And the Lord said to Joshua, Get thee up, wherefore hest thou thus upon thy face? Ifrael hath sinned, and they have also trespassed my Covenant, &c. for they have even taken of the accursed thing, &c. The Lord biddeth Joshua twice to get him up here, and v. 13. because, as is most probable, he lay still prostrate for reverence to heare the words of the Lord. And he greatly aggravateth the sinne, saying

Ferm.

Note.

1. They have sinned. 2. They have trespassed my Covenant. 3. They have taken of the accursed thing. 4. Stolne. 5. Dissembled. 6. Hid it amongst the stuffe. So that when God commeth to lay open our sinnes, we may see how many wayes sinfull hee will make any one of them to be. Wherefore the safest way is for us to confesse our owne sinnes, and to crave pardon that wee may escape his severe censure. But wherein did they dissemble. Answ. In that, when they were all so straitly charged not to take ought of the accursed thing, to which they seemed to consent, yet the contrary was now done, and happily being asked at the bringing in of the treasure for the Tabernacle, whether no man had taken ought, they all avouched their innocency herein. Lyra faith, they dissembled, because they had promised to obey the Lord in all things, wherein they were now proved dissemblers. And this promise is implied in that hee faith, They have trespassed my Covenant, intimating that they had Covenanted, that the spoiles of this City, as the first fruits of their prey in that Land, should be holy to the Lord. The word rendred stuffe, Hebr. is vessels, and so the Vulgar Latine hath it, but hereby all the instruments and stuffe in their houses are commonly signified. This was the cause why they could not prevaile, but fell before their enemies, even their robbing of God of his dues, whereby we may see what an hainous sinne Sacriledge is, they must never looke to prosper that are tainted with it. And no close carrying of the matter can hide it from Gods all-seeing eyes, Gal. 6. 7. God is not mocked.

Lyra.

Note.

V. 13.
Exo. 19. 10, 15

Up, sanctifie the people, and say, Sanctify: your selves against to morrow, &c. When the Lord was to come downe upon mount Sinai to give the Law, Moses is commanded to sanctifie the people, the manner is there declared, the like is commanded, Josh. 3. 5. before the working of that miracle for them in drying up the waters of Jordan; so now because a miraculous discovery of sacriledge was to be made, they must sanctifie themselves, as to whom the most holy God meant to come neare by his power, and by whose approach they should bee indangered, unlesse they were sanctified. Besides the sanctifying by washing and abstaining from their wives: Lyra nameth two more, 1. By fasting, as 1 Kings 21. 2. By Prayer, as Acts 1. and which of these wayes they were sanctified at this time, hee faith, is uncertaine. Some because the word used for sanctifying may as well be rendred prepare, understand it so, but this is worthily rejected by Calvin, holding, that because a guiltinesse was laid upon them all, they should

Lyra.

should by a legall lustration, washing with water, &c. purge themselves. But this purging was rather, that they might bee fit to heare God speaking by lots, who it was that committed this execrable sinne. The tryall which the Lord saith hee would make, was first by the Tribe, then by the family, after that by the household, and lastly by the man, and hee that should bee found to have stoln the accursed thing, should bee burnt with fire, both hee, and all that hee had. For the meanes of finding this out, R. Solomon saith, that the 12 Tribes were brought before the brestplate of the High Priest, in which were 12 precious stones, with their names, and the stone of that Tribe which was guilty shined not, but waxed dimme, but after this the families, households, and persons were tryed by lots. This saith Lyra cannot stand, because of the Tribes, it is said, The Tribe which the lot shall finde out: but although the Vulgar Latine Translation hath it thus, yet Hebr. it is The Tribe whom the Lord shall take: so that Lyra his reason against that of R. Solomon is of no force, and with the Hebrew agreeth both the Chaldee and the Septuagint: yet I say not this, as justifying that of R. Solomon; for the common received opinion is, that Tribes as well as families were tryed by lots, there being no reason why there should bee divers wayes of tryall about the same thing, but one and the same, and lots have commonly beene used to finde out a particular person whom the Lord would have found out, thus Jonathan was found out by Saul, and Jonah by those in the ship with him, and Saul that hee might be made King, and Mastibias, that he might bee taken into the number of the Apostles. And of lots it is said, the whole disposition thereof is from the Lord, and that the lot appeareth controversies, and therefore lots must bee used in dividing the Land of Canaan, as hath bin shewed upon Num. 26. and the manner of proceeding herein. There is another invention of some of the Rabbins about the meanes now used, viz. that the Tribes being brought before the Urim and Thummim, that Tribe which was guilty comming, was made by a Divine power to stand still, so that they could not goe away, then the guilty family, and household, and person likewise, the rest going on, was made fast. But whether thus, or by lot, or any other way, God discovered the sacrilegious, it is uncertaine, for so much as the way is not revealed, and therefore I determine nothing herein.

So Joshua rose up early in the morning, and brought Israel by their Tribes, and the Tribe of Judah was taken, &c. Joshua being commanded to sift out the sacrilegious, is not slacke, but goeth about it with all diligence, noted in this, that he rose up early in the morning. Whereas it is said, V. 17. The Zarbites were brought man by man, it is meant every mans household of that family, as was before ordered; and Zabdi his household was taken, and of that household Achan, who is said, V. 1. To be the sonne of Carmi, the sonne of Zabdi.

And Joshua said to Achan, My sonne, give glory now, I pray thee, to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him, and tell me now what thou hast done, &c. It was a wonderfull stupidity in Achan, that he was not moved in Conscience before to come forth and confesse, when he could not but perceive that he should by and by be found out. But this is the senselesnesse of wicked men, they goe on in their sinnes, and have no remorse therefore, till judgement commeth. And thus certainly shall every wicked person bee found out when God commeth to Judgement, although he lurketh amongst many thousands. Joshua his handling of him to finde out the truth, is most remarkable for Judges and Kings, hee putteth him not to torment to make him confesse, but speaketh gently unto him, having herein a care of his soule. For happily if hee had terrified him, hee would have denyed it, and so have added sinne to sinne, as Ferns noteth, hereupon condemning that other way of extorting confessions by paine, as tyrannically, and causing miserable men oftentimes to confesse what they would have them, although most falsely.

Give glory to God, thou hast greatly dishonoured him, now confesse, that his Power, Justice, and Omniscience may bee known to all, and hee may have glory hereby. And that it may appear, saith Lyra, that the Host of Israel was justly smiten, and according to others, that men might hereafter fear God, and Calvin.

V. 14.

V. 15.

R. Solomon.

Lyra.

I Sam. 14.

Jon. 1. 7.

I Sam. 10.

Acts 1.

Prov. 16. 33.

Prov. 18. 18.

V. 16.

V. 17.

Hugo Cardin.

V. 18.

V. 19.

Note.

Jcr. 23.

Ferns.

Calvin.

and the very speaking of the truth is a giving of glory to God, as lying to the devill, and confessions of sins are to the praise of God. In calling him son hee shewed a Fatherly affection, saith Calvin, even to a condemned man, that Judges might learn, when they condemn malefactours to death, yet not to put away the affections of humanity towards them, wherby they may bee won to repentance; Some, saith hee, speak kindly, and promise impunity to draw the offender to confesse, but having confessed, hee is straightway delivered to the hangman; but this is an unlawfull way, contrary to the course here taken by Joshua, for hee onely exhorts him, but promised no impunity unto him.

V. 21.

V. 22.

And. Masius.

And Achan answered, indeed I have sinned against the Lord, &c. When I saw amongst the spoiles a goodly Babylonish garment, and 200 shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of 50 shekels, I coveted it, &c. Babylonish garments were the garments of Kings in time of warre, most curiously wrought, and of great price, Masius saith, the words may bee understood of a rich carpet of Tapettry. The words rendered a wedge of gold, Hebrew, is a tongue of gold, so called for the form thereof. These, hee saith, hee took and hid in the ground, in the midst of his Tent, most probably putting them in a box, because otherwise the garment would have been marred. What a shekel is, see before, Gen. 23. 15. Achan in confessing readily, and not hiding, but aggravating his sin against himselfe, may bee an example to us, saith Ferus, of confessing our sins, not fearing the punishment, but praising God, if our eternall punishments may bee changed into temporall. Yet Calvin saith, it may bee doubted, whether hee confessed out of penitency, or being astonished and terrified at his being thus taken, seeing it vain for him to deny it: for so even Reprobates sometimes doe, being urged by their own consciences, thus laying themselves open to deserved punishments. But the more charitable opinion is, that hee repented truly, because hee speaketh so reverently of the Lord, and telleth by what degrees hee proceeded to sin; 1 hee did see; 2 hee coveted; 3 hee took; 4 hid it, and as willing to bee convicted, and to have his punishment by death, hee declareth, where the things stolne might bee found. And by these degrees are wee drawn to sin, about these worldly things; 1 the eye seeth; 2 the heart coveteth; 3 the hand acteth. Wherefore with Job let us make a covenant with our eyes. And to bee fenced against temptations in this kinde, let us think, that the best garment is innocency, the best riches Grace, and the most precious gold Faith.

Ferus.

Calvin.

None.

V. 22, 23.

After that Achan had confessed, Joshua hastned not the execution by and by, but sent to his tent, and the stoln things were brought forth, thus shewing, that hee proceeded not in wrath to shed his blood, but at the command of the Lord, the case being first made most plain, and so ought all Judges to doe, that by not being over hasty or wrathfull, they make not themselves guilty of murder, and much lesse by adjudging men to death at their own wills.

V. 24.

V. 25, 26.

And Joshua and all Israel with him, took Achan and his sons and daughters, his Oxen, Asses and Sheep, and tent, and all that bee had, and the silver, the garments, and the gold, and brought them to the valley of Achor. Now followeth Achans punishment, hee was stoned, and burnt, both hee and all that hee had, and a great heap of stones laid upon him, was made a monument of this judgement for ever. The Valley of Achor is so called, first, by anticipation, for now it had this name first given unto it, as is shewed v. 26. and the reason is rendred, because Achan, who was executed there, had troubled Israel, and was troubled in that place therefore: for אכר Achor signifieth to trouble, and hereupon some call Achan, Achar, and some by both these names, but erroneously, as Lysa sheweth upon v. 1. There is indeed an allusion to his name in the word Achor, but it is not the same.

Whereas his sons and daughters are said also to bee taken with him, the Hebrewes say that they were onely taken to behold this judgement, that they might be terrified, for which cause it is said, not that they stoned them, but him, and burnt them, that is, his goods before recited. But this is overthrowne, because because it is added, they burnt them with fire, after that they had stoned them, and the Lord adjudged all that hee had to death, v. 16. If this shall seem to bee against that, Ezech. 18. The son shall not dye for the sin of the Father, &c. It is easily answered, as before, this is a rule to bee followed by earthly Judges, and it is also to bee understood of everlasting death, which no man shall suffer meely for the sin of another; see more upon v. 1. If any of his children, saith Calvin, were elect, their being put to death was but a castigation to them; if reprobate, they dyed worthily. The judgement extended thus generally to all that he had, made it the greater to him, and the cutting off of the dumb beasts for their Masters sin, was no cruelty, seeing they were made for the service of man, who being destroyed, it is not unjust to destroy them also. And all the Congregation stoned him, to shew their generall detestation of this impious fact. But why did they bring him out of the Campe to bee put to death? Answer. 1 That they might thus remove from amongst them the execrable thing. 2 That the Campe might not bee defiled by the dead. And the gold and silver stolne are also burnt, because God would not have any stoln thing brought into his Sanctuary to pollute it. But for so much as the Lord appointed onely burning, why were they both stoned and burnt? Lyra saith, that some answer, burning setteth forth any kinde of severe punishment, and some his burning in hell; and therefore it is not said, yee shall burn him, but hee shall bee burnt. But hee rejecteth both these, and determineth, that hee was double punished for his double sin. 1 of breaking the Sabbath, for which hee was stoned; 2 of Sacrilege, for which hee was burnt. Hugo following the Hebrews saith, that the things, which could not feel stoning were burnt, but the living stoned to death, others better, they were first burned, and then stoned were cast upon them, even unto a great heap, that the judgement might never bee forgotten, and if so, here is an Hysteron proteron. And that it was so done, the words in Hebrew doe not obscurely declare, for having said, they stoned him with stones, hee addeth, and they burnt them, and stoned them; herein declaring the order, burning them all first, as God had commanded, and then casting stones at them in detestation, wherein they exceeded so, that the stones cast by them grew into a great heap, and remained as a monument of that judgement for ever. And this casting upon them of such a multitude of stones, shewed, that the people both did and would alwayes abhorre and keep themselves clear from such a foule wickednesse, as Calvin noteth. The translation commonly followed, They burned them after they had stoned them, is indeed against the Exposition brought, but it differeth from the Hebrew, as hath been already shewed, and from the Septuagint, following the Hebrew in this passage verbatim. Some think, that the fire being put to, hee was stoned, not to aggravate his punishment, but to put him the sooner out of his pain, certain it is, as Augustine hath it, that Iosua would not goe one jot from the Lords sentence, and hee best understood his meaning. Whereas Iosua saith to Achan, Because thou hast troubled us, God shall trouble thee this day, some gather that because hee humbled himself and confessed his sin, it was pardoned unto him, and hee suffered not in hell therefore, but all his sufferings were finished that day: But Calvin, who thinketh more hardly of him, that Iosua spake thus roughly to him to pull down his stout stomach, which was moved, in that his confession was not accepted of for a satisfaction, but they proceeded notwithstanding to this most severe punishment against him. But I have already shewed, that it is more probable, that hee truly repented and was saved in the world to come, and therefore I think that this passage may not unfitly bee applied for the further illustrating thereof. And that Achan was saved eternally, Fernu saith, is the generall opinion of Expositours: Wherefore Iosua speaketh thus sharply unto him, not as insulting over him, as a cast-away, but as was necessary, that being castigated thoroughly, both in word and deed here, hee might escape hereafter, and others hearing it might fear.

Hee was burnt and his children, because happily they consented to his sin, and if not, that his judgement might bee the greater; and his beasts suffered, and

Calvin.

Qu.

Qu.
Lyra.

Hugo Card.

Calvin.

Fernu.

Note.

V. 26.

The Myserie.
Origen.

Isidor.

and all that hee had, because his sin was about worldly goods, to shew, what a man getteth, that through covetousnesse is tempted to commit sacriledge, is no gain, but losse, all that hee hath being hereby eaten as with a canker, and consumed as with fire, as experience hath shewed in many Church-robbers. Hee doth greatly against himself and his posterity, that thus seeketh to bee enriched, as Achan, and Heliodorus, Antiochus, and Crassus, who after the robbing of the Temple fell into much misery. Wherefore the Romans, if any thing were taken from Churches, have sometime restored it double. This judgement being executed, it is said, that God turned from the fiercenesse of his wrath against Israel, to shew, that as long as sin goeth unpunished, God is angry with all the congregation, because evill, that provoketh his wrath, is amongst them, and by punishment inflicted upon the Malefactor it is removed, but not otherwise. Mystically by Achan's stealing of the tongue or wedge of gold, &c. saith Origen, wee may understand the golden sayings of Philosophers and Heathen Poets, to set forth superstition, these hee stealeth and hideth in the midst of his tent, that in reading of them hath his heart taken with such vanities, this is to the troubling of the whole Church, and therefore must bee sharply punished. Or else by this wedge of gold, &c. is set forth the eloquence and doctrine of hereticks. Or according to Isidor, the evill manners of the world brought into the Church.

CHAP. VIII.

V. 1,2.

Calvin.

Qu.

Lyra.

August. si quis bellum justum susceperit, utrum aperta pugna vincat, an ex insidiis, non refert ad justitiam.
Ferus.

Bonfrerius.

V. 3,4.

V. 9.

THe Host being purged by the destruction of Achan, Joshua is now incouraged to fight against Ai, being promised, that hee should take it, and bidden to doe to it, as to Jericho, but onely the spoile here is permitted to the people. They had burnt Jericho, and so they must doe to Ai in way of revenge for the losse and shame sustained by the men of Ai, that by burning the City the memory of that defeat might bee blotted out, and the spoile is granted to the Souldiers for their greater incouragement, so Calvin.

Lay thee an ambuſſo for the City behind it. The Lord condescending to their weaknesse, they being so much disheartned by their late overthrow, and because hee would not alwayes work by miracle, directeth Joshua here to use warlike policy, the more easily to overcome the men of Ai. And whereas a question is made, whether Treason against enemies bee lawfull, seeing it is not without dissimulation? Lyra answereth well, that lying is not lawfull, no not to an Enemy, for the Faith given to them must bee kept, but wee may for an advantage conceale our purposes from them, and by shewes deceive them, if wee can, it being alike lawfull in a just warre to overcome by open warre, or by secret stratagems of Warre, as Augustine hath it, for this is no vicious dissimulation, but military policy and commended in this place as taught by God. Ferus saith, that God taught them thus to proceed, that they might no more trust in their own strength, as they had done, and that the Enemies seeing them not onely to have strength, but policy also in making warre, might bee the more terrified. And just war, hee saith, is that which is made at Gods command, or to recover things unjustly taken away, and detained, or for great injuries offered. Other warres made out of covetousnesse to get more ample dominion or riches, or for vain-glory, are rather to bee called robberies. Bonfrerius moveth and answereth another question upon the first words, Take all the people and goe up against Ai, why all the people must goe up against so small a City, hereof the most probable reason was, partly that all their mindes before languishing, might bee erected with comfort through this victory, and partly that all having abstained from the spoiles of Jericho might have part in this prey. According to the Lords direction, Joshua proceedeth with all the men of warre, and out of them chooseth 30000 to goe by night, and to lye in ambuſh on the West side, behinde the City, v. 9. telling them that hee with all the Army would come before the City, and by fainning a flight, draw the people of Ai out of the City, and then they should arise and come into the City and set it on fire. And v. 12. hee is said to lay 5000 in ambush on the west side, &c. hereupon a question is made, whether two ambushes were laid, as it seemeth by the words, one of 30000, and another of 5000? R. Solomon saith, there were two. Calvin and Masius, that there was but one, of 5000 onely; that Company of 30000 being the Army appointed to assault the City. Comestor, and Lyra, and others, that 30000 were sent at the first to lye in ambush, but because so many could not bee hidden, 25000 returned, and 5000 onely remained; and this saith Lyra, is the common tenet of our Expositors. And it is not improbable, because they are expressly said to have been set in the same place; and the number of 5000 was sufficient. Yet if it bee held that there were two Companies set, the History agreeth, and it may bee conceived that the last ambush was set to meet with such as should flee, when the first entred the City, that none might escape. The second is directly against the Text, which saith, Joshua with all the men of Warre went up against the City, therefore not 30000 onely. In that such a multitude could passe and not be perceived by the noise of their motion, although in the night, was a point of Gods singular providence, making the men of Ai so secure, as not to set any scouts to espy them.

ning

All things being thus ordered, the King of Ai with all his men commeth out against Israel, who fled, and by flying, draw all the men out of the City to pursue them; the ambush then entrench at a signe given by Joshua by stretching out his Speare, and burneth the City, then they that fled, returned and gat the Victory; the King being taken alive, and hanged till evening, and all both men, women, and children being destroyed, &c. In that God biddeth Joshua to stretch out his speare, saying, that hee would now give the City into his hands. Calvin gathereth, that it was a matter of great difficulty to winne this City, either because the Israelites were yet fearfull, or the City so strongly fenced, and therefore God appointeth the stretching out of Joshua his speare for a signe of his help, that they might not doubt, but fight confidently, and the speare held up towards Ai, was as a sign of triumph, as if the victory were already gotten, so certainly did the Lord by this signe or symbole assure him thereof, for which cause he continued stretching it out, till all were subdued. But that the stretching out of this speare was a signe to the men lying in ambush to arise and take the City, he denyeth, because it could not bee seene so farre off, especially Joshua being in a valley; whereas they are noted then to arise, this was, because by the clamour and noise made; they now perceived that the former propounded stratagem had taken effect; thus Calvin; who is also seconded by some others, who say, that the sounding of the Trumpets, was a signe to the ambush to arise, and not Joshua his speare, which could not be seen by them so farre off, and God also, who spake to Joshua to hold out his speare, could at the same time bring them of the ambush by a Divine instinct out of their lurking place into the City. And that the holding out of this speare appointed by God was the cause, when the Israelites fought, of their getting the victory over the men of Ai, God secretly working therewith by his almighty power, as by the hands of Moses lifted up against Amalek. And therefore it is noted that these words, Into thy hand I have given it; may otherwise be rendered, by thy hand I have given it, that is, not fighting, but holding up thy speare. Moreover, no such signe being formerly given to the men laid in ambush, how could they know it? and if it had been held out for a signe to them when they had taken the City, he would not certainly have held it out still as hee did, v. 26. yet Iosaphat, Lyranus, Theodoret, and Tertullian will have the holding out of this speare to be for a sign to the ambush; and as Lyra hath it, some Banner to bee put upon the top of it, that might be seen. But I rest in the former as most probable, although the Rabbins are for this also. The word כִּידֹן rendred a speare, is sometime used for a shield, and sometime for a speare or javelin, and for a speare it is most commonly taken in this place, as by the Chaldee and Septuagint, but by the Vulgar Latine for a shield, yet

V. 12.

Qu.

R. Solomon.
Calvin, Masius.Scholast. Hist.
Lyra.V. 14, 15, 16.
&c.

V. 18.

Calvin.

V. 26.

Exod 17.

Joseph. Theod.
Lyra.

V. 17.

even Jerome rendreth the same word, a speare, Job 41. 20. and here both Arim, Montanus, Pagninus, and Tigurini interpretes, and a speare was fittest to be lifted up in the view of all about it, and not a shield; unless as Lyra hath it, a shield were put upon the top of a speare or pole, that it might be seen. But the words used to Joshua, intimate no such thing, but onely a stretching out of that in his hand towards Ai to destroy it. The people drawne out upon the feigned flight of the Israelites to pursue after them, are said to be not onely all the men of Ai, but of Bethel also; but it may bee doubted how this could bee, the ambush lying between Bethel and Ai? Answe. It is most probable, that the men of Bethel were before this come into Ai to helpe to defend it, as being under the King of Ai, and so it is not meant that they came now out of Bethel to pursue, but out of Ai, being before set there in a readinesse when the Enemy should come. And whereas all are said to have come out, and that a man was not left in Bethel or Ai, it is to bee understood of such as were able to beare armes: for all the weaker sort were slaine afterwards in the City, v. 24.

V. 19.

They entred into the City and tooke it, and hasted, and set it on fire. This is not to be understood of all the City, but the north part onely, which the enemies seeing, might quail in their courage, and the Israelites seeing, might be encouraged. For Ai was all burnt, v. 28. and the spoiles were first taken, v. 27. after the destruction of all the people, which could not have been if much of the City had been burnt before. They set on fire then some house onely that stood most fit to shew by the flame, or smoke thereof, their taking of the City, and so went out on the back of their enemies to fight against them, some happily being left to carry out and preserve the stuffe and goods therein from burning.

V. 20.

The men of Ai seeing the smoke, had no power to flee any way, which happened through their sudden great amazement.

V. 25.

Masius.
Tostatus.

All the men and women of Ai now smitten were 12000, which was the whole company in all that City, whereby the finalnesse of it appeareth. Masius will have the men of Bethel also to be numbred amongst them; but Tostatus that the people of Ai onely fell, and they escaped; but this last is improbable, seeing that in the warre they were mixed together, and so fell together, or else more would have been spoken of Bethel afterwards, which is not; so that it is most likely that they all perished together, and are all called the people of Ai, when they are summed up, because under the same King.

V. 28.

And Joshua burnt Ai, and made it an heap for ever, &c. This seemeth not to have been so, for Ezra 2. 28. wee read of the men of Bethel, and Ai, and Nechem. 7. 32. Wherefore it is to be understood that it remained desolate a long time; and his meaning was, that it should so continue alwayes, as Jericho, but as that City was built againe many yeares after; so it seemeth that Ai was rebuilt also.

V. 29.

And the King of Ai bee hanged on a tree till eventide, &c. Because the King was the chiefe in fighting against the people of God; hee hath a more shamefull death then any of his subjects, being first hanged and then taken downe, and stones cast upon him unto a great heape at the entring of the gate, as Achan in the valley of Achor. Hee and his subjects had put the children of Israel to ignominy by their overthrow, to the emboldening of the Canaanites against them, therefore now he is thus ignominiously dealt withall, that it being spoken of amongst the Canaanites, they might bee terrified, as indeed they were, Josh. 9. 3. and Cb. 10. 1. But his body is not suffered to hang any longer then till even, according to the law, Deut. 21. 23.

The Mystic.
Ferm.

Mystically, saith Fermus, by Joshua his fighting against Ai, we may understand Jesus his fighting against the Devill, for hee assaulteth him by open Warre, when as he casts Devills out of the possessed, and closely hee laid an ambush against him and his kingdome, when hee fled from the Jewes persecuting him, and fled into Egypt, and suffered himselfe to bee taken and crucified, but his Deity that lay hid, returned upon him, and destroyed all his power, and his whole City of the wicked world shall bee by him adjudged to bee burnt with fire. The world indeed is secure, and goeth on in fighting against his Saints, even even till the judgement cometh, but then they shall see the smoke of their torment ascending, but none of them shall escape, or have any power to flee away, because as this City, so the world their City, shall be suddenly set on fire, when they promise to themselves most prosperity and peace.

Then Joshua built an Altar, &c. in Mount Ebal, as Moses the servant of the Lord commanded, &c. Mount Ebal was over against Gilgal, Deut. 11. 30. wherefore Joshua now went back againe from Ai 4 miles to build an Altar there, so H. Bunting, Patriarchs travailes. Of the charge hereabout given by Moses, see Deut. 11. 29. and Deut. 27. at large, where all things concerning this passage have been already explained. Onely whereas Joshua may seeme not to have done altogether according to the direction of Moses, because hee appointed the Levites to pronounce the curses, and generally the Priests were to blesse the people, but Joshua is said here to have blessed them, and to have read the curses: Lyra and others answer well, that Joshua did it by the Ministry of the Levites. This building of an Altar and sacrificing at this time, was for thanksgiving for the former victories, and to consecrate the Land now entred upon, unto the Lord.

V. 30.

Deut. 27. 14.
Numb. 6. 23.
V. 33, 34.

CHAP. IX.

AND it came to passe, when all the Kings on this side Jordan, in the hills and the valleys, &c. heard thereof, they gathered themselves together, &c. In this chapter the divers effects of the preceding judgements are set forth in divers peoples, some hearing of them, harden themselves, and come to fight against Joshua, others come and subject themselves to the Lord, but they are destroyed, these preserved. And so it falleth out still, some are made worse by hearing, and some yeeld, the one sort to their certaine perdition, the other to their salvation. It is strange that all should not bee made to yeeld, hearing of such an unresistable power, against which there was no striving. But their eyes were blinded, and their hearts hardened by a just judgement, this being in them the forerunner of ruine, and so likewise it is in all others, both Princes and common people. Calvin here observeth the singular providence of God in holding these great Forces hitherto from comming against Israel, and that they sent no succours to Jericho, or to Ai, for which they had time enough, since their arriving in that land: but herein hee shewed great favour to his people, not being yet so courageous till they had gotten heart, and such is his providence over his Church in dissipating oftentime the great Forces of their enemies, and insatuating their counsells, that his servants may bee the better able to resist them, and lesse indangered by them. In the hills and the valleys, this land was full of hills, especially where the lot of Judah lay, Deut. 1. 24. Judg. 1. 19. And by the coast of the great Sea, that is, the Mediterranean sea, which was on the West, where the Zidonians, Tyrians, and Phenicians dwelt, being of the Canaanite kind, and the Philistims, over against Lebanon, which was on the North, so that here is described a generall uniting of their forces all over the Land to come against Joshua; but how, and in what order this was done, is further declared, Chap. 10. 1. Ch. 11. 1.

V. 1, 2.

Note.

Note.

Calvin.

And when the inhabitants of Gibeon heard what Joshua had done to Jericho, and Ai, they did worke wilyly, and made as if they had been Ambassadors, &c. Gibeon, saith one, was 12 miles from Gilgal, where Joshua now was, and 4 miles from Jerusalem, it was a great City, Ch. 10. 2. and seated upon an hill from whence it had the name, for Gibeon, or Gibeon signifieth a curled hill. It was within the lot of the tribe of Benjamin, Ch. 18. 25. and was given to the Priests, Ch. 21. 17. it stood upon the hill Shiloh, saith Borchardus and Adricomius, so that all the memorable things said to have been done in Shiloh, were done in this City, here the Tabernacle continued a long time, and here Saul was made King, &c. In the Gibeonites the wonderfull mercy of God appeared even towards some that were condemned to die, saith Fermus, so that some, even in Countreys that are

V. 3.

H. Bunt, Patriarchs Trav.

Borchard.
Adricomius.

Fermus.

Calvin.

Deut. 20. 15.
16.

Lyra.

Ferus.

Deut. 20. 16, 17

Qu. 1.

Ch. 11. 19.

Exod. 23. 22.

most wicked, are made vessels of mercy, as Rahab also before in Jericho. And he doubteth not but they were brought by the Spirit of God to submit themselves to Ioshua. And whereas they lyed to save themselves, hee saith, that being Gentiles, this was easily forgiven them. Calvin both derideth the device of the Gibeonites, as needlesse and vain, to come in this dissembling manner: needlesse, because the Israelites, before that they assaulted any City, were to offer conditions of peace, and vain, because it could not bee thought that Ioshua could by such poore meanes bee deceived, because they had mouldy bread, &c. to belevee, that they came from asfarre, because they might have such things, although not by accident in a long journey, and the device having taken effect, the Oath obtained was frustrate, because made to a people that had no being in the world, but as it were, to a Phantasma. But it was onely to Cities asfarre off, and not to any of the Canaanites, that conditions of peace should bee offered: and their case being desperate, it was not vain for them to use the poorest meanes of escape, referring the successe to God, and because this policy sprung from the fear and terrour of the Lord, hee made it successfull for their preservation, when all others were destroyed. And they beleved that Ioshua made such conscience of an Oath, that being once taken, hee durst not breake it, although taken to them under the name of farre dwellers, seeing they were the men, to whom hee was bound. Again, Calvin condemneth Ioshua for his credulity, when as hee might easily divers wayes have found out the deceit, and for his grosse neglect of Gods Ordinance, in that before hee gave them any resolution, hee went not to the High Priest, with the Urim and Thummim, to enquire of him what hee should doe. This last indeed is spoken of by way of taxation, v. 14. but Lyra saith, that the Gibeonites came thus to submit themselves, not onely through fear, but in Faith, as hee gathered from these words, v. 9. In the name of the Lord thy God are we come, that is, to bee joyned with his people, and to learn how to worship and serve him aright. So likewise Ferus, they knew that all in that Country were adjudged to dye, yet they against hope beleved, that thus seeking peace, and submitting themselves, they should escape with their lives, and therefore happily if Ioshua had consulted with the Oracle, the like resolution should have been given, seeing God rejecteth none that humbly seeke unto him for mercy, and hee confirmed what was now done, when for their blood unjustly shed in blinde zeal by Saul, hee sent a famine, and declared this to bee the cause, 2 Sam. 21. And therefore God now wrought so for them, that they being brought by his fear and Faith should not perish, and so the temerity and imprudence of Ioshua was the more excusable, this thing being noted Ch. 11. 19. to have come of the Lord. Whereas the Gibeonites are said there to bee a remnant of the Amorites, but Josh. 11. 19. of the Hivites; the word Amorites is to bee understood at large for all the people of Canaan, being of divers sorts, and so the Hivites were comprehended under it.

Two questions here offer themselves; 1 How Ioshua could lawfully save these Hivites alive, seeing the charge given by God was utterly to destroy them all? 2 Whether Ioshua were bound by his Oath, to which hee was by them drawn through fraud, to save them? To the first it is answered, that it was not unlawfull to save such as submitted themselves, and yeelded to become profelytes, as Rahab and her house, and these Gibeonites did: for the charge of destroying all was doubtlesse to bee understood with this condition, except in some extraordinary case, when any of them should voluntarily yeeld from their possessions and religion, and bee at their disposing, which case God foresaw would bee very rare, for by his spirituall judgement hee hardned all others, that none yeelded, that hee might bring their deserved punishments upon them. For the reason why the Lord would not have them to save any alive, was, lest the children of Israel should bee intangled with Idolatry by their meanes, but when any shewed themselves to bee taken with the fear of God, and ready to turn from this wickednesse, there was not in preserving them the like danger, and this was the case of the Gibeonites. Yet I doe not think think, that if they had come directly to sue for mercy, they should have been saved, but the tie of an oath concurring. For the second question, divers hold diversly: Augustin, Tostatus, Masius, Magallanus, &c. That Josua was not bound by this oath, as also Calvin; of whom before their reasons, 1. Because the oath was made about a thing unlawfull, and contrary to the expresse charge of the Lord. 2. Because the Oath was no more in effect, but if yee bee such farre dwellers, as yee say, yee shall live; yet the Oath was kept, both because they took themselves to bee bound hereby, viz. Josua and the Princes, and it was afterwards allowed by the Lord. The first of these reasons falleth by that, which hath been already said: and the second, because although Josua being deceived took them to bee farre dwellers, yet this condition was not expresse in the oath, but it was made to them there present, and therefore hereby Josua was bound unto them, whatsoever they were, as a man that marryeth a woman, which saith shee is English, although shee bee French, is bound to her, and hee that promiseth money to a Spaniard, who to draw him to it, affirmeth himself to bee an English man. And that they were bound by this Oath appeareth both because Josua, who had the spirit of God, took himself and them to bee bound hereby, and God afterwards shewed, that it was an Oath that bound, when hee sent a judgement upon the Land for Sauls breaking of it. Wherefore others hold better, that it was a validous oath, as Ambrosius, Lyra, Dionysius, Carthus, Gratianus. If it bee demanded then, whether an Oath touching a thing unlawfull bindeth? It is answered no, by no meanes, for when David had sworn to destroy Nabal, having met with Abigail, hee repented and did it not. Wherefore to spare any of this Country was not absolutely unlawfull, whatsoever the case should be, but generally. In this case Josua knew, that it would bee more pleasing to God to spare then to kill, 1. Because God is more inclining to mercy to such as ask mercy, then to judgement, although his sentence bee past for judgement, as in the case of the Ninevites. 2. For the avoiding of scandall after this Oath made; for if Josua had not kept it, the Nations round about would have thought vilely of Israel, as not regarding an Oath, and so that their God cared not, whether Oathes taken were kept or not. If it bee said, this was an encouragement to others to deceive. Ans. It was not for their deceit, that they were saved, but because they feared God, and for other reasons already rendred, thus Hugo.

And the men took of their victuals, this is thought by some to have been done to eate thereof, and in eating to make a Covenant, as the manner hath in some places been, but it is more probable, that they onely took and beheld, and smelt unto them, to see whether they were indeed so old or no, using no other means of tryall, either by consulting with the Lord, or questioning with Rahab about them, or observing their manner of speech, as they might have done.

Josua and the Princes having sworn unto them here, within three dayes, that they had deceived them, wherefore hee called them, and accurseth them to servitude, and to bee hewers of wood and drawers of water for all the Congregation. When the Israelites came to their Cities, the Princes could hardly keep them from smiting the Gibeonites, v. 17, 18. but they were pacified by telling them, that they should all bee their servants. If it bee demanded, how justly they could alter the oath, bee condemned to servitude? It is commonly answered, that the League barred not Josua from this, for they offered themselves, as servants, v. 11. Their Land and Houses then, might notwithstanding bee taken from them, and all their possessions, their lives onely being spared, and they might bee put to any service appointed them. And if the Oath had been taken otherwise, it had been unlawfull, because that whole Land was given to the children of Israel for an inheritance. And accordingly their Cities were given Gibon, Coaphira, Boeroth to Benjamin, Joth. 18. and Chirashbirim to Judah, Joth. 21. and these are said to bee their Cities, v. 17. And this sentence of being servants was just for their former sins

Qu. 2.
August. qu. 13.
Joth Testat.
Masius.

Ambros. offic. li.
3. c. 10. Lyra,
Gratian. qu. 22.
c. 4.
1 Sam. 25.
Hugo Cardin.

V. 14.

V. 23.

Qu.

Q<sup>n</sup>.

and the fraud now used. Calvin saith that the oath was kept but in part, their lives being spared, but their liberty which was dearer then life, being for ever taken from them, that they might have little benefit by their fraud, and mockage, yet they quietly submitted themselves, there being no remedy. But it is plain by that, which hath been already said, that the Oath, was not broken in any part, neither durst Josua certainly have done against it in any thing, for fear of Gods wrath, before whom an Oath is most sacred. But what was their service? Ans<sup>r</sup>. Josua saith, None of you shall bee freed from being bondmen, and hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the house of my God, thus explaining that v.21. they shall bee hewers of wood, and drawers of water to all the Congregation. For hereby it was not meant that they should bee servants to particular men to doe common works, but to the Tabernacle, providing and bringing wood for the sacrifices, by all the congregation there offered, and water to wash the Priests and sacrifices, and to seeth the flesh brought thither, and whatsoever servile work else they should bee put unto about the Tabernacle and Temple, when that was built as cutting and sawing stone, &c. so that their bondage was to the Levites, to serve under them continually Wherefore the strangers appointed by So.omon to doe these works about the Temple, 2 Chron. 2. 17, 18. being 153600 were most probably a great part of them Gibeonites. Whereas at the end of this Chapter. v. 27. it is said, they should bee hewers of wood and drawers of water for all the Congregation, and for the Altar of the Lord, the last words serve to explaine the former, herein, they should serve all the Congregation by doing those publick works, which concerned all. And because their service was about the Temple, they are spoken of amongst the Levites, Porters and singers, by the name of Nethinims, Ezra 7. 24. which by the Kings Decree were made free from toll and tribute, the word Nethinim comming of Nathan, to give, which word is used here, v. 27. Josua gave them, &c. for these were the men given for this service; and of this name wee read again, Ezra 2. 58. Nehem. 7. 60. and that they could not shew their Genealogies to bee of the children of Israel, whereas Josua doth not onely condemn them to servitude, but saith that they were accursed, it implyeth nothing else here, as Calvin noteth, but this temporall judgement upon their persons, as contrariwise it was a blessing to bee free, and to inherit in that Land, or as Junius, yee are accursed, that is, yee are of the people who are accursed, and appointed to destruction, so that if your lives bee spared, yee may think your selves well dealt withall, though yee bee made servants. If it bee demanded how they were maintained, and how so many could bee placed for habitation and service about the Tabernacle onely, seeing they were foure Cities? It is answered, that all were not continually at all times employed at once, but onely so many as were necessary, one company comming to serve after another by course, as the Priests growing numerous were distributed in Dauids time into 24 courses. For their habitations, they might have them sparsedly amongst the children of Israel, that dwelt near about the Tabernacle, and their maintenance, when they served, must needs come from the Temple, out of the contributions of all the Congregation, or out of the Levites meanes, to whom they immediately ministred, and amongst whom it seemeth that they dwelt, Ezra 2. 70. and some of them in Ophel, Nehem. 11. 21. Wherefore Ferus was mistaken in writing, that when Josua might justly have taken away these foure Cities of the Gibeonites, and the spoile of them, yet hee did none of these things for his Oathes sake; for although hee took not happily their goods, yet their Cities were taken, as was before shewed.

Ferus.

The Mystery.

Mystically the combining of all the Kings against Josua, shewed the seeking of the Kings of the Earth, by a joynt content to overthrow the Gospel of Jesus, by stirring up most hot persecutions against Christians: but as Israel is increased even at this time by the accession of many of that Land unto them, and all their combining against Josua was vain; so the more Christians were persecuted, the more they increased, gaining some in those tyrants Countries, and all their attempts against Jesus and his Gospel are frustrated, for they fall all at length before him, and hee by his people possesseth their lands. Thus Origen, who also thinketh, that by the Gibeonites were figured out some that live in the Church, and are kinde and serviceable to the Saints of God, but they have old garments, and shooes, &c. that is, live still according to the old man, these shall bee saved, but not without some note of disgrace. But Isidor, better, they enjoy a temporall life in the Church, but not eternall. But I rather follow Ferus, who by the Gibeonites in their old cloathes comming to Joshua, understandeth penitent sinners, that come to Jesus, there is nothing in them to commend them, but vilenesse by reason of sin, yet hee saveth them, and onely imposeth the crosse upon them, which they must bear and serve in the house of God, this is called a curie, but is turned to the faithfull into a blessing, in which Paul gloried above all things: Thus hee upon Chap. 9. but upon Ch. 10 maketh them a figure of such as living in the Church, yet continue in their old sins, they serve others but neglect themselves: These are permitted to live, but are not taken into the society of the faithfull, as Rahab was: These are most miserable, labouring onely for things temporall, but losing the eternall.

Origen.

Isidor.

Ferus.

Gal. 6. 14.

CHAP. X.

IN this Chapter Adonizedek King of Jerusalem, having heard that Gibeon had made peace with Joshua, and that Jericho and Ai were destroyed, hee feared greatly, and sent to call Hoham King of Hebron, Piram King of Farmoth, and Jabin King of Lachish, and Debir King of Eglon, to goe with him against Gibeon, which they did. But the Gibeonites send to call Joshua from Gilgal to their succour, who hasteneth thither, and is encouraged by the Lord, promising to deliver them into his hands, and so he smote them and chased them, and the Lord cast hailstones upon them fleeing, whereby more perished then by the sword. Adonizedek signifieth the Lord of righteousness, as Melchizedek, Gen. 14. King of Righteousnesse. This is thought by some to have been the common Title of the Kings of that City, as Pharaoh of the Kings of Egypt; Abimelech of the Philistines; and Cesar of the Roman Emperours. Which if it were so, the present King was much degenerated from the vertues of his Ancestours, having nothing in him but the bare Title, which yet hee gloried in as a Title of honour, as the Kings of Spain in the Title of Catholick; and the French Kings of Christianissimi. It was said Ch. 9. 1. that all the Kings about combined themselves against Joshua, now the History proceedeth to shew how this was done. 1 By the instigation of the King of Jerusalem, as being nearest the danger, these foure Kings are called together; first, to take revenge upon the Gibeonites as Traitors to their Countrey, and hereby terrour being stricken into others, to proceed with the more courage against Israel, as Calvin noteth. 2 Their overthrow being heard of, by the instigation of Jabin King of Hazor; all the rest of the Kings were gathered together from all parts, Ch. 11. 1, 2, 3. And God suffered these five Kings first to come against Gibeon, that being the second time delivered out of danger, they might the more willingly bear the yoke imposed upon them. This is by Ferus well turned into this Morall; So soon as any submit themselves to God and to his service, they shall bee sure to have Enemies, the devill and his instruments, that will attempt their destruction, but let us not fear in this case, but seek for help of our Joshua, Jesus, who will undoubtedly save us. 2. Gibeon is said to have been a great City, as one of the Royall Cities, and all the men thereof to bee mighty. That is, although it had no King, yet it was not inferiour to a City that had a King. This is added, to shew that the forces of the Enemies were not a little impaired by the revolt of this people. In that no King yielded to Joshua, but this people only, that had no King: Ferus noteth, that Kings, who have no feare of God in them, are proud, and think their power to bee so great, that none are able to withstand it, no not God himself, as Pharaoh, Senna-

V. 1, 2.

V. 3.

V. 5.

V. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Comestor Hyrnim, &c.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

2 Tim. 3. 12.

Note.

Psal. 82.

Senna-

The mystery.

Sennacherib, and Nebuchadnezzar, but they shall fall like men. And herein was not obscurely figured out the resistance made by all Kings and Emperours at the first going out of the Gospel, against Jesus, was prophesied Psal. 2. for the common people onely submitted themselves, and suffered cruell persecutions therefore, for the space of 300 years.

Of the foure Cities under these foure Kings, wee shall read more afterwards, Gb. 14. 15. they fell to the lot of Judah, and so were not farre off from Jerrusalem. Of Laschiff, where that stood, see in this Chap. upon v. 31. Of Eglon, v. 34. And of Hebron, v. 36.

Calvin.

Whereas the Enemies comming against Gibeon, is first set down, and then their sending to Josbua for aid, Calvin thinketh that the order is inverted, and that they stayed not so long, before they sent; but so soon as they heard of their preparations against them, which is not improbable. But whereas hee saith, that Josbua was three dayes in comming to their succour, it both seemeth contrary to the Text, which saith, that hee came suddenly, and went all night, v. 9. and against reason, seeing Gilgal was but 12 miles distant from Gibeon, as was shewed Ch. 9. 3. yet I hold with him, that Josbua first consulted with the Lord, as is intimated, v. 8. when God bade him not to fear, for this implied his seeking to God for direction herein, that hee might erre no more, as formerly hee had done, when these Gibeonites first sought unto him for peace; Yet Augustine saith, that God unconsulted, spake to him, intimating that if it had been his will that the Gibeonites should not have been preserved before, hee would have told Josbua who they were, although hee asked him not.

V. 10.

And the Lord discomfitted them before Israel, Hebr. והחם, in the Vulgar Latine, hee troubled them, and the word חם signifieth to trouble, from which it may be derived, the affix ו signifying them, but if the word them be understood, it commeth of חם Comterere, but because it is added, and (smote them with a great slaughter): The first word may better be understood of the feare and trouble caused amongst them, by Josbua his sudden comming with his Army, God working herewith, that the Israelites might the more easily overcome them; for feare taketh away all courage to resist. And chased them along the way that goeth to Bethoron. There were two Bethorons, the neather and the upper, both built by Sherah, the Daughter of Ephraim the Patriarch, 1 Chron. 7. 24. but they were not yet built: for how could shee come to build there, before the Land was conquered, this place therefore was called Bethoron, as some think, by anticipation, or rather being now an obscure Village and decayed, but called by this name, shee enlarged and new built it, the same name being still retained. It was eight miles from Jerusalem, Northwest, not farre from the Castle of Emmans the upper, 16 miles further towards the North. But if wee consult with Josb. 16. 5. wee shall finde that Bethoron the upper lay Eastward. Both these are said again to have been built by Solomon, and fenced with walls and gates. See more of Bethoron the neather, Josb. 16. 3. And of the upper, v. 5. And smote them to Azekah, and to Makkedah. Azekah was a City eight miles also from Jerusalem Westward, and near this, stood the City Makkedah, both which fell afterwards to the lot of Judah, Josb. 15. 35. 41. so that the Enemies fled, some one way and some another, to save themselves, but all in vain: for the Lord cast down great stones upon them, as they went to Bethoron, and as they fled from thence to Azekah, and with these hailestones more dyed then with the sword. That these hailestones were not ordinary, comming of naturall causes, but extraordinary and miraculous, appeareth both by the effect and the directing of them upon the heads of the Enemies, the Israelites escaping, who were so near unto them, even at their heeles, eagerly pursuing them, and killing them. Josephus saith, that it thundered and lightened also, Exod. 9. 24. There was haile and fire mingled with it, sent upon Egypt by the same divine power, at the word of Moses. Also thunder and lightning is said to have been sent against the Enemies of Marcus Aurelius, a Roman Emperour, at the Prayers of a Christian Legion in his Army,

H.B. Patriarchs
Travailes.

2 Chron. 8. 5.

V. 11.

Army, when all the Army was ready to perish for thirst, and for their comfort a gracious raine. And those hailstones are said to have been sent at the prayer of Joshua, Eccles. 46. 5, 6. of strange stones falling out of the aire at sundry times, some of iron, some of brick, some of chalke, and some fiery, write Pliny, lib. 2. c. 56. Livy, lib. 1. Decad. 1. and lib. 10. Decad. 3. and Putarch in Fr-bio. But many such relations are fabulous, this most true and certain.

Then spake Joshua to the Lord, &c. and hee said in the sight of Israel, Sunne stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon in the valley of Aialon, &c. It may be thought, saith Calvin, that by Joshua his speaking to the Lord, is meant his speaking before him; because when a man prayeth to God, hee is not said to speake unto him, for this were too unreverent, but to pray or to call upon him; but by his speaking here, is undoubtedly meant his praying to him, and hee is said herein to speake to the Lord, because hee propounded what hee desired of him power to doe; and after this being certified of his grant, hee speaketh before Israel to the Sun to stand still, nothing doubting, but that both Sun and Moone should now obey his command. For if hee had not first sought to the Lord, and been made privie to his will, it had been temerity in him thus boldly to speake to the Sun and Moone before all men, and being able to effect nothing, it would have been to his great disgrace. Lyra saith, hee spake to the Lord by thanksgiving for the favour already shewed, and then being confident, seeing God had given one signe out of the aerian Heaven, hee desired another in the starry Heaven. The Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Rabbins speake to the same effect with Lyra. But I rather subscribe herein to Calvin; and Augustine acknowledgeth a wish and a prayer in this his speaking to be implied: and Ferus saith, it is as if hee had said, I thanke thee O Lord that thou hast already thus shewed thy power, I would to God that all the world might see thy power. When it is therefore said, he spake to the Lord, the meaning is, that he spake secretly, praying in his heart for this thing, & then by faith believing it, in zeal for Gods glory, he saith before Israel, Sun stand thou stil, &c. for whatsoever, saith our Lord, yee shall aske in faith it shall be done for you, & who so shall in faith say to this mountain be removed, it shall be done. The word rendred here, stand still, is דום um, be silent; but metaphorically it is put for move not, because when a man is silent, he moveth not his tongue to speake; and to shew that standing still is meant, the word is varied, v. 13. into דמד stood, in speaking of the Moone, that stood still in Aialon; wherefore the Septuagint render it stand, and Jerome, move not. The Rabbins are over-bold here, to vent their one imaginations, saying, that the Sunne stood not still, but moved with a very slow motion, that could not bee perceived; but the text saith, it stood, which was by a strange and miraculous stay, the like to which was never heard of but onely in Hezekiah his time it went backward ten degrees upon the diall of Ahaz at the word of Isaiab. But a question is here moved, at what time of the day Joshua spake thus? Comestor answereth, when hee saw the Sunne now ready to goe downe. Lyranus and Serrarius, when the Sun was now in the Meridionall point, because it is said, v. 13. that the Sun stood in the midit of heaven: Unless, saith Lyra, by the midit of heaven wee may understand whatsoever is above the horizon. And so Tostatus and Magalianus will have the midit here to bee understood of any part of the heaven somewhat above the horizon. But Bonsferius confuteth this, because the word מצפ here put for midit, signifieth precisely that part which hath two equall portions on either side thereof, although the word תוך upon which Tostatus insisteth, bee of a more large signification. And yet going from this, hee determineth, that this was spoken soon after the Sun rising, because it was too hot at noone time to labour in the pursuit of the enemies; and because Gibeon was eastward from the place where Joshua now was, seeing Bethoron & Azekab were west & south from Gibeon. And for the taking away of that, which may seeme to make against his opinion, viz, the Suns standing still in the midit of the heaven, he saith, that by the midit may be understood the midit betwixt the horizon and the verticall point, to which hee would have the Sun now to be come; and to confirme this, hee saith, that

Engl. Hist. 16 5 c 5. Terull. apol. c. 5.

V. 12.

Calvin.

Lyra.

August. lib. 22
de Civit. c. 8.
Ferus.

Isai. 38. 8.

Qu.
Schol. Hist.
Lyra. Serrarius

Tostatus.
Magalianus.
Bonsferius.

Euseb. de locis Hebr.

Qu.

Obj.

Turpin. de vita Caroli magni,
c. 28.
Lib. 2. de vitis
patrum.
Lib. 6.

V. 13.

Tostatus.
Iunius.

Calvin.
Deut. 32. 15.
Ch. 33. 26.
Lyra.

that Aialon where the Moon stood, was westward in the tribe of Dan, Josb. 19. 42. But Eusebius saith, it was eastward from Bebel, and the Author of the Book called the Patriarchs travailes, southeast; but Borchardus and Adricomius, make it west and south. The reason of this difference may bee, because there were two Aialons; and this, as Euseb. hath it, being but a little village, is not elsewhere named. That the Sun was not yet come to the noon point, is most improbable, because so much had been done that day; and it is against reason, that Josbua should so soone desire a stay of the course of the Sun, when as there was still day enough to follow the chase; and the like may be said against those that hold it now to have been about noon. I rest therefore in that of Comestor, the Sun was declining, and the Moone being at the full, rising, and so the night comming on, which might hinder the pursuit, therefore Josbua desired this stay, that hee might have the more time to make a perfect victory, and obtained it. And it is not absurd to hold, that the Sun being now declining, should bee said to bee in the midkt of heaven, seeing all the heaven appearing to our sight above the horizon, is the midkt in regard of all those parts hidden from us by the vast body of the earth. I determin then, that the Sun seemed now to stand over Gibeon westward, and the Moone eastward over Aialon, and here they were fixed an whole day more. But it is inquired here further, how long the day of this solstice was? It is most commonly held to have been as long as the space of time from the rising of the Sunne, to the Sunne setting in those parts, about the time of the summer solstice, when the days be at the longest, for about that time was this battell fought, and that was much longer then the longest of our dayes, viz. about 18 houres. Whereas it is further added, v. 14. There was no day like this neither before nor after it. If the day in Hezekiah his time be objected, when the Sun went 10 degrees backward; for if each degree was an houre, that day was lengthened 20 houres. It is answered, happily the days were at that time of the year shorter, viz. but 8 houres, and if so, it was not so long a day as this. 2. The motion of the Sun might then bee much swifter then ordinary, and so notwithstanding its going backward, the day little increased, to which I rather assent, because no annotation is made, as here, of the extraordinary length of that day. Turpinus in the life of Charles the Great, saith, that one day was made as long as three, whilst he was persecuting his enemies. Mutius is said, when hee went farre to visit one being sick, to have prayed, when hee saw the Sun ready to goe downe, that it might stand still, and it stood till hee came to his journeyes end, and the like is said of Bessarion. But these and the like may well bee suspected to bee fabulous. That the Lord hearkened to the voice of a man; or it may bee rendred, for the Lords bearing of the voice of a man; that is, to doe such a miracle, in staying the two great lights of the world, contrary to the course of nature, for the like was never heard of before, nor after, neither hath any man ever desired it, that we read of, but Josbua, and therefore when the Sun went backward in *Hezekiah*s time, it was a signe voluntarily given by the Lord, and not desired by him. For the words inserted, v. 13. Is not this written in the booke of Jasher? Touching this booke, something hath been said already upon Numb. 21. 14. out of Tostatus, affirming it and the book of the Warres of the Lord there spoken of to be one and the same. Junius & Tremelius render it liber recti, according to the signification of the word Jasher, expounding it of the book of Annals, which is lost. Calvin not much differing understandeth by the just, Israel, sometime before called Ishurun, here Iasher, holding it to have been a book setting forth the gests of Israel that is not now extant. Lyra calling it liber justorum, reciteth the opinions of others, and rejecteth them; As 1. That it was a book never translated, and so came not to us. 2. The book of the small Prophets, because Hab. 2. it is said, that the Sunne and Moone stood still; and then hee followeth the Hebrews, holding that it was the book of Genesis, so called for the just ones, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob there written of, wherein Chap. 48. 19. Jacob in blessing Ephraim, saith, a multitude of Nations shall come of thee, therein pointing at Josbua that came of Ephraim. But all this, and whatsoever else can bee said, is but a conjecturing about that which cannot certainly bee known. Masius thinketh, that there was some Prophetical Book, like the Apocalyps, thus called, wherein these things were before spoken of; this book of Jasber, is againe cited, 2 Sam. 1. 18. some think, that it was a book in Meeter, setting forth the most notable things in the sacred hiltory, because in Hebrew, here are three sentences that seem to bee Metricall. And so although it bee not now extant, yet wee have no want in the sacred history, because that was but a setting forth in Meeter of the same things which are here and there contained in the Bookes that wee have. To mee it seemeth to have been a Book of the annalls of Israel, begun happily in the time of Moses, and continued in Dauids time, &c.

Myſtically by the Suns standing still, that the day might bee prolonged by the meanes of Joshua, Origen understandeth the prolonging of the time to the end of the world at the request of Jesus, that the Nations might bee subdued unto him. For when the Gospel was first preached, it is said, this is the last time, but ask of mee, faith God to his Son, and I will give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, &c. Whilest then the fulnesse of the Gentiles bee come in, hee asked and obtained a prolonging of the time, for still the Sun shineth, light is in the world, and goeth not out. Onely let us make use of it, and bee subdued by this Jesus to our Salvation, as the Cananites were to Joshua to their destruction.

And Joshua returned and all Israel with him to the Campe to Gilgal. This, saith Lyra, is put down hereby by anticipation, for Joshua was yet encouraging his Souldiers to pursue his Enemies, and returned not till the Victory perfected, and many Cities taken, v. 43. till which time the Campe was at Makkedah, v. 21. The Septuagint, because it seemeth to bee superfluously set down here, leave it quite out. Masius saith, hee returned, that is, prepared to return; but that cannot stand, because they went on in the fight long after this. Others hold that this verse crept in here by the fault of the Scribe. But there is no need, neither is it safe to grant that. The meaning is, hee returned with all Israel to Gilgal, but first, as followeth v. 16. hearing of the five Kings hid in a Cave, hee took order about them, and prosecuted his Victories to the full, and then returned thither, v. 43. To make this yet more plain, wee may thus conceive of the relation here made. 1 It is done briefly, the Sun stood still till the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies, after which, some Annotation being made upon that day, it is said, Joshua returned, &c. 2 More largely, as if hee had said, I have given you the bricfe of the gests of Israel, and Joshua at that time against their Enemies, after which they returned to Gilgal, now I will relate all things in order, before their return, v. 16, 17, 18. &c. And then finally hee telleth of his return, v. 43. Here tidings are brought to Joshua, that the five Kings were hid in a Cave at Makkedah, then hee biddeth to stop them in with great stones, and to goe on in the pursuite of their men, which they did, and smote many of them, but some escaped into fenced Cities.

Then all the people returned to the Campe to Joshua at Makkedah in peace, none moved his tongue against any of the children of Israel. This Cave was nigh unto Makkedah, not in the City, which was not yet taken, till v. 28. By rolling great stones to the mouth of it, they imprisoned the five Kings, that they might afterward bee brought forth to execution. Whereas they are said to return to the Campe at Makkedah, it is to bee understood, that there was a pitch Campe there, for that was at Gilgal, but here was the place appointed by Joshua for them to return unto when they had done smiting their enemies, that they could come unto, that from thence they might proceed together against their Cities. And all the people of Israel are said to have come hither againe in peace, to intimate that none of them was slain in this battail, so that it was rather a going out to kill men condemned and disarmed, then a fighting against the Armed. And to shew a perfect Victory now obtained, all their Enemies in the way being destroyed, it is added, None moved his tongue, that is,

A Masius

The Myſterie.
Origen.

Psal. 2.

V. 15.
Lyra.V. 13.
V. 14, 15.

V. 16, 17. &amp;c.

V. 21.

- is, there was none left to attempt the least hurt against any of Israel. A like speech to this is had, Ex. d. 11. 7. Jud. 11. 15.
- V. 22, 23, 24. Joshua and all the Army being again at the Cave at Makkedah, the five Kings are brought out, and the Captains put their feet upon their necks, and they are slain and hanged upon five trees. Joshua would have them to set their feet upon these Kings necks, not out of insolency, but in token of subjecting likewise all their Enemies unto them, that they might be the more courageous against the rest. They triumphed thus, saith Calvin, over all the rest, as if they had been already subdued. This putting of their feet upon their necks may seem to be prophesied of Deut. 33. 29. where the Septuagint have it, Thou shalt ascend upon their necks, and the Vulgar Latine, Thou shalt tread upon their necks, but Hebr. it is Upon their high places, see Expos. Thus Tamerlane, but with more pride, made Bajazet his footstool, when hee took horse, and Justinian having recovered his Empire again, from which hee had been put by Tiberius and Leontius, set his foot upon their necks, and having made them a publick spectacle, caused their heads to be cut off in hunting. Hee killed them, and then hanged them up, saith Calvin, for greater ignominy, that other Kings of the Countrey being enraged at it, might come against him, and so bring destruction upon themselves the sooner. For his commanding, that they should be taken down at the Sun going down, see the like before, Josh. 8. 29. but this is not so to be understood, as if Joshua stayed their taking down, but only appointed it to be thus done by some left for the purpose, for hee went the same day and took Makkedah, and destroyed the people, and from thence to Libnah, and served it likewise, v. 28, 29. For on the second day Lachish was taken, v. 32. and other Cities, from whence most probably this Army was raised.
- V. 28, 29. Mystically by the treading of these Kings under their feet, was set forth our treading of our spiritual enemies, which, before Faith commeth, reign as Kings, under our Feet; and accordingly the phrase is used, Rom. 16. 20. God shall tread Satan under your feet. For this is done by the power of Jesus, when sin is mortified in us, and doth not reign in our mortall bodies: to this effect Origen. And morally the mightiest of the wicked, shall be most mightily tormented. Libnah was a City within the lot of the Tribe of Judah, it fell to the Priests, Ch. 21. 13. And lay between Makkedah and Eglon, 10 miles from Jerusalem, but two from Makkedah, Libnah signifieth white Frankincense, whereof plenty was found there, and from hence it is thought to have taken the name. These Cities were doubtlesse fenced with walls and gates, wherefore it was no lesse miracle, that they were both in the latter part of a day subdued, then that the Enemies were before destroyed with stones cast upon them. Joshua did but come and Conquer, for God presently opened the way, and took away all power of resistance, and the like is to be held for the Cities here following, all are said to have been subdued at one time, for God fought for Israel, v. 42. they returned not to the Campe at Gilgal, till they had finished all these expeditions. Morally the wicked, whose punishments are deferred, are in no better case then they that are presently cut off, but rather in a worse; they are reserved for greater judgements, as these in fenced Cities, not onely to be slain, but to see the destruction of their wives and children, neither is any defence of force to resist, when God will judge.
- Note. Lachish the first City taken the second day, was within the lot of Judah also, Ch. 15. 39. and was eight miles from Libnah, and lay Northwest; of both these Cities, see 2 King. 19. 8. Here Horam, the King of Gezer was also smitten with his people, for hee came hither to help the King of Lachish.
- V. 33. From Lachish, Joshua went to Eglon, and smote it the same day. This was also in the lot of Judah, Ch. 15. 39. and was eight miles from Lachish, standing Southward from Jerusalem.
- V. 34. From Eglon they went to Hebron and smote it, and the King thereof: this was done another day; it stood 16 miles from Eglon, and was also in the lot of Judah, Ch. 15. 54. and was given to the Priests, Ch. 21. 11. of Hebron see before, Gen. 13. 18. Here Here two questions are moved; 1 How the King of Hebron could now be said to be slain, seeing hee was one of the five Kings that were slain and hanged, v. 26? To this Lyra answereth well. It was another new King, either succeeding his Father, or presently elected. 2 How it can be justified, that Joshua now smote it, and all the soules therein, when as Ch. 15. 14. Caleb is said to have taken it, and likewise Judg. 1. 10. Jadab is said to have smitten it, after Joshua his death? Answe. Lyra saith, that Joshua took the nether Hebron, and Caleb the upper, held still by Giants, the Sons of Anak, there being happily a Castle, which hee hastening to other places would not stay to take. But this is both against the Text, hee left none remaining, but smote all the Cities thereof, and all the soules thereof, and against that, Ch. 11. 21. Joshua cut off all the Anakims in Hbron, Debir, &c. and left none remaining, saving in the Philistims Countrey. It is therefore to be held rather, that Hebron being subdued at this time, was repossessed again by Anakims, coming out of the Philistims Countrey, against whom Caleb fought. For it was not one work onely to subdue all those Cities, but the Enemy entring into some of them again, caused more expeditions against the same.

From Hebron Joshua and all Israel returned to Debir, and smote it likewise. This City lay Northwest from Hebron about a mile, and it is also said to have been taken by Othniel, Josh. 15. 17. and Judg. 1. but that was likewise upon a repossessing of it again by the Enemies. It was also called Kiriath schar, the City of Scribes, because such as studied the Law dwelt there, and Debir cometh of Daber, hath spoken, it signifieth an Oracle. It stood in the lot of Judah, Josh. 15. 49. and was a City of Priests and Levites.

So Joshua smote all the Countrey of the Hills, and of the South, of the Vales and of the Springs, and hee smote all their Kings, and destroyed all towns breached, &c. Here for brevities sake, other particulars being omitted, it is shewed in generali, what a large tract of ground Joshua ran over, destroying all, before his return again to the Campe at Gilgal, wherefore v. 41. it is said, all these Kings, and all their Land did Joshua take at one time, that is, prosecuting his Victories begun from day to day, till that hee had fully subdued all that tract of ground which lay from Kadesh-Barnea to Gaza, and from Goshen to Gibeon, that is, from the South to the West; for Kadesh-Barnea lay Southward, being the limit of the lot of Judah that way, and Gaza of the Philistims, was the utmost limit of the land of Canaan Westward towards the Sea. Goshen also was a large Countrey lying Southward. All this tract is thus described by H. B. It lay towards the South, bordering Eastward upon the dead Sea, South: upon Kadesh, West: upon Gaza, North: upon Gibeon and Gilgal, containing in circuit 156 miles. And because those parts were some Mountainous, some barren, through the parching heat of the Sun, some plain, and some watery, hee distributeth the parts conquered accordingly into foure. For towards the South, the Sun lying hot upon it parched the ground, and made it more barren. For Vales, and Springs, the vulgar Latine hath Campestem, & Asedon; so likewise the Septuagint; But מְדִינֹת signifieth the flowings down of Waters, and therefore may well be rendered Springs, and by the other word, all plain places are meant. By every thing that breathed, understand with Lyra all mankind, for the beasts they were permitted to take for a prey, Ch. 11. 14. All this being done, Joshua and all Israel with him returned to the Campe at Gilgal, v. 43. Thus they did because here they had left, as in a place before subdued, their wives and children, for their safeguard, with some company doubtlesse to keep the Campe.

CHAP. XI.

THE Enemies on the South being subdued, and their Cities taken, now is shewed, how those on the North, and on all sides from thence, East, West, combined together against Joshua by the instigation of Jabin, King of

F

Hazor,

Qu. 1.

Lyra.

Qu. 2.

V. 38.

V. 40.

Numb. 34. 4.

Josh. 15. 3.

Josh. 15. 51.

V. 1, 2.

Ferus.

Hazor, but with as ill successe as the former five Kings, for they were all destroyed and their people, none being spared throughout all their Lands. If this shall bee thought cruelty, saith Ferus, that so much blood should bee shed, it is but as all sinners, when they come to bee punished, are ready to object that God is cruell towards them. But they truly were worthy of these severe proceedings; for when as Nebuchadnezzar was moved at one miracle to give glory to God, they were nothing moved by divers, unto the dividing of Jordan, and the falling of the walls of Jericho, the standing still of the Sun being added in the sight of all men, wherefore they were most desperately wicked, and worthy to bee all cut off, for that still they banded themselves together against the Lord.

The Mystery.

Mystically hereby was figured out how the Enemies of Jesus should joyn against him, first the Jews, and they being overcome, heathen persecuters, and they also being put down, Hereticks in greater numbers, but none shall ever bee able to prevaile against his Church, but finally bring ruine upon themselves, as these did. Thus Ferus; but whereas in speaking of the Kings, that now combined against Joshua, hee saith, that they were 24. and Comestor likewise, and that seven onely were slain before, according to the capitulation made Ch. 12. of 31 Kings, the contrary appeareth, because 11 perished before, and moreover Ch. 10. 40. some others, whose number is not particularly there set down, but if 11 onely, here could bee no more then 20.

H. B. Patri-archs trawales.

Hazor was a great and Metropolitan City, within the lot of Nephtalim, Ch. 19. 36. towards Mount Libanus, and not farre from Cysarea Philippi. And here another King Jabin reigned afterwards, Judg. 4. much afflicting the Israelites with his Canaanites. It lay 80 miles from Jerusalem towards the North, and the ruines of it are to bee seen at this day. Jabin the King of this City, was over all the other Kings, v. 10. and therefore by his authority might call together the rest to this warre. Johab the King of Madon; where this Madon lay, it cannot bee said by any thing spoken in the sacred History; but Josephus calleth these the inhabitants of Libanus: This was the first King for whom Jabin sent; the second was the King of Shimron, this hath an addition, v. 20. Shimron Meron; this was in the Tribe of Zebulun, Ch. 19. 15. neare to the lot of Nephtalim, towards the south. The third was the King of Achsaph, which Achsaph lay in the lot of Asher, Ch. 19. 25.

V. 2.

And hee sent to the Kings that were on the north of the mountaines, and of the plains, south of Cinneroth, and in the borders of Dor, &c. For the Kings on the north, the Septuagint have the Kings towards Sidon, happily taking צפון for צידון, as Masius conjectureth, or rather because Zidon is mentioned, v. 8. as the place towards which Joshua chased them. Cinneroth was the same, that was afterward called Genesareth, and so the Chaldee paraphr: readeth it in this place. Dor was a City in the lot of the halfe tribe of Manasseh, neare the Sea, Chap. 17. 11. Judg. 1. 27.

V. 3.

And to the Canaanite on the west and the east, and the Amorite, Hittite, and Perizzite, &c. This seemeth to bee an enumeration of divers others sent for, besides the forenamed; because it is said, and the Canaanite, &c. but in Hebr. there is no and, whereby it seemeth rather that the people hitherto sent for, before described by their Cities and coasts, are here onely further shewed to bee Canaanites, Amorites, Hittites, &c. onely the Jebusites in the mountaines, which were towards Jerusalem, are added; and the Hivites under Hermion in the Land of Mizpeh. Hermion was a mountaine neare to Libanus, 122 miles from Jerusalem towards the northeast, it bounded all the north part of that Countrey, the same is called Mount Baal Hermion, Judg. 3. 3. Besides this, there was another Hermion on the other side of Jordan, called also Shenir, Deut. 3. 9. of the former this here is to be understood. Mizpeh signifieth a Watch-tower, whereby is intimated, that it stood upon a high place. One Mizpeh was in the Tribe of Ludab, Ch. 15. 38. another in the tribe of Benjamin, Ch. 18. 26. But Adricomius will have both these to be one, standing upon the border of these two tribes. This Mizpeh was famous for the peoples assembling thither together against Adricomius.

Benjamin.

Benjamin, Iudg. 20. 1. and for Samuels assembling them to make Saul King, 1 Sam. 10. 17. Another Mizpeh was on the other side of Jordan in the tribe of Gad, Ch. 13. 26. Of the first of these, the City here named must needs bee understood, because that Mizpeh where Gad dwelt in Gilead, was before conquered; the Land about, even to Hermon, seemeth to have taken the name from this Mizpeh, being therefore called the land of Mizpeh: in the other Iephthah the Gileadite dwelt, Iudg. 11.

And they went out, and all the hosts of them, much people, at the sand upon the Sea shore, and their Chariots and horses. This speech is hyperbolicall, and setteth forth a very great Host; and the addition of Horses and Chariots must needs bee the more terrible to the Israelites, who were all on foot. Iosephus saith, that the horsemen were 10000, the chariots 20000, and the footmen 300000.

They came and pitched together at the waters of Merom, &c. This was a lake not farre from Dothan, 44 miles from Ierusalem towards the north; from Gilgal above 22 miles. This Lake is made a great part of it by the overflowings of Jordan, being 60 furlongs long, and 30 furlongs broad, but when Jordan overfloweth not, it soon waxeth almost dry; it is also called Samaconitis, neare to this was Hazor, where the great King Iabin reigned, to whom the rest here assembled; but Iosephus calleth the place of their meeting the City Berotha. Lyra saith, that Merom was between the head of Jordan, and the sea of Cimmeroth.

And be Lord said to Ioshua, Bee not afraid of them, for to morrow by this time I will deliver them into thy hands all slaine; and thou shalt hough their horses, and burne their chariots with fire. The Vulgar Latine, tradam omnes in manus tuas vulnerandos. The word חלילים chalilim, here used, signifieth either wounded, or slaine; but this last is to bee preferred, for it is shewed immediately after, that Ioshua slew them all, v. 8. that is, as Lyra hath it, all that saved not themselves by flying into fenced Cities: but this was a long time in doing, v. 18. that is, as shall bee further shewed there, five or six yeares; for the escape of Iabin into Hazor, and of other Kings, is intimated, v. 10, 11, 12. Wherefore these words, To morrow by this time, are not to be understood, as if they should all bee slaine in one day, but they should then bee all discomfited, and begin to fall; neither would the Lord cease fighting for Israel, till they were all slaine that they could meet withall. From hence Calvin gathereth, that Merom was not farre from Gilgal; or that these Forces were coming against Ioshua in Gilgal, and were now not farre off. And because God biddeth him againe, not to bee affraid, that notwithstanding the like encouragements formerly given him at divers times, hee needed now to have the same repeated againe. Iosephus saith, that the people of Israel hearing of their mighty Forces despaired through feare, till the Lord againe gave them this incouragement. For the charge of houghing their horses, and burning their chariots with fire; this saith Ferus, was, lest if they should have kept these horses and chariots, they should afterwards have trusted in them, and not in God onely; for the Heathen that were thus furnished, trusted in them, Psal. 20. 8. but Gods Angels are about his as Horsemen and Chariots of fire, and God is as a fiery wall about them. 2. To shew the greater indignation against the wicked in making all their pompe and pride to fall together with them. 3. To teach them that Horses and Chariots are of no power in Warre against God. 4. To prefigure how Iesus should destroy all his enemies, as the Jewes by taking away their Temple, and Land, and his Word from them, which were as their Horses, whereby they were puffed up with pride, and persecuting Kings, by destroying their power and greatnesse, which were as their Horses; and Heretiques by confounding their wit and eloquence by his Word, for these were as their horses wherewith they warred against the truth. 5. To shew how wee should warre against the devill to overcome him, viz. by houghing his horse, which is the flesh, and subduing it by fasting, praying, and labouring. Lyra yeeldeth none other reason of this charge, but that it must be done in token of a perfect victory obtained by the Lord; but others generally say the same with the first reason of Fe-

V. 4.

Iosephus.

V. 5.

H. B. Patriarches
travailler.Ioseph. lib. 1. c. 1
de Bell. Iud.
Ioseph. lib. 5. c. 6.
Aniiq.

V. 6.

Lyra.Calvin.Ferus.2 King 6.
Zechar. 2. 3

The Mysterie.

Lyra.

Calvin.

2 Chron. 18.
V. 7. 8.Ioseph. lib. c. 6.
Aniq.H. B. Patriarches
travailes.

Lyra.

Vatablus.
Pagninus.
Mofius.

V. 9.

Note.

V. 10, 11, 12.

Toftatus

Ioseph. lib. 5.
c. 6. Aniq.
V. 15.

V. 16.

Bonfrerius.

rus, and Deut. 4. 17. 16. the King is forbidden to multiply horses to himselfe. Calvin besides this addeth another reason, viz. that not being furnisht with horses, they might containe themselves within their owne bounds, and not seek out to enlarge their dominions; farther then they were allowed. And wee read not, that the Israelites went to the Wars after this with Horses and Chariots, but if sometimes they did, it was with ill successe.

Here is fulfilled what was promised, the enemies were cut off by Israel and chased to great Zidon and to Misrephothmaim, and to the valley of Mizpeh. Zidon, saith Iosephus, was a great City of the Phœnicians, built by Zidon the first born of Canaan, lying by the Sea, and not lying farre from Amilibanus, say Adricom. and Borchardus. This Amilibanus, saith H. Bunting, was one part of the same mountain, called Libanus, for that part towards the West, near Zidon, was called Amilibanus, the other upon the East towards Damascus, Libanus. Touching this chasing of the Enemy, hee saith, that it was to Zidon 612 miles, and yet hee maketh Zidon from Jerusalem but 16 miles, so that herein was a great escape, and in that hee addeth, from Zidon, hee returned againe to Hazor 32 miles. It is more probable, that the way which hee chased them, was 62 miles to the furthest part of the land of Canaan Northward, at the end of the Land of Zebulon and Naphtalim. Touching Misrephothmaim, in the Vulgar Latine, the waters of Misrephoth, it is a name compounded of burning and waters: which Lyra following the Hebrews, thinketh to have been so called, because being also near the Sea, and salt waters flowing thence into it; Salt, which is of an hot burning quality was there made: but Vatablus and Pagninus more probably, because those waters were hot, as the waters of Bathes. Musius because glasse was made there by a long decoction of sand. Of Mizpeh see before v. 3. the meaning is, that some of them fled Eastward, to the valley of Mizpeh, and some Northward and Westward towards Zidon and Misrephothmaim, and were pursued all these wayes.

And Joshua did unto them, as the Lord had him, hee houghed their horses, &c. Hee considered not, that their horses and chariots might bee now usefull for him in his Warres, but neglecting all worldly benefit, hee was altogether led by Gods commandement, herein giving ex ample to every of us, that the love of temporall gaine sway us not against Gods precepts, for hee is able to give us much more.

The enemies being destroyed all that had not escaped into Cities, now Joshua returneth to deale with them, and first he beginneth with Hazor the head City of all the rest, to which it seemeth that Jabin the King had escaped, for having taken this City, hee killeth the King and all the people, and burneth the City with fire: which execution was done upon it singularly, because the King thereof had made the greatest resistance. For the Cities of the other Kings under him, he destroyed both Kings and people therein, sparing none, young or old, but he burnt not any more of them, but let them stand still and took all their goods and cattell for a prey to the children of Israel. Of Hazor and Jabin, a King thereof wee read againe, Judg. 4. against whom Barak fought; which although Toftatus would have it to be another Hazor in the south part of Judah, yet it is rather to be held that it was this same City rebuilt; because as Iosephus saith, it stood in Galilee neare the lake Samachonitis, and that it was the same; and Thabour where the battell was then fought, was in Galilee. And all this Joshua is said to have done, as God commanded Moses, and Moses commanded him. Then reckoning up the Countreys subdued by him, it is said, Hee took all that land, the hills, and all the South Countrey, and all the Land of Gishen, and the valley, and the plaine, and the mountaine of Israel, and the valley thereof, &c. Here is a capitulation made, not onely of the Countreys now subdued at their going out against Hazors King and his confederates, but also before, as we may see, Ch. 10. 40, 41. Onely in this verse the mountaine of Israel, and the valley thereof are more added. But what place this was, divers conjecture diversly. Some thinke that it was Beibul, because Jacob who was called Israel worshipped there, both at his going into Mesopotamia, and at his his returne, Gen. 35. some, that it was mount Gerizim, neare Samaris, where Jacob bought a piece of ground, and where he dwelt and worshipped, of which the woman of Samaris said, Our Fathers worshipped upon this mountaine: and to this doe I assent, because it must bee a place called by this name when Josua lived, which could not be, but from Israel the Father of this people, and no place can so probably bee thought to have the name from him, as this which he bought, and so was his proper possession. Thus Rab Kimchi faith also in generall, that it was some place where Israel dwelt: and Masius a mountaine by Samaris, but he will have it so called from the ten Tribes, going afterwards by the name of Israel, who held this mountaine; but then it should not have been so called at the writing of this booke, but long after onely. Of the mountaine of the height of Israel wee read afterwards, Ezek. 17. 23. and 20. 40. but that is nothing to the giving of light into this. Calvin rejecting all particular explications here, holdeth that nothing else but the mountaines in generall now possessed by the Israelites are meant, by a word collective, being called together the mountaine of Israel. But because the mountaines are here reckoned apart, and then this mountaine of Israel, that cannot stand; yet because, v. 21. wee read of all the mountaines of Judah, and the mountaines of Israel, the mountaine of Israel may be here so called by anticipation, the mountaines being meant, which were afterwards proper to the ten Tribes, as by the mountaines first named those in the lot of Judah and Benjamin.

Even from mount Halak that goeth up to Seir, unto Baalgad in the valley of Lebanon under Hermion. For mount Halak, the Vulg. Latine hath, part of the mountaine, because פלח signifieth a part; and Aquila hath it, a monte dividente, the Chaldee and Tygrine interpr. a monte divisim; Symmachus a monte Levi; Vatablus and Masius, a monte glabro; the Septuagint, as if it were a proper name, ἀπὸ ὀψις ἀλλαν. That rendring it glaber, smooth, is followed by Junius, and seemeth to be best, as answering to Seir, rough, abounding with bushes and trees, whereas this beginning of it was without them, and so smooth, neither doe I any where find Halak, put for a proper name. Seir was on the South where the Edomites dwelt; and Baalgad Northward, being a City beneath mount Libanus, see Ch. 13. 5. of Hermion see before, v. 3. So that here is set forth the longitude of the Countrey taken from the South to the North, as before the latitude from the East to the West, v. 16. the circuit of this conquest, faith H. Bunting was 280 miles. But all these parts were not subdued at once, for it is added, Josua made warre a long time with these Kings. How long a time this was, may be gathered from the age of Caleb, Ch. 14. 6, 7. For hee was 46 years old when hee was sent to view the Land, and the Warres being ended, 85 years old. Now before his going out at that time, one year, and somewhat more was spent of the 40, which they wandred in the wilderness, which being added to the 5 above 80, maketh 6 yeares and upward; so that the Warres lasted 6 yeares and somewhat more. This delay was not made for want of power in God to give them the whole Land instantly, but partly to exercise their faith, and to make it the more evident that God fought for them; and that the Countrey being long in subduing, they might be more affected with the benefit; and partly, lest all being subdued at once, the wilde beasts should multiply upon them in such places as they had not yet people enough to inhabit, as was said before, Deut. 7. 22. to this effect Calvin. But at length all these Kings and their Cities were destroyed: for it is noted that none of them made peace with Josua, saving the Gibeonites, but were hardened to come to fight against him, that they might all bee cut off. If it be objected here, their seeking of peace had been vaine, seeing they were all destined to the sword for their abominable sinnes: and therefore hardening seemeth not rightly to be imputed to them as a fault. To this Calvin answereth, that the scope of this place is not to taxe them, but to shew how the Lord by his singular providence tooke away all impediment, and so made way for the execution of his judgement appointed. For if any had submitted themselves, this must needs have bred some demurre

Cajetan.
Salianus.
Joh. 4.

Calvin.

V. 17.

Junius.

V. 18.

Calvin.

V. 19, 20.

Obj.

in the Israelites what to doe, but they all contrariwise comming madly to War against them; and so being destroyed, there was no shew of cruelty, but a most just execution done upon them. But I thinke rather, as was said before touching the Gibeonites, if any City else had submitted it selfe, and turned to God as the Gibeonites did, it might have been preserved. And therefore their not yeelding is noted, as comming from a just judgement, God giving them over for their sins to this obduration, and so to destruction, as he had done to Pharaoh and his Egyptians.

V. 21.

Then came Joshua and cut off the Anakims from the mountaines, from Hebron, Debir, and Anab, and all the mountaines of Judah and Israel, &c. Of the Anakims see before, Numb. 13. 23. They were Gyants, which in the taking of these Cities, Ch. 10. happily saved themselves hitherto in some Forts which could not so easily be overcome; and therefore to avoid delays, being hither-to let alone, whilst Joshua was busied in his Warres in the North parts; now they being ended, hee commeth against them, and cutteth them all off also: so that those words, Ch. 10. 37. Hee left none remaining, are to be understood, not as if all without exception had been destroyed at the first, but partly then, and partly now. Of Anab nothing was said before, but it was a City not farre from the other two in the lot of Judah, Ch. 15. 50. Out of all these Cities, and out of the mountaines of Israel all the Anakims were destroyed, that is, out of all the Land, called henceforth the Land of Israel, as is expressed, v. 22. There were none of the Anakims left in all the Land of Israel, onely in Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod there remained: these were Cities in the Philistims Countrey neare the Sea, which the Israelites could never subdue.

V. 22.

V. 23.

Qu.
Calvin.

So Joshua tooke the whole Land, &c. How can this be verified, seeing Ch. 13. it is said, much Land yet remained to be possessed, and Judg. 3. 2. Answ. Calvin resolveth this, by saying, according to the next words, as the Lord had said unto Moses; that is, not all the Land promised without exception, but all which was needfull for the present, that the people of Israel which then were, might have competent possessions for their use; for to this effect the Lord had spoken Exod. 23. 29. Moreover, it may be said, according to others, that Joshua tooke all the Land which hee attempted to take; and the forces of the enemies were so broken by him, that in the places remaining untaken, there was no such power to resist, but that they might easily have been taken afterwards, if the people had persisted in obedience to God. The reasons why some parts still remained unconquered, besides that before going of the beasts multiplying, were two, Judg. 3. 2, 4. 1 That they might be exercised with Warre in after times. 2 That by them the Israelites sinning might be scourged, and living amongst them proved, whether they would be drawn to idolatry. And the Land rested from Warre; that is, as Lyra hath it, from generall Warres, but particular Tribes, and men made Wars, as is afterwards shewed.

CHAP. XII.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

Here is 1. a capitulation made of the Kings, and their Cities and borders on the other side of Jordan subdued by the Israelites under the leading of Moses, of which see before, Dent. 2. & Ch. 3. For there be the same bounds of both their Lands in generall, Dent. 3. 8. From the river Arnon to mount Hermon. And in particular of the Kingdom of Sibon, Numb. 21. 24. From Aroer upon Arnon to the river Jabbok: But here it is a little more fully described, From the middle of the River, that is, the river Arnon, and half Gilead, and the parts given in possession to the Reubenites and Gadites, Dent. 3. 16, 17. are here shewed to have been of the Kingdom of Sibon. The plain also, and Jordan, and the coast thereof from Cinneroth to the sea of the plain, even the salt Sea under Ashdodh Pithah eastward, of all which see upon that place. Touching the other Kingdom, viz. of Og, he is said to have dwelt in Ashteroth and Edrei, Dent. 1. 4. at Ashteroth in Edrei, Iosh. 13. 12. he reigned also in Bashan and Salcah, and Mount Hermon to the border of the Geshunites, and of the Maachathites, and half Gilead, &c. Of all these, see before upon Deut. 3. 10. 14. but onely Mount Hermon, in part of which onely it seemeth that hee reigned, it being the bound of his Kingdome, and part being possessed by the Canaanites was taken by Joshua, Josh. 11. 17. thus some: But by that which is said Josh. 11. 17. and v. 3. The Canaanites that dwell under Mount Hermon; it appeareth rather that they possessed no part of this Mount, but the valley near unto it; and that all Hermon was taken and given away by Moses, is plainly affirmed, Ch. 13. 12. All this being taken by Moses, was given to the Reubenites, Gadites, &c. as is further shewed, Deut. 3. 14. 15, &c. Now all these Conquests, and those of Joshua are here briefly propounded in one view together, saith Ferus, that the people of Israel might the better take notice of the mighty Acts which the Lord had done for them, according to his promise long before made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and after to Moses and Joshua, and the more confidently beleve in him, and obey and serve him for all time to come. For it seemed sometime impossible to the children of Israel, that so many, and so strong Cities and people should bee subdued unto them; wherefore this being now done, there was great reason why they should not bee doubtfull, but confident touching the performance of all other promises for ever hereafter. And the same ground of faith should wee build upon for all promises of the Churches prevailing at last, of Christs second comming, &c. because all things hitherto promised, which were as hard to be beleaved, have been accomplished in their due times.

of

Here 2 is a capitulation made of the Kings on this side Jordan smitten by Joshua, whose Countreys are described and bounded, as before, Ch. 10. 40 & Ch. 11. 16 The King of Jericho one, the King of Ai one, &c. This tract of ground taken by Joshua, saith H. Bunt, was 160 miles long, from Baalgad to mount Seir, & 28, or 32 miles broad. And touching the fifth King of Jarmoth here numbred, he saith, that his name was Perkam, and that Jarmoth was 20 miles from Jerusalem westward, but he is called Piram, Ch. 10. 3. The 8 King of Gezer, hee calleth Horam, so also Ch. 10. 33. hee is called: Gezer was 16 miles from Jerusalem westward, in the tribe of Dan. Gedir the seat of the 10 King, was 14 miles Westward from Jerusalem, in Judah. Harmah of the 11 King, 40 miles from Jerusalem, upon the borders of Arabia deserta South-west, in Judah also. Arad of the 12 King, 22 miles from Jerusalem Southward. Tappuah the seat of the 17 King, not farre from Jordan and Jericho. Heber the seat of the 18 King, 6 miles Northward from Jerusalem. Aphek the seat of the 19 King, 44 miles from Jerusalem Northward, within 2 miles of Iezreel. Lazaron of the 20 King, 18 miles Northwest from Jerusalem. Nadan of the 21 King, 14 miles Northwest. Simron of the 23 King, 68 miles from Jerusalem Northward, and neare Nazareth. Achsaph of the 24 King, 88 miles Northward in the tribe of Asher. Taanach of the 25 King, 44 miles from Jerusalem, and 6 from Iezreel. Meziddo of the 26 King, 4 miles from Taanach. Iokneam of the 28 King, 27 miles from Jerusalem Northward in the tribe of Zebulun. Dor of the 29 King, 48 miles from Jerusalem North: upon the Sea coast, between the hill Carmel, and Cesarea Stratonis. Gilgal of the 31 King, was neare Jordan. Tirzah of the 31 King, 24 miles from Jerusalem in Manasse. Thus hee of most of these Kings, of the rest hee saith no more then is in the History of Joshua, Ch. 10. Ch. 11. and Ch. 12. But whereas hee saith, the Gilgal of the 30 King was that neare Jordan, between it and Jericho, this is most improbable, because there was no City thus called before, but upon occasion of the foreskins there cut away, as is shewed upon Josh. 5. neither doe wee read of any King there to be cut off, but of the people of Israels comming to it the same day that they passed over Jordan, and pitching there, which they could not have done so quietly, if it had been before inhabited by the enemy. Moreover, this King is called the King of the Nations of Gilgal, arguing, that he had divers peoples under his dominion. Masius following one Copy of the Sept. for Gilgal hath Galilee. But although Galilee bee called גליל it is no where called גלגל; that exposition therefore falleth, and so must remain uncertain where this Gilgal was.

Ferus.
Note.

V. 7, 8, 9, 10.

H. Bunt, Patriarchi Trau.

Masius.

CHAP. XIII.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5,
6, 7.

Ferm.

V. 2.

Bonfrerius.

V. 3.

Sebol. Hist.
Cajetan.
lunius.Calvin, Lyra, Masius, Tigarini interpr. R. Soloma. Chimchi,
&c.

Here the Lord biddeth Joshua to divide the Land of Canaan to the 9 tribes and an halfe, and to deferre no longer, although all that was to be divided, was not yet conquered and taken, because hee was now old and had not long to live, and by him the Land was to be divided before his death; and the parts yet untaken are reckoned up. In that God telleth Joshua that hee was old, and Abraham is singularly spoken of before, that he was an old man, Gen. 25. 8. Ferm noteth Joshua to have been hence commended, but not simply because he was old in yeares, but in wisdom and good manners. How old he was at this time, is not said, but Ch. 24. when hee dyed, that he was 110 yeares old, happily he was now 100. It seemeth, that after the Land conquered, and a quiet abode there obtained, Joshua went not by and by to dividing the Land, but waited till he had direction from the Lord so to do. In all things hee was guided by the Word of God, as every of us also ought to be.

The Land not yet taken, is said to be all the borders of the Philistims, and all Gesburi, &c. For all the borders, the Vulgar Latine hath all Galilee; but this is plainly an error, as the Jesuite himselfe confesseth, because the word signifying borders, is גלילות, and גליל is Galilee, whereupon some have thought Galilee to bee here meant, and so have written it. But Galilee was taken before Ch. 10. for Hazor and Kadesh there spoken of, were in the lot of Naphtali, and Simron in that of Zebulun, both which tribes were placed in Galilee, Ch. 19. & Ch. 20. 7. In describing the borders of the Philistims he saith, there were five Lords of them, viz. of the Gazathites, Ekronites, Asdodites, Eschalonites, Gittites; these last having their name from Gath, of a King whereof we read afterwards, 1 Sam. 37. 2. Of most of these places, and where they lay, see before, Ch. 11. 22. Touching Geshuri, see Ch. 12. 5, and Deut. 3. 14. From Sihor which is before Egypt, to the borders of Ekron northward. This is not the description of the land of Geshuri, as it may seem, but of the Philistims Countrey, the Lords whereof are immediately after numbred. For Sihor, the Vulgar Latine hath a troubled River, according to the signification of the word; but what River is hereby meant, divers think diversly; some, that it is not Nilus, but another River mentioned, Gen. 15. 18. lying nearer to the Land of Canaan, and Amos 6. 14. called the River of the Wildernesse. Junius saith, it is thought by some to bee a River, which comming through Arabia Petraea, floweth into the marish Sirbonis, and divideth Egypt from the promised Land: but hee following Epiphanius, judgeth it to be the River Rinocorura. Calvin rendreth it Nilus, and for Nilus it is taken by many others; not that the land of Canaan extended to Egypt where Nilus lay; but because there was nothing but a vast and uninhabitable Wildernesse between it and Canaan Southward, so that it may be said, from this River, because there was no more land habitable between Canaan and it; their reason, because Nilus is the most noted troubled River, for the black slime stiffe which it bringeth with it, and Jer. 2. 18. it is plainly called by this name Sihor: and because according to the phrase here used in Hebrew, upon the face of Egypt, Nilus overfloweth that Land. And to this doe I subscribe. This is the length of the Philistims Countrey, lying from the South to the North, as the land already conquered, lay from Jordan on the East, to the West. Whereas it is added, which is counted to the Canaanite, whereby it may seeme not to bee of the Philistims Countrey. It is answered, this approveth it rather to bee out of the Canaanites possession at this time, but counted their Countrey, although possessed by the Philistims, because otherwise it would rather have been said, this was also the Canaanites Countrey: But it is said to be counted to the Canaanite, to intimate the right that the Israelites had to it, to whom God had promised onely the land of Canaan, that is, of his children, and not the land of any of Hams other Sonnes. Although then the Philistims now held this tract of ground, yet it was first the Canaanites, and by the Philistims taken from them, as is shewed, Deut. 2. 23. to the borders of Ekron on the

the North; for this was the furthest Northward of all the Philistims dominions, as Gaza was the most southerly, which is first numbred, so Calvin, who rendreth it Aza, by ז in אזא is not pronounced, so likewise Junius. Five Lords of the Philistims; Hebr. five Lordships, and thus Calvin and Junius also translate it, and this reading standeth with better sense: and for Gazathites, in the singular number is the Gazathite, that is, the Gazathite Lordship, and likewise of the rest. But besides these, the Avites are added, these were the old inhabitants of this Countrey, Deut. 2. 23 and it seemeth hereby, that some of them dwelt still therein, although they had no rule, as the Philistims had, but were under them. These words, and the Avites, are by the Vulgar Latine left out here, and placed in the next verse thus, But to the South are the Evites, all the Land of Canaan. This is against the Hebrew verity, wherein it followeth and on the South all the Land of the Canaanites; the Avites being added, v. 3. as in our Translation. The Septuagint for further explication have all the Land of the Canaanite from Gaza. For the South, Hebr. is תֵּמַן teman, which word the Septuagint retaineth, and Teman was a Royall City in Idumea, South from Canaan, which is the reason why it is rendred South. And Mera that is beside the Sidonians unto Aphek: Hebr. Marab of the Sidonians, or Meara, which is of the Sidonians, as Calvin rendreth it word for word. מַעְרָה signifieth a denne, and so it is rendred by the Chaldee, and Arian Montanus, and not as a proper name; but Ierome and Pagninus make a proper name of it; and Junius calleth it Magorah, saying, that it is a River lying under Libanus, between Zidon and Berytus, referring for this to Pliny, lib. 5. c. 20. Adricomius saith, that there was an admirable, and inexpugnable den in Sidon, which seemeth to bee most probably here meant, this denne, as a place of greatest strength, being put for the whole Countrey of Sidon. Aphek was a City where the lot of the tribe of Asher lay, Ch. 19. 30. but the Asherites could not expell the inhabitants thereof, Judg. 1. 31 There was also another Aphek in the tribe of Issachar, Ch. 15. 53. and of this it is spoken againe, 1 Sam. 4. 13. of one of these the King was slaine, Ch. 12. 18. but if it were of this, the City held out still, and was not taken. Unto Aphek is added also to the borders of the Amorites, which borders, what they were, is uncertaine. Masius will have them to bee those on the other side of Jordan. Tostatus the Philistims, but without all colour of reason. Bonsferius, some Amorites dwelling Westward, but uncertaine where; to me it seemeth, that it was some place beyond Aphek, held still by the Amorites, because it is said, unto Aphek unto the borders of the Amorites.

And the land of the Gileads; the Vulg. annexing this to the former hath it, and the confines thereof, but erroneously; for although גִּבְלֵי signifieth a confine, yet that word is not here used, but גִּבְלֵי, of גִּבְלֵי the name of a City, Psal. 8. 3. from whence the inhabitants are called גִּבְלֵי Giblites, 1 Kings 5. ult. Ezek. 27. 9. and if it be rendred confines, here were a redundancy, because the borders were mentioned before. It was a City then from whence this name cometh, and that in Phoenicia, neare to Tyrus and Sidon, called Gebal, as both Ierome and Adricomius consent, and may be gathered in the places forecited. And all Lebanon towards the Sun rising, from Baalgad under mount Hermon, to the entering in of Hamath: unto Libanus Iosua had taken, Ch. 11. 17 and to Baalgad under Hermon, but Libanus it selfe remained yet untaken to Hamath, which Hamath was a City northward from Libanus, inhabited by the Canaanites, even in Dauids time; 2 Sam. 8. 9. This same is repeated againe, Judg. 3. 3. with the reasons why they were left untaken.

All the Inhabitants of the hill Countrey from Lebanon to Misrephothmaim, and the Sidonians, &c. Of Misrephothmaim, see before, Ch. 11. 8. There was beyond Libanus to this place, Antilibanus, having divers mountaines, even to the Sea, and a Countrey called Abylene, Luke 3. 2. The Sidonians are here againe named, that it might not be thought, that no more belonging to them was untaken, then Mearab their strong denne. All these parts hitherto holding out, God promiseth to cleare, saying, Them will I drive out before the children of Israel onely divide thou it by lot, &c. This promise was conditionall, if the people should continue in obedience, Exod. 23. 22. 23. &c. but because they did not,

Calvin.
Junius.

V. 4.

Junius.
Adricomius.

Masius.
Tostatus.
Bonsferius.

V. 5.

V. 6.

this

- V. 7, 8, 9. this was never performed, for the Countrey of the Philistims, and Phanicians, and Libanus were never possessed by the Israelites, although in the time of David and of Solomon they were made Tributaries; yet Joshua must divide them to the nine Tribes, and a halfe of Manassah, the other halfe with the two of the Reubenites and Gadites, having their parts already on the other side of Jordan from Aroer, that is upon the banke of the River Arnon, &c. of these limites see before Ch. 12. 2. and all the plaine of Medeba unto Dibon, of these two see Numb. 21. 30.
- V. 10. And all the Cities of Sihon which Reigned in Heshbon, to the border of the Children of Ammon; that is, to the River Iabbok, Ch. 12. 2. for that was their border of Heshbon, see Numb. 21. 30.
- V. 11. And Gilead, Ch. 12. 2. halfe Gilead unto Iabbok, for Gilead was not onely that under Sihon, but also beyond Iabbok, the limit of his Kingdom, to the border of the Geshurites and Maacathites, see Ch. 12. 5. and all mount Hermion, Bashon, and Salcah, see also Ch. 12. 5.
- V. 12. And all the Kingdom of Og, &c. see Ch. 12. 4.
- V. 13. But the children of Israel expelled not the Geshurites and Maacathites, &c. this is added because it is said before, that they possessed to their borders, lest it should bee thought that they were now destroyed. Only to the Tribe of Levi bee gave no inheritance, &c. This is added that the Levites might bee content, although they were neglected in this division, partly because it was done, as Moses had appointed, who was of their owne Tribe; & partly because they had a better part, viz. the sacrifices of the Lord, the tenths and other offerings being also understood, from Numb. 18. and other places in the Books of Moses. After the description of the Land in generall, given to the two Tribes and an halfe, now follow their parts in particular. First, to Reuben from Aroer, and the City in the middt of the River, and all the plaine by Med. ba. And Heshbon, Dibon, Bamoth-Baal, &c. Of Dibon it is said, Numb. 32. 34. that it was built by Gad, how then is it here ascribed to Reuben? To this lunius and others answer, that it was a bordering City between Reuben and Gad, and so common to them both. In like manner Heshbon, which is here reckoned to Reuben, and Numb. 32. 37. is said to bee of Gad, Ch. 21. 39. because in the confines of either Tribe. Of the other Cities, or most of them, it was spoken before, Numb. 32. 35, 36, 37. &c. and Iosh. 12. 3.
- V. 14. All the Kingdom of Sihon, whom Moses smote with the Princes of Midian, &c. This was not done all at one time, but first Sihon was slaine, Numb. 21. and after, Ch. 31. these Princes of Midian, there called Kings, but here Princes and Dukes of Sihon, happily because they were Tributaries to him.
- V. 15, 16. Balaam also, &c. Of whom, see Numb. 31. 8.
- V. 17. The part of Gad is described, their coast was Jazer, and all the Land of Gilead, &c. Of Jazer, see Numb. 21. But whereas all Gilead is here reckoned to Gad, v. 31. halfe of it is reckoned to Manasseh, and likewise Numb. 32. 40. To this, I know not what better may bee said, then that divers Regions were called Gilead, so the tribe of Gad may bee said to have had all one Gilead, and Manasseh another. For Sihon, whose Land Gad possessed, had not all which was called Gilead, but half of it, Ch. 12. 2. the other part, or the other Gilead which the Manassites possessed, was of the kingdom of Og, as is expressed, v. 30. The Gadites then held all the Land of Gilead that was Sihon's, and the Manassites all that of Og. And half the Land of the children of Ammon, &c. That is, which Sihon King of the Amorites had before taken from them, Numb. 21. 26. for with the Ammonites land they were forbidden to meddle, Deut. 2. 16. neither did they take ought thereof, Iudg. 11. 15. Unto Aroer that is before Rabbah. Aroer was upon the River Arnon; Rabbah the chief City of the Ammonites, still in their possession, but afterwards subdued by David, 2 Sam. 12.
- V. 18. From Heshbon to Ramoth Mizpeh, otherwise called Ramoth Gilead, Ch. 20. 8. as Debir is also called Kiriath Sepher, Ch. 15. 15. Of other Cities, see Numb. 32. This part also extended to Jordan eastward, where it met with the part of Reuben, and to the Sea of Cinneroth.

Hieronymus de locis Hebr.

Here

Here the part of the halfe Tribe of Manasseh is described, From Mahanaim all Bashan, all the Kingdome of Og, and all the Towns of Jair, &c. Of this Kingdom, see Deut. 3. 13, 14, 15 and how it was given to half Manasseh, and of the Towns of Jair, Num. 32. 40. Whereas, v. 31 it is said, to the children of Machir the son of Manasseh, even to the one half of them; it is to be understood, that the children of Machir alone made all the Tribe of Manasseh, for he had none other sonne; see Numb. 26. 29. so Bonsferius. But who so shall see into 1 Chron. 7. 14. may thinke that there were more sonnes of Manasseh, and Deut. 3. 15. Numb. 32. 40. Gilead onely is given to Machir, and therefore that there were other families of Manasseh to possesse the rest of Og's Kingdome, viz. Bashan and Argob. But here Gilead, Ashteroth and Edrei are said to bee given to the children of Machir, to half of them, because many Families came of him, a part of which received possessions on this side Jordan, see Josh. 17. 1. but there it is commemorated, that Machir had Gilead and Bashan given him, and therefore not Gilead alone, as it might seem by the places before cited. To conclude then, if Machirs children, yea, halfe of them, had all the kingdome of Og, and yet a lot remained to be received by them on this side Jordan, either they were all that came of Manasseh, or so many, that the rest in comparison of them were very few. And if they were all, these other sonnes said to be of Manasseh, Josh. 17. 2. and 1 Chron. 7. 14. were not his immediate sonnes, but Grandchildren by Machir. And indeed Joshua saith, that they came of Gilead, Machirs son, for the names differ not from Numb. 26. 31. but onely for Jeczer, Joshua hath Abiezer. Here it is remembred againe, that to Levi, Moses gave none inheritance, but a new reason is added, for the Lord was their inheritance, yet more abundantly to satisfie them, as was said, Numb. 18.

Mytically, Joshua dividing inheritances to the children of Israel, figured out Jesus, who distributeth gifts to his faithfull people, both which now they possesse, and which yet they attaine not unto, but shall afterwards inherit in Heaven, gifts of grace here, and of glory hereafter. Secondly, as those Lands yet untaken, were not to bee possessed, but upon condition of persevering in obediences; so hee onely that endureth to the end shall bee saved. Thirdly, as Joshua tooke not this honour to himselfe, but being called to it; so Jesus. Fourthly, as all the Tribes had not inheritances in Canaan, but some being taken with the love of Bashan and Jaazer, on the other side of Jordan; so all Christian people have not inheritances in the heavenly Canaan, for they that love the world, have their portion onely in this life. Fifthly, as some had greater parts then others, for Judah's portion exceeded any of the other Tribes; so in heaven there be divers degrees of glory.

CHAP. XIV.

Here Joshua proceedeth to declare, how the Land of Canaan was divided to the 9 Tribes and halfe, saying, These are the Countreys which the children of Israel inherited in the Land of Canaan, &c. but by and by speaking something that was necessary for preparation to this division, as who were the dividers, and how there could be 9 Tribes and an halfe, when as two and an halfe had received their parts on the other side Jordan, and there were but 12 in all, and the Tribe of Levi had no part; viz. by saying, that the children of Ioseph were two Tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim, v. 14. After this hee interrupteth the course of his History, till the 15 Chap. by telling of Caleb, how he came in for Hebron, and then prosecuteth this History of the Division againe, Ch. 15. The first words then, These are the Countreys, &c. are to be understood of the Countreys, the Division whereof followeth, Ch. 15. and all that followeth in this Chapter, as comming in by a Parenthesis. Wherefore Bonsferius is in an error, in taking them to be spoken of the Countreys divided to the two Tribes and an halfe, Ch. 13. as an Epilogue of all that is said there. And Lyra and Calvin are rather to be followed, who referre them to the Division following,

V. 29.
V. 30.
V. 31.

Bonsferius.

V. 33.

The Myserie.
Ferm.

V. 1.

Bonsferius.

- as I have here done. Whereas Eleszar the High Priest is joyned with Joshua, and the Princes in dividing the Land, this was done, as God had appointed, Numb. 34. 37. and as here, so there Eleszar is named before Joshua. Touching the reason rendered, v. 4. why the tribe of Levi had no part; For the sonnes of Joseph were two Tribes; the Vulgar Latine hath, in eorum locum successerunt filii Joseph in duas tribus divisi, and is therefore excepted against by Masius; but the meaning is nothing else but that these two Tribes coming of Joseph, made up the number of 12, although Levi were left out in the partition, and amongst 12 and no more, all must be divided, therefore Levi could have no part, seeing Manasseh and Ephraim, the two sonnes of Joseph were expressly constituted two Tribes by Jacob, Gen. 48. 10 Lyrano. Calvin moveth a question touching the men appointed to divide the Land, seeing the division was to be made by lot, how they could be said to divide it? and answereth, that when the lot had assigned the Countrey to each Tribe, where it should be, these men were to consider the number of people in the Tribe, if the part falling to any were too little, to enlarge it, if too great, to take some away, and to give it to another that wanted, see Numb. 26. 52.
- V. 6.* Then came the children of Judah to Joshua in Gilgal; and Caleb the sonne of Jephunneh the Kenezite said to him, Thou knowest the thing that the Lord said to Moses, &c. Here, before the division amongst the Tribes made by lot, Joshua breaketh off the course of that History a while, and telleth first of Caleb's coming, and the men of Judah in his behalfe, to require Hebron, as Moses had long agoe promised unto him. This promise is not any where so particularly set forth, but Numb. 14. 24. it is said by the Lord in generall, Him will I bring into the Land wherinto hee went, and his seed shall possesse it: and Deut. 1. 36. Lyra following the Hebrews, that are ready to vent their owne imaginations, saith, that Caleb being in Canaan with the other searchers, perceived that they would dissuade the people from attempting the conquest of that Land, went alone into Hebron, and prayed that God would strengthen his heart, that he might not consent with them in that wickednesse, wherefore at his returne, hee constantly cleaving to the Lord, Moses sware unto him that it should be his inheritance. But it is more probable, that Hebron being a place of note for the Gyants inhabiting there, by the sight of whom the other searchers were terrified, but Caleb trusting in God, doubted not but to prevaile against them; Moses hereupon sware to him in private, no more being present to heare it but Joshua, that hee should have it for a possession: and therefore he saith to Joshua, Thou knowest what the Lord said to Moses concerning me and thee in Kadesh barnea. And v. 9. Moses sware on that day, Surely the Land whereon thy feet have troden shall be thine inheritance and thy childrens for ever; expressing doubtlesse this Hebron to be the land in particular, being famous for the buriall of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob there. And now Caleb and the men of Judah come with him to desire the performance of this promise, not out of ambition, as Ferus noteth, but that the truth of God in his promises might the more notably appeare, that others might be encouraged constantly to follow the Lord, as Caleb had done. For two things he declareth here, had been promised unto him; the one, that hee should live, and come into the promised Land; all others from 20 yeares old and upward being cut off before that time for their rebellion; the other, that he should have Hebron for an inheritance. The first, he sheweth, was abundantly performed, for he did not onely live, but being now 85 yeares old, was as able to goe to Warre as at 40, which availed not a little to Gods glory. The other he now desireth to have performed unto him, that God might appeare to be true in every thing. And to shew his ability still for the Warre, and that hee had yet the same confidence in God to overcome the mightiest Gyants, he saith, v. 12. Thou hearest in that day, that the sonnes of Anak were there: if so be the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out. And this hee is shewed to have done, Ch. 15. 14. for although the Anakims that held it before, were cut off by Joshua, Ch. 11. 21. yet others remained in the mountaines hitherto unexpelled, or came thither againe out of the Philistims Countrey, wherein onely it is said that Masius.

Lyra.

Calvin.

V. 6.

Lyra.

Gen. 23. 19.

Ferus.

that some of them were, Ch. 11. 22. Touching the name of Caleb, the sonne of Jephunneh the Kenezite: Iephona, saith Lyra, some expound divertens, holding it to bee an Appellative, and not a proper name; and that hee was so called, because hee turned himselfe from the evill counsell of the other searchers; some prudent, and seeing, from פנה; but Jephunneh certainly was the proper name of Caleb's father, 1 Chron. 4. 15. Indeed hee is not mentioned, 1 Chron. 2. 9. where Chelubai, which probably was this Caleb, is numbred amongst the immediate sonnes of Hezron, the sonne of Pharez, the sonne of Judab. But Caleb by the very name used, is mentioned both v. 18. and v. 42. here he is said to be the brother of Jephameel, who is said to bee the first borne of Hezron, v. 25. and this Caleb is said to have had a daughter called Achisab, v. 49. of which daughter of this Caleb in question, see Josph. 15. 16. Of Caleb the sonne of Jephunneh yet we read not, till 1 Chron. 4. 15. which maketh it questionable, whether there were not more Calebs; and touching this man, the sonne of Jephunneh, whether hee came of Hezron, or no; although Lyra saith, that it is constantly to be held that he came of Hezron, who had also another name, Jephunneh. But because Caleb's age doth not agree, this must be left as uncertain, yet not so much for that, as for the name Jephunneh, because Pharez being very young when they came into Egypt, might beget Hezron 80 yeares after, and he at 80 might beget Caleb, unto which Caleb's age of 40 at the going out of Egypt being added all together, make 200 yeares. Moreover, why Caleb is called the Kenezite, is a great question, but Lyra also resolveth it, according to the Hebrews, thus; Jephunneh being dead, the mother of Caleb, his widow, married with Kenez; from whom, because he brought him up, he was thus called. Some thinke that Kenez was the father of Jephunneh, and so one brother of his was properly thus called, Josph. 15. 17. Some that he was so called from some exploit that he did, But nothing can herein be said certainly.

And Joshua blessed Caleb, and gave him Hebron, &c. Hee blessed, both by publishing his deserved praises; and as a man of God, praying for his good successe in attempting to take this place againe, and to expell the Anakims thence. But because Hebron was one of the Cities given to the Levites, Josph. 21. 11, 13. it may be demanded, how Caleb had it to him and his for a possession? They had onely the houses to inhabit in, and the Suburbs, but hee all the lands about; his goodneesse in this appearing, that when he had obtained it, as a singular reward of his faith and prowesse, yet he was content to give part back againe to the Priests, and to be a City of refuge, Ch. 20. 7.

And the name of Hebron before was Kiriath-arba, who was a great man amongst the Anakims. Kiriath-arba, signifieth the City of Arba, the father of Anak, Ch. 15. 13. The Vulgar Latine for these words, who was a great man, hath Adam maximus inter Anakim ibi situs est. Whereupon many have held it to be called Kiriath-arba, for the buriall of foure there, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; but this is a most erroneous reading, as the Jesuites themselves acknowledg; but of this conceit see more, Gen. 23. 2. And the Land rested from Warre: this is repeated againe, from Ch. 11. 23. to shew, that they might now freely goe about this division of the land, because the enemies were now quiet, and none durst make head against them, to interrupt them herein.

Mystica'ly, saith Origen, by Caleb, who had a possession given him before all others, understand the heart, for Caleb signifieth, as the heart: and Jephunneh, whose sonne he is said to be, converting himself, the heart then turned from evill to good, shall surely have a possession in the heavenly Canaan, and bee blessed.

Calvin.

Bonfrerius.
Calvin.

V. 13.

Qu.

Josph. 21. 12.

V. 15.

The Myserie.
Origen.

CHAP. XV.

Here is shewed, that by a singular providence of God, the lot came first up for Judab, and that in a most eminent and fruitfull place, and very large, that the prophesie of Jacob touching Judab his preference might appeare to come

G

Gen. 49.

come from God, this his prelation in his part, being a prælium of his future eminency in the Kingdom.

Amongst all the Tribes, Judab hath his part in the Land of Canaan first, saith Lysa, because that was the Kingly Tribe, and Joseph next, Ch. 16. because he came into the place of the firstborne Reuben, who was dis-inherited, Gen. 49. Touching Judab, his part is described by the 4 sides, the south, the east, the north, and the west. For the first, it is said, The wilderness of Zin, was his uttermost part southward; to shew, that his lot lay most southerly of all the land of Canaan, see Numb. 34. 3. and this was nearest to Egypt where this tribe was placed, as being most warlike to resist the Enemy. And the South border was from the shoare of the salt Sea, &c. This was the dead Sea, lying in a corner, where the South and the East part met, and hence they began to measure to the west, all the coasts by which they went along, being said to be southward. For the second side, viz the east, The East border was the salt Sea, even to the end of Jordan, &c. that is, where Jordan entreteth into the salt, or dead Sea: and here it is to be conceived, that the line of measuring went northward, this being a description of all the east side, even to the north. For the third, viz. the north side, v. 7. And the border went up toward Debir, and from the valley of Achor, and so northward, &c. and the goings out thereof were at Enrogel. This En, or fountaine of Rogel, was neare Jerusalem, 2 Kings 18. being a fountaine, or water where Fullers washed their cloaths, from whence it had this name Enrogel, the Fullers pool, or well; so the Hebrews.

V. 8. And the border went up by the valley of the son of Hinnom, unto the southside of the Jebusite, the same is Jerusalem. In this part on the north, the lot of Judab was divided from the lot of Benjamin, for it came home to Jerusalem, but Jerusalem it selfe fell to the lot of Benjamin, where the Temple was afterwards built, but by it went up the northside of Judab from east to west.

V. 12. And the West border was to the great Sea, &c. This was the Mediterranean Sea, where the west side, and the north met, and this was the utmost part of the Land of Canaan westward; so that the whole length of that Land, from the south to the west, fell to Judab. Here againe the gift of Hebron to Caleb is repeated, being shewed to lye within the lot of Judab; and hee is said to have expelled the three sonnes of Anak thence. But this is not to be conceived now to have been done; for both this, and that of Othniel taking Kiriath-sepher, &c. were done after the death of Joshua, Judg. 1. 9. and therefore they are here put downe by anticipation, as Expositors generally agree, being inserted by some other man; that Caleb's faith in God to drive out the Anakims, and to take this place, might soon appeare to the Reader not to have been vaine, and hee might not be left to seek farre off for the fulfilling of the thing given and hoped for, as touching the actually enjoying thereof, Ch. 14. But there it is said, that the tribe of Judab went up against Hebron, and slew the 3 sonnes of Anak, this being ascribed here to Caleb, with whom they went, as the chief in that expedition.

V. 21. Here the Cities of Judab lying south, and so about Hebron the possession of Caleb, are first reckoned up by name, and then are summed up, v. 32. twenty and nine; but if wee count them one by one, we shall finde 37, the reason of this difference yielded by the Rabbins, is, because eight of them were againe taken away and given to the Simonites, as may be seen, Ch. 19. and so 29 onely remained to Judab. Mafius and Serrarius thinke, that the walled Cities onely are put in to the summe; but together with them Villages also are reckoned, when they are counted one by one. But this last seemeth not to be so probable, because Villages are spoken of, as pertaining to these Cities.

V. 33. The second numeration of their Cities here followeth in the valleys, about which also the summe differeth from the number mentioned, for they are 15, but are summed up 14, v. 36. this, saith Lysa, was, because one was called by two names, Tappuah and Enam, v. 34. The third numeration of 16 Cities, and the fourth of 9 Cities, v. 44. and the fifth of 11 Cities, v. 51. and the sixth of 9 Cities, v. 54. and the seventh of 10 Cities, v. 57. and the eighth of 6 Cities,

v. 59. and the ninth of 2 Cities, v. 60. and the tenth of 6 Cities, v. 62. doe all agree. But out of these were subtracted to the Danites, Eshaiol and Gares in the second numeration, and to the Simeonites, Ether, and Afan in the third, Ch. 19. So that the whole number reckoned up, besides those deducted, was of 118 Cities with their Villages, and yet these were not all, for Ekrón, Ashdod, and Gaza of the Philistims, v. 45, 46. under which the other two Lordships also are to be understood, are not summed up, because in the enemies hands. But Ekrón was given afterwards to the Danites; and as Iosephus hath it, Gath and Azotus, Ascalon and Gaza onely remaining to Judah. Moreover, Ch. 21. 14, 15, 16. Essemo, Holon, and Bethsheems given to Levites are omitted here; and Bethlehem said to be of Judah, Judg. 19. 1. and unto it, upon v. 59. ten Cities more are added in the Septuagint Translation, Theco, Phagor, Etham, Culon, Tamai, Sorin, Carim, Gallim, Baiber and Manocho, all which are here left out, which Ierome conjectureth to have been done through the malice of the Jewes, razing them out of the Hebrew, that it might not appeare, that Iesus came of the Tribe of Judah.

Touching Lachish, v. 39. Lyra noteth noteth, that it was a diverse City from Lachish taken by the Danites, Judg. 18. for this stood southward, that north, and differed in the name being called Laiſh.

Touching Kiriath-Sannath, which is Debir: this was the City before called Kiriath-sepher, that is, Civitas literarum, and D. bir, verbum vel eloquentia. Kiriath-Sannath, civitas a univ. in, because שן signifieth acuer, to sharpen, and in the Syriack tongue שן docte, vel acue dicere. It is thought to have had this name, because it was an Academy of the Canaanites, wherein were Schooles of Learning.

Touching the City of Salt, v. 62. it was neare the Sea, most probably having the name from Salt made there, and not the same with Bethsheems, civitas solis, as some have thought.

As for the Jebusites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out, &c. Jerusalem is called also Jebus, Judg. 19. 10. from whence, saith Lyra, the Jebusites had their name, being of the posterity of Abimelech King of Gerar, with whom Abraham had made a Covenant, Gen. 21. the time of which was not yet expired. Wherefore they held their one Fort still, even till Dauids time, who expelled them, but by reason of that Covenant, they could not yet be expelled. Calvin ascribeth the not expelling of the Jebusites, to the sloath of the Israelites, although Jerusalem was the most holy place of all the Land, and the most excellent, that sanctified all the rest, and was the glory of all, yet they through their owne negligence, and love of ease, forbore to fight with the Jebusites, in the strong Fort of Zion therein: so that this is spoken to their reproach, they could not expell them, because they laboured not to doe it, being content with some part of the City, and leaving the rest to the Enemy: for which cause it is said, That the Jebusites dwell in this city with the children of Judah to this day; that is, the men of Judah in one part, and they in another. For there being nothing yet to hinder Gods favour and help from them, if they had attempted the expulsion of these Jebusites, they should certainly have effected it. But I can see no reason why the not-possessing yet of all parts of Jerusalem, should be ascribed to the negligence of Judah, for then some such thing should have been intimated, and it would not have been said, they could not expell them. The Fort of Zion, which they held was high, and most strong by nature, and unaccessible; and therefore it is rather to be held, that God would not yet help them in the expelling of it, reserving that so difficult a worke to another Worthy, even David, whom hee would raise up afterwards, and make famous by this exploit, permitting the Jebusites to live here still, as other of the Israelites enemies in other places for their tryall, as is said, Judg. 3. 1, 6. especially, seeing they had for the present houses and land enough to dwell comfortably in, till they should be more multiplied. For that of Lyra, ascribing the Jebusites dwelling here still, to an old Covenant made by Abraham, as hee hath it from the Rabbins, so it may well be suspected as a tale

Ch. 19.
Iosephus:

Ierom. in Mich. 5.

V. 39.

V. 49.

V. 62.

V. 63.

Lyra.

2 Sam. 5. 7.
Calvin.

of their owne coyning: for how may it appeare that they came of Abimelech, sith the Iebusites are commonly reckoned as one of the seven Peoples destined to destruction? and if they were included in the Covenant, and this Covenant was not yet expired, how shal we know that it expired so soon as David was King? Iudg. 1. 21. and that which is said here of the children of Judah, is said of the Benjamites, but before that, v. 8. The children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the City on fire. If it be here demanded, how could the men of Judah dwell here, and the Benjamites also? Answ. The south part of the City was within the lot of Judah, but the north part belonged to Benjamin, and herein the Temple stood, and it was the farre greater part, see Ch. 18. 28. If it bee further demanded, how it is said here, the children of Judah could not expell the Iebusites out of Jerusalem, when as Iudg. 1. 8. it is said, they had taken the City, &c. Answ. In part they had taken it, and destroyed the inhabitants, but in part they had not, viz. in that part, where the Fort of Zion stood. And this taking of it, saith Josephus, was after the death of Josbua. But happily being taken as Hebron and Debir in Josbua his time, the enemies re-possessed it againe, and were afterwards againe destroyed.

Mytically, by the Iebusite dwelling still in Jerusalem, saith Origen, understand the wicked in the Church; for the Tares cannot be separated from the Wheat til the last day. The Iebusite signifieth one treading under foot, they then, that with dogs and swine tread holy things under their feet, be the Iebusites in the Church, to expell whom, we must endeavour more and more unto the end.

CHAP. XVI.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Here is described the lot of the children of Joseph: first, in generall, and then Ephraims part in particular. Their east limit was Jordan, and their west Bechoron and Gezer, to the Mediterranean Sea. Whereas it is said, v. 2. And goeth out from Bethel to Luz; it may be demanded how this could be, seeing the same City which was Bethel, was before called Luz, Ch. 18. 13. Answ. Bethel where Jacob lodged, Gen. 28. was neare unto the City of Luz, and was built after it, and then both being joyned together, had the name of Bethel; the going out then from one to the other, was from one part of the City to the other, distinguished by these two names. Touching the part of Ephraim in particular, the border thereof was Ataroth-Addar, unto Bechoron the upper, eastward, &c. And the separate Cities of the children of Ephraim, were amongst the inheritance of the children of Manasseh, &c. that is, as Lyra hath it, the line of the division reaching sometimes into the lot of Manasseh, and fetching a compasse to include here a City, and there a City, lying within Manasseh's lot, if the line of his lot be carryed straight from east to west, see Chap. 17. 8, 9, 10. Lastly, it is noted, that they drave not out the Canaanites in Gezer, one of their bordering Cities, but they served them under Tribute, which is generally held to have been a blemish to Ephraim, in that they would bee compounded withall for gaine, and not destroy all who were appointed to the sword, when as the Lord had given so strait a charge to make no Covenant with them, but utterly to root them out. The same fault is noted to have been in the children of Manasseh, Ch. 17. 13. This is by Origen Allegorically applied thus; the Canaan setteth forth the Flesh, the Israelite the Spirit, which when it cometh to bee strong, bringeth the Flesh under, but cannot utterly expell it in this life.

V. 5.

V. 9.

Lyra.

V. 10.

Origen.

CHAP. XVII.

Here is set forth the part of the halfe Tribe of Manasseh, in which, although it were lesse, more is written: 1. Because the lot of the other halfe on the other other side of Jordan is again re-counted. 2. The families comming of Manasseh, which had possessions on this side Jordan are numbred, first the males who were six; then the females, the daughters of Zelophebad, who had no sons, and they were five. 3. Their request, according to the order made by Moses, is recited from Numb. 27. 4. Their lot is described, v. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, together with the Lands of Ephraim, where they lay within it. 5. Both these Tribes doe jointly complaine that their lot was too little for them; and Joshua alloweth them to take in the woods of the Canaanites and Perizzites; and to cut them downe, adding words of encouragement against the feare of the Enemies power. For the first of these, Manasseh is said to be the first borne of Joseph, to intimate the reason why he being none of the sons of Jacob, yet had the lot of a Tribe, as also Ephraim his other son, for Jacob had made both these as his owne sons, two Tribes, as was touched before, Ch. 14. 4. And although Ephraim was by Jacob preferred before Manasseh, the younger before the elder; yet because Manasseh was the first borne, he had an inheritance in part first on the other side Jordan. Moreover, it is added, For Machir the first borne of Manasseh, but Ch. 13. 31. he is mentioned as the onely sonne of Manasseh, and halfe his children are put for the halfe Tribe of Manasseh, of which see upon that place. And Machir is called the father of Gilead, whose children onely are recited, v. 2. as the children of Manasseh; whereby it seemeth, that as Manasseh had onely Machir to his sonne, that had issue living till now, so Machir had onely Gilead. Touching Jair said to be the son of Manasseh, Numb. 32. 41. it is to be understood, that he came of a daughter of Machir by Ezrom, of the tribe of Judah, 1 Chron. 2. 21. and thus onely hee is called his son, as all that come of a mans children, are called his children.

But it is added, Because Machir was a man of Warre, therefore hee had Gilead and Bathan. In what Warre could he shew his valour, seeing hee must needs bee dead long before that the children of Israel came to make any Warres? Ans. It is most probable, that he fought manfully against the men of Gath, who are said to have come downe to take away their cattell whilst they lived in Egypt, 1 Chron. 7. 21. and for that he had this commendation. Or by Machir we may understand the Machirites comming of him, who had done worthy service in the Warres on the other side of Jordan: for thus Machir is spoken of, Numb. 32. 40. when the Machirites are meant. Touching Gilead, the sonne of Machir, although all the other families reckoned up, v. 2. came of him; yet those on the other side of Jordan were peculiarly called Gileadites, because they inhabited Gilead, and were the children of Gilead also; wherein the Divine providence is to be noted, as directing it so, that Gilead should have the land of Gilead.

Touching the second and third, enough hath been said already, upon Numb. 26. 30, 31. and Numb. 27. onely, v. 5. because it is said, there fell ten portions to the sonnes of Manasseh: it may bee demanded how this could bee, seeing they were but six families? Ans. They had but six greater portions onely, for each family one: but of that part which fell to the family of Hepher, whose son Zelophebad, had no sons, but five daughters, five lesser parts being made, they were all together ten. If it be said, thus by subdivisions in other families also these portions were not ten onely, but twenty or thirty. It is answered, the Princes that were over the divisions, made not subdivisions for others, but onely for these women who were not so able to manage such a businesse, others; that came of other families, who were men, being left to agree amongst themselves in their subdivisions, because God had set downe a speciall order for those women in the time of Moses. And therefore these portions, although but parts of a portion, are numbred here together with the whole portions, set out by Joshua, Eleazar, &c. and not any other afterwards divided by others.

And the rest of Manassehs sonnes had the Land of Gilead: that is, on the other side of Jordan. For the fourth, viz. the description of the lot of this halfe tribe of Manasseh. First, it is shewed, how it went on the right hand,

V. 2.

V. 3.

V. 4, 5, 6.

V. 7, 8.

V. 14, 15.

V. 1.

Gen. 48.

Q<sup>a</sup>.

V. 5.

Q<sup>a</sup>.

V. 6.

V. 7, 8.

Bonfrerius.

V. 6.

V. 11.

Lyra.

V. 14, 15.

Bonfrerius.

Calvin.

V. 16.

that is, south to Entappuah, that is, the fountaine of Tappuah, but the City of Tappuah went to Ephraim, being taken out of the lot of Judab, as was noted upon Ch. 14. 34. But before this, it is said, the coast of Manasseh was from Asher to Michmetha, where by Asher the tribe is not to be understood, but a City so called, as Bonfrerius saith: but because, v. 10. Manasseh and Ephraim are said to meet together in Asher on the north, and in Issachar on the east; it is rather to be held, that by Asher here the tribe is meant, for the measure proceeded to the south, and therefore began at the north, towards the lot of Asher. Yet Asher is put downe here by anticipation, because he had no lot, till afterwards in Shiloh, Ch. 19. Next the River dividing Manasseh from the Cities of Ephraim, is spoken of, the River Kana, on the south of which lay the separate Cities of Ephraim before spoken of, Ch. 16. and Manasseh on the north, both being bounded by the Sea and by Asher and Issachar, north and east. Lastly, it is shewed that Manasseh had Cities within the lot of both those Tribes, Bethshean, Ibleam, Dor, Endor, Taanach, and Megiddo, that is, being contiguous to both these Tribes, his lot extended in divers places into them, to Lyra. Whereas in concluding, it is added, after this capitulation of six Cities, even three Countreys; the Vulgar Latine hath, and the third part of the City Nopheth: so also the Sept. and Hebr. it is שלוש הנפה being rendred verbatim, the third of a Province; and it seemeth to me, that the meaning is, these six Cities were the third part of a Countrey, and not three Countreys; nor, that Manasseh had besides them the third part of another City or Countrey, because in the Hebr. it is not, and the third part, but the third, &c. These words being added for further explication, how much the foresaid Cities and their Villages amounted to, being considered together. And it agreeth not, when six Cities have been mentioned, to adde, even three Countreys, for why should the three last be summed up more then the former?

Touching the fifth, the children of Joseph complaine that their lot was too little for them, saying to Joshua, That hee had given them but one part, and yet they were so increased by Gods blessing, that one would not suffice them. The meaning is, that they had too small a part, considering their multitude, for even the halfe Tribe of Manasseh alone, is said to have ten parts, v. 5. And this part containing many more by subdivisions; it is not meant, was too little for quantity of ground, but because much of it was Woody, and held by the Canaanites. Wherefore Joshua biddeth them, according to the power that they had through their multitude, to take courage to them, and to cut downe the Woods, and to expell the Canaanites, Perizzites, &c. and so to enlarge their habitations, not meaning yet, that they should cleare the ground, and take in possession any more then that allotted unto them. Some think that there is an Allegory in the word Woods, the Canaanites, Perizzites, and Gyants possessing those parts, being meant hereby, who as woods overgrowne, made them horrid and uninhabitable for them: and that by cutting downe, is meant the cutting of them off by little: But I see no reason to goe from the literall sense. He addeth, If mount Ephraim be too little for thee: that is, the Countrey assigned now to Ephraim, and already possessed, which was full of mountaines; where-by it should seeme, that the tribe of Ephraim was the chiefe in this complaint: but both tribes are spoken of, as comming together, and complaining of a wrong, as if they had been unjustly dealt withall; saying, that they had but one part, that is, as Calvin hath it, the lot but of one Tribe, when as they were one and an halfe. But this complaint was unjust; for although their parts lay together, yet by the descriptions going before it appeareth, that they had two, onely they made account, that the Land yet possessed by the enemy was nothing to them; whereas in the dividing of it to them, it was meant, that they should by military prowesse subdue the enemies, and take in that also, as others of their brethren did. Wherefore Joshua shapeth them an answer accordingly, to stir them up from this sloath and pusillanimity, taking advantage of their own words, that they were much people.

They reply, that mount Ephraim was not sufficient, and that the Canaanites dweldwelling in the valleys, had Chariots of iron, both in Bethshean and Iezreel. Bethshean was within the lot of Manasseh, v. 11. but Iezreel a valley inhabited by the Canaanites, in the lot of Issachar, Ch. 19. 48. and because Bethshean lay into Issachar; it may be conceived, that the valley of Iezreel was upon the border, and so neare at hand to oppose and fight against them, if they should goe up to the woods, for these valleys lay about in their passage, and here were the iron Chariots which they so much feared. These Chariots were thus called, because they had sharp irons fixed to them before, and on the sides, upward and downward like speares, and swords, and hookes; so that the horses running with them, all that stood or lay in the way were cut in pieces and slaughtered hereby: Thus Q. Curtius and Livie and others describe the iron Chariots of Antiochus and Darius, which they used in their Warres; and it is most probable, that these of the Canaanites were like unto them; so that one man driving such a Chariot, could fight herewith, and destroy many. But against these Josua encourageth them, promising that they should have power to drive them out, and possesse their mountaines, and the out goings thereof, that is, the plaine places in the way, notwithstanding their power and preparations.

V. 17, 18.

CHAP. XVIII.

Here first is recorded the setting up of the Tabernacle in Shiloh. Where- as hitherto it had remained in Gilgal, and so the Campe lay about it: this remove was 12 miles, and almost within 4 miles of Jerusalem. Shiloh, say Lyra, and others, was in the Tribe of Ephraim, of which tribe Josua was. But how this may be gathered, I cannot tell, seeing it is no where set downe in what tribe it stood. Onely upon Ch. 9. 3. it hath been already shewed to have beene the same with Gibeon, which was in the lot of Benjamin, v. 25. and a City given to the Levites, Ch. 21. 17. as it is said of Shiloh. And if so, the Gibeonites that were to serve about the wood and water for the Tabernacle, might most conveniently performe this office. Touching the direction that Josua now had to remove the Tabernacle hither, although it bee not exprest, yet doubtlesse hee did it not without direction from the Lord, because this was a thing often spoken of, that it should bee set in the place that the Lord should choose. And here it stood till Sannels time, 1 Sam. 4. which was above 300 years: Lyra saith, till it was removed from thence to Nob. But we read no where of any such remove, but onely that Nob was a City of Priests, and that David came to Abimelech the High Priest there. The onely thing that we read of the remove of the Arke from Shiloh, is, that it was carryed from thence against the Philistims, 1 Sam. 4. and there taken by the Philistims and carryed away, and afterwards sent back againe to Bethshean, Ch. 6. and from thence to Kiriath-jearim, Ch. 7. to the house of Abinadab, where it remained 20 yeares, then David is said to have fetcht it from the house of Abinadab in Gibeon, 2 Sam. 6. and Uzzab being smitten for touching it, hee durst not carry it any farther, but left it at the house of Obed-Edom three months, and then fetcht it into Zion. In all which removes, no mention is made of Nob: but Lyra upon 1 Sam. 7. saith, that from Bethshean the Arke was carryed to Kiriath-jearim, and not immediately thence to the house of Abinadab in Gibeon, but first to Mizpeh, then to Gilgal againe, after that to Nob, and from thence to the house of Abinadab, as hee gathereth out of the Hebraic. question. and all this not without some ground in the sacred History; for Kiriath-jearim was a City of the Gibeonites, and Sanniel judged the people in Mizpeh, and in Gilgal the Kingdom was renewed, 1 Sam. 11. 15. and in Nob was the High Priest and Ephod, and Shewbread, although no mention bee made of these removes. For the time when they removed the Tabernacle from Gilgal to Shiloh, here is nothing expressly said, but it is generally held to have been seven yeas after their comming into the land of Canaan, because it is said, The Land was subdued before them, which was not in lesse time; but the Rabbins say, that it was done 14 yeares after their entrance, but this a-

V. 1.

H. E. Patri-arches & vailes.
Lyra.Lyra.1 Sam. 21 & 22

gree-

V. 2, 3.

Calvin.

V. 4.

V. 5, 6.

Bonfrerius.

V. 7, 8.

V. 11.

Cb. 16. 7, 8.

V. 15.

V. 21.

greeth not with Calebs age, and the account made before hereby.

The Tabernacle being set up, Joshua reproveth the seven Tribes that had not yet received their parts for their slacknesse in going about it, and to expell the Canaanites, who yet, though subdued, lived there, where they should in herit, exciteth them to send out men to describe and part it, that hee might thefe before the Lord cast lots for them. Whereby is intimated, that their remiſſneſſe and backwardneſſe in going not to take their lots, but to drive out the enemies was the cauſe of this delay, and that the diſiſion begun in Gilgal went not forward, but was intermitted, till this comming to Shiloh, which ſome thinke was a yeare, but the Rabbins 7 yeares, although againſt all probability. By this ſending out of new meaſures, three of a Tribe, it may ſeeme, that ſome cauſe of their delay was, for that they did not think the former meaſurers to have ſufficiently done their office, wherefore others are ſent to view all things better, and to make a new deſcription of thoſe Lands where they ſhould have their parts; and the cauſe of this ſuſpition might be, for that in the lot of Judah already taken, there was ſo much land more then ſufficed, that the Simeonites had divers Cities out of it, &c. Now then Joshua alloweth them to chooſe three men out of each Tribe, and to ſend them to deſcribe it anew, that is, as is moſt probable, and the words ſound, out of the ſeven Tribes onely, being all together in number 21. Theſe are appointed to divide the Land into ſeven parts, and to returne to Joshua, that lots might be caſt for them; Judah, and the children of Joſeph, that had received their parts, the one ſouthward, and the other northward being confirmed therein. The Vulg. Latine, for theſe words, v. 6. Ye ſhall deſcribe the Land into ſeven parts, hath it, the middle Land betwixt theſe yee ſhall divide into ſeven parts: as if the ſeven Tribes that were yet to receive their parts, ſhould all lye in the middle betwixt Judah, Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, whereas it is certaine, that a great part of that Land lay more north; therefore that tranſlation is corrupt, as the Jeſuite himſelf acknowledgeth, and that hee hath nothing to ſay in the defence thereof.

Here the reaſon is further expreſſed, why the diſiſion ſhould bee made but into ſeven parts, viz. becauſe the Levites were to have no part; and as two Tribes and an halfe already ſpoken of had received their parts on this ſide Jordan, ſo two Tribes and an halfe had received theirs on the other ſide.

Whereas it is ſaid of the Levites, The Prieſthood of the Lord is their inheritance: hereby is meant, that the profits belonging to the Prieſts and Levites were theirs. V. 11. The diſiſions being made by thoſe that were ſent, and ſet down in a Book, now lots are caſt before the Tabernacle, and Benjamin hath the firſt between Judah and Joſeph. How long the meaſurers were in ſurveying, before their returne, is not recorded, but Joſephus ſaith that they were ſeven moneths.

The north border of Benjamin was the ſame with that of Ephraim, from Jordan eaſtward, to the Sea weſt. Here, beſide Luz or Bethel, v. 13. mention is made of Beithaven, a City neare unto it, by which name, for the idolatry ſet up there afterwards by Ieroboam, Bethel was inveighed againſt, Hof. 4. 5, 10. Here the ſouth border followeth, which was the north of Judah, of which ſee Cb. 15. And then the Cities of this lot are numbred, firſt twelve, then fourteen, ſo that it was very ſmall, whereupon it is ſometime called little Benjamin; although the quantity of ground was little, yet it was moſt fruitfull, and lay moſt ſafely; and this Tribe had the honour of the firſt lot amongſt ſeven, and of the holy City Jeruſalem, and Temple, and lay neare to his brother Joſeph. But neither were theſe all the Cities of Benjamin, for Chap. 21. 18. mention is made of two more, Anathoth and Almon. The double numeration firſt of 12 Cities, then of 14, ſeemeth to be, becauſe the former lay eaſtward, and the latter weſt.

CHAP. XIX.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4, &amp;c.

THE ſecond lot here is ſhewed to have been of the children of Simeon, and this was within the lot of Judah, which had too much. Thus the proph-ſie

He of Jacob was verified, I will scatter them in Jacob and divide them in Israel. Wherefore it was not without a singular providence, that the first dividers were suffered to erre so farre as to make the part of Judah so much more, then would suffice for them, and the desire of doing according to equity, appeared in the Princes set over the division, in that they so readily yeelded to correct this error being manifested, and of the men of Judah, that they withstood it not, having already the possession, but readily yeelded a part to their Brethren, necessity requiring it, for so much as the Land remaining would not otherwise have sufficed for the rest of the Tribes. The Rabbins say, that the men of Judah tooke it ill, that Simeon had so many of their Cities, and therefore in David's time they were againe expelled, which they gather from 1 Chron. 4. 31. where it is said, they dwelt in these Cities, till David's time. But it is not said that then they were driven out, neither would it have stood with David's piety herein to have gone against Gods decree. Whereas their inheritance is said to be within the inheritance of Judah, the vulgar Latine hath it in the midst of the inheritance. But it was rather in their confines, for Beershebah here first named was furthest south, for which cause when the length of the land is set forth by the extreme parts, it is commonly said, from Dan to Beershebah. Beershebah and Shebah, which may seem to be two, are but one City, named by both these names, otherwise they were not 13 only, as they are summed v. 6. but 14. Wherefore 1 Chron. 4. 28. when the Cities of the Simeonites are counted over again, Beershebah onely is named. Of these Cities of the Simeonites, there are two numerations. First, of 13. to v. 6. Secondly, of foure, v. 7. Which are thus distinguished from the other, because those had wals, but these not, as may be gathered from 1 Chron. 4. 32. where they are called עָרִים villages. And all this lot is said to have lyen south. The third lot was of Zabulun, who came of the same Mother Leah, with Issachar, and was the yonger brother, yet here he is placed in his possession before him. Of this Tribe Jacob had said before, that hee should dwell at the haven of the Sea, and towards Sidon, and accordingly here it is said, their border went up towards the Sea, v. 11. and reached to the river, which is before Jokneam. Which is thought to be towards the border of the Sidonians, and the Rivers name is by Geographers, called Pagis or Belus, having sand, of which glasse was made. But this lot could not goe close up to the Sea, but neare it, because part of Asher lay betweene, but it is held to have extended to the Sea of Genesareth. For the Cities of this Tribe, they are summed up 12, but it is hard to determine which they were, because 16 or 17 are named, out of which the rest must be cast, as to which this lot reached onely, but included them not.

The fourth lot was of Issachar, whose Cities are said to be 16, but no description of this lot is made by the quarters of the World, happily because it lay betweene Zabulun and Manasseh. Izreel the first City here named is by Adricomius placed in Manasseh, because Ch. 17. 16. it is mentioned in describing that lot, but as was there shewed, it is not spoken as lying therein, but onely very neare it. In Jezreel the Kings of Israel afterwards dwelt sometime, 1 King. 21. 1. Although in Samarita was their chiefe seat. Tabor here ascribed to Issachar, is said to be in Zabulun, 1 Chron. 6. 77. wherefore it seemeth to have been betweene them both; one Tribe holding one part, and another the other part. Bethshebess is also ascribed to Judah, Ch. 21. 16. but it was another City of the same name. The Cities here named seemed not to be all, that fell to Issachar, for Dabereh, and Jaramoth are also ascribed to Issachar Ch. 21. 28. and Aven, 1 Chron. 6. 73. But Jaramoth is supposed by some to be the same with Ramoth, and Aven-Engannim.

The fift lot was of Asher, consisting of 22 Cities, this lot lay furthest northward of all others to the sea; and southward extended to Manasseh, as was touched, Ch. 17. 10. It is described first by the west which way it reached to Carmel, and to Siber-Libnah, this Carmel was a mountain by the Sea, and not the City Carmel before ascribed to Judah of which mention is made

1 Sam.

Calvin.
Gen 49.7.

Rabini.

V. 2.

V. 7.

V. 8.

V. 10.

Gen. 9. 13.

Masius.

V. 15.

V. 17, 18.

Adricomius.

V. 24.

V. 26.

V. 27.

1 Sam. 25. 2. Nabal had possessions there. Sibor-Libnah, the Septuagint call Sibor & Libnah, and some contend that they were two Cities; because Sibor signifieth black, and Libnah white. Many hold it to be one City, otherwise called Ptolemais. Secondly, this lot is described by the east, and turneth towards the Sun rising to Bethdagon, that is, the house of Dagon, the idoll of the Philistims, which had the name from a fish; it had the face of a young man, but downward it was like a Fish. Thirdly, by the north, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jephthah towards the north, &c. Of Jephthah see before, v. 14. Here also Gibul on the left hand setteth forth the north.

V. 28.

Hamon here mentioned to Asher is said to belong to Nephtali, 1 Chron. 6. 76. and Rahab, v. 75. but they were other Cities of the same name. Kana, was Kana the great in Asher, for there was another Kana in Zebulun, called the lesser, where Christ turned water into wine. For the number of 22 Cities, it is to be thought that they were not all which Issachar had, for Abdon is also ascribed to Issachar. Ch. 21.30.

V. 30.

V. 32, 33.

The sixth lot was of Nephtali, and here the measure beginneth againe eastward at Iordan, and then it proceedeth westward, and southward. On the east were five Cities, Heleph, Allon, Adami-Nekab, Labneel, and Lakum: So Masius, Magallianus, and Adricomius. But Bonsiferius will have them to lye in the north, and to reach to Iordan on the east; because their goings out are said to be at Iordan, and the north should otherwise alone bee left undescribed. 2. It proceedeth to the west and south, Zebulun lying on the south, and Asher on the west, and Judah. Their Cities were 19, but all the names in this description are 23; but some either were no Cities, but other places of note, or else foure of them were but Villages.

V. 34.

V. 38.

V. 40.

Judg. 18.2.

V. 41, 43.

V. 45.

The seventh Lot was of Dan, described only by his Cities, wherof some are famous; as, Zorah & Eshthaol, where Samson lived, and Timnathah, from whence Samson took a wife of the Philistims, & Eckron held by the Philistims being one of their five Lordships, which foure were within the lot of Judah, but taken out for the Danites. Gath-rimmon also, if hereby Gath be meant, as Masius thinketh, was another Lordship of the Philistims. Lastly, Lapbo, since called Ioppe, is a Sea town of great note to this day, for here they arrive, that travaile from hence to the holy Land, so that this lot lay neare the Sea, and was much disquieted by the Philistims, their neare neighbours, who held much of their Land from them.

V. 47.

And the coast of the children of Dan went out too little for them; therefore they went to fight against Leshem, &c. The words here are thus rendred in the Vulgar Latine, & ipso fine concluditur, this being referred to Lapbo before spoken of. But Hebr. it is, The coast of the children of Dan went out from them; that is, saith Masius, they going out and conquering further then this their lot, as is immediately shewed. Uatablus, a part of the lot assigned to them was held from them; therefore they went out and fought against Leshem. And this is rather to be approved.

Masius.
Uatablus.

Lyra

Leshem, saith Lyra, according to the Hebrews, was the same with Laisb, Judg. 18. where the taking of it, and the new naming of it Dan, is set forth, but here it is spoken of by anticipation, as that of Caleb taking Hebron before, Ch. 15.

V. 50.

Joshua, after all these divisions ended, hath Timnath-Serah in mount Ephraim given to him, as he desired; and this is said to have been done according to the Word of the Lord. But it is no where expressed that the Lord made any such order; onely whereas Caleb said before, Chap. 15. Thou knowest what the Lord said to Moses concerning mee and thee in Kadesh-barnea; it may be gathered, that as Hebron was appointed then to Caleb, so it was promised, that Joshua for his constant cleaving to the Lord, should choose him a possession.

And herein the modesty of Joshua appeared, that hee distributed possessions to all the people, before that he demanded a possession for himselfe, when as hee was the Prince over all: wherein, he may be an example to other Princes and Rulers, to intend more the welfare of the people under them, then their owne private benefit; and he did notably typifie our Iesus, who neglected himselfe to enrich us with possessions in the Kingdome of Heaven. Timnath-Serah is also called Timnath-Cheres, Jud. 2. 9. the first is by some rendred the image of superfluity, by some, the image of corruption: The second, the image of the Sunne; Jerome saith, that Paul's admired, that Ioshua, who distributed to all their possessions, chose unto himselfe so rough and mountainous a place; whereby it seemeth, that he was not led by covetousnesse in this his choice, but contented himselfe to have a City in any place amongst those of his Tribe, and that not ready built, but in the ruines, for hee built a City here. This City was but six miles from Ierusalem, and was not that Timnath before mentioned in Dan, as some have erroneously held, saying, that it was that Timnath from whence Samson took a wife.

is

Here is the Epilogue of all the divisions, which is added, the more to ratifie them, as being made by Eleazar and Ioshua, &c. before the Lord in Shiloh, that there might never more bee any contention amongst the Tribes about their bounds.

Hieron. Epitaph Paula.

H. B. Patri-archis novajiles.

V. 51.

CHAP. XX.

Here Ioshua is commanded to put in execution what was before ordained, Numb. 35 and Deut. 19. viz. to separate three Cities of Refuge on this side Jordan; as three had been before separated on the other side, which are named, Deut. 4. 41. Calvin gathereth from hence, because Ioshua was called upon by the Lord, and so stimulated to doe this, before hee did it, that there was a faulty remission in him about so necessary a duty for the keeping of the land from the pollution of blood. But I thinke rather, that Ioshua who did all things at the word of the Lord, stayed onely till God should appoint the time, and then hee did it with all readinesse, which was rather to bee commended then taxed in him. Moreover, it is here againe briefly repeated, who should have the benefit of fleeing to these Cities, and in what manner: all which hath been already more largely set forth and treated upon, Numb. 35. and Deut. 19. so that I shall not need to adde any more here, either for exposition, or collections, morall or mytticall, because the Reader may find these things abundantly performed there.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Calvin.

The three Cities appointed on this side Jordan, were, Kedesh in Galilee in mount Nahtali, Sechem in mount Ephraim, and Kiriath-arba, that is Hebron, in Judah. The first in the north, and the last in the south part of the Land, and the middle City between them both, that in what part soever blood should be shed unawares, the manslayer might have a City of Refuge not farre off to flee unto: thus graciously the Lord provided for the protection of the unwitting offender, although in the case of bloodshed, which otherwise hee so much abhorred. Of Caleb's goodnesse in yeelding his Hebron to bee one, I have already spoken upon, Chap. 18. 6, 7.

V. 7.

CHAP. XXI.

Here the children of Levi come and require Cities to be given unto them, as the Lord had appointed by Moses, and have 48 Cities with their Suburbs out of all the Tribes, as was appointed, Numb. 35. six of which, were the Cities of Refuge before mentioned. So that the Levites had not Cities, as the other Tribes all together, but in every part of the Land, that there might bee some in every Tribe to teach the laws of God, and to judge righteously: and that it might not be thought, that the Worship of God, and the maintenance of his Ministers pertained to one place onely, but to them all. For no Kingdom or County can prosper and stand, unlesse the Worship of God be therein maintained.

Ferm.

Myttically, by the dispersing of these into all the Tribes, Iesus his sending out of his Apostles into all the world was set forth; so Ferm. In that 48 Cities with with

Calvin.

with their Suburbs were given to Levi alone, it appeareth that all the Cities of each tribe in the Catalogues before going were not mentioned, but many omitted, because otherwise there had been no due proportion kept in taking out thus many for one small tribe, seeing Zebulun had but 12 Cities, Issachar but 16, and Nephthali but 19. Thus Calvin, who also thinketh that no due order is observed in setting down this done to the Levites; but that it was before the Cities of Refuge set out, seeing they were some of the Levites Cities; and hee also taxeth it as a fault, that the tribe of Levi had no Cities given them, till they required them, and urged the commandement of God for it; but he saith it was a fault of neglect, not of wilfulnesse, for being put in mind of the Word of the Lord, they presently yeeld them Cities, as was appointed. I thinke rather, as Josias had no possession given him till he required it, and Caleb before that, so it was by course expected that the Levites should require Cities, before that they were given to them, and this they could not doe, till the foregoing divisions finished; neither doe I see any reason why this relation should be thought to be set downe out of order. For all the lots of tribes being set out the what was more necessary immediately to be next done, then to provide for the preservation of the innocent, by appointing Cities of Refuge? which if it had been delayed till all the Cities of the Levites had been set out, happily some might, before this could have been done, have perished unjustly by the revenger of blood, for want of a city of Refuge.

V. 43.

In distributing these 48 cities of the Levites, a fourfold distinction is made. 1 Of the sonnes of Aaron. 2 Of the rest of the sonnes of Kobath. 3 Of the sonnes of Gershom. 4 Of the sonnes of Merari. For of Levi came three families, of the Kobathites, Gershonites, and Merarites; and the Kobathites were againe divided into two, the sonnes of Aaron who were the Priests, and the rest of the sonnes of Kobath, who were Levites, see Numb. 3, and 4. Aaron's sonnes had 13 cities in Judab, Simeon, and Benjamin, which fell to them by lot, by a singular providence, that they might be near to the place where they should do their service. If it be demanded, why they had not Jerusalem, where the Temple was afterwards built? Answer. That was the chiefe city, and to be the seat of the Kingdom; and therefore must needs be reserved for other inhabitants, and God would have his Ministers content with meaner and smaller cities.

2<sup>d</sup>.

V. 36.

This verse setting forth the cities given out of Reuben is wanting in the Masorets Bible, and in some Latine copies, but it is in all other Hebrew copies; and if it be out, the number of 48 cities would not be compleat. How great the Suburbs of the Levites cities were, see Numb. 35.

V. 43.

And the Lord gave to Israel all the Land which he sware to their Fathers and they possessed it, &c. This may seem not to have been so, because it is said before, Ch. 13. 1. there remained very much Land yet to be possessed; and of Ephraim, and Manasse, and Judab, &c. that they could not expell the enemy out of their possessions, so likewise Judg. 4. 1. But it is to be understood that although much was held still by the enemy, yet all was given to them, and divided amongst them, and they possessed so much as they yet needed, neither doe wee read that they attempted to take any more, but God was always still assistant unto them, so as that they tooke it, and drave out their enemies so long as they persisted in obedience. Some hee would not yet have them to take in possession, because they were not yet able to people it, as is expressed, Exod. 23. and some they tooke not through their owne default, because either they were slack and timorous to goe and fight for it, or led by covetousnesse to be compounded with for Tribute, against the expresse charge divers times given unto them. And thus the 44 verie is also to be understood, there stood not an enemy before them, but the Lord delivered them into their hands; that is, of all that they went against, and they had rest round about: because the enemies still remaining durst not rise up to warre against them in that Land; and the Edomites, Aramonites, and Moabites about them were taken with such feare of them, that none invaded them. Here was then a notable type indeed of the everlasting rest to come to all the people of God, to which Jesus shall bring them, all their enemies

V. 44.

mies

mies being subdued, and they being put in possession of the manions provided for them in their Fathers house.

For the last words, there failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had spoken, &c. St. Augustine saith, it is to be understood, that although all was not now performed, yet it failed not, because in Solomons dayes, not onely seven, but eleven Nations spoken of, Gen. 15. were all brought under, from the River of Egypt to the great River Euphrates. And againe, nothing failed of all that was spoken, because all the promises of good were conditionall, if they continued in obedience, which they not doing, although they could never extend their bounds so farre, yet nothing failed. Moreover, in speaking upon that, There was not a man that could stand before them: hee saith, it may bee understood, whilst they made Warres jointly together, before the divisions were made to the severall Tribes.

CHAP. XXII.

Here is shewed first how Joshua dismissed the two Tribes and an halfe to their possessions on the other side of Jordan, praising them for their obedience, and doing hitherto as they had promised, in helping their brethren constantly so long a time in the conquest of Canaan, till all was subdued; and he adjoyneth exhortations to feare God, and blesteth them at their departure, remembering the rich spoiles of the enemies, that they now went home laden withall, willing them to divide them amongst their brethren. The time when this was done, is not set downe but onely in generall, when their brethren had rest, and the foresaid divisions of the Land were made amongst them; but by that which was said before upon Josh. 11. 18. it may be gathered that it was after seven yeares since their coming over Jordan. Comestor saith, fourteen yeares, but without all ground. Their love and constancy in doing for their brethren, is worthy our imitation, saith Ferns, who are every man for himsele, and regard not the good of one another. Whereas Joshua chargeth them to walke in the commandments of the Lord, and in his Law: Lyra distinguisheth betwixt them, saying, the first setteth forth precepts morall, and the second judiciall and ceremoniall. And he blessed them by a solemne praying for good unto them, as Aaron was appointed to blesse the people, Numb. 6. 23. Whereas v. 7. a commemoration is made of the half Tribe of Manasse receiving their inheritance on the other side of Jordan, and halfe in Canaan, this was done because, v. 1. mention was made of the half tribe dismissed; if any man should aske why halfe a tribe was sent away, and what became of the other halfe? here the reason is rendred. Touching the charge of dividing the spoiles amongst their brethren, some think that this was no command, but an exhorting of them so to doe, to prevent envie; thus Calvin. But herein I prefer Tostatus, Masius, &c. affirming it to bee a command: For although they that were left at home, fought not, as these did, yet they stood to defend their Confinnes, if any enemies should in the meane season have come against them. And Moses had before given an example of dividing with those that stayed by the stuffe, Numb. 31. and this was alwayes followed afterwards; they that went to the Warre had one halfe, and the rest, although many more, the other halfe amongst them; wherein consideration was had of the labour and hazard of the one more then of the other.

The two tribes and an halfe being returned, set up an Altar neare Jordan, at which the other Tribes hearing of it, were through zeale moved to great indignation against them, supposing that it had been made to offer Sacrifices thereupon, and assembled together to goe to warre against them. But first they send Phinees and ten Princes with him, to see what they had done. These first reprove them as falling away from the Lord; but the two Tribes and an half answering, that it was not made for Sacrifice, but for a witnesse; that although they were separated by the River Jordan from the other Tribes where the Tabernacle

H

V. 45.
Augustine.V. 1, 2, 3, 4.
&c.

Schol. Hist.

Ferm.

Lyra.

V. 7.

V. 8.

Calvin.
Tostatus.
Masius.

V. 9. 10.

- bernacle was, yet they also belonged to the Lord, lest their children in time to come, should be discouraged by their children from following the Lord: they were fully satisfied, and so was the whole Congregation, when at their returne this was related unto them, and they praised God for their good intention. This fact of the two Tribes and halfe is praised by Ferus, for the care herein shewed of their posterity, that they might be upheld in the true Religion. But Calvin censureth it, because they did it without first consulting with the High Priest, and the rest of the Congregation on this side Jordan, whose advice they should have used herein: and because, howsoever their intention was good, yet they knew not what an occasion of scandall it might be afterwards. But their care of their posterity certainly was commendable, and would be imitated by all Christian people: howsoever the circumstance of doing this, no consultation being before had, is no way justifiable. This Altar is said to have been set up in the borders of Jordan, in Canaan, and that it was very great to see to, the vulgar Latine of infinite greatnesse, hyperbolically. Hereby it appeareth that it was not built on the other side Jordan, but on this side, which was the Land of Canaan, wherefore Josephus erred in saying, that they set it up, when they had passed over Jordan, for they did it before, when they were now come to Jordan. And they made it of such a vast greatnesse, that it might be seen afarre off, on both sides of the River.
- For the peoples assembling themselves together to fight against them, for this, it was out of zeal to Gods Commandements, whereby it was provided, that there should be but one Altar for all Israel, Exod. 20. 24. Deut. 12. 5, 6. for they thought that they would offer sacrifice here-upon to the Lord, or else leaving him, serve Idols here. And if a City revolted to Idolatry, they were commanded to destroy it, Deut. 13. This zeale of theirs was partly commendable, and by us to be imitated, in that they would not indure in any, although most deare unto them, and to whom they had bene obliged so much for their constant helping them in their warres so long a time, any corruption in religion: for such zeale should every of us have for God, as our places and callings will permit. And partly it was preposterous, because they should first have sent to know the truth, and not so tumultuously first come together, the intent not being known, see Deut. 13. 14. Thou shalt search and make diligent inquiry.
- For the Princes sent, Phinees is particularly named, because of his zeale for God shewed Numb. 25. and for this Moses had sent him as chiefe before against the Midianites; the ten Princes sent with him were according to the number of the nine Tribes and halfe. These come together unto them, and begin with reproofe, as if they had certainly built this Altar with a minde to rebell against God. And they put them in minde of the sinne not long agoe committed in Peor, saying, Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, from which wee are not cleansed, untill this day, &c? The vulgar Latine, Is it a little matter, that ye have sinned in Bethpeor, the staine of which remaineth in you unto this day? But in the Hebrew it is as before, as Lyra also noteth, arguing against the Latin Translation: for that the Prince slaine then Numb. 25. was not of the Reubenites or Gadites, but of Simeon. From which wee are not cleansed to this day, that is, so as not to have more judgements executed upon us anew for it, if wee provoke God anew by sinning againe in like manner. For although Phinees is said then to have turned Gods wrath away, yet it is not meant so, but being provoked againe, hee would bee ready againe to punish that sinne over againe together with this. Or, wee are not cleansed, is to bee understood with Calvin both in respect of judgements, and the staine thereof yet remaining, because it was so fresh in memory. Againe, they offer unto them, if they thought the Land of their possession uncleane without an Altar, to give them Land out of their possessions, where the Lords Tabernacle was, alledging the example of Achan, who alone sinned, but wrath came upon all the Congregation, so that they might much more feare fear, if for the sinne of one secretly committed there came wrath upon all, that if they should suffer this, which was a sinne of many, and that openly committed: wrath should much more burne against them all. Hereby it appeareth how well they profited by former corrections, wee being by their example taught to have Gods judgements likewise in minde, to make us the more watchfull against sinne, for all time to come. The Rubenites and Gadites, &c. hearing what was laid to their charge, answer with much passion, and for the clearing of themselves from this foule imputation: appeale to God, and then tell the true cause of their setting up this Altar, as is aforesaid; whereas v. 22. it is said, save us not this day, as if they spake thus to the Israelites, it is plainly in the Hebr. of the Lord, let not him save us.

This their answer being heard by all the Congregation, they praised God, that these two Tribes and halfe were cleare from the sinne, of which they had thought them guilty. And in token, that this Altar was built for no other end, but to be a witnesse, that they which dwelt beyond Jordan, had right to bring their sacrifices to the Altar in Canaan, they called it Ed, that is witnesse. Ferus hereupon gathereth, that things done to a good end in the Church of God ought not to be abolished, but if they be abused, the abuse is to be corrected, and they suffered still to remain, and such he saith, are singings, festivals, and images, and falls, which were ordained for a good end. But when the Image of the Brazen Serpent, which at the first was set up for an excellent end, was abused to Idolatry, Hezekiah utterly abolisht it and is commended therefore.

Note.

V. 21.

V. 22.

V. 32, 33.

V. 34.

Ferus.

CHAP. XXIII.

HERE Joshua being grown old, and so making account, that the time of his departure was at hand, assemblith all Israel, and warneth them to feare God and to serve him constantly, promising, that if they did so, hee would expell the rest of their enemies from before them, and give them the lands, which were already divided unto them; but if not, no more of them should be driven out, but they should remaine, as snares and trappes unto them, and scourges in their sides, and thornes in their eyes, if they had any familiarity with them, or made any marriages with them, or served their gods. And this speech was had after a long time of peace, whereupon Ferus noteth well, that as warre is dangerous to the body, so is peace to the soule, and this Joshua prudently seeing into, seeketh to preserve them here-from by this admonition. And thus ought the Ministers of Gods Word to warne the people, and to seeke to keepe them in the right way by promises and threatnings from time to time. And it is the part of a good Governour, as Calvin noteth to take care, as Joshua did of the good of his Subjects, that they may doe well and prosper after his death, wherefore Moses also did thus before, and Peter likewise, 2 Pet. 1. 15. whereas Joshua is said to have called all Israel, and then the Heads and Elders are mentioned in particular, this last seemeth to bee exegetically, the meaning being, that these were all Israel representative, whom hee called together, and such voluntaries, as would come with them, for he could not assemblie and speake to all together. To what place they were called, is not expessed, but the next assembling of them was in Shechem, Ch. 24. 1. Some conjecture the place to be Taanath-serab, where he dwelt, and some Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was, which is the most probable, because such holy exhortations were wont to be before the Lord, who is said to have dwelt in his Tabernacle. For the time, it is uncertain, onely it is said when Israel had rest now a long time, and Joshua was very aged, the number of whose yeares are said to be an 100, Ch. 24. 29. but at what age he entred into Canaan, and so what yeare after this hee dyed, is not expessed, but in the Hebrewes Chronicle, called Seder-Olam, it is said 28 yeares, Iosephus 25 yeares, and Euseb. 27 yeares, and Adriebonius 73 and others

Ferus.

Note.

Calvin.
Note.Rabbini.
Masius.

Joseph. Antiq.
lib. 5. c. 1.
Euseb. in Chronica.

Judg. 2 7.

V. 8.

thers make some more, some fewer. And it is no marvaile that Writers are so diverse hereabout, seeing the yeares that onely give light into this matter, be those 480 mentioned 1 Kings 6. 1. which are said to have passed since the coming of the Israelites out of Egypt, to the fourth yeare of Solomons reigne; and it cannot certainly bee found out, how these yeares are to be reckoned to make an exact account to a yeare, that other severall summes being deducted, the remainder may bee counted to Joshua his government, because that before any Judge arose after Joshua, it is said, that the people served God all the dayes of the Elders that over-lived Joshua; but afterwards, they sinning, were spoiled by their Enemies, and then crying to God, Othniel was raised up to save them; and how long it was after Joshua his death to this, is uncertaine. Whereas, v. 8. they are forbidden to mention the names of their Gods, the meaning is, that they should make no honourable mention of them, by calling them to witnesse in swearing, or by calling upon them, as is here further expressed.

CHAP. XXIV.

Here againe Joshua yet living, to shew his sollicitude for the peoples good, assembleth them in Sechem before the Lord, and maketh his last exhortation to them. Calvin thinketh this assembling of them, to bee the same with that, Ch. 23. and that here is onely set forth how he dealt with them more at large. And Comester joyneth this and that together as one. But Lyra and Ferus, and others hold it to have been done at another time, when Joshua was yet nearer the time of his death, and the History seemeth to make it plaine that it was so. But why did he assemble them in Sechem, seeing the Tabernacle was in Shiloh? Answer. The Arke was at this time brought thither, that the people standing before it, might be moved with the more reverence, and the more carefully keep the Covenant now to be renewed. For the standing place of it was in Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was, but now it seemeth that the Arke was in Sechem; for when a great stone was set up there for a remembrance of this renewed Covenant, it is said to have been set up by the Sanctuary, v. 26. and Joshua wrote this Covenant there in the book of the Law, which book was kept in the side of the Arke, Deut. 31. 26. One Sept. Copy for Sechem here hath Shiloh, but all others Sechem. Some thinke Sechem and Shiloh to be all one, but they are deceived; for Sechem was 36 miles from Jerusalem, and Shiloh but 4, see Ch. 18. Sechem was neare to mount Ephraim, where Joshua dwelt, and in mount Gerizim, where the blessings and curses had been read, Iosh. 8. 33. wherefore they are in this place now specially assembled.

Calvin.

Schol. Histor.
Lyra.
Ferus.

Qu.

H. B. Patri-
archa trawales.

V. 2.

Your Father dwelt on the other side of the flood, &c. that is, of Euphrates in Chaldeas, and they served other Gods, of this see Gen. 11. & 12. To move them the more to obedience, hee recounteth Gods benefits towards them, and beginneth with Terah and Abraham, shewing what they were, and what his singular favour was to Abraham, I multiplied his seed, saith he, and gave him Isaac; that is, first causing Isaac to come of him, and of Isaac Jacob, whose seed was so multiplied. The benefits recounted are 13, as Ferus numbrell them. But how is it said, v. 11. The men of Jericho fought against you, when as they kept within their walls, till that they were miraculously throwne downe? Answer. Because they prepared to fight, and fortified their City against them.

V. 3.

V. 11.

V. 12.

And I sent the hornets before you, which drove them out; of this promised, see Exod. 23. 28. and how it is to be understood. This thing, although we read not of it before, as performed according to the Letter, when they subdued the Kings of the Amorites, Numb. 21. yet here it is shewed to have been done, and that they subdued them not with their sword and their bow.

V. 14.

The foundation of remembering Gods benefits being laid, he now exhorteth them therefore to feare God, and to serve him, and to put away the strange Gods

Gods which their Fathers served beyond the flood, and in Egypt, whereby hee discovereth a thing not hitherto touched, that they sinned by idolatry in Egypt, whereby the grace of God is yet more magnified towards them. In bidding them to put away the strange Gods, it may seem to be intimated, that they had such still amongst them, and much more, v. 23. But their former zeale shewed, Ch. 22. and the commendation given them, Ch. 23. 8. make to the contrary, as Augustine reasoneth at large. And if so, the meaning then is, turn not to strange Gods any more, for they which turne not to them, but abhorre them, put them from them. So likewise Calvin. Yet some hold, saith Lyra, that some of them had idols at that time, which they brought with them out of Egypt, applying hither to that of Amos 5. 26. recounted againe by Stephen, Acts 7. But this seemeth not to be so, because then upon this Covenant making, there would have been some mention of their putting away of these Gods. Wherefore Augustine concludeth, that their erroneous imaginations touching God in their hearts, were their false Gods, which hee would have them to put away, and to conceive rightly of him, which who so doth not, serveth false Gods, although hee hath no idols made with hands.

If it seemeth evill to you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom yee will serve, &c. This is not spoken to set them at liberty to serve God or idols, but knowing that yet they were generally bent to serve the Lord, hee useth this rhetorical passage to draw from them a voluntary profession to serve God, that having publickly professed this, they might be the more obliged, and so moved thus to doe with perseverance. Moreover, he addeth his own example to move them, saying, I and my house will serve the Lord: and it worketh with them accordingly, v. 16, 17. He gave them their free choice, saith Ferus, to shew that the service of God should not bee coact, but free and voluntary. Hee did it but as Atkes, set before them the way of life and of death, that they might choose which to enter into. Hee saith, If it seemeth evill, &c. because of the great charge of Sacrifices, and the many Rites about the service of God, as Lyra hath it.

And Joshua said to the people, Ye cannot serve the Lord, for hee is an holy God, &c. Neither was this spoken to discourage them, but that resolving to serve God, they might the more seriously consider of it, and so serve him, as to put away all sinne and idolatry, which no way agree, but are intolerable in his servants. For Joshua knew well enough, as Moses before him, the perversenesse of their disposition, and therefore hee seeketh all wayes to stimulate them to their duty, and so he bringeth them the second time to professe his service, v. 21. and the third time, v. 24. and then hee maketh a Covenant with them, v. 25. Whence note, that it is no easie matter to serve the Lord resolvedly indeed, without mingling the service of sinne with his service, which hee will by no meanes endure. In making this Covenant, there is no mention made of any solemne Rites used, as Exod. 24. yet Camestor saith, that water was poured out to intimate, that God would so spill them, that they should never be gathered up again if they brake this Covenant; but seeing the Scripture saith nothing of any Rite, it is best to leave this undetermined: it is most probable that the Old Covenant being now onely renewed, there were none but solemne protestations onely, and the writing hereof in the booke of the Law, and the setting up of a stone there for a monument, as followeth, v. 26. The booke of the Law was Deuteronomie, which was written by Moses, and kept in the side of the Arke, Deut. 31. 24. The stone is said to bee set up for a witnesse, under an Oake by the Sanctuary, that is, neare the place where the Arke stood for the present, for the planting of trees by the Sanctuary, where the standing place of it was, is forbidden, Deut. 16. 21. A great stone is a most durable thing, and therefore this is set up to continue for many ages, as before upon mount Ebal, the Law was written upon stones, Job. 8. 32, 33. and the Chaldee Paraphrast speaketh of this stone, as having these things written upon it for a memoriall, being therefore called a witnesse, v. 27. and said to have heard all these words, which some apply to them, saying, yee have heard: where-

Aug. Qu. 29. in 196.

Calvin. Lyra.

V. 15.

Ferus.

V. 19.

V. 21.
V. 24, 25.
Note.

Schol. Hister.

V. 26.

Chal. paraphr.
V. 27.

August. qu. 30.
in Josh.
The Myserie.

as it is Hebr. it hath heard, because they thought it absurd that hearing should be applyed to a stone. But it is thus spoken by a Prosopopeia, as Moses biddeth the Heaven and the Earth to heare, Deut. 32. and Esa. 1. 2. Jer. 2. 12. And all things have hearing and speech for God, and against his rebels. Augustine thinking it unreasonable, that hee should say, that stone heard, expoundeth it Allegorically of Christ the chiefe stone in the spirituall building; for hee heard, and shall testifie against the rebellious Jewes; and this stone, saith hee, was under a tree, although hanged upon a tree, because through his humility he submitted himselfe to this, and hee calleth the tree terebinthus, from whence an humor commeth that is sanative, shewing the vertue that floweth from Christ hanged upon a tree. Jerome and the Septuagint also call it terebinthus. Lastly, Augustine examining the reason why Joshua amongst all his admonitions, saith nothing in reproving them for permitting the Canaanites to dwell amongst them, whom they were so strictly charged to destroy utterly, yet they suffered them to live, and tooke tribute of them; Hee resolveth, that it was a sinne of infirmity, the people not being of courage enough to prosecute their Victories begun under Joshua his government, or because they were weary of so long continued Warres; wherefore, as Paul saith, At my first defence no man stood to me, the Lord lay it not to their charge: so this was not imputed to them, but in mercy pardoned.

V. 29, 30.

Here Joshua dyeth, and is buried in his inheritance of Tinnath-serah, on the north side of the hill Gaash. This is againe commemorated, Judg. 2. 9. but for Tinnath-serah, there is Tinnath-heres, see what was noted upon this before, Chap. 19. 50. his age is set downe also, 110 years. The hill Gaash most probably was an hill upon mount Ephraim, and not a distinct place from it, so Jerome and Adricomius; Jerome noteth here, that Joshua being dead, no mention is made of mourning for him, as when Moses dyed, to intimate mystically, that under the Gospel, the happinesse to come to the faithfull being more clearely opened, wee should not mourne, but rejoyce when the faithfull servants of God dye. And it may bee added, in that no man knew of the Sepulchre of Moses, but Joshua his Sepulchre is notified, that wee might hereby bee admonished to seeke to Jesus for justification, but not to the Law, which if wee doe, wee shall surely never finde it, as the body of Moses, who gave the Law, could never bee found by any after his death.

Hieronym.
The Myserie.

V. 31.

And Israel served the Lord all the dayes of Joshua, and all the dayes of the Elders that overlived Joshua, &c. Here is the great commendation of the servant of God, Joshua, by his godly care the people were contained in obedience, an example worthy the imitation of all Christian Princes. The Elders overliving Joshua were Caleb and Eleazar, and divers of the Levites; for all the other Elders dyed in the wilderness, this same is repeated, Judg. 2. 7. and v. 10. and also all that generation was gathered to their fathers, and another generation rose after them, which knew not the Lord, &c. How long these Elders who are called that generation, lived after Joshua, it is uncertaine, but by computing the times following unto Solomon, it appeareth that it was not many yeares. For Solomon began to build the Temple 480 yeares after their coming out of Egypt, the 4 yeare of his reigne, unto which time, if we reckon to Ohniel the first Judge after Joshua, 40 yeares, Judg. 3. 11. to Ehud 80 yeares, v. 30. to which Shamgar's time may also be counted; to Deborah 40 yeares, Judg. 5. ult. to Gedeon 40, Judg. 8. 28. to Abimelech 3, Ch. 9. 22. to Tolah 23, Ch. 10. 2. to Jair 22, v. 3. to Iephthah 6, Ch. 12. 7. to Ibzan 7, v. 9. to Elon 10, v. 11. to Abdon 8, v. 14. to Samson 20, Ch. 15. ult. to Eli 40, 1 Sam. 4. 18. to Samuel and Saul 40, for they are put together, Acts 13. 21. to David 40, 1 King. 2. 13. to Solomon 4. all together make 423, unto these adde Moses 40, and the whole is 463: so that here were but 17 yeares for Joshua and the Elders that overlived him. I have followed, I confesse, another reckoning, Acts 13. 21. making the yeares of the Judges many more, as Melchior Canus doth, adding to the yeares of

1 King. 6. 1.

of the Judges, the yeares of their oppressions by divers enemies; but now seeing that that account can no way be reconciled with 1 Kings 6. 1. I rather subscribe to them that bring those oppression times under the years of the Judges, for although thus counted they make but 377, yet 17 of Joshs and the Elders being added, and 40 of Moses, the whole is 434 to the end of the Judges, so that it might well bee said about 450 yeares. V. 32. The bones of Joseph carryed from Egypt, Gen. 50. Exod. 13. are buried in Sechem, bought by Jacob, Gen. 33. 19. and given to Joseph, Gen. 48. 22. This most probably is spoken of here, out of time, for it was done before, but is now mentioned, because Shechem was last spoken of, ver. 33. Eleazar dyeth, and is buried in an hill belonging to Phinees his sonne, that was given him in mount Ephraim. It is said now to belong to Phinees, because it was his when his Father was dead. It is said to have been given him, because the High Priest had that place extraordinary, for the Priests had nothing in Ephraim, see Chap. 21.

V. 32.

A

A COMMENTARY
UPON THE BOOKE OF JUDGES.

The PREFACE.

Ho wrote this Booke it is uncertaine, some thinke it was Samuel, some Ezra, some divers writers successively, as the time, that this History goeth through, is very long, viz. of 299 yeares, in which God stirred up 13 Iudges, whose yeares if they bee summed up together, amount to so many. If it bee demanded, what a Judge differed from a King, and what the Office of a Judge was? it is easily determined. The Judges Office was first to fight against the enemy, and to deliver the people of Israel from their oppression. Secondly, to judge the causes brought before them, as did Deborah, Eli and Samuel. Wherefore they had the supreme place and Authority over others in civill things, and a co-active power to call the people after them to warre, and to punish offenders, and to inforce to the execution of their judgements. The difference betwixt a Judge and a King yet was great: because the Judge ruled onely by the Laws of God, and made none other Laws, or constitutions, but in weightier matters stood to the decrees of the great Synedrion or councill of 72: but Kings had power to make other new Ordinances, yet not repugnant to the Laws of God, so that in the time of the Judges God and his Laws were as the onely King, 1 Sam. 12.12. but when they desired to have a King, they are censured, as rejecting the Lord, that hee should no longer raigne over them, because although all good Kings would rule according to Gods Laws, yet hee knew, that being puffed up by so high a dignity, they would for the most part play the tyrants and doe contrary to Gods Laws, and so bring the people to a more miserable condition, as is foretold, 1 Sam. 8. 11. 13. &c. to v. 18. Secondly, Kings were anointed, ware Crownes, of gold, and went forth, and lived in great pompe, having a guard of men and Officers about them, but Judges not. Thirdly, many Kings came to their Kingdome, as the inheritance of their Fathers, but Judges not, but by election, God setting up one of one Tribe, and then another of another, as seemed good unto him: 1 Othniel of Judah, 2 Ehud of Benjamin, Barak of Nephthali, Gedeon of Manasseh, Tholab of Issachar, Elon of Zebulun, Abdon of Ephraim, Samson of Dan, Eli of the Tribe Levi. Fourthly, Kings tooke tribute bute of their Subjects, 20 Sam. 20. 24. 1 Kings 4. 6. but Judges not. And yet as the word King may be taken in a large sense for the supreme Magistrate, a Judge may be called a kinde of King, as Moses is, Deut. 33. 5. Ferus sheweth the differences in briefe thus, Judges were not set over the people, Emperor-like, but as deliverers, directors, & counsellours, wherefore Gideon refused this kinde of Rule being offered unto him, saying, I will not rule over you, but the Lord shall. And he onely was made a Judge, that was by God set up by miracles to deliver the people & to containe them in the obedience of Gods laws, so that the state of the people of Israel then was a free and golden estate to that it was afterwards in the time of the most flourishing King, because then they were made servants, and were greatly exacted upon. Judges ruled, saith Lysa, non per modum imperii, seu alicujus domini, sed tantum per modum ministerii, exhortationis & consilii, Deo sibi istud Dominium retinente, ut patet per istud Gedeonis. c. 8. The scope of this Booke is to shew, how the transgressours of Gods Laws were not threatned with judgements in vaine, nor the obedient fed with gracious promises without effect: for here are both these exemplified at large, sinners not being then especially suffered to goe unpunished, lest the threatnings of transgressours against the Law lately given should have beene contemned, as being without effect. For at the first it was necessary for the confirmation of Gods Laws, that Israel offending should bee severely judged, and repenting againe, received to mercy, that all living in after ages might be assured, that although judgements have not since beene so frequent, yet at last all the wicked shall beare their punishments, and repentant sinners shall be received to mercy. For this Booke of Judges, although the Authour be unknown, yet it being a part of Canonickall Scriptures, wee are sure that the Spirit of God was the prime & the cheife Authour of it, and therefore we learn reverently to read and attend unto it.

CHAP. I.

NOW after the death of Joshua, the children of Israel asked the Lord, saying, Who shall first goe up for us against the Canaanites, &c. Joshua being dead, there was no one supreme Magistrate for the space of 17 yeares, as the Hebrewes have it, or 18 yeares, as Josephus, but the great Synedrion or councill of 72 governed, and the High Priest directed in all cases of difficulty. And this seemeth not unprobable, because Othniel was the first Judge, Ch. 3. 9. and hee was not raised up, till that the people of Israel had revolted from their obedience to God, and were therefore delivered into the hands of their enemies, and greatly oppressed by them; and this revolt was not made till after the death of all the Elders, that over-lived Joshua. If this shall seeme to make against the former account of yeares cast up to make the summe set downe, 1 King. 6. 1. wherein onely 17 yeares are reckoned to Joshua his government, and the Elders that over-lived him. It may be answered that the 40 yeares reckoned to Othniel, Judg. 3. 11. include these 17, the Land had rest 40 yeares accounting to the time from Joshua his death, to the 40 yeares after. Whilst Joshua lived, it is said, the land had rest, Josh. 22. 4. because so much was subdued as was sufficient for them for the present, neither durst any enemy stirre against them, wherefore Joshua ceased from warre, only permitting such Tribes, as found themselves grieved with the straitnesse of their bounds by reason of the enemies still dwelling therein, to fight against them and expell them, as to Ephraim and Manasseh, Josh. 17. 17. But Joshua being dead, and the people increased after a time of rest, they thinking it high time now to goe about the clearing of more Land for their enlargement; first consult with the Lord, who should begin in these warres against the Canaanites, that is, which Tribe should first attempt the driving of them out of his coasts, that by the happy proceedings of one, the enemies might generally be the more terrified, and the other Tribes the more encouraged to doe the like in their parts. If it be demanded, how they consulted

Ferus;

Judg. 8.

2 Tim. 3. 16.

V. 1.

Judg. 2. 7, 8, 9. 10.

Josh. 14. on T

V.

2 Chron. 11.
2 Chron. 20.

Lyra.
Iosh. 7.

Schol. Hist.
Ioseph. Antiq.
5c. 1.

V. 2.
Scholast. Hist.

Lyra.

V. 3.

Fern.

2. 5. 1. 1. 1.
OI. 1.

The Myserie.

Isidor.

V. 4.

Adrichomius.
H. B. Patriarchs traveller.

sulted with the Lord? Ans. By the Urim and Thummim, as hath beene shewed upon Exod. 28. see also 1 Sam. 28. 6. and Ch. 23. 9. And this inquiring and seeking direction and successe from the Lord, was a most sure way to proceede in their wayes prosperously, thus also they did, Ch. 18. 5. c. 20. 18. and Asa and Jehoshaphat being to fight with their enemies, first sought unto God, and then obtained wonderfull victories. Thus also Judas Maccabeus, 1 Mac. 3. 46. And Theodosius being about to fight with the tyrant Maximus sought unto God by the prayers of the godly monks of Egypt, and prevailed wonderfully. The Israelites, saith Lyra, remembring what ill successe they had against Ai under Joshua, who sent them forth, the Lord not being consulted with, to prevent this danger, first aske counsell. Touching the High-Priest, by whom they consulted with the Lord, Comestor saith it was Phinees, who now was promoted to that Office, Eleazar being dead, so likewise Josaphat. Their inquiry is not, what capitaine shall goe up as some suppose, but what Tribe should first begin this warre, as is expresse, Whosall goe up for us against the Canaanites first to fight against them? And the Lord said, Judah shall go up, &c. that is, not any man so called, but the Tribe of Judah, over which yet, saith Comestor, Caleb happily was set, as leader, but is not numbered amongst the Judges for the shortnesse of his time, but this is onely a conjecture, and if hee were Capitaine of this Tribe, yet this maketh him not to have beene a Judge of all Israel, that hee should, if he had continued long, be numbered amongst the Judges. Some hereby conceive, saith Lyra, that Judah the Tribe was now set up generally to be leader to all the rest in their warres, and thus he saith it is commonly expounded. But that, which here followeth, sheweth that it is not so meant, because Judah goeth not up upon this answer to fight with the enemy, but in his owne lot and men of other Tribes were afterwards made Captains of generall warres, and not of the Tribe of Judah onely. Judah being appointed first to begin the warre, calleth Simeon to go with him into his lot, promising to doe the like for him, and thus these two Tribes go to warre together, but not without some man chosen to be their general Capitaine, who most probably was Caleb, as being most famous: for without a Capitaine Generall the Armies going forth would have been subject to confusion. The reason why Judah tooke his brother Simeon to him was, because Simeon's lot lay within that of Judah, as was shewed upon Iosh. 19. 1. It may seeme that the Tribe of Judah had no need so to do, considering the promise of God, I have delivered the Land into his hand, v. 2. but when God prometh any thing, the best meanes and helpe for atcheiving of it are to be used, and so Judah joyneth Simeon unto him, not out of distrust, or trusting to Simeon's helpe, but in great obedience & charity to that his brother, that hee might helpe him againe, for one brother being holpen by another is as a strong City, for so is that Prov. 18. 19. rendered in Ieroms translation. Thus Fern. who also applyeth their consulting with the Lord after the death of Joshua, to the Apostles seeking together to the Lord in prayer for the direction after the death of Jesus, before their going out to preach to all Nations. This application hee maketh mystically, and morally as Judah was appointed first to goe up, so the Christian that would prevaile, must go out by Judah; that is, by confessing the Faith, and hereunto joine Simeon, that is, obedience to the commandement: for to these two the Victory is promised. Isidor. will have the Judges succeeding of Joshua, to set forth the Apostles succeeding Jesus, and the peoples sinning and suffering therefore, but upon their repentance, the raising up of Judges to deliver them, to set forth the sinning of Christians and their persecutions, and the stirring up of Princes and Doctors of the Church, for their helpe and comfort. And Judah went up, and the Lord delivered the Canaanites and Perizzites into his hand. Here it appeareth, that God did not make so gracious a promise of Victory unto them in vain, and they slew of them in Bezek, 10000 men. This City saith Adrichomius was in the Tribe of Judah, neare Bethlehem, and Ierusalem, lying Bethlehem on the east, and Ierusalem on the north. But H. B. placing it 44 miles from Ierusalem, by the waters of Meron spoken of of Josh. 11.5. wherefoever it stood, it must needs bee within the lot of Judah, because Judah made no warre here, but within his owne lot, as appeareth, v. 3. Adonibezek also the King of Bezek was taken Prisoner, and had his thumbs and great toes cut off; whereupon hee confesseth his owne cruell and barbarous dealing with 70 other Kings, who, he saith, being thus mutilated, gathered their meat under his Table. For the reason of dealing thus with him, and of his dealing so with other Kings; it is to bee understood, that the thumbs being cut off, a man was made unfit for Warre, and the great toes being cut off, unfit for flight, because Adonibezek had before fought against them, and being overcome, fled away. That hee might therefore neither fight nor flee away any more, he was thus used: Pierius in his Hieroglyphicks, to set forth a man unfit for Warre, made an Embleme of an hand with the thumbe cut off, and of an hand that with the thumbe rected, to set forth strength and fortitude, because pollex, the thumb, hath the name apollendo, as Isidore hath it, because inter ceteros digiti virtute pollet & potestate. And for this cause of old the Athenians cut off the thumbs of Aginet, that he might not goe forth with the Navie, of which he was Captain; so Valer. Maximus and Ælianus; and some saith the same Val. Max. having cut off their owne thumbs that they might not bee taken for Souldiers, have been severely punished by the Senate. The like is related by Santonius of a Roman Knight that cut off the thumbs of his two sonnes, that they might not goe to Warre, being therefore severely punished by Augustus. And Ammianus Marcellinus praiseth the French, that none of them did cut off their thumbs to decline the terrour of Warre, as many in Italy had done. But there was a secret reason in respect of Gods just judgements, why Adonibezek was now served thus, because hee had dealt so with 70 other petty Kings before, many of them happily being Kings under him over particular Cities, as the King of Hazor is said to have had many Kings under him, Josh. 11.10. but hereby it appeareth that Adonibezek was of no small power, whom God yet subdued unto Judah. Hence note the justice of God, to pay wicked men with their own coin: so Valerius the Emperour, who caused 80 Priests, who were sent upon an Ambassage to him, to be put into a Ship and burnt, was a little while after burnt in a thatcht Cottage by the enemies, who put fire to it. Justinian being also expelled from his Empire by Leontius, and his nose cut off, the said Leontius was used in like manner by Apfimar; so Zonaras, who also in the same place saith, that Constantinus the son of Irene, who had put out the eyes of Nicephorus his Vncle, and of Alexius Mosolus, for suspicion of affecting the Empire, had his eyes put out five yeares after, upon the same day, by Irene his mother.

In that Adonibezek did not onely cut off the thumbs, &c. but made those Kings to gather meat under his Table; this shewed the pride and cruelty of a wicked man; there is no mercy in him towards such as hee hath subdued, but he useth them as dogs and beasts; as Sapores the King of the Persians having overcome Valerianus the Emperour, used him for a stool to set his foot upon when hee went up to his Horse, as Eutropius relateth: and Tamerlane having overcome Bajazet the Emperour of the Turks served him likewise, and carryed him about in an iron cage for a spectacle. But such cruelty used even by the wicked to the wicked, God will not suffer to goe unrevenged, as we may see in this example, see also Esa. 33. Amos 2. Lastly, as Ferus noteth, here is a notable example of the mutability of worldly things; in that so many who were Kings, were thus abased.

Adonibezek suffering by this judgement, acknowledgeth that God had dealt with him justly, as hee had done to others, now causing the like to be done unto him; whereby we may see, that even the wickedest heathen were not without the knowledge of God, as is also taught, Rom. 1. but they had no sense of this but in their misery, and not then neither to call upon him for mercy, but to justifie him in his proceedings against them. And they brought him to Jerusalem, and hee dyed there. The reason of their carrying him to Jerusalem is set downe in the next verse, that was the next City they subdued and burnt; so that

V. 5, 6.

V. 7.

Pierius.

Isidor.

Val. Maxim. c.

de Crudel.

Ælian. l. 2. varia Histor.

Val. Maxim. c.

de Severis.

Suren. c. 24.

Ammian Mar-

cellin. l. 15.

Note.

Gheas Anal.

par. 4.

Zonaras tom. 3.

Eutropius.

Ferus.

Note.

that Adonibezek was carried thither as a prisoner onely taken along with them in the way that they marched. Touching Jerusalem, we read before of the king of Jerusalem slaine by Jeshua, Ch. 10. and Ch. 12. and of Jerusalem inhabited by the men of Judah, together with the Jebusites, Iosh. 15. 63. but no where of the taking of it till this time; yet, as hath been shewed upon Iosh. 15. 63. it is most probable that it was taken in the dayes of Ioshua, but repossessed againe by the enemies, whilst they were busied in other Warres, and that now it was taken the second time by Judah and burnt, as Iericho and Ai had been for the greater terrour of the enemies, and in detestation of the abominations therein formerly committed, that it being thus purged and rebuilt, might be fitt to be the Metropolis of the whole Kingdome, and the seat of the Temple of God. Whereas this was done by the men of Judah, and yet the farre greater part of the City was in the lot of Benjamin, as hath been shewed upon Iosh. 15. 63. and accordingly they are said to have dwelt here, v. 21. of this Chapter: it may be conceived that the Benjamins were also with the men of Judah in this Warre, although not hitherto spoken of, because their going out to fight is not afterwards spoken of, as of all the other Tribes, v. 22, 23, 24, &c. but onely it is said that they dwelt in Jerusalem, and the Jebusites with them unexpeiled, v. 21. but because Judah was the chiefe in this expedition, he onely is named, and not Simon or Benjamin so nearly joyned unto him. Whereas the City is said now to have been burnt, Hebr. to bee cast into the fire, a phrase amongst the Hebrews, to expresse the utter destruction of a place by fire, it is yet to bee understood that all without exception was not burnt, but all that was taken onely; the Fort of Zion held by the Jebusites even till Dauids dayes escaping, as hath been before shewed upon Iosh. 15. 63.

V. 9.

V. 10, 11.

Here are other expeditions of Judah set forth against the Canaanites in the mountaines, and in the south, and in the valleys, in generall, the particular places, and their successe being further declared in the verses following to v. 20. And first against those in the mountaines, Hebron and Debir, of which see Iosh. 14. 12, 13. and Ch. 15. 15, 16. and of Debir, or Kiriath-sepher againe, v. 49. where enough hath been spoken of the names of these Cities, and of the gift of Hebron to Caleb againe repeated, v. 20. and of his expelling the three sonnes of Anak by the help of Judah. Onely that which was done about Debir, and the taking thereof by Othniel the son of Kenaz, Calebs younger brother, and having his daughter Achsah therefore given him to wife, &c. all which is in the same words set forth, Iosh. 15. 15, 16, 17, &c. remaineth here to bee spoken of, as most proper to this place, this being the time when these things were done.

V. 12.

V. 13.

Qu.

Levit. 18.

Lyra.

Hugo Card.

And Caleb said, Hee that smiteth Kiriath-sepher, and taketh it, I will give him Achsah my daughter to wife; and Othniel the sonne of Kenaz, the younger brother of Caleb took it, &c. Here a question is made, whether this marriage were lawfull or not, seeing that Othniel being brother to Caleb, was Uncle to Achsah, and a Nephew is expressly forbidden to marry his Aunt, therefore by the like reason the Uncle may not marry his Niece. Lyra scanneth this diversly; first, saying, that some hold it to have been against the Law, but Caleb having made a vow at large, and not knowing that his brother should take that City, when it was done, held it not to stand with his magnificence to goe back from that which he had promised, and therefore preferring the tye of a vow before that of the Law, performed it, as Iephthah afterward performed his vow in offering his daughter. Thus Hugo Cardin. hee had rather keep his vow, then the Law about marriages. But Lyra rejecteth this, because Caleb & Othniel were both godly men, and so it is not probable that they would agree to doe any thing against the Law of God. Secondly, he therefore saith, that some hold Kenaz the father of Othniel to have been Calebs brother, and so hee was Calebs Nephew, and called his brother onely, as Lot was called Abrahams brother, Gen. 13. Lastly, he saith, that although he were Calebs brother, yet hee did nothing against the Law in marrying his daughter, for Abraham marryed Sarah, his brother Harams daughter, and onely the marriage of a Nephew with his Aunt, and not of an Uncle with his Niece is by the Law forbidden, Levit. 18. And although the case

case may seem to be alike for the same degree of consanguinity, yet there is this difference, it is against nature for the Nephew to bring the Aunt, his superiour, into subjection to him, as he doth, if he marrieth her, but it is not so for the Vacle to marry the Niece. Thus hee, who addeth also more touching the liberty of the man above that which is granted to the woman, for the further confirmation hereof. But see the contrary to this proved upon Levit. 18. 18. and Othniel determined to be a brother to Caleb, not properly so called, but according to the appellation used amongst the Hebrews, because hee was his kinsman; therefore Junius for brother here, hath agnatus Calebi, but the word in Hebrew is brother, and if that be true which hath been before alledged out of Lyra, that Kenaz the father of Othniel, took to wife the mother of Caleb, Josb. 14. then this controversie will thus be soon at an end. Ferus from hence praiseth Caleb, in that he sought a son in law rather vertuous then rich; and Themistocles gave his daughter to a man poore indeed, but honest, saying, I had rather have a man wanting money, then money wanting a man. Achsaph being given to wife to Othniel, shee moves him to ask of her father a field, and then shee lighting off her Ass, asked him a blessing, saying, Thou hast given mee a dry land, give me also springs of water, and he gave her the upper springs and the nether. The Septuagint and Vulgar Latine have it, he moved her, to which the words following answer best: but Hebr. it is shee moved him; both are true, saith Lyra, shee moved him, but he thinking it fittest that shee should make this request to her owne father, bade her doe it. For these words, And shee lighted from off her Ass, the Septuagint and Vulg. Latine have it, Shee murmured & cryed, or fighed upon her Ass; but Jun. Pagninus, Vatablus, Tygerius interpreters and divers more, and some Rabbins, as David Kimchi, R. Solomon, Chaldee Paraphr. expound it, shee lighted from her Ass, Hebr. it is והצנח מעל הסור, the word הצנח is not found elsewhere but in this same relation, Josb. 15. and Judg. 4. 21. where it is put for sinning to the ground: Polanus rendreth הצנח cum impetu demittere se, desilire, or desigere, but for ingemiscere, or to sigh, it cannot bee taken. Wherefore Bonsferius labourereth in vain to justify the Vulg. Latine herein. Serrarius better thinketh it a mistaking of הצנח for הנה to sigh or groane. Caleb perceiving by his daughters comming downe and prostrating her selfe, as it is likely, before him, that shee would ask him somewhat, asked her what shee would, shee answered, give me a blessing, &c. as before. Here by a blessing shee meaneth not onely a wishing well; but a performance of good unto her, as Caleb her father was able. So likewise the word blessing is used, Gen. 33. 11. 1 Sam. 25. 27. 2 Cor. 9. 5. thou hast given mee a south land, or dry land, Hebr. it is south, but because the south in Canaan was most dry, it may be termed a dry land. And herein Canaan was contrary to all our Countreys in Europe, wherein the south is moistest and fruitfullest, but in Canaan the west was the part from which the raine came, Luke 12. 1 Kings 18. the reason, because the west was to the Sea, but the south to the vast wilderness of Arabia, which was dry. Give mee also Springs of water, the Septuagint λύτρωσιν ὕδατος, the redemption of water; and whereas it followeth, Hee gave her the upper Springs and the nether, the Septuagint have λύτρωσιν ὑπερώων, ἢ λύτρωσιν κατώων, which Augustine, who followed that translation, comming to explaine after that hee had said, shee cryed out upon her Ass, give me a blessing, &c. hee saith, shee being advised by her husband to ask a field, asked the redemption of water, but what this should meane I know not, unlesse a fruitfull field wherewith water might be bought, because the place to which shee was going with her husband was dry, and Caleb gave her such a field, as that shee might with the fruit thereof buy waters, that came from the mountaines above, and springing from the valleys beneath. Symmachus rendreth it, possessionem in superioribus & possessionem in inferioribus, but Theodotion, irrigationem aquarum, Hebr. it is מִיֵּם גְּלוּת fluctus aquarum. But what is meant by the Springs, or flowings of water, the upper and the nether, it is not agreed. Cajetan saith, that nothing but the Springs are meant in the higher and lower grounds neare to the south land already given her, which was dry, that being derived thither by channels, it might bee

¶ Junius.

Ferus.
Themist. Malo
virum pecunia,
quam pecuniam,
cuius indigentem
V. 12, 15.

¶ Lyra.¶ Polanus.

Bonsferius
Serrarius.

Aug. Qu. 4. in
Judg.

¶ Cajetan.

Lysa
Tofatus.

Bonfrerius

Qu.

Ferus.

The Mystery.

made fruitfull. Lysa saith, it was a field, having Springs both in the upper and in the nether part. Tofatus, that two fields are meant, one above the south land already given, lying more north, and the other lower then it, lying more south, both well watered with Springs. It is not likely, that it being agreed before betwixt her husband and her, that she should aske a field, that shee asked Springs onely, without the ground wherein they lay, but rather such a ground, and Caleb to shew his bounty to Othniel, so well deserving, granted more then was desired, a field lying higher, and another lower, accommodated with Springs or Rivers. Bonfrerius standeth for one field onely, and for the upper Springs to be the raine of Heaven; but this is absurd, seeing it was not in Caleb's power to give any such Springs, but of God alone at his pleasure, and yet it is said, that he gave his daughter the upper Springs and the nether. If it be demanded how lands could bee given to a daughter by one that had sons, as Caleb, 1 Chrom. 4. seeing the land was the inheritance of sons onely, but in case of the want of such issue. It is answered, that daughters were to have dowries, and the father was not herein tyed, but he might, if it pleased him, give some of his land for a dowry to them, to bee enjoyed till the yeare of Jubilee. This passage, saith Ferus, might seem unworthy the sacred History, but that Achsabs practice may well bee a pattern for other women, shee desired not costely apparell, or gold, or silver, but necessities for hers and her families sustenance. And there is herein a mystery, Caleb setteth forth God the Father, Othniel Christ, Achsab the Christian soule, the south or dry land given her, this earth, wherein we live, or the flesh, which is dry and barren in respect of all spirituall good things; wherefore Christ adviseth, and the true Christian asketh the upper Springs of grace, to be devout and heavenly, and the nether of contrition and teares for sinnes and miseries, which who so hath, hath a rich possession indeed.

Dialog. 1. 3. Gregorius. Præsumptio enim timore se lachrymis afficit, quia dum mala sua recollit pro his æterna supplicia pertimescit. Cum vero longo more fuit formido consumpta, quedam de presumptione venia securitatis nascitur, in que amorem celestium gaudiorum animus inflammatur. Et quæ prius fiebat, ne duceretur in supplicium, post flere incipit, quia differtur a regno. Dat ergo ei pater celestis irriguum superius, cum se lachrymis celestis regni desiderio affigit; irriguum vero inferius, cum inferni supplicia timendo flet. Prius autem inferius datur, post superius, sed quia compunctio amore cæli præminet, irriguum superius prius ponitur, et post inferius.

Gregory by the south land, understandeth the gift to speake freely for the truth, to give aimes, to relieve the oppressed, to be zealous for the faith; so that he which hath these graces, but not the grace of teares, hath a dry land, but yet wanteth Springs: This is therefore also to bee desired, that through the love of heaven, and the feare of hell, he may bee contrite, and weep for his sinnes, which exclude him from the one, and indanger him in respect of the other. These are the upper and the nether Springs; but because the heart is first affected with sorrow for feare of hell, and then, a confidence towards God being wrought, for being delayed in comming to the blessednesse expected; the nether Springs are first in Nature, but because sorrowing and groaning out of a desire of heaven is the more worthy, this is first placed here, the upper Springs, and then the nether, as not being of so great dignity. And this mytticall application is rather to be preferred, because a gift given after espousalls is spoken of, which cannot be earthly, but spirituall, although defective, till true sorrow to repentance be added. Wherefore Ferus also goeth from his first, saying, or by the south land the gifts of grace may be understood, by the springs of water, the gift of eternall life.

V. 16.

And the children of the Kenite, Moses Father in law, went up out of the City of Palme trees with the children of Judah, into the wilderness of Judah, &c. Numb. 10. 29. Raguel is said to be the Father in law of Moses, and Hobab to bee his sonne, he is also called Revel and Jeibro, Exod. 2. 16, 17. Ch. 18. 1. and here the Kenite, of which name see againe, Judg. 4. 11. and Numb. 24. 21. Hee was desired by Moses to stay with him, Numb. 10. 29. promising that he should dwell amongst the people of Israel in the best of the Land. And hereby it seemeth that this was performed after the death of Moses, for his children abode hitherto in the City of Palme trees, that is, Jericho, Dent. 34. 3. Judg. 3. 13. which Josephus describeth to be the most pleasant and fruitfull part of all the Land. But now they goe up into the wildernesse of Judab. Whereas it is by their going up out of Jericho implied, that they dwelt therein, it is to be understood, that this they could not doe, because Jericho was all burnt down to the ground, and not built yet againe; wherefore they abode onely in Tents within the confines of Jericho. But why did they now remove? Lyra saith, that they might be neare unto Oisniel, to learne of him the knowledge of the Law, 2 Chron. 2. 55. the Kenites are said to have come of Hemath, the father of the house of Reshab, celebrated Jer. 55. for their abdicating of the world and worldly profits and pleasures: If these were the same with those Kenites, this might bee a reason of their remove from a pleasant place to a wildernesse, that they might bee the more free to Divine contemplations, and not corrupted with the affluence of worldly delights. Yet Junius thinketh that they went to joine themselves with the children of Judab in their Warres.

was

Arad, by lying neare which the Wildernesse of Judab is described, was on the border of the land of Canaan, next unto the Idumeans and Amalekites, as it were a corner east and south, see Numb. 21.

And Judah went with his brother Simeon, and they slew the Canaanites that dwelt in Zephath, &c. Simeon having holpen Judah in his lot, now is holpen by Judah in his lot: Zephath was 16 miles from Debir, the City last taken by Oisniel. It is thought to have been a City of the Region Arad, of which see Numb. 21. how it was devoted to hormab, or destruction, which is here executed; but onely there it is said, Israel destroyed them and their Cities, here onely one City is said to be destroyed, which happily was the chiefe, and the appurtenances to it are not named.

Also Judah took Gaza with the coast thereof, and Askelon and Ekron. These were Cities of the Philistims, about which it may be doubted how Judah is said to have taken them, seeing Cb. 3. 3. five Lords of the Philistims remained unpossessed; and these were three of them, and alwayes after the Philistims continued infest enemies to the Jews, and unsubdued, even unto the dayes of Eli, 1 Sam. 5. Lyra answereth, that either it is meant, Judah took something belonging to these three Cities, or having taken them, possessed them not, and so they were againe recovered by the Philistims. Josephus saith that Gaza and Ekron were not taken, but Askelon and Azotus, and the Septuagint Roman. edition, they possessed neither, Gaza, Askelon, Ekron, nor Azotus. But both erroneously; yet this last is true, they possessed none of these, although they took them.

And the Lord was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountaines, but he could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, &c. It may seeme strange if God were with them, that they should not be able to expell any enemies; so that this seemeth to be a reason of no force, which is added, because they had Chariots of iron: of which kind of Chariots, see Iosb. 17. 16. But it is to be understood, that God permitted them for these Chariots to be timorous of them, that so the expelling of some enemies might be deferred, they being left still to try the children of Israel, as is said, Judg. 3. But why had they in the valleys Chariots of iron, more then they in the mountaines? Ans. Because these kind of Warlike Engines were not to be weilded, but in plain places, where they might run every way with force and great violence.

Here Hebron is given to Caleb, and hee expelleth the three sonnes of Anak, see before, v. 10. and Iosb. 14.

And the children of Benjamin could not expell the Jebusites out of Jerusalem, &c. see the same said before of Judah, Iosb. 15. 63.

And Ioseph went up against Bethel, and the Lord was with him, &c. Babel lay nigh unto Ai, Iosb. 8. 2. at the taking of which the men of Bethel most probably fell also. But now it seemeth that it was againe re-peopled, and Ephraim meant here by the house of Ioseph went against it; for Manasseh another Tribe of Joseph. lib. 5.

Bel. iud. c. 4.

Lyra.

Qu.

Junii annotat.

V. 17.
H. B. Patriarchs
travailes.

V. 18.

Qu.

Lyra.

Ioseph. Antiq;
lib. 5. c. 2.

V. 19.

Qu.

V. 20.

V. 21.

V. 22.

Lyra.

V. 24.

Antigen. proditor in primis amo, at eisdem cum proditor aut maxime o-
di.
Plutarch in Roman apertis regat.

Qu.

V. 27, 28.

that house is spoken of, v. 27. so Lyra. But as Manasseh, so Ephraim is spoken of severally, v. 29. and therefore by Joseph here, both together are meant. For their coming into Bethel, it is said, that they found a man that came out of the City, and prayed him to shew them the way into it. Whereupon the Rabbins say, that there was no entrance in but under the ground, so that without a guide they could not come in: but this seemeth to be fabulous. It is more probable that there were many windings & turnings to come in it, so that the way was hard to find. This man for his kindnesse in shewing them the way they saved, with his family, as Rahab in Jericho had been saved before, Josb 6. and he went amongst the Hittites, and built a City, calling it Luz, as the old name of Bethel is said to have been, v. 23. of which see Gen. 28. Touching the fact of this man of Bethel, betraying his owne native Countrey, something hath been spoken before of Rahabs, Ch. 2. which was not much unlike unto it. This may seem to have been an hainous thing in this man, and unnatural, because all are bound by the law of nature to seek the preservation of their owne Countrey as much as they can, and therefore when any man hath been treacherous to his Countrey to betray it, hee hath been hated in all nations. Philip, or as some have it, Antigonus of Greece was wont to say, I love them greatly that are about to betray, but when they have betrayed, I hate them most of all. When Rhimitales the King of the Thracians fell away from Anthony to Augustus the Roman Emperour, and thought therefore that he was worthy of great favour, hee said likewise, I love proditors, but praise not proditors. When Camillus the Roman besieged the Falisci, a certaine Schoolmaster led out the children of the Lords which he taught, into the Tents of the Romans, pretending that he went out onely to walke with them for recreation, hoping by this treachery to get a great reward; but the Romans contrariwise, to shew their hatred of this fact, delivered the Schoolmaster bound to those Boyes to be beaten with rods, and so sent them back to their parents. Mahomet the Turkish Emperour having taken Constantinople by the treachery of one Gercula, to whom Paleologus the Emperour that then was slaine, had been very beneficiall; in hatred of so foule a treachery, laid cruell punishments upon him. And the Dolphin of France in King Johns time, vowed, that if hee attained the Crown of England, hee would kill all the Lords that had been Traytors to their own King, in bringing him in against him. But this man is not to be ranked amongst such; for when it is made known, that it is the will of God, that any City or Countrey should be destroyed, it is now no longer treachery, but piety, even for a native of that Countrey, although not to be an agent in destroying it, yet to further those herein that are appointed to destroy it. And this was the case of all the Cities in Canaan, as was commonly known to the inhabitants. But seeing this man was one of them, how could hee lawfully be dismissed, when as every one of them was adjudged to the sword? Ans. They were not all so adjudged to the sword, but that upon just occasion some might be spared, as Rahab was, and the Gibeonites also. But herein was the difference betwixt them and this man, they were spared, and lived amongst the children of Israel, because most probably they turned to the true Religion, but this man happily not being converted, was not permitted to dwell amongst them, but sent away into another Countrey. And they could not in way of gratitude for the good turn hee did them, but let him and his goe in safety. What the land of the Hittites was, to which hee went, is uncertain, but it seemeth to have been some other Countrey near, and no part of the Land of Canaan given to Israel.

Having shewed the victory of the house of Joseph, now it is shewed in what Cities they could not prevail, either Manasseh or Ephraim, v. 29. But herein some think that their negligence is blamed. Of these Cities see before, Josb. 17. 11. & Josb. 16. 10. And the like is said of Zebulun, v. 30. of Asher, v. 31. of Naphtali, v. 33. and of Dan, v. 34. touching all which it is to be held that they sinned, in that for the love of the gaine of tribute they expelled not the Canaanites, as they were straitly charged, Numb. 33. Deut. 7. so Lyra.

Touching

Touching Dan, his condition is set forth as different from the rest, the Amorites forced him into the mountaines, themselves holding the vallies, and some mountaines also, as Herer, Aialon, and Sbaalbin, which was doubtlesse for their sins, for otherwise God was able, and would have given them more power also against them. This straitning of the tribe of Dan was spoken of before Josh. 19. 47. which caused them to goe out and subdue other places, so likewise Judg. 18. The Septuagint for these three mountaines have it, ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῷ μυσταῖν, ὃ ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδύμνου where there were Beares and Foxes, ἐν τῷ μυσταῖν, ὃ ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδύμνου, by Aialon understanding Beares, and by Sbaalbin Foxes, for which yet they are no where taken, but Aialon for a wilde beast, called an Hart, and Sbaalbin for Foxes. Herer is thought to have the name from the Sun, for the drynesse, as the word signifieth, by some from shells or pottheards. Of Aialon, see Josh. 10. 12. Of Sbaalbin, Josh. 19. 42. 1 King 4. 9. This was the state of the Danites, but the house of Joseph made these Amorites tributaries, that is, the Ephraimites who bordered upon the Danites, as the Septuagint have it expressly, And the hand of the house of Joseph was heavy upon the Amorite: Hebr. there is nothing but, And the hand of Joseph was heavy, and hee put him to tribute, it not being expressed who was put to tribute, whether the Amorite by the house of Joseph, or the house of Joseph by the Amorite, but because wee read not yet of any tribe of Israel put to tribute, but contrariwise, that of the Septuagint is to bee preferred, although Lyra leaveth it doubtfull.

And the coast of the Amorites was from the going up to Akrabbim, from the rock, and upward. Of this place see Numb. 34. 4. it was the bound of the tribe of Judah southward, unto which seeing the Amorite extended from Dan, it appeareth, that he was still of great power, so that this may be taken, as added to shew a reason why Dan was so strained by them: The rock, Hebr. עַלְיוֹן is said by Josephus to have been a City of the Amalekites; by Jerome a City in the confines of the Amalekites and Philistines.

V. 34.
V. 35.

V. 36.

Joseph. Antiq;
lib. 3. c. 2. Hieron in Esai. 42. 11.

CHAP. II.

AND an Angel of the Lord came from Gilgal to Bochim, and said, I made you to goe up out of Egypt, &c. The sin of the Israelites being set forth before, that they expelled not the Canaanites, but covenanted with them for tribute, now they are reprov'd for it, and threatened. Touching the Angel of the Lord said to come unto them, the Rabbins say it was Phinees who is called an Angel, because a messenger from God is אַנְגֵּל, an Angel, as the word signifieth. Christian Expositors generally, that it was an Angel indeed; because he speaketh not like a Prophet, Thus saith the Lord, but as an Angel, I made you to goe out of Egypt, and when a Prophet is spoken of, he is so mentioned, as that it may certainly be known that such an one was sent. But why is hee said then to come from Gilgal, and not rather from heaven? Junius hereupon inferreth, that it was not an Angel, but a man who is said to passe from one place to another, as an Angel is not, and because his vanishing away again is not spoken of, but the last of these reasons is of no force, seeing although sometime an Angel appearing is said to vanish againe, as Judg. 13. 19. yet at other times not, as Josh. 5. 13. Gen. 18. 33. Cb. 19. 22. And for that reason taken from his coming from Gilgal, it may well be understood to have been thus said, because hee appeared there before to Joshua, Cb. 5. when hee said, that hee came as a Captain of the Lords Host. Wherefore mention is here made of that place, as wherein he had before so graciously shewed himself in their aide, that their ingratitude in falling from God might the more appeare. But for the place [Bochim] to which hee now came, if it bee demanded where that was? Divers conjecture diversly. Adrichomius saith, it was within the lot of Benjamin neare unto Gilgal, calling it Clautomoz, weeping: some at Shiloh, because the Tabernacle was there, and Sacrifices were here offered, v. 5. but it was unlawfull to offer in any other place then where the Tabernacle was. And at Shiloh, be-

V. 1.

Lyra.Junius.Adrichomius.Junius.

Lyra.

V. 24.

Amigen. proditor in primis am. at eisdem cum prodide runt maxime o.
di.
Plutarch in Roman apophtheg.
mat.

Qu.

V. 27, 28.

that house is spoken of, v. 27. so Lyra. But as Manasseh, so Ephraim is spoken of severally, v. 29. and therefore by Joseph here, both together are meant. For their coming into Bethel, it is said, that they found a man that came out of the City, and prayed him to shew them the way into it. Whereupon the Rabbins say, that there was no entrance in but under the ground, so that without a guide they could not come in: but this seemeth to be fabulous. It is more probable that there were many windings & turnings to come in it, so that the way was hard to find. This man for his kindnesse in shewing them the way they saved, with his family, as Rahab in Jericho had been saved before, Josb 6. and he went amongst the Hittites, and built a City, calling it Luz, as the old name of Bethel is said to have been, v. 23. of which see Gen 28. Touching the fact of this man of Bethel, betraying his owne native Countrey, something hath been spoken before of Rahab, Ch 2. which was not much unlike unto it. This may seem to have been an hainous thing in this man, and unnatural, because all are bound by the law of nature to seek the preservation of their owne Countrey as much as they can, and therefore when any man hath been treacherous to his Countrey to betray it, hee hath been hated in all nations. Philip, or as some have it, Antigonus of Greece was wont to say, I love them greatly that are about to betray, but when they have betrayed, I hate them most of all. When Rhimitalces the King of the Thracians fell away from Anthony to Augustus the Roman Emperour, and thought therefore that he was worthy of great favour, hee said likewise, I love proditors, but praise not proditors. When Camillus the Roman besieged the Falisci, a certaine Schoolmaster led out the children of the Lords which he taught, into the Tents of the Romans, pretending that he went out onely to walke with them for recreation, hoping by this treachery to get a great reward; but the Romans contrariwise, to shew their hatred of this fact, delivered the Schoolmaster bound to those Boyes to be beaten with rods, and so sent them back to their parents. Mahomet the Turkish Emperor having taken Constantinople by the treachery of one Gercula, to whom Paleologus the Emperor that then was slaine, had been very beneficiall; in hatred of so foule a treachery, laid cruell punishments upon him. And the Dolphin of France in King Johns time, vowed, that if hee attained the Crown of England, hee would kill all the Lords that had been Traytors to their own Kings, in bringing him in against him. But this man is not to be ranked amongst such; for when it is made known, that it is the will of God, that any City or Countrey should be destroyed, it is now no longer treachery, but piety, even for a native of that Countrey, although not to be an agent in destroying it, yet to further those herein that are appointed to destroy it. And this was the case of all the Cities in Canaan, as was commonly known to the inhabitants. But seeing this man was one of them, how could hee lawfully be dismissed, when as every one of them was adjudged to the sword? Ans. They were not all so adjudged to the sword, but that upon just occasion some might be spared, as Rahab was, and the Gibeonites also. But herein was the difference betwixt them and this man, they were spared, and lived amongst the children of Israel, because most probably they turned to the true Religion, but this man happily not being converted, was not permitted to dwell amongst them, but sent away into another Countrey. And they could not in way of gratitude for the good turn hee did them, but let him and his goe in safety. What the land of the Hittites was, to which hee went, is uncertain, but it seemeth to have been some other Countrey near, and no part of the Land of Canaan given to Israel.

Having shewed the victory of the house of Joseph, now it is shewed in what Cities they could not prevaile, either Manasseh or Ephraim, v. 29. But herein some think that their negligence is blamed. Of these Cities see before, Josb 17. 11. & Josb 16. 10. And the like is said of Zebulun, v. 30. of Asher, v. 31. of Naphthali, v. 33. and of Dan, v. 34. touching all which it is to be held that they sinned, in that for the love of the gaine of tribute they expelled not the Canaanites, as they were straitly charged, Numb 33. Deut 7. so Lyra.

Touching

Touching Dan, his condition is set forth as different from the rest, the Amorites forced him into the mountaines, themselves holding the vallies, and some mountaines also, as Heres, Aialon, and Sbaalim, which was doubtlesse for their sins, for otherwise God was able, and would have given them more power also against them. This straitning of the tribe of Dan was spoken of before Josh. 19. 47. which caused them to goe out and subdue other places, so likewise Judg. 18. The Septuagint for these three mountaines have it, ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῷ μυσσῶντι, ἢ ἐν ἀκροῖ καὶ ἀλάτοις where there were Beares and Foxes, ἐν τῷ μυσσῶντι, ἢ ἐν σαλαβί, by Aialon understanding Beares, and by Sbaalim Foxes, for which yet they are no where taken, but Aialon for a wilde beast, called an Hart, and Shangnalim for Foxes. Heres is thought to have the name from the Sun, for the drynesse, as the word signifieth, by some from shells or pottheards. Of Aialon, see Josh. 10. 12. Of Sbaalim, Josh. 19. 42. 1 King. 4. 9. This was the state of the Danites, but the house of Joseph made these Amorites tributaries, that is, the Ephraimites who bordered upon the Danites, as the Septuagint have it expressly, And the hand of the house of Joseph was heavy upon the Amorite: Hebr. there is nothing but, And the hand of Joseph was heavie, and hee put him to tribute, it not being exprest who was put to tribute, whether the Amorite by the house of Joseph, or the house of Joseph by the Amorite, but because wee read not yet of any tribe of Israel put to tribute, but contrariwise, that of the Septuagint is to be preferred, although Lyra leaveth it doubtfull.

And the coast of the Amorites was from the going up to Akkrabbim, from the rock, and upward. Of this place see Numb. 34. 4. it was the bound of the tribe of Judah southward, unto which seeing the Amorite extended from Dan, it appeareth, that he was still of great power, so that this may be taken, as added to shew a reason why Dan was so straitned by them: The rock, Hebr. עלס is said by Josephus to have been a City of the Amalekites; by Jerome a City in the confines of the Amalekites and Philistims.

V. 34.
V. 35.

V. 36.

Joseph. Antiq;
lib. 3. c. 2. Hieron in Es. 42. 11.

CHAP. II.

AND an Angel of the Lord came from Gilgal to Bochim, and said, I made you to goe up out of Egypt, &c. The sin of the Israelites being set forth before, that they expelled not the Canaanites, but covenanted with them for tribute, now they are reproved for it, and threatened. Touching the Angel of the Lord said to come unto them, the Rabbins say it was Phineas who is called an Angel, because a messenger from God is ἀγγελος, an Angel, as the word signifieth. Christian Expositors generally, that it was an Angel indeed; because he speaketh not like a Prophet, Thus saith the Lord, but as an Angel, I made you to goe out of Egypt, and when a Prophet is spoken of, he is so mentioned, as that it may certainly be known that such an one was sent. But why is hee said then to come from Gilgal, and not rather from heaven? Junius hereupon inferreth, that it was not an Angel, but a man who is said to passe from one place to another, as an Angel is not, and because his vanishing away again is not spoken of; but the last of these reasons is of no force, seeing although sometime an Angel appearing is said to vanish againe, as Judg. 13. 19. yet at other times not, as Josh. 5. 13. Gen. 18. 33. Cb. 19. 22. And for that reason taken from his coming from Gilgal, it may well be understood to have been thus said, because hee appeared there before to Joshua, Cb. 5. when hee said, that hee came as a Captain of the Lords Host. Wherefore mention is here made of that place, as wherein he had before so graciously shewed himself in their aide, that their ingratitude in falling from God might the more appeare. But for the place [Bochim] to which hee now came, if it bee demanded where that was? Divers conjecture diversly. Adrichomius saith, it was within the lot of Benjamin neare unto Gilgal, calling it Clautomou, weeping: some at Sbilob, because the Tabernacle was there, and Sacrifices were here offered, v. 5. but it was unlawfull to offer in any other place then where the Tabernacle was. And at Sbilob, because

V. 1.

Lyra.Jun.
JuniusAdrichomius.Junius.

2 Sam. 5. 2 3.

Iosaph. Antiq.
lib. 7. c. 4.

Lyra.

Judg. 13.

Tostatus, Tornielius, Sallianus, Iunius.
August. qu. 12.
in lud. Preco-pius, Cajetan.August. qu. 13.
in Iudic.

Lyra.

V. 2.

cause of the Tabernacle the people used to assemble together three times in the yeare, so that the whole Assembly of them might here be spoken unto. Lastly, others, that it was a Wood neare to Jerusalem, where David afterwards lay hid, and a sign being given by the moving of the tops of the trees, issued out against the Philistims; because the Septuagint for Mulberry trees, have it πλανήων τῶ κλαυθμῶν, neare the place of weeping, as Bochim in Hebr. signifieth. And Josephus saith, the High Priest prophesied in the Woods, which were called the place of weeping. And against the former opinion, that it was Shiloh, it is alledged, that Shiloh was never called Bochim after this, as it should have been, if the apparition had been there, according to v. 5. yet I think it most probable, that Shiloh was the place for the reasons brought before. For the reason objected, then the name should hereupon have been changed, it is easily answered, it was enough for a part of that place where the Assembly was held, to bee called Bochim, although the old name of the whole in generall were retained still. Lyra taking it for granted that this place was not Shiloh, draweth an argument from hence to prove, that hee was an Angel that appeared, because otherwise it was unlawfull to have sacrificed here; but an Angel appeared to Manoah, hee likewise sacrificed in the place where hee appeared unto him. And they that stand for another place besides Shiloh, hereby answer the reason brought before to prove it Shiloh, because otherwise they could not have sacrificed here, because howsoever ordinarily they might not sacrifice but at the place which the Lord chose for his Tabernacle, yet in extraordinary cases they might, as David in the threshing floore of Araunah, 2 Sam. 24. and Eliab, 1 King. 18. But to these places alledged it may bee said, that Manoah and David had speciall direction, and Eliab was a Prophet inspired, but here without any such direction they offered sacrifices, which implyeth, that it was done in the ordinary place.

For the time when this Angel appeared, there is also a difference, some thinking that it was before Joshua his death, because v. 6. Joshua is spoken of as dismissing the people from this Assembly, and then dying. Others, after his death, because the people are said to have served the Lord all the dayes of Joshua, and of the Elders that over-lived Joshua, v. 7. but this reprehension of them by the Angel was after their falling away, when they had made Leagues with the inhabitants of the Land, and suffered their Idolls and Altars to stand, which was, when for tribute they suffered them to live, Ch. 1. It cannot bee, that during Joshua his life any such thing should be tolerated, or if against his will it had been done, hee would doubtlesse have reprov'd them for it in his last speeches, Jos. 23 and 24. Moreover, Josua was by the Lord called off from warring any more with the enemy, to divide the Land, Jos. 13. 1-7. and so there was an intermission of Warre the rest of his dayes; wherefore the Conquests made after, and putting of some to tribute, must needs be after his death, when the Israelites were more multiplyed, and this apparition was after that. And thus much is expressed, Judg. 1. 1. where it is said, After the death of Josua, &c. As for Josua his dying mentioned after this, it is done, saith Augustine, by recapitulation, to begin the Story from the first, and in the book of Josua, their putting of the Canaanites to tribute, is mentioned by pre-occupation. It seemeth plainly to be a repetition of that, Jos. 24. 28, 29, 30. where it is spoken to the same effect, as if it had been said, because v. 3. the Angel threatened, that the enemies left by their negligence, should bee as thornes in their sides; and their Gods suffered to remain, as snares unto them.

I will now shew from the beginning the order of these things fulfilled. First, they were dismissed by Josua after a Covenant made to their inheritances, and possessed them, and in this good case they stood all his dayes, and of the Elders overliving him, because they yet served the Lord, and were not insnared by Idolls; but after this iniquity began to work upon the ground laid in sparing the Canaanites, &c.

Touching Gods prohibiting them to make Covenants with them, and command to throw down their Altars, the transgressing against which they are here here charged with, see Exod. 23. 32, 33. Exod. 34. 12, 15, 16. Deut. 7. 2, 3. Josh. 23. 12. also Exod. 23. 24. & 34. 13. Deut. 7. 25.

Wherefore I said, I will not drive them out from before you, but they shall be thornes in your sides, and their Gods shall be a snare unto you; to this effect it was said, Josh. 23. 13. to which this hath reference.

These things being spoken by the Angel, the people wept, and hence the place was called Bech m. weeping; so that it was called so before by anticipation, because, as Augustine hath it, this Book was written after this thing done, and this name upon that place imposed. and they sacrificed there unto the Lord. They wept, saith Ferus, out of compunction for their sins, and sacrificed, to shew their faith in Christ, that was to come, who was figured out in those sacrifices, so that here were two things required in true repentance, but the third, viz. the workes of faith, was wanting, and thus their repentance was frustrated, because that after this they amended not their lives. Wherefore wee must learn to doe all three, that God may forgive us. Sacrificing was sometime by peace-offerings in way of thankfulness for benefits received, and sometime by sin-offerings for the expiating thereof, and of this kind their sacrifices at this time double were.

Joshua his dismissing of the people is repeated from Josh. 24. 28. and his dying and being buried, and the peoples persevering in the service of God, &c. of all which enough upon that place.

And there arose another generation, which knew not the Lord, nor the workes that he had done for Israel. Here is set downe the Originall of all the evils that followed, related in this Book, godly men were taken away, and an ignorant generation remained: intimating how necessary godly Governours and Pastors are for the people; when such fail, godlinesse, and the knowledge of God faileth in the land and all things tend to ruine. They are said not to have known the Lord, because they had not seen those famous and wonderful workes which he did in former times, so Augustine, and for the relation made hereof either they beleevved it not, or were unaffected herewith, so that they knew not the Lord to be better and more worthy to be served then the Gods of the Heathen.

And hereupon they did evil, and served other Gods, for which they were given over to divers oppressions by their enemies, but then God in mercy raised them up Judges to deliver them, and the Judge being dead, they sinned in like manner againe, which is the summe of all the relations following in this Book. Wherefore it is to bee understood that what is here said to v. 20. is the generall summe, after which follow the particulars in the residue of this book.

They served Baal and Ashteroth. Baal signifieth a Lord, and was the common name of the chief God amongst the Heathen, who was Jupiter Belus, being set forth in divers Countreys with divers additions; and Baalim in the plurall number were all other heathen Gods called that were males, and the females Ashteroth, and when it is in the singular number Astarte, Juno the chiefe Goddess is set forth hereby; so Augustine, who will have Baal to be a Punick word, and saith, that Juno was set forth in the plurall number Ashteroth, because there were many images of the same Juno, called together Ashteroth, or Junoes. Others think, that by Astarte and Ashteroth Venus was set forth, the Goddess of the Sidonians, as Ashteroth is said to be, 1 Kings 11. 5. 33. 2 King. 23. 13. being so called from Asther the morning Starre, in the similitude whereof shee was worshipped. Plutarch is doubtfull whether it be Venus or Juno. Lucianus thinketh that it was the Moon. The word עֲשֵׂת, from whence Ashteroth commeth, signifieth a flock of sheepe being Ewes, in similitude of which this Idol was made, and worshipped by the Sidonians, so Pagninus out of R. D. and Jupiter of a Ramme.

And hee sold them into the hands of their enemies: If hee sold them, saith Augustine, what price took he for them? and answereth by that, Psal. 44. 12. hee took no money for them. Wherefore he is said to sell them, when hee gave them into their hands who were wicked, and returned no thanks or Worship unto God as a price therefore. The Vulg. Latine hath it, they sold them, which

V. 3.

V. 4, 5.

Augustine.Ferus.

V. 6, 7, 8, 9.

V. 10.

Nois.August. qu. 15.

V. 11, 12.

V. 13.

Aug. qu. 16. in Iudic.Cicero lib. 3. de nat. Deorum. Theophilus. Plautus, Philo, Phazorinus, &c.

V. 14.

August. qu. 17.

Lyra.

which Lyra expoundeth of their enemies, who tooke them and spoiled them of their goods, and then sold them for slaves, but both Hebrew and Septuagint have it, hee sold them, referring it to God.

V. 15.

The Lords hand was against them as hee had said, and as hee had sworne unto them. To bee against them, if they transgressed, hee had threatned, Levit. 26. and Deut. 28. but wee read not any where that hee sware it, wherefore it is to be held that this was done, but not hitherto exprest, but the expression of it reserved to this place.

V. 17.

But the Lord raised them up Judges to deliver them, but they would not hearken to their Judges, that is, constantly to leave their finnes; for still when any Judge was dead, they returned to their old wickednesse, v. 19. whereby is implied, that they were contained in some obedience to God, whilst the Judge lived, by whom they were delivered; but afterwards they fell away againe.

V. 20, 21.

For these their finnes the anger of the Lord waxed hot against them, and he said, I will not henceforth drive out any of the nations which Joshua left, when hee dyed. This seemeth to make for that opinion, that the victories obtained, Judg. 1. and their inability to expell any more enemies out of their particular lots, and the reproofe of the Angel, Judg. 2. were before the death of Joshua. But it hath already beene plainly proved, that all this was done after Joshua his death; the meaning therefore is, that hee would not drive out any more of them, that were left, when Joshua dyed, then had beene already driven out. That Israel might by them bee proved, &c. which hee saith was the end of his not driving them out, but leaving them unsubdued in Joshua his dayes. Whereas David and Solomon afterwards brought and held them in subjection, it was not contrary to this threatning, for they remained even still in their dayes, although as a people brought under, but ready, when they should sin againe, to be a scourge unto Israel. For their being reserved to prove Israel, it is not meant, that the Lord might know, what they would doe, for hee knew all things from the beginning, but that it might appeare experimentally to themselves and to all men, whether they would doe good or evil by their standing in a prosperous estate, or falling into misery, which should be a certaine proofe of their sinning.

Lyra.

CHAP. III.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Here first it is shewed, what enemies were left unexpelled, five Lords of the Philistims, all the Canaanites, the Sidonians, and Hivites of mount Lebanon, and from mount Baal Hermon, to the entering in of Hamath. And these are said to be left to prove Israel, and that they might know warre. Of these nations, see before Josh. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and the notes thereupon, and why they were not driven out as the Lord had promised, Ch. 2. 20, 21. they by their wickednesse were the cause hereof. These enemies, saith Ferus, were left to prove them, that is, that being in continuall danger of them they might feare to offend God, as upon whose protection they alwayes depended. And to teach them warre, that is, that they might have need to apply themselves to military exercises, when their enemies should infest them for their finnes, and not lye downe in sloath and idlenesse. Warre is not then hereby commended, it is the refuge not of felicity, but of necessity, to learne to warre; it were much more happy to bee ignorant of warre, and to have God for our protector, thus he. These enemies then were left in their fathers times, whilst Joshua lived, before that they had provoked the Lord by their finnes for these reasons, another reason also being rendred, Exod 23. 29. lest the land should be left desolate, and the beasts of the field should be multiplyed against them. And where as one reason here rendred is, that they might learne to warre, it appeareth, that although peace be most desirable, yet for the vices that accompany it, sloathfulnesse, luxury and pride, warres are necessary, and left through Non felicitatis, sed necessitatis refugium est discere bella, &c.

con-continuall peace men should grow altogether ignorant, how to proceede in warre, when they are by their enemies assaulted. It is true indeed, that God can protect his, although they know not how to fight, but hee will have them so to depend upon his protection, as to use the meanes of warlike preparation, whereas all the Canaanites are said to be left, and Josh. 13. 4. all the land of the Canaanites, this is not to be understood, as if none of them were destroyed, for Numb. 21. those in the south were rooted out, and Josh. 9. many Canaanites more, Josh. 12. 8. but that still many of them remained in divers parts of the land, Josh. 16. and 17. all which onely are ment here.

Mytically by the enemies left, understand our spirituall enemies, that yet remain, now that our Jesus hath brought us into the land of Christianity: the five senses set forth by the five Lords of the Philistims, and the world, flesh and Devill, set forth by the Canaanites, Sidonians, and Hivites; these remaine still to prove us, whether wee will be drawn hereby to evill, or follow the Lord, and that the greatnesse of our corruption might appeare, and so the greatnesse of Gods mercy in delivering of us, which otherwise would not so readily have beene acknowledged. And lastly, that wee might not live in security, which produceth many vices, as it is said, Exod. 23. 29. lest the beasts of the field multiply against thee, but learne and exercise the spirituall warfare, all the dayes of our lives.

The enemies that were left to prove them, being hitherto particularized, now the effect hereof through their corruption is shewed. They take their daughters to bee their wives, and gave them their daughters and served their Gods. The beginning of their wickednesse was in presuming to doe contrary to Gods expresse command, Deut. 7. whereby is shewed what horrible evils come of sinning in any thing, that we may not presume upon our owne strength to offend in any kinde.

And they forgot the Lord and served Baalim, and the groves. The vulgar Latin hath Baalim and Asteroth, but the word אשרות groves, and so the Septuagint render it also, where by groves understand the Idolls worshipped in groves. Forget the Lord, saith Ferus, they could not, but because they contemned his word and neglected his precepts, they are said to have forgotten him: neither is it to bee thought that they served other gods, but that they served God with the worship used unto Idols, as when they worshipped the golden calfe, they could not be so grosse as to thinke that calfe a god, or that Aaron could make them a god, wherefore it was proclaimed, To morrow is a holy day to the Lord, implying that they exhibited that worship to the Lord. Hee that doth any thing then contrary to the word of God, although hee intendeth his worship, committeth Idolatry, and likewise hee that setteth up any other worship, omitting that which he hath commanded. Wherefore let us looke to it, lest it bee objected to us, Yee have forgotten God and served other gods. Thus that Fryer aiming doublelesse at the Popish worship by images, and at their superstitious rites.

And hee sold them into the hand of Cushan-rishathaim, King of Mesopotamia, &c. For Mesopotamia Hebr. is Aram Nabaraim, and Aram alone, v. 10. which is Syria, and so the vulgar Latin there rendreth it. But Aram is rendered Mesopotamia, because it stood within two rivers, as Nabaraim signifieth. The Septuagint have Mesopotamia of Syria, for Mesopotamia was the chiefe City of Syria, and then the Metropolis of that Kingdome. Aram Nabaraim signifieth Syria of the Rivers, it was betweene two famous Rivers, Euphrates and Tygris, and lay farre from the land of Canaan, yet from thence God brought enemies to chastise the rebellious Israelites, as Ferus noteth, even 400 miles. For it was not Cushan-rishathaim power, that could subdue Israel, but God sold them into his hands: wherefore God, and not man, is to be feared. Josephus calleth this King the King of Assyria, but erroneously, and here hee placeth the history of the Levites concubine, which followed long after

The Mystery
Ferus.

V. 5, 6, 7.

Note.

Ferus.

V. 8.

Lyra

Ferus.

Math. 10. 28.

ter

Hugo Card.
Lyra.

V. 9.

August.

Bonfrerius.

Qu.

Joseph. Chal.
paraphr.

H. Bunt. patriarch.
travailes

V. II.

Bonfrerius.

ter Judg. 19. They served this king 8. yeares, according to the time, saith Hugo and Lyra, that they had served idols.

And when they cried to the Lord, hee raised them up a deliverer, Othniel, &c. of Othniels description see before Ch. 1. 13. for deliverer, Hebr. is a Saviour; a man, saith Augustine, is called a Saviour, because God saved them by him, and by the same name are other Judges afterwards also called. Wherefore both the Sept. and vulgar Latine, render it a Saviour. Bonfrerius, the Jesuite, because wee in our translations decline this word, and put for it a deliverer, falleth very foule upon us saying, that these Novatores will make new the Scriptures and all, and inferreth that the Virgin Mary, and the Saints departed, may well be called Saviours, and Mediators also, without derogating from God and his Sonne Jesus Christ, because as these Judges saved by the helpe of God, as subordinate instruments and meanes, so Iesus being our chiefe Saviour, yet useth them as helpees under him to save the faithfull. But wee contend not so much for the word, but onely oppose that doctrine and practise whereby it is derogated from Christ, our onely Mediator, for they doe not onely thus stile the Saints, but pray, unto them, and ascribe merit to them, which are incommunicable properties of our Lord onely. Wee acknowledge that preachers save, according to that, 1 Tim. 4. 16. but as instruments by whose preaching and praying God worketh grace and saveth, and therefore that they are to be sought unto, whilst they live, but that the most excellent amongst them, the very Apostles should be prayed unto, when they are dead, or their merits relied upon in any part, wee doe utterly deny as being a thing, for which wee have no precept, or precedent in all the word of God, but divers passages to the contrary. But how was Othniel and other Judges stirred up to be Saviours? An. Josephus and the Chalde Paraphrast say, that hee was bidden by divine oracle to goe against the king of Mesopotamia, and that by the Spirit coming upon him was meant the Spirit of prophecy, whereby it was revealed to him, that hee leading forth the people to this warre should prevaile. Thus the Spirit is said to have come upon the Prophets to prophecy, Ezek. 2. 2. c. 3. 24. c. 11. 5. &c. But I do not think, that the Spirit came upon Othniel thus onely, but to indue him with courage, wisdom, and extraordinary force also to subdue the enemy and to governe the people aright, and to make him a sufficient Judge over them all his dayes, for his proceedings were miraculous and extraordinary through that Spirit coming upon him, causing terrour in the enemies, and an awfull regard in the people of Israel, whereby they were kept in obedience, whilst hee lived.

The time of his being stirred, saith one, was anno mundi, 2512. and 9 yeares after the death of Joshua, his name signifying the God of Time, so that he was a type of Christ, that saved his people in the fulnesse of time. And if so, then the children of Israel fell away soone after the death of Joshua, viz. one yeare after, but a longer time hath bene already assigned upon Ch. 1. 1.

And the land had rest 40. yeares. If this should be understood meerely of the time, that they lived under Othniel, after their deliverance from their 8 yeares servitude, the time would not agree with the yeares mentioned, 1 King. 6. 11. and therefore the meaning must be, the land had rest 40 yeares from the time, wherein they were first brought into servitude by Cushanrishathaim, and so the times of their oppressions afterwards are to be reckoned to the yeeres of their Judges, see Josh. 24. 32. and Judg. 1. 1. If this shall seeme absurd, that the land should be said to have had rest 40 yeares, when as 8 of them were spent in servitudes and oppressions: Bonfrerius answereth two things, first that the greater number of yeares of Peace carry the name of the whole time of 40 yeares, as the time that the children of Israel lived in Egypt, carried the name of 430 yeares, although many of those yeares were spent elsewhere. 2. That there is a rest from sinning as well as from being oppressed, and of this the rest of 40 yeares may be understood, they rested from entring upon the way of sinning so abominably 40 yeares. But either of these wayes seem to mee to be forced, and the most genuine to be this; the land had rest, till 40 yeares were expired from the death of Josua and the Elders that over-lived him. For before, the time, since their coming out of Egypt, was counted first by their travailes in the wilderness, and then by Josua his time, and the time of that generation, now a new way of reckoning is followed throughout the rest of this booke, viz. by the yeares of Judges succeeding one another, each ones time beginning at the death of his predecessor, although he was not raised up, till many yeares after, and so Othniel time of 40 yeares began immediately after the death of the Elders, and because when that was, is uncertaine, and so how long time is to be reckoned to Josua his government, and to the Elders overliving him, that wee might not erre in the generally, the whole summe of yeares from their coming out of Egypt, till Solomons beginning to builde the Temple is precisely set downe, 1 King. 6. 1.

Mytically by Cushmanishathaim, signifying their humiliation according to Origen, wee may understand the Devill to whom the wicked are delivered for their humiliation, when they are excommunicated, but when they are thoroughly humbled and cry to God, they are delivered, and injoy peace a farre longer time then they suffered, even for ever and ever, unless they doe wickedly againe, for then they shall be humbled againe, as the Israelites were by Eglon, the king of Moab, as it followeth, v. 12, 13. &c. where it is said, they did evill againe, and God strengthened Eglon against them, and hee came with the Ammonites, and Amalekites, and possessed the City of Palme-trees, and smote the Israelites, and made them serve him 18 yeares. Here againe sinne giveth power to the enemy, and so to the spirituall enemy, as the glosse noteth. The Moabites could doe nothing against Israel before, and Amalek was easily overcome by them, but the sinnes of Israel now make these mighty to overcome them. The City of Palme-trees was Jericho, as hath bene before shewed, and by the City, the limits where it stood and that belonged to it are to be understood, for Jericho it remained unbuilt. The enemy came hither then saith Lyra, and having subdued thus farre, the whole Countrey yeelded and became tributary. In that God is said to have strengthened Eglon against his people, it may be demanded how hee did it, and whether the act of Eglon in oppressing Israel were just? To this Ferm answereth, that God made him his instrument justly to punish the Israelites for their sinnes, and gave him strength and courage to subdue them, but for so much as hee came against them, not with any such intention, but in tyranny, pride and covetousnesse, in wrath and hatred, the fact was wicked in him, and therefore he was slain by one raised up of God, as hee deserved. And the same is to be held touching Nebuchadnezzar, Sennacherib, and other heathen tyrants. But how is God said then to strengthen him? Ans. Not as a godly judge directly sending him, but supplying him with power, courage and instruments of warre, and striking terror into the Israelites, and insinuating their counsells, and so occasion being ministred of quarrell, he out of a milacious minde came against them and brought them under.

And when the children of Israel cryed out to the Lord, hee raised them up a deliverer, Ehud the sonne of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed, &c. For Ehud the Vulgar Latin hath Ajoh, qui utraq; manu pro dextra utebatur; the Septuagint Αοδαιμωρεποδισκτω Hebr. Ehud עֲהוּד יָמֵינוּ שֶׁן reabred by the Tygrin interpreters, qui vir fuit clausa manu dextra, because שֶׁן signifyeth claudere, Psal. 69. 16. as Pagninus hath it, so likewise Amandus Polanus, Ariar Montanus, Vatablus, Robertus, Stephanus, Robbini. He was then a man whose right hand was shut up, and therefore said to be left handed, as being not able to use the right hand with such force. Elder interpreters generally follow Jeroms translation, and some reason stilly for it, both because the word שֶׁן is used but once more in all the Scriptures, viz. Psal. 69. 16. where it may be as well expounded to open, as to shut, and because the men of Benjamin are celebrated for this, that they could use their left hands as their right, Judg. 20. 16. and Ehud was of that tribe, and lastly

The Mystery.
Origen.
1 Cor. 5. 5.

V. 12, 13, 14.

Glos. Ordin.

Ferm.

Lyra.

Qu.

Ferm.

V. 15.

lastly, because a man lame on his right hand was unfit for this employment. In that place Judg. 20. 16. the same phrase is used, that in this place, and therefore they are doubtlesse to bee expounded alike, Ehud was left handed, and so were they, but not lame on the right, as some suppose Ehud to have been, but yet if he had beene so, the miracle had been the greater. But a man left handed, is as apt and able for any service, as one right handed. The phrase seemeth to be an Hebraisme, his right hand shut, because hee used not that, as men commonly doe, but his left hand for it, and therefore it is rightly rendred by our Interpreters, a man left handed, whether yee expound the word to open or to shut, for if, to open, then he used it not to hold his weapon, or to fight with it. For this word, a Benjamite, Hebr. is a son of Jemini, but by Jemini Benjamin is meant, who had his name from Jamin a right hand, and Ben a son, and hereunto Ehud's fathers name Gera agreeth, see Gen. 46. 21. but it is to be understood, that he was not the immediate sonne of Gera, for hee dyed too long before, but of that family, whereof hee was the father. So that H. Bunting, in his Patriarchs travailes was wide in this, when he set him forth to be a man of Judab, that dwelt in Jericho, and lame on his right hand. But for his being lame on his right hand, Ferus also standeth, saying that the power of God herein appeared in delivering them by such an infirme instrument, but because the same is said of 700 of Benjamin, Judg. 20. 16. who, it is not probable, were all lame on their right hand, this phrase must need have another exposition, as before.

H. Bunting Patriar. travails

V. 16.

Ferus.

August Qu. 21.

Ferus.

By Ehud the Israelites sent a gift unto Eglon, and he prepared him a dagger, which he girded to his right side under his loose garment, & herewith, after the the present delivered, having obtained privacy with him hee stabd him into the belly, and slew him &c. If it be doubted, whether Ehud's fact herein be justifiable, because Eglon now was his Lord, and every soule must be subject to the higher powers; To this Ferus answereth well, that for any subject of his owne private motion to rise up against his King, although a tyrant, is a great sinne, but Ehud was stirred up by God, as Jehu was afterwards, & therefore is not to be condemned, but commended: this example then is not in any case to be imitated, but when God likewise giveth authority. St. Augustine questioneth, whether Ehud did not lye, when to cause him to put all men forth, he said, that hee had a secret word unto him, but yet said nothing but stab'd him? and answereth that by word in the Hebrew Phrase, an act may also be understood, as is usuall in many places, and to doe this act God stirred him up, wherefore he said, that hee had a word from God unto him. Lyra saith that he cannot bee excused from lying, but it was an officious, not a pernicious lye, because it tended to the killing of a tyrant, which was commendable, but not his lying. The place where this was done was about Jericho, where the king of Moab kept his court, as is intimated in v. 19. where he is said to have returned from the quarries at Gilgal, which was neare unto Jericho, Josh. 3. The word is חפסילים and is rendred by the Sept. and in the Vulgar Latin, idols in Gilgal, and Ferus saith, that seeing the idols set up there by the king of Moab, it being a place of great esteeme in divers respects, his zeale so wrought with him, that hee returned and killed the king. But it is plaine, that Ehud prepared to doe this before, and therefore was not hereby moved. Moreover the word פסל signifieth to carve wood or stone, and although פסלים sometimes signifieth carved images, yet it may also be taken for any hewed or carved stones, and for the places where this is done, as Pagninus sheweth, and Junius rendreth it, Lapidinis, Arias Montanus, dolauris. But because the word is commonly put for images, I thinke the Vulgar Latin of Jerom is herein to be preferred.

Ehud accompanied those, that came with him to bring the present thus farre, that they might be out of danger, and then returned to doe that which God by his spirit had moved him unto. And happily he made a shew, as if he had beene at Gilgal to worship before the kings idols set up there, & had something touching the king revealed unto him, that he might the better get an opportunity of being alone with him. Howsoever, his plot tooke effect, for the king caused all men to goe out, and then Ehud told him, that hee had a word unto him from God, at which hee arose out of his chaire, and Ehud stabd him not being aware of it. The Instrument wherewith is said to have beene a dagger with two edges, a cubit long, v. 16. the Vulgar Latin, Qui fecit tibi gladium ancipitem habentem in medio capulum longitudine palme manum, but although the word הרב here used, signifieth a sword or a dagger, yet these words, habentem in medio Capulum, are neither in the Hebr. Sept. or Chald. and the word גמר signifieth not the palme of an hand, but a cubit, as reason also evinceth that this must needs be the length of it, that it might pierce through his fat belly, and if it had beene but as long as the palme of a mans hand, hee should not have needed to hang it by his side, but in his pocket. The word rendred here from God, is plurall, from the gods, so that it may be applied, as before, to Eglons idols, that hee had set up in Gilgal, which was a great indignity, because there the arke had remained divers yeares, circumcision was made, and the first passe-over was kept, Jos. 5. but the plurall word אלוהים is also put commonly for the true God. Eglon rising up when he heard of a message from God, shewed his reverence, which was a thing commendable in him, if it were to the true God: So Constantine the great, alwayes stood up to heare the word of God; and Carolus Borromeus, is said to have read it alwayes kneeling, as Joshua fell upon his face to heare the Lord speaking to him. The dagger being thrust into the belly of Eglon, the haft went in also, and was closed so fast in his fat, that Ehud could not plucke it out, that is, without delaying the time to labour about it, which was not necessary, and might have beene dangerous to him: and therefore he left it sticking there still, and the dirt came out, that is, his dung, as the word properly signifieth.

men

Ehud having dispatcht the King, hastneth out by the porch, and locketh the doore, &c. The Hebr. word המסדרונה here used cometh of סדר ordo, and is expounded by Pagninus, a gallery, where they sat, that attended upon the king, amongst whom hee came forth, as having done nothing amisse, and so passed away, that the Courtiers might have no suspicion of him, so Cajetan, Arist. Montanus, R. David. The Vulgar Latin hath it, by a back doore, but herein saith Lysa, it is corrupted, and it is not likely by that which followeth that hee went out by a back doore, because the Kings servants came by and by to the doore, and finding it locked, suspected, that the king did his casement in his Summer Parlour, whereas if they had not seene Ehud come forth, they would not yet have dared to offer to enter in againe, or finding the doore fast, they would rather have thought, that the King had not done talking yet in private with Ehud. Whilst they delay the time about the parlour doore, Ehud came againe to the place of the Idols, and from thence to Seirath: where this place was, it is not particularly knowne, but all agree, that it was in the tribe of Ephraim, not farre off, from whence hee might soone call some company together to surpris the Moabites, having now lost their head; which he did, and tooke the foords of Jordan, that the Moabites about Jericho might not be suffered to passe that way into their owne countrey, and so 10000 of them were slaine; For v. 27. hee blew the trumpet in mount Ephraim, the men of Moab, slaine at this time, are said all to have beene lusty men and men of valour, Hebr כל שמן all fat, so likewise the Sept. but fat is put for lusty or wealthy.

So Moab was brought downe, and the land had rest 80. yeares, that is reckning from the death of Othniel, the first Judge, the time of their sinning, being oppressed 18 yeares, and living under Ehud, and Shamgar, the third Judge, being all put together, for unto Shamgar no yeares are reckoned, neither were they brought in subjection to any betwixt Ehud and him.

After him was Shamgar, the Sonne of Anath, which slew of the Philistims 600. men with an oxe goad &c. It is doubted by many, whether hee were a Judge or a private person, stirred up to doe one act onely against the enemy, because hee hath no time assigned him, as all other Judges have; 2. because Ch. 4. 1. Ehud is spoken of, as unto whom Deborah was next; 3. because Ensebins

V. 20.

Ios. 5. 14.

V. 22.

Cajetan.
Arist. Montan.
Lysa

V. 26.

V. 27.

V. 29.

V. 30.

V. 31.

Ensb. in chrono- nico.

Josephus.

Lysa.

Myster.
Ferus.
Origen.

emitteth him, and so doth Clem. Alexand. Isidor, and Beda. But hee was certainly a Judge, because he is said to have beene after Ehud, and to have saved Israel, as was said of him and Othniel. Wherefore Josephus saith, he was chosen Emperour next after Ehud, who dyed in the 80. yeare before spoken of, and Shamgar succeeding him, lived but to fulfill that yeare, and if so, it is no marvaile, that his time was not counted, and that by and by it is said, the children of Israel sinned againe after the death of Ehud, and for the shortnesse of his time hee was omitted by Eusebius and others. Touching his exploit, which was so wonderfull, for oxgoad, the Vulgar Latine, and Sept. have, cum vomere bium; August. following a corrupt copie readeth it, prætor virtutis bonum, whereupon hee moveth a needelesse question, whether hee killed their cattell also: The Hebrew word is מלחמה comming of למד to learn, wherefore it is taken for an oxgoad, because hereby the husband-man learneth his oxen to worke, so R. David, Pagninus, Junius, &c. and Lysa saith, for vomer, Hebr. is an oxgoad of which hee thinketh, that he made a speare, and others did likewise, and so together they slew herewith 600 Philistims, so that by an oxgoad in the singular number hee thinketh oxgoads are to be understood, because it is improbable, that one man with one of them should slay so many. But this were to extenuate the miracle, as if when Samson is said with the jaw-bone of an Ass to have slain 1000. men, to make it the more probable, it should be feigned, that hee and others with many jaw-bones did it. Shamgar is rather therefore hereby set forth, as an extraordinary Champion inabled by God to make this great slaughter with such a poore instrument, if it were an oxgoad or a plowshare, for the word is nowhere else used, whereby wee may have some light, how best to understand it, and the authority of the Sept. is very great. I should think, that Ehud being dead, the Philistims began now in troopes to come and rob the Israelites, intending happily, after some mischief done to the nearest, to raise a greater power, and to invade the land to subdue it. But Shamgar, a plaine man being the first that they lighted upon, being with his oxen at plough or cart, the Spirit of God comming upon him, went against them, snatching up his coulter, or having nothing in his hand but his oxgoad, went with it against them, and made this great slaughter of them, and so was taken for their Judge and deliverer, because the Philistims were hereby so quelled, that they durst not assault them any more. There is no neede hereupon, saith Ferus, of any great preparation for warre to those, that serve God, any weak instrument will serve the turne, as for David a sling, and for Samson the jawbone of an Ass, but to the wicked high walls, as those of Jericho, are of no force.

By Ehud mystically Ferus understandeth Christ, who first subdueth the Devill, and then calleth his forth to fight against spirituall wickednesses. Origen by him killing with the sword, understandeth the ecclesiasticall Judge killing with the sword of discipline and severity of correction; by Shamgar killing with a ploughshare, the Minister destroying sinne by preaching, as by the spirituall plough, in plainly setting forth the doctrine of the word. So that by these two is shewed, that severity and sharpe punishments are not alwayes to be used, but sometimes, and sometime preaching without this rigour hath the same effect.

CHAP. IIII.

V. 1, 2, 3.

Here is shewed, how the Israelites sinning againe they were brought under by Iabin King of Canaan 20. yeares, hee raigned in Hazor, and the Captaine of his Host was Sijera, who dwelt in Harosheth of the Gentiles, and had 900 Charriots of Iron. All their former oppressions by the Mesopotamians, and Moabites did them no good any longer then Ehud lived, and seeing the Philistims also subdued by Shamgar, they thought themselves safe from from all Enemies, and now having enjoyed 80. yeares of peace, they abuse this great mercy, turning it into an occasion of renewing their idolatry. But another Jabin, King of Hazor, of the race happily of that Jabin, Josh. 11. 1. whom Jehozabab slew and burnt his City, v. 10. who therefore might not seeme formidable to them, now subdueth them, and that longer then any enemy before, even 20 yeares; and God is said to have sold them into his hand: whereby Ferus noteth, that their miserable case is intimated, that they were used like beasts, which are bought and sold, to carry burthens, and are pressed intolerably. And it is not likely, that it could be otherwise considering his great power, and inveterate malice, that must needs bee in him and his people, remembring how cruelly in times past the Israelites had destroyed their King, city and people; wherefore to expresse this it is added, hee mightily oppressed them. Thus far some enemies before subdued and made contemptible, are made strong against their conquerors, and subdue them, and make them slaves, then which nothing can be more grievous. Some referre this, He dwelt in Harosheth, to Jabin and not to Sisera, because Hazor was burnt downe to the ground; but who knoweth not, that it might long before this be built againe, it being since that time above 120 yeares? And in that he is said to have reigned in Hazor, it is plainly intimated that he dwelt there, but his Captaine for the defence of his Kingdome, in Harosheth, a place happily more convenient to issue from against the enemy. Harosheth of the Gentiles was so called, because people of divers nations dwelt there, so Lyra, see the like, Josh. 12. 23.

Now Deborah a Prophetesse, the wife of Lapidoth, judged Israel at that time, &c. For these words, the wife of Lapidoth, Rab. Solomon, hath it, a woman of light, because shee either made lights for the Temple, or was full of heavenly light by the Spirit, taking the word Lapidoth appellatively, and not properly, and the word אִשָּׁה here used for a woman, and not for a wife, and thus many other Rabbins after him of latter times. But both the Sept. and Jerom render it, the wife of Lapidoth, and R. David, and other Rabbins of old, and the Fathers generally. But it is questioned, who this Lapidoth was, and whether shee were his wife at this time? Some hold that Lapidoth was Barak, of whom it is spoken immediately after. But their divers dwelling sheweth the contrary, hers in Mount Ephraim, and his in Nephtali, and if Barak had bene hee, the name Lapidoth would sometime have bene used againe after this, and not Barak onely. To the next some say that her husband was dead, and shee was now a widow: But Jerom saith that they teach unskillfully, that say shee was a widow, because shee is called the wife of Lapidoth, intimating that shee was then a wife, which is most probable, and Ferus hereupon noteth not onely that the sex of the woman is in Gods favour as well as the mans, but the married, as well as the single, seeing the spirit of prophesie was given to a married woman. But how is shee said to have judged Israel? Ans. Not as other Iudges, giving sentence in publike places, and providing for the execution thereof, for so shee could not, whilst they were under Jabin, seeing hee being so bitter an enemy would never have permitted that, for feare of rebellion, when they should have assembled together to her judgement seat, but shee judged Israel, that is, delivered Israel at that time, the manner whereof here followeth, shee by the spirit of prophesie stirred up Barak to gather an army, and went with him, and so the Canaanites were destroyed, and Israel delivered.

And shee dwelt under the Palme tree of Deborah, betweene Ramah and Bethel, in Mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel came up to her for judgement. The word rendred dwelt, signifieth either dwelt, or sat, the latter of which is followed by the Sept. and Jerom, and it seemeth best, because Judges used to sit to heare and judge of causes; and a settled dwelling could not so well be under a tree, but there shee might sit in the fields and bee resorted to for judgement more secretly, which could not bee without danger in a City in those dayes, when they were servants to a stranger, that tyrannised over them, or Ferus.

Nate.

Theoderet.
Josh. 11. 10.

Lyra.

V. 4.
R. Solomon.R. David.
Hugo de sancto
Vitore.Ambrosi de vi-dis.
Hieronym. ad Euziam de vidinate.
Ferus.

V. 5.

V. 6.

H. B. Patriarch
travailes.Hieron. in Lo-Hebr.

V. 8.

Ferus.

being indued with the spirit of prophesie, the same whereof was soone spread amongst the children of Israel, they hoping now to have reliefe by her in this their misery came to her by stealth, as they might, to the tree, where shee for a time had taken up her abode to be directed what to doe, that Gods favour might bee restored unto them, and they delivered from this grievous oppression. And this was done in Mount Ephraim, that is, some one mountaine in that tribe, the top whereof was all mountainous. Of the Mountaine Ephraim, and Ebuds blowing the trumpet there, see also before, Judg. 3. 7. The palme-tree was called the palme-tree of Deborah, because shee so famous a woman abode there to judge the people. From hence shee sent for Barak, the sonne of Abinoam, out of Kedesh Naphthali, and stirred him up to take 10000 men out of Naphthali and Zebulun, and to goe to Mount Tabor, &c. Kedesh Naphthali was 84. miles from this palme tree, and in the tribe of Naphthali stood Hazor, the chiefe City of Jabin, wherefore a Naphthalite is stirred up against him, where hee most oppressed. Zebulun is joyned with Naphthali, because that tribe lay next to him. From Kedesh Naphthali to Tabor, to which place hee must goe with his men, was 36. miles; this was a fruitfull hill in the north upon the borders of Issachar and Zebulun, extending it selfe to the river Kishon on the south: here Christ was transfigured, Matth. 17. As there was a Kedesh in Naphthali, so there was a City of the same name in Issachar, 1 Chro. 6. and another in Judah, Iosh. 13. 15. and therefore to distinguish this from them it is called Kedesh Naphthali; Jerom saith it was in the upper Galilee, being in his time called Cidissum. Touching Barak wee finde no more, but that he was of this tribe, and the Sonne of Abinoam, although Ambrose thinketh him to have bene the sonne of Deborah, but without all ground or probability, and therefore Jerom saith, that sic in seipso opinatur.

Barak saith to Deborah, if thou wilt goe up with me, I will goe up, but if thou wilt not, I will not goe up. It may bee doubted here, whether Barak sinned not by timorousnesse and unbeleife, seeing Deborah spake not to him in her owne name, but in the name of the Lord God of Israel, v. 6. Ferus bringeth divers things to excuse him at the first, then taketh away these excuses, and lastly commendeth his faith. For first it was a woman, that spake unto him, which sex is variable and inconstant. 2. Shee confirmed him not by shewing any miracle. 3. The thing commanded him seemed to be impossible. To all which hee answereth, that shee was known to be a prophetesse, which was not at the first without some miracles, whereby shee was inaugurated to that office, and therefore hee should presently have obeyed, shee speaking to him from the Lord: and as for the impossibility pretended, hee could not bee ignorant, that God had given as great overthrowes, to as mighty enemies before, when his people cryed unto him. Therefore, saith hee, it was not out of diffidence or timorousnesse, that hee answered her thus, but because shee had the spirit of prophesie, and it seemed necessary to him, that she should goe along with him, still more to confirme his faith by her presence in so dangerous an expedition. 2. That she might in all things direct him, that he might not erre, but goe according to the word of God by which hee onely is desired to bee guided, for this time and manner of the fight. 3. That by her presence the more authority might be purchased unto him, that no man might thinke that hee attempted the great worke of his owne head, but by direction from the Lord. And therefore he is commended, Heb. 11. 32. for his faith. Thus he. But Barak cannot bee excused from all fault, seeing hee was for this threatned by Deborah, that this expedition should not bee for his honour, yet his fault was not great, and his faith was so great, that it was not imputed unto him. Hee denied not to goe, as hee was commanded, but hee desired to have Deborah along with him for his further direction, and to move her to this onely, hee said, I will not goe, unlesse thou goest with mee. To expresse this the Sept. have this clause, which the Hebr. text hath not, on en o'ide τὴν ἡμέραν ἐν ᾗ ἐπορεύει μετ' ἐμοῦ, because I knew not the day, that the Lord will send his Angell with mee. And answerabl̄ eto this, it is said v. 14. This is the day, &c.

God shall sell Sisera into the hands of a woman: how this is meant see v. 12. this woman was Jael, who killed him, although some thinke it was Deborah, under whom the victory was obtained.

Barak having Deborah with him, cometh to Kedesh, and calleth together 10000. men, as hee was directed, and marcheth on with them: a poore company, as Ferm noteth, and that out of two of the meanest tribes, in comparison of the army with Sisera, which consisted, as Josephus hath it, of 100000 foot, and 10000. horse, besides 900 Chariots of iron. What could others thinke of this, but as of a rash attempt, rather to provoke the enemy to tyrannize more, then to subdue him? but Barak trusted in the word of God and prevailed.

Before any thing more set downe touchig Barak, to prepare to the History of Jael's exploit, the wife of Heber, which followeth v. 18. something is here interposed touching him, hee had severed himselfe from the Kenites, of whom hee was one, and pitched his tent in the plaine of Zanoim, neare Kedesh. This is set downe because Ch. 16. the Kenites, that came of Hobab Moses his Father in Law, are said to have gone and dwelt in the wildernesse of Judah, that it might not seeme strange, that one of them dwelt here in Naphtali, at this time. For after their remove from Jericho to Judah, it seemeth, that Heber, by a singular providence was separated from the rest, that his wife might doe such a noble act, as this, the killing of Sisera. But still he followed their orders, hee dwelt not in a towne, but abroad in a tent; see my notes upon Ch. 1. 16. For a plain, where he is said to have pitched his tent, Hebr. is, אֵלֶּיךָ an oake, or grove, as the Sept. render it, and Pagninus, Cajetan, and others; and it is most likely, that it was a solitary place, and so fit for contemplation, amongst the trees, in which kinde of places the Kenites chose to dwell, and here Sisera might well thinke to lye hid, when being overcome afterwards he fled away to save his life. Junius also rendereth it, quercetum. Sanaïm, is also called Saananim, Josh. 19. 33. being placed in the tribe of Naphtali, and so it is in the margin. Barak being come to Tabor, Sisera cometh out against him with a mighty army, and his 900 chariots of iron. Tabor was an high hill, and round, situated upon the borders of Issachar and Zabulon, from whence they might see as farre off. It was 30. furlongs high, saith Adrichomius, and had upon the top of it a plaine, 26 furlongs over, being unaccessible on the north; and it was a most fit place for Barak to gather his men unto, as being neare the tribes, out of which, and not far from Haraseth, so that Sisera could not but soone heare of them. It hath the name from Bor, signifying purity and serenity, and Adrichomius accordingly describeth it to bee most delightfull for the sweet aire, trees, fruits, flowers and all varieties of delights. When Sisera was come, Deborah encourageth Barak, telling him, that was the day, and that the Lord was gone out before him; whereupon hee descendeth with his men from the mount, and discomfiteeth all Sisera his army: &c. For this word, discomfited them, the Vulgar Latin hath, terrified them, and this saith Lyra after Josephus, was done as Josh. 10. 10. by thunder and hailestones cast downe from heaven, which destroyed them, and 1 Sam. 7. 10. for in both these places the same word מַחֲרִיב is used, that in this place in our translation is rendred alwayes, discomfited, in the Vulgar Latin terrified. How God discomfited Sisera, is not here expressed, and therefore is uncertaine, whether by thunder and haile, or by causing a noise to be heard, as afterward by the Aramites. But something was certainly done from heaven, as appeareth, Ch. 5. 20. whereby the enemies were put to flight, and many of them for feare run into the river Kishon, and were drowned, as v. 21. And the slaughter was so generall, that not one of them escaped, saving Sisera, who fled on foot to the tent of Heber, whose wife Jael kindly invited him to come in; for there was peace betwixt Labin and Heber, &c. Here

V. 9.

V. 10.

V. 11.

Junius.

V. 12, 13.

Adrichomius.

V. 14, 15, 16

Lyra.

V. 17, 18.

Lyra.

Ferus.

V. 20. 21.

V. 22, 23, 24.

a question may bee moved, whether Jael's fact in killing Sisera, may bee justified, or not; both because there was a league betwixt her husband and Jabin, and their houses, and shee promised him a secure being there, so that her dealing seemeth to bee most perfidious and worthy to bee condemned, as being against the law of nature, and of all nations. To this Lyra answereth, that yet it is certaine, that Jael herein did well, because shee is commended by Deborah a prophetesse, Ch. 5. 24. Jabin was a tyrant, and Sisera under him oppressed the people of God, of whom Jael was one by religion, and God did now miraculously shew, that it was his will, that hee and his Army should perish by fighting against him from heaven, therefore shee seeing this, did but apply her selfe to the will of God in doing execution upon the wicked, for which she is rather to be praised, as doing a work meritorious, then condemned, as sinning herein. For the covenant objected, haply it was but peace granted to Heber her husband for tribute, and if otherwise, and hee had bound himselfe by Covenant, yet the woman was not bound. Lastly it may be thought, that as Deborah spake by the Spirit of Sisera falling by the hands of a woman, so Jael did this act against him by the instinct of the same Spirit. Thus he, who yet acknowledgeth, that there was fault in Jael, in that shee lyed and dissembled with Sisera, as the midwives of Egypt had done before, and Judith after; wherefore this was not commended in her, but her love to the people of God, and desire of their deliverance. And Ferus speaketh to the same effect, saying, that God had before authorized Jael to kill Sisera, when hee said, I will sell him into the hand of a woman; so that it was her duty thus to doe, as having one in her power now, that God had proscribed, and out-lawed as it were. Even as when the Emperour hath proscribed and condemned any man to death, it is the duty of every Subject to kill him, if he can, notwithstanding any former league. Yet hee taxeth her dissembling also, but praiseth her great faith and wonderfull love, in that against the timorous nature of her sex shee durst attempt such a mighty man as Sisera. I hold with these and all other expositors, that Jael's fact was warrantable and laudable: but whereas lying is imputed to her, I can see no ground for that, seeing she spake nothing falsely, but onely made a shew of friendship, and did the contrary, as one enemy in the time of warre may deale with another in policy to circumvent him. As for any former league, Ferus saith well, the Emperour of the whole world had disannulled now that, and therefore shee was not bound hereby; The Lord having now made it known, that hee should be destroyed, and that by a woman.

Sisera having entered the tent, lay downe and shee covered him, and hee asking water of her to drinke, she gave him milke, as which was more apt to bring him to a sleep, then he being fast asleep, shee tooke a naile of the tent, & an hammer and smote it into his temple, and so through to the ground. The Sept. for naile have a wooden pin, which served to fasten the tent to the ground, πν πα' σουλον, but Josephus calleth it πνδρεον ἵλον, and such rather it must needs be to pierce his skul, that it might be sharpe enough, and it must be of a good length to pierce through to the ground.

Sisera being thus slaine by Jael, Barak cometh to seeke him, and Jael bringeth him in, and sheweth him his dead body: and touching Jabin the king, it is said that the Israelites prevailed against him, till they had destroyed him. Mystically, saith Ferus, hee that will overcome the Devill, set forth by Sisera, must doe it by nailes and hammer, that is, by Christ pierced with nailes driven with hammer, when hee was fastened to the crosse, and by faith in him.

CHAP. V.

Here after the victory obtained, is sung by Deborah and Barak a song of thanksgiving unto God, wherein first they that had obtained the victory are excited to praise God, and Kings and Princes to hearken to it; and Deborah exexciteth herself to praise God in particular. 2. God is praised, and they that fought in this warre commended, the imployments of other tribes in the meane season being commemorated from v. 4. to v. 19. 3. It is declared how God fought against the Canaanites, v. 19, 29. &c. 4. Jael is praised, v. 24. 25. 5. The mother of Sisera is derided for her vaine hopes, v. 28, 29. &c. Lastly it is concluded with an imprecation against Gods enemies, and a prayer for such as love him, v. 31. And this song, as Ferus noteth, is the third; for two were made before by Moses, Exod. 15. and Dent. 32. and it was made as those, to be learned and sung publicly by the children of Israel, that it might remain as a monument of Gods merciful and miraculous dealing in confounding their most potent enemies to the generations to come, that they might therefore fear and serve the Lord, and fly to him for succour in all times of misery. And herein an example is given to us to be highly thankfull, and continually to praise God for great benefits and deliverances, and not for the present onely; and herein the Prophet and the Captaine should joyne, and go before others, the chiefe in Church and Common-wealth should be chiefe in glorifying God. For even the heathen, that knew not the true God, have given praise to their false gods, in the like cases. And this is in Hebrew in meeter.

Praise the Lord for the avenging of Israel: when the people willingly offered themselves, the vulgar latin rendreth this, qui sponte obtulisti animas vestras ad periculum de Israel, benedicite domino. But this doth greatly differ from the Hebrew, the first words for revenging revenges in Israel, as it is in Hebr. word for word, are quite left out, and the speech is turned to those that fought in the battle, whereas they are spoken of onely, and not unto, and there is no mention of soules or of danger in the Hebrew; but the next words are, for the peoples willing offering themselves. Vatablus expresseth this by a strange paraphrase thus, whilst God punisheth Israel for sinne, whilst the people doe voluntarily take armes to defend themselves against their enemies, at what time God gave them strength and courage, when he would deliver them, that is, in the time of affliction and of deliverance, of calamity and felicity, praise the Lord. For although in all things wee ought to give thanks, yet deliverance onely from misery is here mentioned to excite to this duty.

Hear (O yee Kings) give ear (O yee Princes) &c. Here Deborah by an Apostrophe turneth herselfe to foraine kings, and men of greatest might in this world, that they might not be proud of their greatnesse and power, seeing how easily God had brought downe so mighty a King as Jabin, but humble themselves therefore before him, and not despise inferiour persons, seeing that when God will, a few, and they not so well armed, can overthrow many more, and better furnished. For such thinke themselves worthy to bee praised and magnified, and through haughtinesse of spirit are furthest from giving praise to God, and therefore they are specially invited to it, as the men, that should be most forward herein.

Lord when thou wentest out of Seir, when thou marchedst out of the field of Edom, the earth trembled and the heavens dropped, &c. the mountaines melted, even that Sinai, &c. Deborah being about to praise God for the great deliverance from Jabin and Sisera, pitcheth not at the first upon that, but beginneth higher, hence taking occasion to remember things done long before, thus enlarging herself in praising God, as we also should do, recounting all his benefits, as Psal. 103. This beginning with the Lords comming from Seir, is taken from the speech of Moses, Dent. 33. 2. The Lord came from Sinai, and rose from Seir to them. Seir and the field of Edom were both one, about which place the children of Israel continued long, next before their comming to passe into the land of Canaan to possesse it, Dent. 2. 1. 3. Now the Lord is said to goe out of the field of Edom, when he led the people forth from thence, and accompanied them with the signe of his presence, then the earth trembled, that is, the inhabitants of the earth round about, the Edomites, Moabites, and Amorites, &c. as in an earth-quake, both the earth and mountaines shake, and in horrible tempests of winde and raine all men are afraid, so the Lord now going forth

Ferus.

V. 2.

Vatablus.

V. 3.

Ferus.

V. 4.
V. 5.Dent. 2. 4.
Numb. 22.
Exod. 15. 14.
15.

Lyranus, A. is Montanus, Cajetanus.

forth with his people, all were terrified, as when a generall most grievous tempest threatneth destruction to the whole world; to expresse which, this Metaphor is here used, the earth trembled, the heavens dropped, the clouds dropped water, the mountaines melted, &c. and to expresse this yet more, the state of Mount Sinai is added, where God appeared with such terrour to give the law; see a like place to this, Psal. 68. 7, 8. Thus Ferus holding, that two most memorable apparitions of the Lord are herein pointed at; in Sinai, and in Mount Seir; by the melting of the mountaines, that the melting of the hearts of the Kings of the Amorites was meant, for they were most high of all others. But some will have all properly to be understood of those things, that happened at the giving of the Law upon Mount Sinai, when the earth trembled, and thunder and lightening appeared, and a thicke cloud, from whence rain might come, although it be not there expresse, and the mountaine was all on fire, so that it might seeme even to melt with the ardent heat thereof. Lyra therefore delivereth this, as the common exposition of our Doctors: when thou wentest from Seir, that is, thou leftest the Edomites dwelling there in their errors, not vouchsafing to give thy laws unto them, thou spakest from Mount Sinai to thy people Israel, being accompanied with all these terrible signes, which should cause all men to feare and tremble before thee. But I cannot see, how Gods going from Seir, and marching out of the field of Edom should be understood of his leaving the Edomites in their wickednesse, but of his going from thence in the Israeli Army towards the land of Canaan, where this famous Victory was now obtained. And that passing of his from Edom is here begun withall, whereupon so much trouble followed amongst the nations, and they were so miraculously overthrowne, as if the earth had bene moved, and the mountaines melted, because another most notable exploit, was now done in the same countrey against the King of Canaan. Wherefore I subscribe rather to Ferus, and whereas it is added at the last, this Sinai, I understand it, as if it had bene said, at this Sinai, or that Sinai where the Law was given, so those mountaines melted, the mighty Kings of Canaan, that were as mountaines, melted in their hearts, when God came neare amongst his people.

V. 6.

Lyra.

Ferus.

In the dayes of Shamgar, &c. in the dayes of Jael, the high wayes were unoccupied &c. Here the dangers past are recounted, when the people for feare of enemies, that were ready to rob and spoile them, durst not goe in the usuall wayes, but in by-pathes, that the present state being herewith compared, might be the more extolled and God the author of it therefore. The meaning is, that although Shamgar greatly quelled the Philistines, enemies to the people of Israel, who robbed and spoiled them, when with an ox goad he slew so many together, yet the Israelites were still afraid, and durst not travaile so freely for feare of being robbed, even to the time of Iael, who did execution upon Sisera, and so all feare of enemies was now taken away. Ferus understandeth it either thus, or by the high-wayes civill Ordinances, by the travellers the magistrates, that should see to the keeping hereof, but then the course of executing justice ceased through the tyranny of the Canaanites: a description truly of a very miserable state, when neither husbandmen could goe about their husbandry for feare of danger, nor magistrates doe justice betwixt one man and another: and this continued from the death of Ehud unto this fact of Jael, who, although shee were a woman and so of the weaker sex, yet shewed to have the courage of a man in her in cutting off the head of that grievous oppression, and therefore shee is named as most famous for this next unto Shamgar.

V. 7.

The Villages ceased, they ceased in Israel; the Vulgar Latin for Villages hath fortis, the valiant, but the word פריות here used signifieth an unwall'd town, and the inhabitants of it, according to Pagninus, Vatablus, Arias Montanus, Tygurini Interpretes, and all others skillfull in the Hebrew, and so it is elsewhere rendred by Jerom himselfe, as Ester, 9. 19. where it is, פריות coming of the same radix, and Deut. 3. 5. and 1 Sam. 6. 18. where it is פריו. The Sept. have it οἱ χωρὶς τῆς, the Chald. the Cities of Townes were desolate, which were seated in Israel, and their inhabitants were driven out and disperced: by this paraphrase shewing ing the meaning of the words, for then Townes cease and are still, when all being fled out of them into walled Cities for feare of the enemy, there is no stirring any more in them. Yet there may bee some reason of rendring it the valiant, because to inhabit such Townes doth argue valour; as Lycurgus forbade Townes to be fenced with walls, saying, that valiant Citizens are walls unto them. And Agefilas King of the Spartans, when one asked him why Sparta was not compassed with walls, answered, pointing to his armed Men, these are the walls of my City. Untill I Deborah arose a mother in Israel; this is not spoken vauntingly by Deborah to extoll her self, but to the praise of God, who had raised her up by his Spirit to excite Barak to goe against Sisera, the great oppressor of those times; and shee calleth her selfe a mother, for her mother-like affection to the people to seeke their good. The Vulg. Latine rendreth it in the third person, untill that Deborah arose; but it is the first in the Hebrew.

They chose new Gods, then was Warre in the gates, &c. The Vulgar Latine, the Lord chose new Warres, and hee overthrew the gates of the enemies. The Hebrew is יבחר אלוהים חדשים או לחם שערים, where because it is doubtful to whom the first word יבחר should bee referred, whether to God, or to Israel, this diversity in expounding that clause ariseth; for if it bee referred to Israel, then it must bee rendred thus, he chose, that is, Israel chose new Gods, this being set forth as the cause of all their troubles; if to God, then it is thus, God chose new, and because new must have reference to somewhat, it is not amisse to supply it, as Jerome hath done, with this word Warres, God chose new Warres, that is, when Deborah arose, hee tooke warres in hand, in a different manner from all the warres made before; for hee warred now by weaker meanes, a woman, that went to the battell, as the chiefe stay of all the rest; and an unarmed company, without shield or sword, as followeth in the next words; and a woman, a stranger that slew Sisera their great terrour. For the next clause, then was war in the gates, because it is not expresse in whose gates, Jerome hath supplied it, in the enemies gates; the Septuagint, then the Cities of the Princes made warre; and for the first clause, the Septuagint have, they chose new Gods, so likewise the Chaldee, the Rabbins, Vatablus, &c. onely Arias Montanus amongst new Expositors, and almost all the Ancients amongst Christian Expositors cleave to Jerome. By the most common received exposition, the gates must be understood of Israels gates, and in saying, here warres were made, that this followed as a punishment upon their choosing them new Gods, not onely their unwall'd Townes, as was shewed before, were made desolate; but they that were fenced with walls and gates, were not sufficient to keep the enemy out from raging therein; the reason whereof followeth, there was neither shield nor speare seen amongst 40000 of Israel, all their weapons were by the enemies taken from them, and they were disarmed, and so unable to resist their violence. According to the other exposition, the gates of Harosheth and Hazor, and other Cities held by the Canaanites must bee meant, they were now expugned by the Israelites getting the victory, and yet these expugners were unarmed, they had neither shield nor speare, so that the thing was the more miraculous. Whereas 40000 are spoken of, and yet the people going to the warre with Barak were onely 10000; Lyra saith well, that being at the first but 10000, when the victory began to fall to their sides, their number greatly increased, till that they were come to 40000. Another way of expounding this, Lyra hath more forced, was there a shield or speare seene when 40000 enemies were fighting in Israel? Jerome by these 40000, either understandeth others in Israel that durst not lift up a speare against the enemy, or bee seene in these warres, yet by the 10000 onely following Barak, the enemies were destroyed.

St. Augustine reading the first words thus, They chose, or barley bread, new Gods; then they expugned the Cities of the Princes, troubleth himselfe in vaine, both in finding out a reason why false Gods should bee compared to barley bread, and how it could aptly bee said, Then they expugned, &c. And to the last hee saith, here is an Hyperbaton, which hee reduceth thus into order, beginning at the

Plutarch in Laconicus.

V. 8.

Lyra.

Jerome.

August. qu. 29.

verse

verse before going, Inhabitants failed in Israel, they chose them new Gods, till Deborah arose, then they expugned, &c. But all this is lost labour, seeing this verse carryeth a good sense in it selfe, as hath been already shewed. And for my part, I doe in this place preferre Jeromes Translation, because the calamities of the people were done withall in the former verse, at the rising up of Deborah; so that here in the next place must come in most aptly, how the Lord proceeded by Deborah to worke an alteration, viz. by making a new kind of War, where-by the enemies gatts, which were the strongest places, were expugned, the people that did it being also unfurnished with such weapons as were used in War. For the number spoken of, besides that which hath been hitherto said, there seemeth to be a better way to explaine it thus; this Victory was obtained when as there was a generall want of weapons offensive in Israel, a certaine number of 40000, being put for an uncertaine of a very great Company, it being probable hereby, that the Canaanites to reigne over them the more securely, had taken their weapons from them in all places, as the Philistims did afterwards, 1 Sam. 13. 19, 20. And if it bee taken thus, there needeth to bee no trouble about the difference of the number here spoken, and the number of 10000 following Barsk; for not onely they, but all others generally in Israel are here meant, they had very great want of weapons.

V. 9.

My heart is towards the Governours of the people, that offered themselves willingly, &c. Here Deborah beginneth to praise the instruments of this victory, under God, the Governours of the people, Hebr. the Law-givers or Judges, who by right were such, although at this time suspended from executing their office by the tyranny of Jabin; and herein their forwardnesse in speciall is intimated, to lead forth the people to this Battail, that as hers, so the hearts of others might be affected towards them, and bleste God for them.

V. 10.
Lyr.Judg. 10. 4.
Ch. 12. 14.
Junius.

Speake ye that ride on white Ases, that sit in Judgment, &c. A further description of Judges, who now might ride upon white Ases, or Ases shining with fat, taken from the enemy, and walke upon the way securely, which they could not doe before without deadly danger. And Judges are thus described, because of old in Israel, they used not to ride upon Horses, but Ases, as all honourable Persons did. By these words following, and walke by the way, Junius will have Merchants to be understood, who used to travaile further; so that they also, and all travellers that were now delivered from dangers, are excited to speake together the praises of God.

V. 11.

They that are delivered from the noise of Archers, in the place of drawing water, &c. that is, as Junius also hath it, Boyes and Wenches that were in continuall danger of the enemies arrowes when they went to draw water. This place is very obscure, by reason of the words here used, which may bee drawne divers wayes. These words, They that are delivered, are not in the Hebrew, but supplied by the Translators; For Hebr. the verse beginneth thus, מקול מחצעים בין משאבים שם יחזו being rendred word for word, from the voice of the shooters of arrowes, or of lightening and hailstones in the places of drawing water, or amongst the drawers of water, there they shall speake, &c. The Vulgar Latine hath it, Ubi collisi sunt currus, & hostium suffocatus est exercitus, by מחצעים those that shot and fought out of the Chariots being understood, but the Chariots being now overthrowne, and they cast upon the ground maimed, and troden under the horses feet, they uttered a most lamentable voice, from which voice the Israelites are exhorted here to fetch matter of praise; and by משאבים they that fell into the River Kishon, and were there choaked with water, being understood. The Septuagint joyneth these words to the last word of the former verse, thus, ἐν τῇ φωνῇ τῶν ἀνταρκακούντων ἀνὰ πηλὸν ὑδατοπόρου, edite vocem pulsantium in medio gaudantium; but this goeth altogether from the signification of the words, as may bee seen before; and Arias Montanus hath it, a voce sagittantium inter haurientes aquas, as having reference to שירו speake yee, being the last word of the former verse. And so I take it to bee one continued sentence, thus, Yee that walke by the way now safely, which yee could not doe before, speake from the voice, or utter the voice of dividers, for so צמ also signifieth, that is, of those that divide the spoiles of the enemy, and doe this amongst the drawers of waters, who also have cause now to rejoyce, because they are out of the enemies danger in going out and comming in about this service, and so doe this amongst them, is as much as doe yee it, and let them utter the voice of joy also. It seemeth then to be an excitation of all, even to the drawers of water in Israel, which were the meanest of all others to praise God: And it is said amongst the drawers of water in particular to denote the place where this victory was gotten, even by the waters of the River Kishon, v. 21. There let them speak of the righteous acts of the Lord, towards the inhabitants of his villages, &c. Because now men might adventure to inhabit even such weake places, which in times past they durst not doe, ver. 7. The Vulgar Latine hath it as before, towards the valiant in Israel; and unto the next words, Then shall the people of the Lord go downe to the gates; it addeth, and obtained principality; for further explication of what is meant by their going downe to the gates, viz. the Judges to sit there, and judge in Israel, and to see Justice executed, or to goe freely in and out at the gates without feare, for businesse or recreation, as Junius hath it.

fo

Awake Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song, &c. V. 13. Then bee made him that remaineth to have dominion over the Nobles of the people, the Lord hath made mee to have dominion over the mighty. The Vulg. Latine, Salvate sunt reliquie populi, Dominus in fortibus dimicavit. Junius, Ex quo dominium residui tradit magnificis in populo, Jehoshab dominium mihi in fortissimos tradidit; and by the Princes to whom the dominion was given, he understandeth the Israelites, by the residue, the Canaanites remaining, by the time, since which the time, the time that Barak carried the Canaanites captive; by the mighty, over whom Deborah was set, the Israelites recited in the verses following, Ephraim, Judah, Simeon, &c. The Septuagint, Then was his fortitude magnified, the people of the Lord (ô Lord) humbled before me those that are mightier then I. Of all these Expositions our Translation is most agreeable to the originall Hebrew, as exprelling it word for word, and the meaning is, when Barak led the Canaanites captive, the people of Israel that remained, after so great oppressions and destruction of them made before by the Canaanites, which were weake and despicable, had the mightiest of them in subjection; and Deborah in speciall had them under by the Lord, who did all this. Wherefore as Hugo hath it, either the people are brought in stirring her up and Barak to praise God, or else she exciteth her selfe and him, saying, Awake, awake, awake, three times, or, Arise, arise, arise, to intimate that who so will perfectly praise God, must doe it with heart, word, and work, or by faith, work, and perseverance.

Out of Ephraim was there a root of them against Amalek, after thee Benjamin amongst thy people, &c. Here, saith Ferus, are commemorated the Tribes, out of every of which, some went to these Wars after Barak, so likewise Junius. But Lyra, Hugo, Tostatus, and others, generally referre the first words here to Joshua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, holding them to bee a commemoration of the fight which hee had against the Amalekites, Exod. 17. and the next to Saul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin, taking them to bee a Prophecie of his going against them, which was done, 1 Sam. 15. This place is so obscure, that it is most difficult to give the right sense thereof. The Vulg. Latine hath it, Out of Ephraim destroyed hee them in Amalek; and after him, out of Benjamin thy people, ô Amalek: the last words [ô Amalek] being supplied for further expression. The reason of the first difference here, is, because the word שורש may either signifie their root, or hee planted them; or the pricks being altered, thus, שורש hee extirped, or rooted them out: And when the Scriptures were first written, till the dayes of the Masoreth, who invented the pricks, it might indifferently be read either way. Wherefore if it bee read now, hee rooted them out, or destroyed them, as Jerome hath it, there will bee no violence done to the originall Hebrew, but a corruption onely acknowledged in the Masoreths pointing. And then the sense will bee cleare, God out of Ephraim, or stirring up men out of Ephraim, when the Canaanites being discomfited, fled some of them

Junius.

V. 12.

V. 13.

Junius.

Septuag.

Hugo Card.

V. 14.

Ferus.

Lyra, Hugo Card.
Tostatus.

them that way to Amalek, pursued and destroyed them there, for the word is not, against Amalek, but in Amalek; and Joshua fought not before in Amalek, but with the Amalekites in the wilderness; so that it cannot be understood of that fight, Exod. 17. neither can there be any good reason rendred, why that fight with the Amalekites should here be mentioned; but that the Amalekites dwelt not farre from Ephraim and Benjamin, and so that the Canaanites might be chased by them thither, and slaine, it appeareth, because the Kenites dwelt some of them amongst the Amalekites, 1 Sam. 15. 6. and yet Judg. 1. 16. they are said to have gone and dwelt in the Wilderness of Judab, neare to which Ephraim and Benjamin lay. For the other words in the Vulg. Latine, I cannot so easily be drawne to subscribe unto them, for they are Hebr. word for word, Thy remainders, Benjamin, in thy people, or with thy people; the meaning being, that Benjamin, although now a small tribe, not worthy therefore to be called otherwise, but by the name of a remnant, did also helpe with his people in destroying the Canaanites. And then here is nothing to be understood but these words, and out of, and be destroyed; For that Benjamin received that great blow remembred, Judg. 20. before this time, and so that a remnant onely of that tribe now remained, Junius proveth in his Notes upon that place. The Chald. Paraphrast maketh all this place plaine, according to the most common received sense before mentioned, thus, Out of the house of Ephraim arose Joshua the sonne of Nun in former times, and made warre with the house of Amalek; and after him rose up Saul of the house of Benjamin, &c. One Septuagint Translation hath it, Ephraim rooted them out in Amalek, &c. The Rabbins generally follow the Chaldee, but the sense already approved is best, and most agreeable to the words, and the Septuagint maketh notably for it.

Out of Machir came Governours, and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the Writer. Machir was the most noted, if not the onely sonne of Manasseh, and therefore in saying, out of Machir came Governours, shee meant, out of the halfe tribe of Manasseh placed in the land of Canaan, neare to mount Tabor, where the battaile was fought, came downe Princes and chiefe men to helpe in this war. The next words Hebr. are, מַסְכִּים בְּשֵׁבֶט סוּפֵר word for word, drawing out, or such as draw out with the Scepter, Rod, or Pen of a Scribe; and the meaning seemeth to be, that as out of Manasseh, so out of Zebulun came primary men also, as many others (for the Army consisted chiefly of Zebulun and Naphtali) that led others forth, carrying in their hands the signe of their authority, a Scepter or a Rod; or as Junius hath it, leading them forth by Letters, which they wrote to summon them to come after them to this War. The Vulg. Latine hath it, Which led an Army to the warre, not respecting the words, but the sense onely. Ferus taketh this to be a description of Doctors of the Law, whom hee saith Barak had in his Army, as well as Souldiers, and by such God subdued the Enemy. But because the word שֵׁבֶט is most commonly put for a Scepter, or signe of Principality; the word סוּפֵר a Writer, and מַחֲוֹקִים Law-givers, before used in this verse, seem to set forth men of a like condition, Law-writers, or Law-makers, Princes of Families.

The Princes of Issachar were with Deborah, even Issachar and also Barak, hee was sent on foot into the valley, for the divisions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart. The Vulgar Latin agreeing with ours in the first words rendreth the next thus, and they followed the steps of Barak, who gave himselfe to danger, as it were headlong and into a gulf. The Sept. and Barak, so Barak: in the valley hee sent his footmen into the valley. Junius, as Issachar, so Barak, and he that was sent into the valley at her footsteps. Hebr. And Issachar, so Barak sent into the valley with his feet, or with his footmen, the meaning is, as Issachar with his Princes, so Barak was with Deborah, and was sent by her downe from Tabor with his footmen into the valley against the Canaanites, and there fell upon them by the river Kishon and slew them. Lyra and others that follow the Vulgar Latin, expound these words, as shewing, that some of Issachar remained with Debo-

Junius.
Chald. Paraphrast.

Iosh. 17. 1.

Junius.

Ferus.

V. 15.

Lyra.

rab to praise God, and some went after Barak to chase the enemy downe the hill, with such violence as if they would have cast themselves downe headlong into the valley and river. But here is nothing signifying to danger, headlong, or gulfe, but into the valley, so that if the words be otherwise placed, the nearest that they will come to Jerom is by rendring them thus: And Issachar so followed Barak at his feet cast into the valley. For the next words, for the divisions of Reuben, &c. it is most generally held, that here Deborah beginneth to taxe those tribes that did not helpe in these wars, and first Reuben hindered by divisions amongst the Princes assembled to consult, whether they should send aide or not, which divisions came from their pride, and so no helpe sending could bee agreed upon. And therefore by great thoughts of heart, pride is to bee understood, they were so proud, saith Hugo, that they scorned to goe with such meane persons, as they of Zabulun and Naphtali: and besides pride and contention, Ferus taxeth them for covetousnesse. But Junius contrariwise rendring the words thus, magni instituti animi in paribus Reubenis, saith, that the notable faith of Reuben, Gad and the halfe tribe of Manasse on this side Jordan is here commended, in that they went up armed over Jordan before their brethren, shewing the great courage that was in their hearts, and that they are excited to acknowledge Deborah to bee sent of God to worke this great deliverance. I subscribe to the former exposition, the words being in Hebr. In the divisions of Reuben great thoughts of heart, that is, pride and high-mindednesse, which was the cause thereof; and the next words shew this to be spoken in way of blaming Reuben, v. 16. Why abodest thou amongst the sheepfolds to heare the bleatings of the flock? as if it had beene said, was this time, when thy brethren were labouring to achieve so great a victory, a time for thee to sit still and tend thy flocks? and of this it is spoken in particular, because Reuben and Gad, &c. were before noted to abound with cattle; and so it is concluded with a repetition of the same, as is usuall in songs, for the divisions of Reuben there were great searchings of heart, the word rendred searchings differing but in one letter from that before rendred thoughts, for חקקי here being חקרי. Thus then the Reubenites are taxed, and in like manner the Gileadites who were of Manasse, and Gad who are said to have abode, or to have sitten still also beyond Jordan, and of Dan, that hee remained in Ships, that is, followed his merchandize, according to the situation of his countrey, and Asher by the Sea shore, &c. why any thing should here be spoken in way of commending Reuben, Gad, &c. for their valour shewed in times past, I can see no colour of reason. Asher is not onely said to abide on the sea shore, but also to continue in his breaches, the Vulgar Latin in his havens, but the Hebrew word signifyeth breaches, and so the havens of the sea may well be called, because in them the violence of the waves is broken and determined: and his continuing here setteth forth his attending to his merchandize, this warre being neglected. Here Zabulun and Naphtali are againe commended for adventuring their lives, and the manner of the fight is described. The Kings came and fought, then fought the Kings of Canaan, &c. whereas Zabulun and Naphtali are said to have jeopardded their lives in the high places of the fields: the Vulgar Latin hath it, in regione Merome, מרומי שדה in the field of Merome, if it bee taken for a proper name, if appellatively, in the high places of the field, and this is preferred both by Lyra and Hugo, and others, for there was a plaine upon the top of the hill Tabor, from whence this battaile was begun, being therefore called the field of high places. The Kings of Canaan were the Kings confederated with Jabin, these are said to have come and fought, and tooke no gaine of money or of silver, that is, after the manner of those, that goe to warre and conquer, they tooke not the spoyle of the enemy, but they themselves were spoiled and destroyed, and their goods were made a prey to the Israelites, their enemy. The Vulgar Latin to expresse this hath it, nihil tulere predantes. And this battaile is said to have beene fought in Taanach, which was a City belonging to the Levites in the halfe tribe of Manasse, Josh. 21. 25. to which tribe also the City of Megiddo pertained, the waters whereof are here spoken of Judg. 1. 27. but that

Lyra, Ferus,
Hugo Card.

Junius.

V. 16.

V. 17.

V. 18.
V. 19.Lyra, Hugo
Cardin.

Hugo Car.

V. 20.

Lyra

Hugo Cardin.

Schol. Hist.
Hugo de Sancto
victore.Toftatus.
Rupertus.Dionys. Carthusian.
Cajetan.

V. 21.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Serrarius.

Bonfrerius.

Aris Montan.

V. 22.

V. 23.

Schol. Hist.

halfe tribe had both these Cities out of Issachar, Josh. 17. 11. for Issachar lay next to the tribe of Zebulun, where Mount Tabor was. Here I cannot but marvelle, what Hugo meaneth to say that for Taanach Hebr. is Romoshache, the high places of the field, when as it is תַּנְחַנְחַן Taanach, as all read it.

They fought from heaven, the starres in their courses fought against Sis. Here is shewed, from whence this great victory came, viz. from god, who from heaven sent lightening and hailestones upon the enemy, but the Sun and Moone did not now stand still, as in the dayes of Joshua, but they and all the starres went on in their course, wherefore it is added, the starres in their courses fought, the Vulgar Latin, the starres remaining in order and in their course fought: So Lyra: who will not have this to be understood of the starres fighting, but continuing in their course, whilst the tempest coming from heaven beat downe and destroyed the Canaanites. But Hugo by the starres understandeth lightnings comming from heaven against them, like unto starres, as if they had flowne from thence upon them; or cast out sparklings of fire against them, thus also Petrus Comestor, taking it to be spoken hyperbolically. Hugo de Sancto Victore is for God, the ruler over the starres fighting against them. Toftatus saith, meteors are meant, which are like starres called comets. Rupertus by the starres understandeth Angels, because Angels are called morning starres, Job 38. and starres, Revel. 12. so likewise Glossa interlin. Variabilis, Mariana, and Ephraim. Dionysius Carthusianus saith, the starres fought by stirring up tempests by their influences, God at this time specially augmenting them for the destruction of the enemies, so likewise Cajetan; and this last I hold to be the best, and to intimate, that the starres doe fight in their kinde, when God will have them, they are often called the host of heaven.

The river of Kishon swept them away, &c. they fleeing thither and thinking by swimming over to escape, were by the violence of the streame carryed away and drowned: The ancient river, the Vulgar Latin and Sept. the river Kadumim, by Lyra thought to bee another river neare to Kishon. But by that, which goeth before and followeth after, it is plaine, that one and the same river onely is meant, and so Hugo, by Cadumim the red sea is set forth, the word signifying antiquorum, because of old the Egyptians were miraculously drowned there, it is then meant here that Kishon was now become to the Canaanites, as the Red sea to the Egyptians, because hereby they were swept away. Serrarius thinketh, that the more easterly part of the river Kishon was called Cadumim, because Cbedem signifyeth the east. Bonfrerius, because קדם signifyeth praecurre, that it was called the river Cadumim, for preventing and carrying away the Canaanites, that thought to swimme over it: Aris Montanus, the river of antiquity, because it was of old ordained of God, that the Canaanites should bee drowned here: of all these I like that best, which holding this to bee another name of the river Kishon or of some part of it, deriveth it from the east, because it must bee a name not now first imposed, but whereby it was also known long before this time. O my soule thou hast trodden downe strength, this is a clause of the victour exulting for this mighty Kingdome of the Canaanites now subdued.

Then were the horse hooves broken by reason of the pransings, &c. the Vulgar Latin, ungula equorum ceciderunt fugientibus impetu et per praecipua ruitibus fortissimis hostium: in our translation the rest of the verse endeth thus, the pransings of their mighty ones, Hebr. it is מַחֲרֹת-דַּחֲרוֹת were smitten or shaken with hasty treading, מַחֲרֹת of his mighty ones, the meaning whereof can bee nothing else, but that the mightiest and strongest of the Canaanites made such haste to flee in their charriots before the Israelites, that their very horse hooves were broken, and bruised wonderfully, so that Jerom in his translation respected more the sense, then the words.

Curse yee Meroz, said the Angel of the Lord, curse yee bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, &c. Comestor for Meroz hath Meroth, and saith, it was one of the Princes of Canaan, and that Deborah meaneth herselfe by the Angel, or Michael Meroth, signifyeth arcannum; and hereby was meant an evill Angel in arcano, that is, in secret fighting against Israel. Lyra having also mentioned this exposition, as the common exposition of our Doctors, that Michael was the Angel of the Lord here meant, and Meroz the name of an evill Angel, who with his company did not onely not helpe, but oppose the people of Israel, preferreth yet another of the Hebrewes, who say, that Meroz was a mighty man dwelling neare the place, where this battaile was fought; but would not come forth with his men to helpe the Israelites, wherefore, the Angel of the Lord, Barak curseth him and his people, for Barak may well be understood by an Angel, because hee was sent, according to the signification of the word Malaeh, an Angel, one sent. It seemeth to mee, that an Angel properly may best be understood, and most probably Michael, the Prince of the Jews, Dan. 10. and by Meroz some City or Towne neare to the place where the battaile was fought, because the inhabitants thereof are also named; although there be now no memory left of it either in Jerom or Adrichomius or any other, because happily by the force of this curse, it perished long agoe. Others, that came not to helpe, are not cursed, because they dwelt further off, but Meroz being so neare was without excuse. It is cursed and the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to helpe the Lord, that is, his people fighting against Sisera, for the Lord taketh that which is done to his people, as done to himselfe. Let rich men marke this, saith Fermus, who helpe not the poore by relieving, and such, as stand against any good cause, so faire are they from helping it, and lastly, all that stand not for the glory of God, they are accursed. But how can the Angel of the Lord bee said to curse, seeing Jude. epist. Michael cursed not the Devill, neither durst he? Hugo answereth, it is true, the Devill himselfe must not be cursed with some kinde of cursing, for the wicked cursing the Devill curseth his owne soule, Eccles. 21. that is, by wilhing evill to him, because hee is the creature of God, but by saying, that he is evill, and by abhorring from his presence, as evill, he may be cursed. Thus he, but Michael is onely said, Jude. v. 9. not to have dared to bring forth the judgement of evill speaking against the Devill, but hee said, the Lord rebuke thee, Satan; which may better be expounded thus, as in my notes upon Jude, hee of himselfe durst not by word take revenge upon the very Devill, because this belongeth to the Lord onely, but having commission from God to curse, as in this place, he might curse and bid others curse, as other holy servants of God have cursed Gods enemies, which was not their cursing, but the Spirits speaking by them, and denouncing all evill.

Blessed shall Jacl the wife of Heber bee above women, &c. In commending Jacl, saith Fermus, all that labour for the good of the Church, are commended and blessed, and the falling of Sisera is set forth in many words the more to set forth his shamefull end. For what can be more shamefull to a Generall of a great Army, then to be slaine and to fall at the foot of a woman? And such confusion and shamefull ends shall all the wicked which are Gods enemies come unto, according to the Epiphonema used, v. 31. But the godly who love God shall become glorious as the Sun in his night: in the tent, that is, for that which shee did in the tent, in so valiantly assaulcing and slaying Sisera: above other women in the tent, that is, saith Lyra, above all that dwell in tents, for none of them ever did so valiantly and warily, as shee before. Hugo also straineth this higher: blessed be Jacl above other women, in the heavenly tent or tabernacle.

Hee asked her water, shee gave him milk, shee brought forth butter in a Lordly dish. By this it seemeth, that shee gave him not onely to drinke, but to eate also, which was not before expressed, Ch. 4. 19. but onely that shee gave him milke, and the vessell, out of which, is said to be בית a bottle: but here מית in a dish of the mighty or of Princes shee gave him butter. Junius rendreth it, simpulo magnificorum obtulit lac pingue, and saith, that Simpulum was in the form of Cyathus a cup, and was used either about holy things, as Ch. 6. 38. or in marriage feasts. The Sept. distinguish the sentence thus, shee gave him milke in a bowle of potentates or of the mighty, shee brought forth butter. And this is verbatim according to the Hebrew. And בית whereby a bowle is here set forth,

Lyra.

Fermus.

Hugo Card.

V. 24.

Fermus.

Hugo Card.

V. 25.

Junius.

is used onely againe, Ch. 6. 38. where not a dish, but a bowle must needs bee understood by it, and that of great capacity, for which cause it is called here a bowle of Princes, containing a sufficient quantity of milke, and not a little, as in the cup of the poore, so that Sisera might drinke his fill: For otherwise it could not bee called a bowle of Lords, because Lordly for price, seeing the Kenites used no such costly Vessells in their Tents. Now if a distinction bee made, as by the Septuagint referring the milke to the bowle, and not the butter; there needs no question to be moved, as otherwise there may, how butter could aptly be brought in a cup or bowle? wherefore I prefer that Translation as best.

V. 26.

And with the hammer shee smote Sisera, shee smote off his head, when shee had pierced and stricken through his temples. The word here rendred, shee smote off, is מַחֲקָה used, as some note, no where else, and therefore of uncertaine signification. The Septuagint render it διήλυσεν καραυὸν αὐτοῦ, shee boared through or pierced his head. Some Hebrews will have it to signifie, shee smote, or cut off, as in our new Translation, but the Septuagint is to be preferred, because the instrument that shee used was an hammer, and therefore unfit to cut off his head. Junius hath it, abrasit caput ejus. The Vulg. Latine, querens in capite vulnere locum, going altogether from the Hebrew, & tempus valide perforans, having but one Participle and an Adverbe, for two Verbes Synonymies, and distinguished by two Conjunctions ומחצה וחלפה and shee transfixed and pierced: Wherefore I would rather read the whole thus, according to the Hebrew thus, Shee hammered Sisera, and perforated his head, shee transfixed and pierced his temple.

V. 27.

Where bee bowed, there hee fell downe dead. The Hebrew word for dead here, is שׁוּן wasted or spoiled; by the Septuagint rendred ταλαιπωρῶς, miserabilis, and accordingly the Vulg. Latine, exanimis & miserabilis; but the meaning is best expressed by the word dead.

V. 28.

The mother of Sisera looked out at the window, and cryed out through the lattice, &c. Here beginneth the derision of Sisera his friends, who expected a farre other event of this War. The Vulg. Latine hath it, per fenestram respiciens ululabat mater ejus, & de canaculo loquebatur, understanding the place where shee stood looking, to bee an upper room, having windowes narrow without, and broad within.

V. 29.

Her wife Ladies answered her, yes, shee answered her selfe; thus the Hebr. word for word, and the Septuagint; yet the Vulg. Latine in words that are neither in the Hebrew nor Greek, hath it thus, Una sapienter ceteris uxoribus ejus hac socru verba respondit. The next words, V. 30. Have they not sped, have they not divided the prey, to every one a damosell or two, &c. in the Hebrew are so defective, that they must needs be thus supplied, for the words are these, Have they not found and divided the spoile, a damosell, two damosells to the head of a man; a spoile of divers colours to Sisera, &c. a spoile of two divers colours for the neck of the spoile.

Junius.

V. 31. And the Land had rest 40 years, that is, counting from the 80 years mentioned, Chap. 3. 30.

CHAP. VI.

V. 1.

Lyra.

AND the children of Israel did evill in the sight of the Lord, and the Lord delivered them into the hand of Midian seven yeares. Here is set forth the fourth oppression of Israel by the Midianites, by whom they were spoyled of their goods, and brought to a most poore and miserable estate. Lyra here noteth a difference between that, which is said of their sinning here, and Chap. 4. and Chap. 3. for there it is said, they sinned againe, here onely, they sinned, or did evill, the reason whereof, according to the Hebrewes, was, because by the song of Deborah, as by a most pleasing sacrifice all their former sinnes were done away: but now after this atonement they sin, as formerly they had done, and are scourged. And therefore it is not said, as before, they added to sinne, their former mer

mer finnes still remaining unexpiated. The evill that they did, saith Ferus, was idolatry, as also may bee gathered from the following part of this History, which was evill enough alone to bring upon them this heavie judgement, as being against the first and chiefe Commandement of the Law, and it was the ground of all wickednesse. Touching the Midianites, into whose hands they were delivered, it is to be understood, that there was a twofold Midian, one neare the Red Sea, where Moses his Father in law dwelt, and another neare the Moabites Countrey, Numb. 25. but they were all destroyed, Numb. 31. so that it should seeme that it could not bee this Midian that now oppressed them. But the description of Gedeons pursuing them over Jordan, Chap. 7. 24. and Ch. 8. 4. and of their associates Amalekites, and the children of the east, v. 3. and Ch. 6. 33. evinceth plainly, that this Midian is meant, which was not farre from them eastward, and not the other which was southward. And although all that they could find before were destroyed, yet many doubtlesse fled, and so saved themselves, and afterwards returning to their Countrey, might well increase by this time to a great multitude.

Because of the Midianites, the children of Israel made them dens in the mountains, and caves and strong holds; that is, saith Lyra, dens and caves for the poorer fort, and strong holds for the greater; thus pending themselves up in secret places, to be hidden from the fury of the enemy.

And so it was, that when the Israelites had sowne, the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the East, &c. Of the Amalekites see before, Exod. 17. the children of the East are afterwards said to bee Israelites, Chap. 8. 24. Iosephus calleth them Arabians. They were, as the Midianites, of the posterity of Abraham, sent by him to dwell in the East, Gen. 25. 6. and the Midianites with these their auxiliary Forces, are said to have destroyed and wasted all the increase of the Countrey, unto Gaza, that is, to the furthest part of all, for Gaza was a City of the Philistims, bounding the land of Israel southward. They passed then with their cattell from place to place all the Summer time, feeding up both corne and grasse, and robbing them of all their cattell, from Jordan where they entred, to Gaza, so that no place escaped them, and this they did eight yeares together.

By these Midianites, Ferus mystically understandeth our spirituall enemies, who labour quite to exterminate the Church in like manner by all sorts of persecutions stirring up. 2. At once to spoile us of all the good things, that we have been long gathering, by drawing us to sinne, and from righteousnesse: For when a righteous man turneth from his righteousnesse, and committeth iniquity, all his former righteousnesse shall not bee remembered. 3. To beat downe all beginnings of good in youth, set forth by their treading downe of the Corne newly sprung up.

And the Lord sent a Prophet to the children of Israel, who said, &c. This Prophet, saith Lyra, is commonly held by our Expositors to have been an Angel; and Comestor saith, that the Angel sent to Gedeon, v. 11. was this Prophet. The Hebrewes say it was Phinees, but hee must needs by the course of nature, bee dead long before this, and all that generation of which hee was, is expressly said to have been dead before the first Judge Othniel; yet that opinion that hee was an Angel, is as much to bee disliked as this, because an Angel is no where called a Prophet, as St. Augustine himselfe confesseth, who yet is for this opinion, because an Angel foretelleth things to come, and reproveth sinne, and herein setteth the part of a Prophet, for which in reason hee may bee so called; as well as a Prophet an Angel, because sent by the Lord, which is a thing not unusuall. But because a Prophet, as Lyra hath it, hath things revealed to him in enigmat, but an Angel plainly, and every where else, when an Angel is meant, it is said an Angel, and not a Prophet, it is rather to bee held, that this Prophet was a man, and so the Vulg. Latine hath it, virum Prophetam, and likewise the Hebrew. When the people cryed unto the Lord, this Prophet was sent first, and then an Angel to stirre up Gedeon to become a deliverer; whereupon Ferus well noteth, that because this Prophet reproved the people for their *Ferus.*V. 2.

Lyra.

V. 3.

Ferus.
The Mystry.Ezek. 18.V. 3.
Lyra.
Schol. Hist.Judg. 2. 10.Augustin in Iudic.
6. qu. 31.

Note.

finis, to heare and to profit by reproofe unto repentance for our sins in the time of misery, is to lay a foundation of deliverance. The sending of a Prophet now unto them might seem ridiculous, and that to doe nothing, but reprove them for their sins; but because God will not deliver but the penitent, and to stirre up to repentance, preaching, and reproofing of sinne is necessary, a Prophet is now sent, teaching us by Preaching to seeke the welfare of our State.

V. 11.

And there came an Angel of the Lord, and sate under an Oake in Ophrah, that pertained to Joash the Abiezrite, and his sonne Gedeon threshed Wheate by the Winepresse, to hide it from the Midianites. Wee may gather hereby, that the people being penitent at the reproofe of the Prophet, the Lord was moved to take compassion upon them, and sent this his Angel to stirre up Gedeon, and to helpe him in their deliverance. Ephra was a City where Gedeon dwelt, as wee may see, Chap. 8. 27. There was another City called Ephrata, in the tribe of Judah, otherwile called Bethlehem, but this Ephra was in the halfe tribe of Manasseh, and here the Angel sate under an Oake, having taken to him the shape of a Man. Whereas it is added, this Oake pertained to Joash the Abiezrite, the Vulg. Latine hath it, to Joash the father of the family of Ezri; but in Hebr. and in Greeke there is no mention made of a family, but onely it is said, Joash Abiezri, being expounded the father of Ezri; but it is best rendred as a proper name, the Abiezrite, for Abiezer was a son of Machir, the head of a family in Manasseh, Josh. 17. 2. from whom they of that family were called Abiezrites, see v. 34. and Chap. 8. 2. Gedeon is spoken of, as being of Abiezer. For, by the winepresse, the Vulg. Latine hath, in the winepresse, and so the Hebrew word most properly signifieth; and Gedeon is noted by some to have threshed corne here, because it was a more secret place then a threshing floore, and because hee durst not for feare of the Midianites doe it more openly. If it bee said, how was it secret, when as hee could thence see and talke unto the Angel sitting abroad under an Oake? Answer. It was more secret notwithstanding then a threshing floor, which being the proper place to thresh in, the enemies would most probably have an eye unto, when a place of Winepresses might passe unsuspected. If it be doubted, considering the enemies wasting of all, how Gedeon could now have any corne to thresh? It is to bee thought, that in their generall wasting of all, some particular places escaped. But why did the Angel come to send Gedeon to be a deliverer, when as the Angel himselfe could have destroyed the enemies, and delivered his people? Answer. An Angel indeed destroyed the Assyrians in Hezekiah's time, but now God tooke another order, first to send a Prophet to reprove, then an Angel to point out the man that should be the Deliverer, lastly, this man Gedeon to fight against the enemies, and to save Israel: hereby saith Ferus, figuring out three, Moses, John the Baptist, and Christ; the first being sent to reprove and threaten, the second to point out the Saviour, and the third to save us from our sinnes.

Josephus, Pro
copius, Joſtamus, Cajetan.

2 Kings 19.

Ferus.

V. 12.

The Angel appearing to Gedeon, said unto him, The Lord is with thee thou mighty man of valour. This is spoken to comfort and encourage him, because he was now threshing in feare, to hide it from the Midianites; neither had hee hitherto shewed any such valour, but by this speech it was portended, that hee should shew it, so Lyra, and that through the Spirit of God comming upon him, and filling him with magnanimity and courage. St. Augustine rendreth these words, The Lord is with thee mighty in fortitude; holding, that Gedeon's fortitude is not commended here, but the Lords, who was with him. I see not but that it may bee taken either way; yet because the word גביר here used, is often put for a man; it may best be read so, Thou mighty man of valour.

Lyra.
August. qu. 32.

V. 13.

And Gedeon said, If the Lord bee with us, why then is all this befallen us, &c. Hee complaineth here of miseries, and how that nothing was miraculously done for their deliverance. Because they suffered such things, hee spake as if the Lord were not with them, as the Angel said, and as if hee could not or would not doe so for them, as they had heard hee did in times past for their Fathers. But this was a fault, saith Ferus, seeing the Lords hand is not shortened, but sin separateth betwixt him and his people.

Ferus.
Esa. 59. 1, 2.

And

And the Lord looked upon him, and said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel, &c. that is, the Lord represented by the Angel, looked upon him, Go in this thy might, that is, not bodily, but spirituall by faith, in the might which the Spirit of God now indueth thee with to fight against Midian.

Behold my family is poore in Manasseh, and I am the least in my Fathers house. Gedeon in humility here excuseth himselfe, as unfit for this high office of a Deliverer. For these words, My family is poore, Hebr. is, אלפי הדל my thousand is poore, which Procopius and Augustine expound, as if Gedeon were a Chiliarke, or Captain over a thousand; but nothing else is meant, but the family consisting of a thousand, of which hee was, so the Chaldee Paraphrasi, Theodoret, Pagninus, &c. Josephus understandeth his tribe, Varabius and Cajetan his Chiliad, or the company of a thousand, within which his family was included, according to the distinction made, Exod. 18.

And the Lord said, Surely I will bee with thee and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man. The more Gedeon humbled himselfe, as unworthy, the more the Lord graceth him, who chooseth the poorest and most despicable oft times to confound the mightiest, but not by their owne, but by his power; for, I will bee with thee, saith hee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man, that is, as easily, as if they were all but one man, and they had but one head to be cut off.

Then Gedeon desired a signe, and that the Angel would stay, till hee had prepared a sacrifice, and so hee went in and made ready and brought forth a kid and unleavened cakes and broath, and at the command of the Lord powred them out upon the rock, and the Angel put forth the end of his staffe and touched them, and a fire comming out of the rock consumed them, and the Angel vanished out of his sight. It was not out of unbelieve, that Gedeon asked a signe, but out of prudence, that he might prove, whether hee spake unto him by Gods Spirit, for wee must try the Spirits, whether they be of God or not: yet it is not lawfull alwayes to aske a signe, for to the confirming of old doctrine signes are not to be asked, but only of new revelations. The old doctrines of truth have beene already sufficiently confirmed by miracles, and therefore the Jews asking a signe are called an evill and adulterous generation, and the rich man in hell craving that one might bee sent from the dead to his five brethren, is rejected: thus Fermus, so likewise Hugo, for the Devill can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light. For the sacrifice brought forth by Gedeon to the Angel, in our translation it is called a present, but in the Vulgar Latin a sacrifice, and in the Sept. transl. till I bring forth a sacrifice and sacrifice before thee, and accordingly it is held by Augustine, Theodoret, Lyranus, Tostatus, Mariana, &c. that Gedeon prepared a sacrifice to bee offered unto God by the Angel. And whereas the place did not agree, for all sacrifices ought to be offered in the tabernacle, Lyrus saith, this was extraordinary, and therefore by divine dispensation might bee offered in a place extraordinary. The Hebr. word is, מנחתי, my offering, but it may as well set forth any other gift offered to one as a sacrifice, as Judg. 3. 15. 17, 18. 2 King. 8. 8, 9. and the manner of preparing it by seething the Kid and bringing it thus sodden and the broath sheweth, that it was a dinner prepared for him, whom hee yet knew not, whether he were a man or an Angel, but the Angel made a sacrifice of it, doing wonderfully in his sight for his assurance that hee came from the Lord: unleavened bread was prepared now, because it might more readily be done, as in the like case, Gen. 18. and not because it was a time of the Passeover, as the Rabbins doe hence fondly gather. Gedeon seeing the miraculous burning of the meat and cakes cryed out, as being afraid, because hee had scene an Angel, but the Lord comforted him, telling him that he should not dye. The like feare was afterwards in Manoah Samsons Father, Ch. 13. and it seemeth to have beene generally grounded in the mindes of the Jews by reason of that saying, Exod. 30. 20. No man shall see my face and live. The Angel of the Lord is said before to have gone out of his sight, so that when Gedeon expressed this great feare, he saw him not but, onely heard him speaking unto him.

Then Gedeon built an Altar there unto the Lord, and called it Jehovah Shalom,

V. 14.

V. 15.

Procopius.
Augustine.V. 16.
Fermus.V. 17, 18.
V. 19, 20.V. 21.
Fermus.

1 Ioh 4. 1.

Hugo Card.
2 Cor. 11.August. Theod.
Tostatus.

Lyrus

V. 22, 23.

24.

lom &c. This, saith Lyra, is spoken by anticipation, for hee built it not, till that the Lord had bidden him, v. 26. so likewise Ferus and Cajetan; and that 26. verse seemeth to make for it, because he is bidden to build an Altar upon the rock in the ordered place, and v. 20. it was said before, that the meat and the cakes were laid upon the rocke, that is, as must needs bee understood, in order. Yet Tostatus will have an Altar meant here, which was built before that, but so two Altars must bee yeelded to have beene built in one place which cannot bee. For the setting up of an Altar for sacrifice, besides the standing Altar, it might doubtlesse lawfully bee done by speciall command from God, and an Altar might be built for a monument of Gods singular mercy to his people in their distresse, as there were both these uses of this Altar. Jehovah Shalom, signifieth the peace of the Lord, because there he spake peace to Gedeon, being afraid. The same night the Lord bad Gedeon take his Fathers bullocke and the second bullocke, and having first destroyed the Altar of Baal, to build an Altar upon that rock, and to offer that second bullocke upon it. In our new translation it is, thy fathers bullock, even the second bullocke of seven yeares old, but Hebr. it is, and the second Bullock, &c. being spoken, as if two bullocks were meant: so likewise in the Vulgar Latin, and in the Sept. take thy Fathers fatted bullock and the second bullock, and so it hath anciently beene most commonly understood, that hee was bidden to take two bullocks: but seeing wee read but of one only, that was offered upon the new erected Altar, it may bee demanded, for what cause hee was bidden to take the other? Some thinke, that although the offering of one onely is spoken of, yet the offering of the other also is implied, because that, which hee is expressely bidden to offer, is called the second. But if the Lord had meant, that hee should offer them both, it should certainly have beene so expressely commanded, whereas it is onely said, thou shalt offer the second bullock, &c. If it be demanded, then, to what other end he was to take the first bullock? I suppose, that because it was a bullock prepared to be offered to Baal and fatted for that purpose, the meaning of the Lord was, that hee should take it as an abominable thing and destroy it, as the Altar of Baal in detestation of that idol, and then take a second bullock and offer that up to the Lord, that having done so great an act of zeale against idolatry and made an atonement for sinne by sacrifice, hee might the more auspiciously proceed in his warres against the Midianites. For that question moved and answered by Tostatus, Comestor and others, whose this second bullock was, they holding that it was not his fathers, but the congregations, prepared also for Baal by fattening it 7 yeares, I see no probability of that, and therefore I think rather it was a bullock of his owne, seeing God accepteth not of sacrifices taken by stealth from others, but would have his servants offer to him, as David did, of their owne cost. And throw down the Altar, that thy father hath. Hereby it appeareth that the Father of Gedeon was an idolater, yet God chose the sonne, who happily still worshipped the true God, to doe this great worke, as hee had before chosen Abraham, the sonne of Terah an idolater. But this Altar, which is said to bee of Joash, Gedeons father, seemeth to have been common to the people of that City, and not his peculiarly, because they contend about it when it was broken downe, v. 28, 29. And hereby we may see the greatnesse of the sins that the Israelites lived in, for which they were now so grievously punished.

V. 27. Gedeon, as he was commanded, brake downe Baals Altar, and cut downe the grove, &c. but because hee durst not doe it by day, hee did it by night, taking ten men of his Servants to helpe him in this worke; but in the morning the men of the City seeing what was done, require Joash to bring forth his sonne Gedeon that he might be put to death, who taketh his part, and biddeth, Let Baal plead for himselfe if hee bee a God; at which answer they were appeased, saith Ferus, expecting what Baal would doe against him, and when they saw that he did nothing, they thought that Gedeon was stirred up by God thus to do, and called him Jerubbahal, that is, as Lyra hath it, stronger then Baal, because Baal was was not able to take any revenge upon him for breaking downe his Altar. But the name is composed out of the words used by Joash, If he be a God, let him plead for himselfe, Hebr. יְרֻבְבָּאֵל whence commeth Jerubbaal, an adversary to Baal, or one against whom Baal may contend or plead, as it is expounded, v. 32. 2 Sam. 11. 21. he is called Jurubesheth, an adversary to shame or confusion, that is, to a most vile and shamefull Idol. Joash, Gedeons father, in thus taking his sonnes part, seemeth so to have served an Idol, as that hee was easie to be inclined again to serve the true God, the Idol being destroyed; and happily his sonne had disclosed to him by what authority hee had done such things, whereby he was moved thus to stand for him.

But what meane these words, Hee that will plead for him, let him bee put to death whilst it is yet morning? Junius saith, that Joash useth three Arguments against the men of his City. 1. Because it was a bold attempt in them to take upon them to patronize a God, and to offer themselves as revengers of his wrongs. 2. Because God would bee avenged and strike with death such as pleaded for Baal. 3. Because if Baal were a God, hee could easily bee avenged upon such as wronged him; so that hee taketh these words as threatening death by Gods just judgement to such as stood for Baal, and that forthwith; and according to this, the words may properly bee rendred, Hee shall die yet this morning. The Vulgar Latine rendreth the whole sentence thus, Hee that is an adversary to him, let him die before the next mornings light cometh, that is, saith Lyra, let him bee stricken dead by the power of the God Baal: which Joash spake to stay them from execution, in expectation of some judgement to come from Baal upon Gedeon. But because the word here used is יָלַד for him, and not, against him; I preferre that of Junius, followed in our new translation; and the next words seeme to make for it, If he be a God, let him plead for himselfe; and if not, but an abominable Idol, let him feare death and destruction from God that contendeth for him.

Then all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the children of the East were gathered together, and went over, and pitched in the valley of Jezreel. Gedeon being prepared by God, as hath been said, to smite the Amalekites, &c. now the providence of God worketh to bring them on with speed to their owne destruction. They came maliciously to prey upon the Israelites, and to spoile them, as in times past they had used to doe, as was noted, v. 3, 4, 5. but God had another end at this time, viz. to bring them thither to be all cut off by Gedeon, as they had deserved. And therefore the very name Gedeon was not given him without a speciall instinct from above, for גִּדְעוֹן from whence it commeth, signifieth to cut downe, or to cut off, according to which hee had cut downe the Grove of Baal, and should soon cut off these Barbarians. Jezreel where they pitched, was a City where the Kings of Israel had afterwards a Palace to retire unto for their pleasure, 1 King. 21. 1. when the head City of their Kingdome was Samaria, as both Jerome, Borcardus, and Adrichomius agree, it was situated at the foot of mount Gelboe westward, and was the boundary of Manasseh and Issachar, having a Watch-tower, from whence, seeing the comming of the enemies, they might give notice by fire to all the Countrey about; so that this place was not farre from Gedeons house in Manasseh, v. 15. And from hence there was a prospect throughout all Galilee to Carmel, and the mountaines of Phenicia, and Tabor, and to Gilead beyond Jordan. One saith, that it was 48 miles from Jerusalem northward, and Opbrah where Gedeon dwelt 44 miles from Jerusalem northeast, wherefore Tostatus erreth, in that he saith it was in the tribe of Judah, for that was another Jezreel, Josh. 15.

And the Spirit of God came upon Gedeon, and he blew a trumpet, and Abiezer was gathered unto him &c. What Abiezer was, see v. 11. and not onely the Abiezrites, which were of the same family with him, but the tribe of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphthali came unto him, so that hee had speedily a great Army, even of 32000. as wee may see Ch. 7. 3. yet God spake not of an Army, when he promised that hee should smite the Midianites, but Gedeon knew that the meanes were not to be neglected; and therefore he gathereth these together.

Whether

Junius.

Lyra

V. 33.

Gedeons name.

Adrichomius.

H. B. Patriarchs travailer.

34.

V. 35.

Peru.

whereas the Spirit of God is said to have come upon him, Ferus noteth well, that this was done to make him fit for his high office and calling, that hee might have courage, wisdom and strength accordingly, it being hereby intimated, that God is ready likewise at all times to give every man gifts needfull for the calling, whereunto he hath called him, that none may be discouraged by reason of the weighty workes required at their hands, in the said callings.

V. 36, 37, 38.

Qu.
Tostatus, Tho.
Aquinas, 22. qu.
97. Artic. 2.
Lyra, Origen, Eftim, &c.

Gedeon having gathered together so great an Army, yet feared the enemy, as it seemeth, and therefore for his further confirmation asked a signe of the Lord, first, that the dew might bee upon the fleece of wool in the floore onely and not upon the ground; secondly, another night, that the dew might be upon the ground and not upon the fleece, both which were done accordingly. And about this it is questioned, whether Gedeon sinned not in asking these signes? Some say, that he did, because God had given him a signe before, and made it manifestly known unto him, that it was an angel that talked with him, wherefore he ought not after this to have doubted or feared any more: but others better, that hee sinned not, because he might be moved of God to aske this signe for his owne further confirmation and the confirmation of the people gathered unto him, that they might know, that hee was called of God. Origen saith, that hee asked it for a myserie, Lyra, bearing himselfe upon some familiarity attained with the Lord. And it is certaine, that a man in some extraordinary case may aske a signe without sinne, as Abraham after that God had appeared unto him, and assured him of his favour before, Gen. 15. and Hezekiah, Esa. 38. and Abaz is censured, because hee would not aske a signe. And Gods granting his asking, and no where reproving him therefore doth sufficiently justifie him against all oppugners.

The Myserie of all.

Mytically by Gedeon, wee may understand Christ, of whom hee was a type in his delivering and saving of the people from their enemies: 1. As hee threshed and winnowed Corne, so Christ had his Fanne in his hand. 2. The Lord was with Christ the most valiant of men. 3. Hee was comforted by the Angels before his passion, as Gedeon before his battail. 4. Christ destroyed idolatry, and set up the true Religion, as he built an Altar to the Lord, Baal's Altar being cast down. 5. As Gedeon's Fleece was first wet, and the ground dry, then the ground about wet, and it dry; so Christ comming, the Jewes first had all the dew of grace, and the Gentiles, as the ground about, were altogether without; but since the Jewes are without this heavenly dew, and the Gentiles have it, so Ferus. And Origen long before maketh the same Allegory of the Fleece in more words, applying that of Gedeon's wringing out of the dew into a bowle, to our Lords taking water in a bason, and washing his Disciples feet; but this doth nothing agree, and therefore not worthy the naming, yet doctrine or grace is well compared to dew, see Dent. 32. and to dew comming upon a fleece, Psal. 72. and of grace under this name, wee may read, Esa. 35. Chap. 41. Chap. 43. &c. and both Augustine, Theodoret, Procopius, Jerome, Ambrose, and Chrysostome, are for this Allegory of Gedeon's Fleece.

Ferus.

Origen.

CHAP. VII.

V. 1.

H. Bunt. patriar.
crevaille.

V. 2, 3.

THEN Gedeon, and all the people with him, rose up early, and pitched by the well Harod; so the host of the Midianites were on the north of them, by the hill of Moreh, &c. Where this well Harod was, is uncertaine, but one saith it was in the tribe of Manasseh, 16 miles from Jezreel, in the valley whereof the Enemies lay by the hill Moreh, supposed to bee the high hill Gilboa, and therefore the hill Moreh, or a most high hill, as the Vulg. Latine rendreth it. Harod seemeth to have had the name from that which happened here, the fearfulness of many, for חרוד signifieth to feare, as it is used, v. 3. when they that were fearfull were commanded to depart. And here the Lord causeth Gedeon first to dismiss all such as were timorous and fearfull, for the people with him were too many to deliver Midian into their hands, lest they should vaunt that by their owne power they had gotten the victory, and so 22000 depart from the Army. And all this was done, as Ferm noteth well, that the victory might plainly appeare to come of the Lord onely, and not of any humane power, that he onely may be trusted in and praised, and that wee might learne to flee to him in the time of danger. And herein Gods wayes appeare to be wonderfull, and not like unto mans; for man in the time of War gathereth as great Forces as he can, but God contrariwise diminisheth the number; and finally leaveth Gedeon almost alone, that helping, when things are most desperate, hee may have the greater glory. That the fearfull should depart, was given as a generall Ordinance, Deut. 20. 8. because such may doe more hurt in the battail then good, by discouraging others. But it is a marvaile that so many after such a signe for confirmation, should bee found fearfull; and why were they fearfull, but because they yet beleevd not? so that faith is but of a few, even in Gedeons Army, in Christs congregation. But what meaneth this, Let him depart early from Mount Gilead. Most hold, that this was a mountaine in the tribe of Manasseh, so called from the generall name of the Manassites; because they came of Gilead the sonne of Machir, the son of Manasseh. There was indeed a Gilead on the other side of Jordan, where the other halfe of this Tribe dwelt, so called from the heape of stones placed there, and the Covenant made by it betwixt Jacob and Laban, Gen. 37. but the mount Gilead from whence these men departed, was on this side Jordan, neare the place where Gedeon dwelt.

too

When so great a number of the people were gone for feare, the Lord used another way to distinguish betwixt the 10000 remaining, because they were yet too many, viz. by causing them to bee brought to the water to drinke, for most of them kneeled downe and dranke, but 300 of them lapped the water like dogs, and by these onely God would save Israel, the rest being dismissed. For the manner of their lapping, it was by taking up water with their hands, and so drinking it a little at once out of the hollow of their hand, as appeareth, v. 6. as a dog drinketh a little at once by lapping. For the reason why God would have them againe thus tryed, Josephus and Theodoret say, that hereby it would appeare yet further, who were most basely and timorously minded, that durst not stay to kneele downe and drinke for feare of the enemy, but catch up now a little and then a little, as the dogges about Nilus, who stay not to drinke as they passe by that River, for feare of Crocodiles and other hideous Serpents, but drinke a little and then run away againe and again. And by such, and a few such would God destroy the Midianites, that the greater glory might be to his name. But how this exposition may bee received, I cannot see, so much as all the fearefull were sent away before. Wherefore Lysan, and Ferm, and others better say, that God tryed those whom hee would use in this Warre two wayes: 1 By the strength and stability of the minde, as before v. 3. 2 Of the body at this time; for they that are faint and weary lye down, when they come to take refreshing; but the unwearable stand, and onely stooping put their hands downe to take up a little water for their refreshing, and these are the men whom God chooseth, and not the other. And the mystery hereof is excellent; Out of those that are gathered together to fight under Christs banner, the farre greater company shall bee rejected, for many are called, but few chosen. The rejected are of two sorts: 1 The fearfull and unbelieving, who in time of danger fall away, that is, when the heate of persecution ariseth. Wherefore our Lord warneth all that will bee his Disciples, to deny themselves, and not to feare men; Pastors then that feare to reprove sinne in great ones: Subjects that feare their Princes more then God; and Children and Servants, that thus feare Parents and Masters, shall bee dismissed and separated from Christs elect Company. 2 Such as kneel downe to drinke of the water, that is, have their hearts taken up with the pleasures and profits of this life; as the covetous and the voluptuous, who are most eagerly set upon these things, and lye downe, as it were, at these waters to take their fill of them; but

Ferm.
Note.

V. 4, 5, 6.

Josephus, Theodoret.

Lysan Ferm.

The Mystery.

Matth. 13.

Ferus.

Note.

Gal. 6. 9.
Matth. 24. 14.
August.1 Cor. 1. 27,
23, 29.

Origen.

V. 8.

Josephus.

V. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

Ferus.

but if any thing aduerſe happeneth to them in the world, they are moſt impatient and diſcontented. Theſe are reſected as unfit for the ſpirituall warfare; but they that onely lap theſe waters, that is, uſe worldly things moderately, are received. To this effect Ferus, who alſo applyeth it two wayes more: 1. To aduerſities and ſufferings, wherewith they that are wearyed and faint fall downe at the waters, and are reſected. 2. To doctrine and life, they that lapped the water, taking it up in their hands, ſetting forth ſuch as are inlightened with the knowledge of heavenly doctrine, and ſhew it in the piety of their lives; but they that kneeled downe to drinke, ſuch as have onely knowledge but no piety in their lives. But leaving theſe as not ſo apt, I embrace the former, becauſe waters in thirſt and wearineſſe are a reſreſhing to the body. And here I cannot omit one good paſſage more of Ferus, if they that kneeled downe to drinke their fill of water were reſected, what ſhall they bee that continue drinking wine and ſtrong drinke from time to time, till it inflameth and intoxicateth their braines? But beſides the former myſticall application to pleaſures, I thinke, that ſuch as faint and are weary in any good way, and perſevere not to the end, may well be underſtood by thoſe that kneeled downe to drinke, for wee ſhall reape in due time if wee faint not, and hee that indureth to the end ſhall be ſaved. Laſtly, becauſe they that were choſen, are ſaid to have lapped like dogges, it was hereby ſet forth, as Auguſtine hath it, that the godly whom God chooſeth, ſhould bee accounted vile and baſe in this world, as a dogge is commonly put for that which is baſe and vile: And ſo it is ſaid, God hath choſen the baſe and vile things of this world to confound the noble. Origen by thoſe that come to the waters, underſtandeth ſuch as come to Baptiſme; Others, that feare perſecution, and ſo never take upon them the Chriſtian profeſſion; or becauſe they feare damnation, if they ſhould ſinne after Baptiſme, being ſet forth by thoſe that departed through feare. But ſuch as come to the water of Baptiſme by theſe, amongſt whom ſuch as fall to the ground to drinke, are the earthly minded, and ſuch as are bent by temptations, as languiſhing and feeble, for wee muſt ſtand faſt and ſtrengthen our feeble knees: Others, that ſtand and lappe, putting their hands to their mouths, are the conſtant followers of Chriſt, who gloriſie God with the workes of their hands, and the words of their mouths, and they are aſſimilated to dogges in their lapping, becauſe the dogge is of all beaſts moſt loving to his Maſter, and ſo are they to the Lord, not ſhrinking from him, howſoever they are attempted.

So the people tooke viſtualls in their hands, and Trumpets, and hee ſent away all the reſt of Israel, every one to his Tent, and retained theſe 300 men, &c. Theſe 300 men tooke viſtualls to feed upon, whiſt they ſhould bee fighting againſt, and purſuing their enemies, their Trumpets were not of braſſe, but of hornes, as the word שופרה here uſed, ſignifieth, ſee Levit. 23. 24. and therefore Josephus plainly ſaith, that they took Trumpets of Rams-hornes; and the Septuagint have it, τὰς κρηνας, other Trumpets are called חצוצרות Numb. 31. 6. Numb. 11. 1. and there were but two of them blowne by the Priests onely.

The people with Gedon being thus prepared, the Lord biddeth him in the night to goe downe to the hoſt of Midian, lying in the valley of Jezreel, not farre from which hee then was in mount Gilead; and that he might goe againſt them the more confidently hee firſt biddeth him to goe with his ſervant Phuah to heare what the Midianites ſaid, which hee did; and heard a Souldier telling his fellow, that hee dreamed, that a cake of barley came tumbling into the hoſt of Midian, and overthrew a Tent, which hee by and by interpreted to bee the ſword of Gedon, for into his hands God would deliver that whole Army. Becauſe the Lord would now give another ſigne to Gedon for his confirmation: Ferus gathereth, that hee was yet weake in his faith, and timorous after the other ſignes; but hee ſaith thus without ground, for the Lord having cauſed him to diſmiſſe all his Army but 300, added this ſigne for his further confirmation, now that hee had ſo weak a company about him, of his great grace to- wards wards him, not being requested by him, shewing indeed hereby, that the strongest faith needeth still to be more strengthened, according to that, I beleve, Lord, helpe mine unbelieve: In the dreame, which Gedeon heard related, hee was set forth by a barley cake, to shew, how vile and contemptible hee was in the eyes of the Midianites, and yet by him God made some of them know, that they should be all overthrowne, but not for any good to themselves, but for his comfort, as Balaam prophesied for the good of the Church, and afterwards Caiaphas the High-priest of the Jewes. They knew they should be destroyed, but had no power by repentance to seek the preventing of it, as the wicked now know what judgements shall befall them at the last day, but yet goe on in sin, and so, as it were, to meet their doome.

The Army of Midianites, Amalekites, &c. is said to have lyen, as the grasshoppers for number, but how great a number of men were in this Army is not set downe, onely Ch. 8. 10. it may be gathered, that they were above 135000. unto whom what were 300. with Gedeon? even as a barley cake trundled downe an hill against a tent to overthrow it, & therefore by the similitude hereof they are set forth. For the dreame, it is no doubt, but that both it and the interpretation came of God, because Gedeon was directed by God to come downe and heare somewhat for his encouragement, and therefore Gedeon hearing it worshipped God, and animateth his men, as being now assured of the victory forthwith.

Then hee divided the 300 into three companies, and giving every one a pitcher with a lampe in it, he bade them sound, when he sounded, and doe as they that were with him, and hee did, crying out, The sword of the Lord and of Gedeon. Hee divided them into three, saith Lyra, that they might come upon the Midianites Army in three parts at once, and so terrifie them, as if they had bene beset with three great Armies together. And for the lamps in the pitchers, hee saith, that they were such, as could not easily be put out, but burned still when the pitchers were broken, that shewing no light before and now suddenly appearing about them, accompanied with a strange noise of breaking pitchers, the enemies might be the more dismayed and confounded. All things were here done, saith Ferm, most politickly, that the enemies being amazed might think upon nothing, but immediately to flee away; for the very cunning upon them in the night could not but be a terrour, but much more the noise and the lights accompanied with that cry, The sword of the Lord and of Gedeon, might make them feare, that the Lord was come against them, of whom there was no resisting. And such meanes Gedeon used, although he was certaine of the victory, to teach us to use the meanes of attaining the things which God hath promised.

The time, that Gedeon and his men came to the Midianites campe, was at the middle watch, that is, at midnight, for the watches of the night are three, being each one of three houres.

And they being come about the campe stood still and blew with their trumpets, &c. which was done, that they might seeme onely to be such as went before others to light them to this warre, and so the enemies thinking the warriors already to be come amongst them, might fight one against another instead of an enemy, as they did indeed, and fled away as overcome.

Mystically by Gedeon overcoming his enemies by blowing the trumpet, breaking a pitcher, shewing a light and crying out, The sword of God and of Gedeon, we may understand Christ overcoming our spirituall enemies by the sound of the Word, giving his body to be broken, shewing a light of miracles and by prayer; and by the followers of Gedeon that did likewise, the Apostles and Martyrs of Christ, who were instructed with a light of miracles, and preached, prayed and suffered also in their bodies. And therefore Christs victory being spoken of Esa. 9. 4. this comparison is made, as in the day of Midian. And thus must every Christian overcome, by confessing the truth, mortification of the flesh, the light of a good life and prayer. In that the trumpet was carried in the right hand and the pitcher in the left, it was signified

Numb. 23.
Ioh. 11. 50.

V. 12.

V. 15.

V. 16, 17, 18.

Lyra.

Ferm.

Note.

V. 19.

V. 20, 21.

The Mystery.

Esa. 81.
Psal. 19.

nified, that the word and spirituall things are first and chiefly to be cared for, and then the body. And the victory begun against our spirituall enemies in baptisme must bee prosecuted, till all bee destroyed, as Gedeon ceased not pursuing the Midianites; thus Origen, Gregory, Augustine, Jerom, and Ferus.

V. 22.

1 King. 4. 2.
Hieronym.

The places to which the enemies fled, were Bethshittath, Zareath, and the border of Abelmeholah, unto Tabbath. All these places are unknowne unto us, but onely Abelmeholah, because not spoken of elswhere in the sacred History. Abelmeholah is mentioned together with Bethshan, and other places knowne to bee in the halfe tribe of Manasseh, and therefore by Jerome counted in that halfe of Manasseh on this side Jordan; and hence it may bee gathered, that the other places were not far off from this.

V. 23.

V. 24.

V. 25.

Exod. 17. 6.
Lyra.

Here the men of Israel pursue the Midianites thus fleeing, both Naphtali, Asher, and Manasseh, out of which tribes, and Zebulun they had before assembled unto Gedeon, Chap. 6. 35. Then he sent to the men of mount Ephraim to stop the Midianites passage at Bethbarah and Jordan, and so the two Princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb were taken and slaine, Oreb at the rock Oreb, and Zeeb at the winepresse of Zeeb; Places thus named from the falling of these two Princes in them, as is generally conjectured. There was a rock Oreb, out of which Moses brought water, but that was in the Wildernesse, this place on this side of Jordan, so that it could not be the same, as Lyra noteth. Bethbarah where the Ephraimites tooke the passage, is not certainly knowne where it was, but some hold it to be the same with Bethabara, where John afterwards baptized, a City by Jordan, called Bethabarab, the house of passage, because here the children of Israel passed over Jordan on dry land. But the name is diverse, that being compounded of בית and עבר, this of בית and ברה and so signifying the house of eating, but the same place might be called by both these names, by the one for the passing over Jordan miraculously; by the other, because there they first ate of the fruits of the land of Canaan.

CHAP. VIII.

V. 1, 2, 3.

Note.

Ferus.

Note.

Lyra.

V. 4.

HERE the men of Ephraim, who were last called against the Midianites fleeing, quarrell with Gedeon, because they were not called to the battell at the first. But hee by magnifying them and their facts, and extenuating his owne, pacifieth them. What have I done now in comparison of you? Is not the gleanings of Ephraim, better then the vintage of Abiezer, &c? that is, as hee further expresseth, the victory gotten by them against two Princes Oreb and Zeeb, although they came after, was greater then all the slaughter made by him and his Abiezrites of thousands of the common Souldiers of Midian. Thus a soft answer put away strife, as pride in the Ephraimites made it. They durst not, saith Ferus, appeare whilst the enemies Army was strong, but now they being put to flight, they pretend great magnanimity; and whereas they should have greatly thanked Gedeon as a deliverer of their Country, they contrariwise accuse him; and so it is the manner of this wicked world, to blame them most that have done best, through envie. But Gedeon wisely foreseeing the danger, if now the Israelites should bee divided amongst themselves, is not moved at this indignity, but appeaseth the Ephraimites with good words. And the like did Jephthah attempt, Ch. 12. but they were then so swolne with pride, that they would not bee pacified, but fought against him to their owne ruine. The things that puffed them up, was, first, their preference by Jacob before Manasseh their elder brother: secondly, that famous Captaine Joshua was of Ephraim: thirdly, they had their lot next unto Judah, and were most populous. And of these speaketh Ferus, and Lyra of the first, Gedeon being of Manasseh, the Ephraimites who had been preferred by their father Jacob, disclaimed that a Manassite should goe away with the glory of a great victory without them.

And Gedeon came to Jordan, hee, and the 300 men that were with him faint, and passed over yet pursuing them. In the former Chap. v. 25. it is said, that the men of Ephraim brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb unto Gedeon on the other side of Jordan; but here Gedeon coming to Midian, and going over is first spoken of; and if hee were not before this come to Jordan, how could they bring these heads to him on the other side of Jordan? To this Lyra answereth well, that their bringing of the heads to Gedeon, is related Chap. 7. 25. by anticipation; for it was not done till after Gedeon passing over with his 300 men; that all the relation touching the Ephraimites might bee absolved together; and then the proceedings of Gedeon with others, might bee prosecuted together.

of

Then hee desired some refreshing of the men of Succoth for his fainting Soldiers, but the Princes of Succoth made a mock of his pursuing the Kings of Midian; whereupon hee threatened, when God had delivered them into his hands, to teare their flesh with briars and thornes. Succoth signifieth tabernacles, or tents, and had the name in Iacobs time, from his pitching of his tents there, when he returned out of Mesopotamia. It was a City of the tribe of Gad, and therefore their inhumanity the greater, in that they denied reliefe to their brethren; and that having so well deserved of all Israel, and wearied themselves, and jeopardd their lives in the common cause of the whole Kingdom: wherefore it was no injustice in Gedeon to threaten, and to inflict so sore a punishment upon them.

From Succoth hee goeth with his men to Penuel, but could get no relief, but the like scoffing answer, wherefore hee threatneth to pull downe their Tower. This place had the name from the seeing of God, for here Iacob wrestled with God and prevailed, from whence it was thus called. These men of Succoth and Penuel, saith Ferus, doe most aptly set forth such as deride men outwardly appearing meane and contemptible, of what excellent parts soever they bee, especially if they need their helpe. But as Gedeon and his men did not therefore desist from their calling to which God had called them, so must not wee, but trust in God where humane helpe faileth. And let such deriders and discouragers of the good, expect a Gedeon to come one day, and to take sharp revenge upon them for their contempt.

And Zeba and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hosts with them, &c. Two Princes of Midian being slaine, Oreb and Zeeb, these two yet remained, and with them an Army of 15000 men, for 120000 had been before cut off, and this Army being fled beyond Jordan, is said now to have been secure, because they verily beleeveth that Gedeon would never come over Jordan to pursue them. But hee commeth upon them and discomfitteth all the host, and taketh these two Kings of Midian. Here againe it seemeth that Gedeon and his 300 men by a speciall providence came upon the Midianites in the night, lest being so few, if the enemies had seen them, they should have beene animated, trusting to their farre greater numbers, to have made head against them, and so have made the victory more difficult. That this onset was made also in the night, appeareth, v. 13. for Gedeon returned early in the morning before the Sunne: wherefore his expeditions were admirable, after one nights travaile, when they first routed the Midianites Army, they pursued them all the next day, and being faint and weary, and wanting victuals, yet set upon them againe the night following; and immediately the victory being obtained, returned to Succoth and Penuel, to shew the Midianites Kings in Gedeon's hands, and to take revenge upon them. It is to bee held then that God, who was author of this Victory, did extraordinarily support them in all this, that hee might have the greater praise. For the place Karkor, it is not mentioned in the Vulgar Latine, but both in the Hebr. Chald. and Sept. it is; Ierome saith, there is a Castle at this day called Carcaria, a dayes journey distant from the rock, that is, from Arabia Petraea, as most probably he meant. One saith, that Karkor is a City in the halfe tribe of Manasseb beyond Jordan, from Jerusalem 40 miles eastward. The way whereby Gedeon went was by Nobah and Iokbebah, the first in the halfe tribe of Manasseb also, Numb. 32. 40. and the other in Gad, Numb. 32. 35. beyond Jordan.

Gedeon returning with victory, sheweth to the Elders of Succoth being 77 men, 24.

V. 5, 6, 7.

Gen. 33.

V. 8, 9.

Gen. 32. 30.

Ferus.

V. 10, 11.

V. 12.

Hieronym. in loc. Hebr.

H. Buns. patriarch. travailles.

V. 14, 15.

- V. 16. men, the Kings of Midian, by whom they had upbraided him. And then hee tooke bryers and thornes, and with them taught these men of Succoth. The Vulgar Latine hath it, Contrivit cum iis atque comminuit; and the Hebrew word ענין may bee rendred as well, hee tore them, as Pagnin hath it, as, hee taught them. And so it answereth best unto his threatening, v. 7. although another word ענין, and I will thrise, bee used, and so the Chaldee rendreth it, expressing the meaning to bee, that hee would lay bryars and thornes upon their naked bodies, and so drawing heave threshing instruments over them, not cease tearing them till they were destroyed. If wee follow this reading, hee taught them, the meaning must bee, hee taught them, that his threatenings were not vaine.
- V. 17. And he beat downe the tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the City, because hapely they fled to the Tower to defend it against him.
- V. 18. Then he said to Zeba and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom yee slew at Tabor, &c. Chap. 6. 2. it is said, that the Israelites made them dennes in mountaines, &c. for feare of the Midianites: wherefore it is most probable that at this comming up of the Midianites, the brethren of Gedeon dwelling neare mount Tabor, fled thither to hide themselves, but being espied, were taken and slaine; and the newes hereof comming to Gedeon's eares, hee now maketh this inquiry, that hee might the more justly take revenge upon these two Kings for their death. They answered, that they were like him, and each one resembled the children of a King; and hereby he knew that they were his brethren. Hebr. each one as the forme of a Kings children; whereby it appeareth that Gedeon was a goodly man of person, and so seeming fit for that high dignity to which God had called him. Then Gedeon having first protested, that if they had not slaine them, hee would have spared their lives, biddeth his first borne Jether to fall upon them, but hee fearing to doe it, hee himselfe slew them, as they rather desired: accounting it, as Lyra noteth, both a greater dishonour to die by the hand of a youth, and a more painfull death, because hee could not slay them by reason of his weaknesse for his tender age, but with many blowes. This was done, saith Hugo, when hee was come againe to his owne City Ophrah. And Ferus here noteth, that it was then no vile or base office to put evill men to death, because Gedeon assigned this office to his eldest sonne; and in the books of the Kings wee read, that the chiefe about the King did executions, and by the Law of God, the hands of the witnesses which were honest men, must bee first upon malefactors worthy of death. But now it is counted base out of superstition, partly, because it belongeth to the secular Power, and partly, because they are base persons to whom it is now adayes committed.
- V. 22, 23. Then the children of Israel for this great benefit of deliverance from the Midianites, offer Gedeon and his posterity to reigne over them, but hee refuseth, saying, The Lord shall reigne over them. So saith Hugo, Bishops should not rule as Lords, but labour and goe before the flock in a good example and doctrine, therefore those flatterers lye, that say, the Lord Bishop, &c. so Hugo. But Gedeon in refusing to rule over them, refused not to execute the office of a Judge, which all Deliverers had of course, but to exercise absolute authority as a King, which might bee a foundation of much evill, when as the Subjects for feare of so great a power should bee drawne to any evill. But of the difference between the rule of a King and of a Judge, see at the beginning of this Booke. This offer of the people to Gedeon, saith Ferus, was not without great sinne, and no lesse modesty did shine in him in refusing it. For God had used all meanes to have the glory of this Victory ascribed to him onely, but they give it to Gedeon, as if by his power they had been delivered, making no mention of God. But Gedeon's modest refusall of such honour unjustly offered, is to bee followed by us, in not accepting honours unlawfully put upon us, but rejecting them.
- V. 24, 25, 26. Gedeon having rejected the Kingdome offered, desireth the ear-rings of their prey, which they willingly gave unto him, the weight whereof was 1700 shekels kels of gold, besides ornaments and chaines, and purple rayment, and the chaines about their Camels necks. And hereof Gedcon made an Ephod, &c. What an Ephod is, see Exod. 28. 6. it was a robe for the High-Priest, made of gold, blew, skarlet, purple, and fine twined linnen, girt unto him with a girdle of like matter. St. Augustine here inquireth how so much gold could be employed about so little a worke, and answereth, either that there is a synecdoche in the words, part being put for the whole, Thereof hee made an Ephod, that is, of so much thereof as would suffice; or else he made not onely an Ephod, but a Tabernacle, Ark, and other Priestly garments, to minister in about the Tabernacle, which was a sinne in him, seeing one place onely which the Lord should choose was appointed, in which they should sacrifice. And as Lyra and Ferus have it, Gedcon did this out of a good intent, because the Lord had there appeared unto him, and accepted an offering before at his hands, and there hee had built an Altar, and offered sacrifice by Gods owne Command, Chap. 6. Wherefore it is most probable that hee himselve was the Priest here, and ministred in the Priests garments in Ophrah, as the Priests comming of Aaron did in Shiloh; so Hugo, who also saith, that hee made all Priestly garments, and set up a Tabernacle and Altar in Ophrah, besides that in Shiloh; so likewise Comestor, Tostatus, Theodoret, and others. But these are onely mens conjectures, nothing being written more, but that hee made an Ephod, happily making no use of it, no more then of the Altar, but onely keeping it for a monument of so famous a victory, out of a gratefull minde to God, who was the author of it. But Procopius thinketh that this Ephod made by Gedcon was an Idol, because hee is said to have put it, or, as it is in Hebrew, made it to stand in Ophrah, and all Israel went a whoring after it; but an Ephod, such as the High-priest used, could not stand. But this argument is of little force, for the fleece of wool, Chap. 6. is also said by the same word to be put in the floore. And an Ephod is never put for an Idol, but for a garment either used by the High-priest, which was most rich and costly; or one used by the other Priests or Levites, or by other Persons about holy things, as, 2 Sam. 6. 14. and these were made of fine Linnen, and the word commeth of שָׂרָם superindueret. For the peoples going a whoring after it, that was, as Lyra noteth, according to both Hebrew and Christian Writers, by using it in the service of Idols after the death of Gedcon, who had used it onely in the worship and service of God. And herein some labour to excuse Gedcon from sinne, as Tostatus, Serrarius, Sallianus, and Bonfrerius, both because hee is said to have dyed in a good old age, v. 32. and Hebr. 11. hee is numbred amongst those that were famous for their faith and sanctity; And lastly, because the children of Israel are said immediately after his death to have served Baalim, but during his life they served the Lord, v. 33. But because it turned to the ruine of his house, and was an occasion of sinning to many more, it is plaine that hee sinned herein; so likewise hold Augustine, Theodoret, Lyra, Ferus, &c. Hee had a good intention indeed by thus instituting the service of God in his owne City, to set up a monument of Gods gracious favours towards him and all Israel, who had there appeared unto him, and caused him to set up an Altar, and initiated him, as it were, into the Priestly Office, by commanding him to offer sacrifice there, and because for this service Priestly robes and garments were necessary, hee thought it fit to provide a glorious Ephod, and girdle and brest-plate, with the Urim and Thummim, whereby to consult with the Lord; and to this end gathered together this great masse of Gold, amounting, as one hath counted it, to 1275 l. But because it was against that charge Deut. 12. 5. 16. 5. it was a sinne in him, and turned afterwards to a greater sinne to all Israel, through the idolatry upon this occasion here set up. Wherefore Ferus hence giveth warning to all men to take heed that they fall not, sith Gedcon, and other such holy men have not bin free. And we may note moreover, that a good intention doth not justifie our actions, if they be in any thing against the revealed will and command of God. For those arguments that are brought for his justification. Hee is commended at his death, notwithstanding this fact, because

Aug. Qu. 41. in Jud.

Deut. 12. 5. Deut. 16. 5, 6.

Lyra Ferus.

Hugo Cardin.

Schol. Hist.

Procopius.

Lyra

Tostatus. Serrarius, &c.

August. Theod. Ferus.

H. B. Patriarchs traavailes.

Note.

cause it proceeded from weaknesse, and was not imputed to him; neither doth his being ranked amongst the most worthy, free him from all sinne, because no man liveth and sinneth not. And for the last thing alledged, it doth not follow that hee sinned not, because the people are said after his death to have served Baal; but onely, that neither hee nor they sinned so grossely whilst hee lived, but onely about the place, and person ministring in this Ephod, wherein all the error yet lay. But because this was an occasion of stumbling, and without any direction from God, yea, contrary to the generall Law given, it cannot possibly bee excused from sinne, although the brasen Serpent set up by Moses, and afterwards turned into an occasion of sin, was no sin in him, because it was appointed by God.

V. 28.

Lyra.

This was Midian subdued, &c. and the Countrey was in quietnesse 40 yeares, in the dayes of Gedeon. This, though added after the ruine of Gedeon and his house, spoken of, v. 7. yet is to bee understood as the conclusion of his victorious proceeding before related: For his house did not first come to ruine, and then the Midianites subdued, but after this long time of tranquillity hee died, and then all his house came to ruine, as is after declared, by occasion of this stumbling block by him put in Ophrah. Wherefore that saying, v. 27. This turned to the ruine of Gedeon, and of all his house, is not to bee understood, as though Gedeon in his person were hereby brought to ruine; but the words added, and all his house, are exegetically, shew, what is meant by Gedeon, viz. his house and posterity, for hee is said to have died in a good old age, v. 32. which is never spoken of any that came to ruine, but dyed in peace, and in the favour of God. For the peace of 40 yeares in his dayes, it is to bee understood as that which hath been before spoken in concluding the Histories of other Judges, the time of seven yeares wherein they were oppressed by the Midianites, since Baraks time, being counted into this number.

V. 29, 30, 31.

Lyra.

Ferus.
See Ch. 9. 18.

Gen. 25. 6.

Here is shewed, how the Midianites being subdued, Gedeon dwelt in his owne house and lived to beget 70. sonnes of his wives, who were many, and one Abimelech of his concubine. It was a thing then not unusuall amongst the best to have many wives, and concubines also, which were, as Lyra sheweth, wives also, and not such, as they did unlawfully lye withall, as whores, so that, as Ferus noteth, here is nothing to patronize such impure and wicked living. For concubines were wives, that were servants, and they onely were called wives, that were free women, and had the priviledge of wives in respect of dowry and their childrens inheriting, whereas the children of concubines inherited not, but had onely such gifts, as their father would give them, as it is said of the concubines of Abraham, that he gave them gifts, and sent them away from his sonne Isaac.

Note.

For the number of Gedeons sonnes being so many, and Abimelech in particular, these things are here set downe to prepare to the history following Ch. 9. of their destruction, that their ruine for his one fault about the Ephod might be the more remarkable, and that their houses shall now continue long without doubt, when they have a very numerous issue, for they may all be soone cut off.

V. 32, 33, 34

Ferus.

Here Gedeon dyeth, and after his death, the children of Israel fall to idolatry and forsake God againe, and ill requite Gedeon in his children for all his kindnesse and good deserts towards them. Gedeon had beaten downe the Altar of Baal, but they now set it up againe, and maketh Baalberith their god, the Vulgar Latin hath it, made a covenant with Baal that hee should be their God: according to which, as some note, they did not onely serve Baal, as in times past, but growing now more mad upon that grosse idolatry they bound themselves by covenant, that this Baal should be their god for ever. The Sept. have it, they made Baalberith a testament, that he should be their god. And indeed Berith signifieth a covenant, and Baalberith, the Lord of the covenant, and happily it was so called, because an idoll, that who so served bound themselves solemnly by covenant to serve him for ever, which other translatours respecting rendred the words not verbatim, but according to this sense. And how ill they requited Gedeon, the chapter following doth declare.

Mytically

Mystically by Gedeon chasing his enemies, and comming to Succoth, and being mocked, and then to Penuel, and mocked there also and despised as a man of no might, wee may understand Christ derided both by the common sort of Jews, and by the Priests and Scribes. But as Gedeon went manfully on and subdued his enemies and then came againe and destroyed those mockers, so Christ conquered over all hellish powers in his death, and then returning with his just judgement destroyed the Jews and brake downe their Tower in Penuel, that is, their temple, the place of Gods presence, as the word penuel signifieth, the face of God.

The Mystery
Lyra

CHAP. IX.

After the death of Gedeon, his sonne Abimelech, whom hee had by his Concubine of Schechem, fought ambitiously by the helpe of the Schechemites to be King over Israel, and prevailed so farre that he obtained money out of the house of Baalberith to hire a band of men, and with them went and slew all his brethren at Ophrah, except Josham, that hid himselfe, and then by the men of Schechem and of Millo he was made King. A wicked sonne most unlike unto his godly Father both in seeking the Kingdome, which hee refused, and in so cruelly murdering his brethren. Hee useth two arguments to move the Schechemites. 1. Because it was better, that one should reigne over them, then 70. brethren all together, which would breed a great confusion. 2. Because hee was their bone and their flesh, so that his honour would be their honour, being so neerely allyed unto them, and they should be sure, as in nature hee was bound, that hee would chiefly seeke to promote their welfare, especially if by their meanes hee obtained the Kingdome.

And they gave him 70 pieces of Silver out of the house of Baalberith, wherewith Abimelech hired light and vaine persons. It seemeth by this, that the house of their Idol was their common Treasury, so greatly were they already addicted to Idolatry, and so great confidence did they put in this false God. For 70 pieces of silver, the Vulg. Latine hath, 70 pondo argenti, but Hebr. it is onely 70 of silver, and likewise in the Sept. and Chald. which are commonly understood to bee 70 shekels of silver. But because this may seem to be too small a summe to hire a sufficient number of men to obtaine a Kingdome, some thinke, that so many pounds of silver are rather meant, and some so many Talents. The Rabbins say, that by such a number of silver shekels are meant in the Pentateuch, pounds in the Prophets, and talents in the Hagiographa; and that the booke of Judges is one of the bookes of the Prophets: which if it were so, 70 pounds must bee meant here. But because this rule is uncertaine, it is best to understand shekels here, and if it shall seeme too small a summe to hire Souldiers, it is to bee understood, both that a little money was more by farre in those dayes for the hiring of men, then a great deale now; and the men hired by Abimelech must bee considered, they were vaine persons, and needy, and therefore such as might bee hired for small wages, in hope of better preferment, and some booty to bee gotten at the intended execution; and that they were drawne as well by a desire of innovation, as by silver. For vain and light persons, whom Abimelech is said with this money to hire, the Vulg. Latine hath, inopes & vagos; and the first word in Heb. properly signifieth empty, and the other light, that is, either poore men empty of money, or of grace, and inconstant, lightly drawn any way, and so fit for such a wicked designe.

With these men Abimelech went to Ophrah, and slew his 70 Brethren all upon one stone; most probably striking off their heads, their necks being laid downe upon it. Thus in the most horrible sinne of fratricide hee began his Kingdome, as the barbarous Turkes have long done, that there might bee no competitors of the Kingdome. But as hee begun in blood, so hee miserably died, v. 54.

Then the Schechemites and the house of Millo made him King, By the plaine of the

V. 1.
V. 2.
V. 3.
V. 4.

V. 4.

Parabola Arias
Montanus, Sa.
Sallianus.

V. 5.

the pillar in Shechem. The Vulg. Latine by the Oake that stood in Shechem; so likewise the Sept. and Hebr. it is מצב אשר בשכם by the standing Oake, or Plain which is in Shechem. For the word מלון significeth an Oake or a Plaine indifferently; and מצב any standing thing as well as a Pillar. But because we read no where of any Pillar in Shechem, and it agreeth not so well to say, they made him King by the Plain, as by an Oake standing in Shechem; I rather subscribe to the Vulgar Latine herein. But whereas, for all the house of Millo, it hath, all the families of the City of Millo, there is more supplied then in the Hebrew, and it is a question whether Millo were a City, or some particular place about Shechem, because we read no where of any such City, but onely of a very deep and low place between Mount Sion and Moriah, called Millo, 1 King. but that could not bee this Millo, because it was in Jerusalem, this neare Shechem, and by some thought to bee a place where many people dwelt, called the Tower of Shechem, hereafter in this Chapter, v. 47. for it was not in Shechem, as appeareth, because Shechem was first destroyed and sowne with salt, and then the news of it comming to them of this Tower, who are said to have been a thousand men and women, they fled to an hold of Baalberith, and there were by Abimelech and his men burnt to death, according to the judgement called for against the men of Shechem and of Millo by Jotham Gedeon youngest sonne, v. 20. Wherefore the event answering his imprecation in the inhabitants of this place called the Tower, being a distinct place from Shechem, although under the jurisdiction thereof, as the name implyeth, maketh it most probable that it was the same with Millo, which because it signifieth fulnesse, might be so called from its being so full of inhabitants.

Serrarius.

V. 7, 8.

V. 9, 10, 11, &amp;c.

Ferm.

The Morall.

When Jotham the onely sonne of Gedeon (who had escaped, v. 5. when all his brethren were put to death) heard that they had made Abimelech King, hee went and stood upon mount Gerizim, and cryed out to the men of Shechem, saying, The trees went to anoint a King over them, and they said to the Olive, Come and reign over us, &c. Mount Gerizim was neare to Shechem, so that the men of Shechem might hear him speaking, but could not easily come to him, by reason of the steepnesse of the Mount on that side. The thing pronounced by him with so high and lowd a voice, was a tale or fable of the trees that would needs set a King over them; by trees the men of Israel being understood. The first desired for a King was the Olive, the second the Fig-tree, the third the Vine, who all refused, the fourth the Bramble, who accepted of this offer. By the Olive full of fatnesse were set forth Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, &c. full of the riches of grace; by the Fig-tree Moses, Joshua, and other Judges, sweet for their meeknesse, charity, and beneficence; by the Vine, Gedeon, through his faith and vertue chearing God and men; lastly, by the Bramble, Abimelech, the worst, and the most unworthy of all, for hee, as the Bramble, yeelded no good fruit, but was worthy to bee cut downe and cast into the fire. Yet when as all the rest in humility refused to bee Kings, and Gedeon in particular, to whom it had been offered, Abimelech ambitiously sought it, and attained to it, being unquiet, prickie, and cruell. And this hath been the manner of wise men, both amongst the people of God, and the Heathen, by invented Fables or Parables, the more significantly to expresse other things, that the deeper impression might thus be made in the minds, of the rude and ignorant, and they might be taught wisdom, out of whose minds the sayings of the wise would otherwise soone depart, neither could they bee so capable of instruction. For the Morall of this, it sheweth, 1. That the godly are like unto fruitfull trees, the wicked like briars that bear no fruit, but tear and scratch those that come neare them. 2. That men naturally desire things hurtfull for them, of which they have no need, as the trees had no need of a King. 3. That the best men are most humble and content with that estate in which God hath set them, neither doe they seeke worldly honours, unto which they are not called: and the worse and more wicked any are, the more ambitious, bold, and presumptuous they bee. 4. That such onely as be wise, faithfull, and milde ought to have domination; hitherto Ferm. Lyra following ing the Hebrews; understandeth by the three former, Othniel, Deborah, and Gedeon, to all which the Kingdom had been offered; although it be not expressed, but onely touching Gedeon; and others hee saith, understand the other sonnes of Gedeon; some of which were as the Olive, fat in riches; some as the Fig-tree, sweet in conditions; and others as the Vine, fruitfull in children; but none of them was made King, although more noble by birth, for they came of free women; but the bramble Abimelech, the most base of all, was advanced by the Shechemites; because hee was their flesh and their bone. But because the brethren of Abimelech were all cut off by the help of the Shechemites, it agreeth not so well to understand them by the Olive, Fig-tree, and Vine, to which the Kingdom was offered, but rather the three to whom it is applied by Lyra. For the saying of the Vine, Shall I leave my Wine, wherewith I beare God and man? this of the Wines chearing of God, saith R. Solomon is so spoken, because the Levites did not at the time of sacrificing sing the praises of God, untill that the drinke-offering, which was of Wine, was powred out upon the Altar. Or, as Ferns hath it, to set forth the great refreshing that is in Wine, so that not onely man drinketh of it and is cheared, but God, as it were, in his drinke-offerings, when by his holy fire he consumeth it, being well pleased herewith. Other Expositions are also brought by some, as that by God Christ might be meant; or the false Gods which they worshipped, who were thought by Idolaters to eat, and to drink Wine, as Bel was; but I rest in the former.

And if not, let fire come out of the bramble and devoure the Cedars of Lebanon; that is, if the bramble Abimelech being made King, yee doe not quietly submit unto him, but stirre against him, this shall turne to the destruction of the very Cedars, that is, of the Princes and Elders of Shechem. Isidore saith, that rhymnus a bramble, the word here used is parvus dumus, which being much shaken with the winde, a fire commeth out of it. And this is accordingly applied by way of imprecation.

Let fire come out from Abimelech and devoure the men of Shechem and Millo, and a fire come from the men of Shechem and devoure Abimelech. Of fire coming from the bramble, many others write also, as Tostatus, Mercerus, Forsterus, Carthusianus ex Iosepho, &c.

When Abimelech had reigned three yeares over Israel, God sent an evill Spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem, &c. For Jatham hee is said in the meane season to have run away and dwelt in Bera, that is, saith Adrichomius, in the tribe of Dan; but Bonferrius, in Judah; Junius, in Simeon, citing J. sb. 19. 8. H. Bunt. Patriarchs travailes, saith it was in Judah, 10 miles from Jerusalem westward; wheresoever, it seemeth that in this place he was safe from Abimelechs tyranny; and therefore although he be said to have reigned three yeares over Israel, yet it was not over all Israel, but a part of Israel; viz. Shechem and some other bordering places. For the evill Spirit sent, Hugo saith that it was the Devill, now permitted by God to disturbe the Peace between Abimelech and the Shechemites, that they might all come to destruction, as they had deserved, by their ingratitude towards Gedeon, and the shedding of so much innocent blood of his children. For God hath the Devill tyed up, as a Shepherd a dogge, that hee may not runne amongst the Sheep to devoure them, but for horrible wickednesses hee letteth him loose, as at this time, and so hee soweth the seeds of discord amongst them. St. Augustine moveth a question whether this evill Spirit were sent by God, or onely permitted, and concludeth that it is not absurd to hold, that hee was sent to take revenge upon sinne. And it seemeth indeed to bee no more then a bare permission, even an effectuall sending of the evill Spirit, who is the Spirit of contention, to stirre up this strife amongst them to their ruine. And this was just in God, the revenger of wrongs, at whose liberty it is to take what way hee pleaseth to punish the wicked. Or by this evill Spirit wee may understand the Spirit of hatred against Abimelech, in consideration of his fore-passed tyranny and unworthinelle, making them now to seeke his deposing; whereupon a malignant Spirit against them was stirred up in him, and so they attempted on both sides mutually their owne destruction, that

Lyra.

V. 13.
R. Solomon.

V. 15.

Isidor.

V. 20.

V. 22.

V. 21.
Adrichomius.

Hugo Gard.

August. Qu. 45.

V. 24.

that the blood of the 70 sonnes of Gedeon might come upon them all, where his sons slaine are called 70, as also v. 18. although Jotham, who was one of them escaped, and so there wanted one of this number; and this is thus said, for the rotundity of the number, as is usuall in other like passages of Scripture, the one that escaped their hands, being as it were none, and their purpose was to have killed him also.

V. 25.

And the men of Shechem set liers in waite for him on the tops of the mountains, and they robbed all that came by that way, &c. They repenting that they had made Abimelech King, now worke treason against him, seeking by Forces placed for the purpose to cut him off: so mutable are the mindes of the people, and therefore such as are carryed by their honouring of them, do build upon a most fickle foundation, that all wise men will take heed of. These Forces thus set to waite for Abimelechs comming, whilst heed-layed, as all unruly Souldiers doe, make a prey of the Passengers.

Note.

V. 26.

And Gaal the sonne of Ebed came with his brethren to Shechem, &c. Who this Gaal was, it is not known, but certainly he was a man ambitious of honour, and one that by his comming made them the more confidently to proceed in their rebellion, for it is said, that they put their trust in him; and now it being their Vintage time, they went boldly out, and gathered their grapes, and made Wine, and were merry in the house of their God Baal, eating and drinking, and cursing Abimelech; shewing hereby, now that they had gotten them such a Captaine, how light they set by him: the Vulg. Latine hath it, They went out into the fields, wasting the Vineyards; that is, saith Lyra, the Vineyards of Abimelech in contempt of him; but Hebr. there is no word signifying wasting, but the cutting downe of grapes, and that not in his, but in their Vineyards.

Lyra.

Benferrius.

Wherefore the Latine translation is not right herein, as the Jesuite himselve confesseth. And as croneous is it, v. 24. before-going, To requite the wickednesse in killing the 70 sonnes of Jerubbaal upon Abimelech their brother, and the rest of the Princes of Shechem which holpe him: whereby it may seeme, that this was the thing which the Shechemites aimed at in their revolting from Abimelech, whereas indeed according to the Hebrew verity, it was a Divine providence, that aimed in this revolt at the paying home both of Abimelech and of the Shechemites according to their deserts. And v. 28. whereas Hebr. it is, Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that wee should serve him? is not hee the sonne of Jerubbaal? and is not Zebul his Officer? serve the men of Hamor the father of Shechem. The Vulg. Latine hath it, Is not hee the sonne of Jerubbaal? and hath set Zebul his servant Prince over the men of Hamor the father of Shechem? But in this difference the Septuagint agreeth with the Latine, and a better sense seemeth to make for it, then can be in the other. For is it likely that Gaal in disswading them from serving Abimelech, would move them to serve the men of Hamor, when as, v. 29. hee plainly sheweth that he would have the dominion himself? And who were the men of Hamor but the Shechemites, and how could they be exhorted to serve themselves? Junius in resolving this, saith, the scope of his exhortation is, that they should not suffer themselves to bee in a worie condition then the inhabitants of that City of old were in the dayes of Hamor, who was as a father to them. But then it should have been said, serve as the men of Hamor, and not serve the men of Hamor. Wherefore I must needs rather subscribe to the Vulg. Latine and Septuagint herein, because without pricks, as the Hebrew sometime went, before the Masoreth, the word וַעֲבָדוּ here used may well bee rendred, his servant. And thus rendred it agreeth best, because Abimelech regarded them so little, that he set a base fellow, a servant of his over them, and lived not amongst them himselve, there was no reason why they should endure his reigne any longer. And he calleth the Shechemites the men of Hamor, not for that they came of Hamor, but from Hamor the father of Shechem, to commend the antiquity of that City, because his history was well knowne, and that this City stood in Jacobs dayes. Touching the former words, Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem? the meaning is, is not Abimelech a base man, that came of a Maid-servant, and by murder attained to the throne? and is not Shechem a great City

Gen. 34.

Junius.

City and famous, and therefore unfit to be under his dominion? yea, is he not the son of Jerubbaal, who was neither of us, nor a friend, but a deadly enemy to our God Baalberith, and shall we then serve him?

Would to God this people were under my hand, then would I remove Abimelech: And hee said to Abimelech, Increase thine Army and come out. The Septuagint, And I would say to Abimelech, Increase thine Army and come out; but Hebr. it is, and hee said, that is, as Vatablus hath it, Gaal said thus vauntingly in the absence of Abimelech, by a Prosopopeia speaking to him as present. The Vulgar Latine, And it was said to Abimelech. Pagninus, dixit quispiam Abimelech: but the first is best, because Zebul the Governour of the City under Abimelech, hearing these words of Gaal, sent secretly unto him, to certifie him thereof, v. 30, 31. and then most probably did Abimelech first heare of it; and all this while, saith Lyra, did Zebul make a shew to Gaal, as if he had been on his side.

But he sent privily to Abimelech to come against the City with his Army, and to lye all night in the fields, and early in the morning to assault it, who did accordingly, and lay in wait against Shechem with foure Companies. Then Gaal standing in the gate, they arose and came towards the City, and Gaal at the instigation of Zebul went out and fought with them; but was beaten and chased, and many of his men overthrowne. The place to which Gaal sent to Abimelech, is held to be Ophrah, where his father Gedeon dwelt, 10 miles from Shechem, v. 37. For these words, One Company commeth from the middle of the Land; the Vulgar Latine hath it, de umbilico terre, but the navell is put for the middle, because it is in the midst of the body: the Sept. have more words, By the sea from the contiguous navel of the earth.

Unto these words, And Abimelech chased him, and hee fled before him, the Vulg. Latine addeth, and hee drove him into the City, and this may seem to have been so said, because v. 41. Zebul is said to have thrust out Gaal and his brethren that they should not rest in Shechem, wherefore they entred in with the men of Shechem fleeing, for if they had been kept out, they had at that time been all slaine. Thus wee see that the union amongst wicked men founded in sin, continueth not, but soone breaketh out through Gods just judgement into most deadly enmity. And againe, that the most wicked may prevaile in their Wars for a time, as did Abimelech, for the punishment of other wicked men, themselves receiving their just reward ere long, as hee also did, and the Beast in the Revelation.

And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah; and Zebul thrust out Gaal, &c. Here is shewed when the battaile was ended that day, where Abimelech with his men rested till the next day, viz. at Arumah; the Vulg. Latine Ruma, which is the same, saith Jerome, with Arimathea, it was doubleffe a place neare Shechem, because he was to renew the warre against it the next day. The word יושב rendered, hee dwelt, signifieth also, hee sate, and so the Vulg. Latine hath it, and more aptly, because of his short stay there. As for Gaal, Zebul had so perswaded the Shechemites against him, for his battaile so ill fought that day, that hee was not suffered, nor his brethren, to rest at Shechem so much as that night, but was immediately expelled, so Iosephus: so that Zebul, who had before dissembled amity with Gaal, now shewed plainly his hostile mind against him for his pride, treachery, and vain-glory.

The next day the men of Shechem comming out to fight with Abimelech, hee divided his Army into three parts, and hastening with one part to the gate, hee appointed the other two to fight in the fields, and so entred the City, slew all the people, and beat down the City, and sowed it with salt, which last thing was done in token of utter desolation, because salt maketh ground barren. So that hereby Abimelech shewed his hatefull mind against his owne City, not willing that ever any people should inhabite there againe, for inhabitants are, as it were, the fruits of a City: that Milaine in Italy was served likewise, Anno 1162. Signinus writeth. Whereas it is said here, that the people went out of Shechem next day into the fields, Iosephus and Procopius say, that they went to their Grape-gathering, thinking that Abimelech had been gone. But this is altogether

V. 29.

Vatablus.

Pagninus.

Lyra.

V. 30, 31, 32.

V. 33, 34.

V. 35, 36, 37,

38, 39, 40.

H. Ewting Patria. wavailes

Note.

V. 41.

Iosephus.

V. 42, 43, 44.

Signinus de regno Italia. Iosephus. Procopius.

altogether improbable, because Abimelech having obtained the victory the day before, would not in all likelihood cease to prosecute it the next day, till that he had destroyed such Rebels. Wherefore it is rather to be held, that they came out to battaile, if they could meet with him, trusting to their number; and therefore Abimelech with all care ordereth the battaile against them accordingly: unlesse it shall be thought, that the Shechemites supposing Abimelech to be pacified by the thrusting out of Gaal, went without feare about their husbandry.

V. 40.

V. 47, 48, 49.

Adrichomius.

V. 50.

V. 51, 52,
53, 54, 55.

V. 57.

Note.

The Mystery.
Isidor.

Deut. 27. 12.

The City of Shechem being thus ruined, they of the Tower of Shechem hearing it, flee to the house of Basberith, and are there burnt together with that Hold to the number of 1000 by Abimelech and his men cutting downe and bringing boughs of trees for that purpose. And these, as hath been already shewed, were most probably the men of Millo, that had holpen to make Abimelech King. Mount Salmon, from whence this wood was taken, was neare Shechem, as Adrichomius hath it; and hereof it is spoken, Psal. 68. 14.

Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and fought against it, and tooke it, &c. After that God had used Abimelech to execute judgement upon the Shechemites and the men of Mill, now it is shewed how he also was judged for his tyranny. Approaching to the gate of the Tower of Thebez, to which the inhabitants fled, to set fire upon it, as hee had done upon the Tower of Shechem, a woman cast downe a piece of a millstone upon his head, and brake his skull, and then his Armour-bearer slew him, as hee commanded him. Thebez is thought to have been a Colony of the Shechemites, as Millo was, or the tower of Shechem. Adrichomius saith, it was but one mile distant from Shechem. Wherefore the Shechemites and the men of Millo being destroyed, Abimelech hastened to the destruction of this Place also, that he might not leave any thing pertaining to the Shechemites undefaced. But here he miserably perished, according to the curse of Josham, as is noted, v. 57. both touching him and the men of Shechem, that had aided him in so unnaturall and cruell a murder, of which curse see v. 20. where, because as a fire is called for to come from Abimelech against the Shechemites and the men of Millo to devoure them, so from the Shechemites to devoure Abimelech, it appeareth that the people of Thebez belonged to them. So judgement may be deferred, but at length it is certainly executed upon the heads of all the wicked, and the curse of the righteous against such taketh effect; so the curse of Josua, Josb. 6. 26. tooke effect, 1 Kings 16. 34. and the curse of Elisha, 2 Kings 2. 24. and there be many examples of Parents cursing their wicked children, as Noah cursed Canaan.

Mytically by Abimelech, Isidor understandeth Antichrist, who reigneth over vaine and light persons, as the Bramble, and in the end, both hee and they goe to destruction: But neither the Olive, Vine, nor Figtree will reigne over such, that is, neither the Spirit of Grace, the Vine Christ Jesus, nor the Law, set forth by the Figtree planted in Gods Vineyard. The 70 sons of Gedeon slaine by Abimelech, set forth the Nations of the world divided into 70 Languages, amongst whom Antichrist worketh great destructions; but Josham escapeth and standeth upon Mount Gerizim, thence prophesying the destruction of Abimelech, &c. by whom the remnant escaping the fury of Antichrist, are set forth; but neither can they escape or prophetic, but by getting up to the top of blessing, that is, by an high degree of faith and vertue, for Gerizim was appointed by Moses to pronounce the blessing there.

CHAP. X.

V. 1

AND after Abimelech there arose to defend Israel Tolah the sonne of Puah, the son of Dodo, a man of Issachar; the Vulg. Latine hath it, The sonne of Puah, the Uncle of Abimelech, taking Dodo for an appellative, signifying his Uncle, and not for a proper name, and because Abimelech was last spoken of, presuming, that by his Vncle was meant Abimelechs Uncle. But in this reading the word word sonne in the second place is left out, which is in the Hebrew, which being supplied, thus, sonne of Puah, sonne of his Uncle, would make it without sense, besides that this Tola is said to have beene of Issachar, but Abimelech by his father of Manasseh, and so likewise most probably was his Uncle. I am not ignorant, what they answer to this last, that defend the Latin translation: but that of omitting these words, the sonne, cannot be answered. Take wee therefore Dodo for a proper name of Tolah his Grand-father. From what this Tola defended or saved Israel, it is not said, or his successor Jair. For no enemies are said in their times to have oppressed Israel. It is therefore to be held, that Abimelech being by Gods just judgement taken away, the kingdome set up by men ceased, and was of no continuance, but yet God was not wanting to his people, but immediately raised them up a Judge, according to the forme of government by him constituted, and hee being dead, another, both which according to their office countelled and directed the people in the right way, and were ready to defend them against their enemies if any should have risen up against them, and even by this they saved them, that they kept them from idolatry, as appeareth v. 6. for after these two it is said, that Israel sinned againe, implying that in their dayes they were kept from serving Baalim, and consequently from the oppressions of their enemies, and if not all the time of Jair, as I shall shew v. 8. yet hee kept them from sinning so publikely, and for his sake they were spared from judgements. From all which we may gather both that the acts of men against Gods ordinance are vaine, and shall soone come to nought, as the Kingdome set by the Schechemites did, and also, that the Governour or Prince, that keepeth his people from idolatry, saveth them as well as he that fighteth for them, and therefore the word לחוש is here used, v. 1. There rose up after Abimelech to save Israel, Tolah, &c. Whereas he is said to be of Issachar, Ferus noteth well, that hee was of an obscure tribe, and most probably a meane man, but Jair, his successor a great man, for he had 30. sonnes, that had each one a City of his owne, and rode as Princes. Thus it seemeth good unto God sometime to preferre to the highest office meane men, and sometime noble men, that promotion might be acknowledged not to come from the east or the west, as the Psalmist hath it, but that God raiseth them up as he pleaseth, & by every one be praised accordingly. Tolah is said further to have dwelt in Shamir of Mount Ephraim: This Shamir, saith Junius, was not that mentioned, Josh. 15. 48. for that was in Judah, but a place in Ephraim bordering upon Issachar. And although he was of Issachar, being now called to the office of a Judge, he placed himselfe here, that he might dwell most commodiously for the people, and be nearer for Jerusalem, this Shamir being but 12. miles from it. He judged Israel 23. yeares, that is, appeasing the tumults at the end of Abimelechs reigne, restoring the true Religion, & administering justice according to Gods Laws. How he or Jair came to this office, it is not said, whether by the election of the people, or extraordinarily appointed of God. The last way is most probable, because all other Judges hitherto were extraordinarily stirred up, and whilst the Judges ruled, it is said, that God reigned over them, and therefore without doubt hee appointed his Deputy by giving his holy Spirit, and such gifts necessary for government, which were not in any other man, to him, whom hee would advance, as made it appeare to all men, that he was chosen of God, thus drawing the people to obedience.

And after him arose Jair a Gileadite, and hee judged Israel 22 yeares. The Gileadites were of Manasseh, see Josh. 17. 1. One saith, that hee was a man of great esteeme in Israel, but lame on both his feet, but whence he had this I cannot tell. Hee had 30 sonnes, that rode upon 30 Ass-colts, and they had 30 Cities, called Havoth Jair, wee read of Havoth Jair built by Jair, the sonne of Manasseh, and therefore thus called, the Cities of Jair, Numb. 31. 41. But these, saith Hugo, were other Townes of the same name, and that Jair another man living long before this, and were 60 in number. Bonsfrevius contendeth, they were some of them, having now anew the same name imposed upon them, but the former is to be preferred. For the Ass-colts, upon which they are said

Not.

Ferus.

Junius.

H. Bunting Pa.
ria. travailles.
V. 2.V. 3.
H. Bunt. patriar.
travailles.

V. 4.

Hugo Cardin.
Bonsfrevius.

Lyra.

Cajetan.
Hugo Card.

V. 6.

V. 7.

V. 8.

Junius.

V. 9.

V. 10.

V. 11, 12,
13, 14.

Rabbin.

Lyra.

Joh. 11. 51.

to ride, it is to be understood, saith Lyra, that the Hebrew word signifyeth onely pullos, that is, young ones, and not the young of Asses, wherefore the Hebrew Doctours understand hereby young horses; and Cajetan following this saith, that they rid upon horses, as being the more honourable. Hugo Cardin: Horses, or Asses, or Mules, that come of both. But the word עֵרָא here used is not any where put for any other, then an Ass-colt, and amongst the Jewes it was an honour to ride upon such, neither were they permitted to use horses, but when they tooke them, they houghed them, Josh. 11. 6. 2 Sam. 8. 4. see upon Josh. 11. Wherefore they were young Asses, as all translations agree, and Pagninus expoundeth the word.

After the death of these two Judges related, the apostasie of the children of Israel againe to idolatry is set forth, and their divers oppressions hereupon, but chiefly by the Ammonites. They served Baalim and Asteroth, of which see before Judg. 2. 13. These were the gods of the Syrians and Sidonians, besides which are reckoned up the gods of Moab, that is, Chamos, and of Ammon, that is, Moloch, and of the Philistims, that is, Dagon, so that they sinned now by all kinde of idolatry, which they learned from the neighbouring nations. And therefore even from some of those peoples, the Philistims and Ammonites, did God bring a grievous scourge upon them. That yeare they oppressed the children of Israel: 18 yeares all the children of Israel, that were on the other side of Jordan in the land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead, Hebr. that yeare, the 18 yeare even all the children of Israel on the other side &c. Junius therefore hath it, that yeare, I say the 18. yeare, but the Vulgar Latin, they were oppressed 18. yeares: but the word in Hebrew is שנה yeare, not שנים yeares. And if after the death of Jair they were oppressed 18. yeares, before that Iephthab delivered them, and hee judged Israel but 6 yeares, Ch. 12. 7. forasmuch as the number of the yeares of their oppression were many more, and so cannot come under those yeares of Iephthab, according the reckoning, which wee have before shewed must be made Ch. 3. 11. to iustifie the yeares reckoned, 1 King. 6. 1. here will be a surplusage of almost 18 yeares above the number set downe, 1 King. 6. 1. and so that account cannot be true: wherefore this place is not to be understood of 18 yeares oppression, but of one yeares, which yeare yet is said to be the 18th. but from whence is not determined, but if I may spend my conjecture I think, that the time is meant, when they began againe to revolt from God to idolatry, which was 17 yeares before Jair dyed, but because hee was godly, and fought what hee could, to repress this wickednesse, the judgements due therefore were hitherto kept away, but now the 18. yeare after they began thus shamefully to revolt, hee being dead, and idolatry becoming more generall and publike, these enemies were brought upon them without any further delay.

And now not onely the two tribes and halfe on the other side of Jordan were distressed, but the tribe of Judah, Benjamin and Ephraim also, the Ammonites coming over Jordan against them, and distressing them, so that the calamity was generall. v. 10. Then the children of Israel cryed unto the Lord and said, Wee have sinned, &c. But hee upbraided them by his former deliverances, bidding them to goe and cry to the gods, whom they had chosen, saying, that hee would deliver them no more, because that when they were delivered in times past from the Egyptians, Amorites, Ammonites and Philistims, the Zidonians, Amalekites, and Maonites, yet they forooke him. Who it was, by whom the Lord made this answer, it is not expressed, the Rabbins hold, that it was Phineas, but it is not probable, that he was living to this time, it being now 300. yeares, since his going out Captaine against the Midianites, Numb. 31. Wherefore Lyra thinketh, that it was some other Prophet, and some, an Angel, but because no mention is made either of Prophet or Angel, I think rather, that they coming before the Tabernacle to humble themselves, received this answer by the High-Priest, that then was, for the High-Priest by reason of his office had commonly the gift of prophesying, as may be gathered from that which is said of Cajaphas, hee being

ing High-Priest that yeare prophesied. For the pe oples re ckoned up from whom the Lord saith hee delivered them, their deliverance from the Egyptians was famous, and from the Amorites they were delivered, when Shim King of the Amorites fought against them: Of their deliverance also from the Philistims mention is made Judg. 3. 31. And the Amalekites and Ammonites were in the Army of Eglon, King of Moab, Judg. 3. 13. and the Amalekites were with the Midianites, Judg. 6. 3. But for the Zidonians and Maonites it doth not so appeare, that they were from them delivered; Yet the Zidonians are numbered amongst the enemies left to prove Israel, and happily they served under Cusharishathaim, a Syrian King, to whom they were neighbours, when he fought against Israel, Judg. 3. 8. Lastly, for the Maonites the Vulgar Latin hath the Canaanites, and likewise the Sept. who were the inhabitants of the countrey, because the word מְעוֹנִים signifieth inhabitants, and the Canaanites were the most noted inhabitants here, and their deliverance from the Canaanites was most famous. There were a people indeed properly called Maonites, as the Rabbins, Vatablus, Mercerus, and the Tygrine interpreters say, and a wilderness Maon 1 Sam. 23. and 25. and a City in Judab, Josh. 15. 55. but of any set forth by this name, from whom the Israelites were delivered, we have hitherto read nothing: and therefore they may upon the reason before going be taken here for the Canaanites. But what is this, that the Lord biddeth them goe and call upon the Gods whom they had chosen, and that hee saith hee would deliver them no more, when as hee meant, and did soone after deliver them? For the first it was spoken ironically, as that of Elijah to Baal Priests, Cry a loud for bee is a god, &c. For the second, the Lord said, hee would no more deliver them, as Ferus noteth, first to shew, that horrible sinning tendeth to a desperate estate, wherein a man is without all hope or sense of comfort to Godward, that all may take heed of thus sinning, because there is no estate so uncomfortable, as this; and yet because when God had absolutely denyed all helpe, he did upon their persevering to seeke unto him againe deliver them, to shew that when wee have no sense of comfort, yet wee should not despaire, but seeke still to God; for as a father, although hee threatneth to doe nothing for his childe in his bitter displeasure, yet cannot, if hee sueth againe and againe unto him, but shew him favour, so God our heavenly father cannot, but out of his fatherly compassion deale with us. 2. To shew that the pardon of sinnes iterated againe and againe is hardly obtained. 3. That praying for mercy without reforming from sinne doth not prevaile, because upon this deniall the Israelites went and put away their strange gods, and then humbling themselves againe were delivered, but not before.

And his soul was grieved for the miseries of Israel, this is spoken per Antropopatheian, to set forth an effectuall motion in his mind to set them free againe therefrom: which is a place to be thought upon by such, as are ready to despaire of Gods mercy, but yet are truly humbled for their sins, and put them away. God is grieved for the intolerable miseries of such distressed consciences, and whatsoever they have formerly done, will shew them mercy, that they may bee comforted herein. But this is meat onely for the contrite, obstinate sinners are to be fed otherwile, viz. with threatnings of hell fire, death and destruction for ever.

Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, and incamped in Gilead, and the children of Israel incamped in Mizpeh. The Ammonites were the posterity of Lot, with whose Countrey the Israelites had bene before prohibited to meddle, but now they ill requite that forbearance, neither are they moved with the ancient alliance betwixt Lot their father and Abraham the father of Israel. But the thing, whereby they had bene hitherto moved, was the judgment of God against Israel for sinne, for which they were stirred up to oppresse them. For as to the godly enemies are turned into friends, so to the wicked friends and all creatures are made enemies. But now the Israelites having truly repented, although they had had no answer of comfort from God, knowing, that hee would not bee unlike himselfe, gracious and mercifull to the penitent, take courage to themselves, so as they durst not doe be-

Exod. 17.

Judg. 3. 2.

Judg. 4.

24.

1 King 18.

Ferus.

V. 16.

V. 17.

Deut. 2. 19.

Note.

Note.

V. 18.

fore, and prepare in pitcht battail to fight against the Ammonites. Thus sinne taketh away all courage, and maketh timerous and fearfull at the falling of a leafe, but grace maketh bold and courageous. Where Gilead was, hath been already said; viz. on the other side of Jordan, where the Gadites and half tribe of Manasseh had their possessions. Of Mizpeh, see Josh. 11. 3. it was not farre from the place that the Ammonites pitched in. Of the Ammonites pretence in invading those parts, see Chap. 11. 13. The Israelites being here incamped, when they could not agree about a Captaine, offer him the Principality of Gilead that would begin the battail; hoping that God would thus stirre up some man, and put the spirit of courage into him to fight valiantly for them, as hee had done in the like straights before.

CHAP. XI.

V. 1, 2, 3.

Lyra.

Deut. 23.

Ezek. 18.

Josh. 17. 1.

Ferus.
Note.H. Bunting Patrist. 17. 17. 17. 17.

Here Jephthah a Gileadite is made Captain of the warre against the Ammonites; and after Messages sent twice or thrice between him and the Ammonites, hee fighteth against them, and overcometh: But first it is shewed what hee was, viz. a mighty man of valour, but the son of an harlot, begotten by Gilead, and when the sons that hee had by his wife were grown up, they thrust him out, and hee went and dwelt in the Land of Tob, and there were vaine men gathered unto him, and he went out with them. Jephthah was called a Gileadite, saith Lyra, from the Countrey wherein hee was born, from his Father, and from the City in which hee lived, which was Gilead, Chap. 12. but in this last he was mistaken, because Mizpeh is said to bee the City where hee dwelt, v. 34. And whereas hee is said to be the son of an harlot, the Hebrews, saith hee, render it, the son of an Inne-keeper, and the word here used, as also Josh. 2. signifieth either. But the circumstances doe plainly shew, that shee was an harlot, and so Jephthah was a bastard. And herein the great grace of God appeared, in that he chose one so infamous by his birth, to bee a deliverer of his people, and to bee head over them. The generall Law was, That a bastard should not enter into the Congregation to the tenth generation; so infamous was hee that was thus born, and a bastard inheriteth not his Fathers Land; which is so ordained, that mariage might bee had in honour, and fornication detested. But God chose Jephthah, notwithstanding his base beginning, that hee might appeare to bee gracious towards all, of how wicked Parents foeever they come, if they doe not follow them in sinning for the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father. This Jephthah was godly, and not like his father, as appeareth, Heb. 11. where hee is registred in the catalogue of the most famous for their faith. He is said to bee a Gileadite, but not of what tribe; yet because Gilead, from whom the Gileadites had their name, was of Manasseh; it is generally held that hee was of Manasseh. For his father Gilead, hee was not that Gilead the son of Macbir the son of Manasseh, for his time doth not agree, but another man of that name. The sons of Gilead being grown up, thrust him out of his fathers house, because hee was the son of a strange woman, Hebr. of another woman, but hereby an harlot is meant. It is not said whether their father were living or dead when they did this, but it is most likely that hee was dead, otherwise hee would not have suffered it. And it seemes they did this by offering violence, because it is said, that he fled from them. Thus proudly they that have preheminance in the flesh beare themselves towards others, that are outwardly base and contemptible, but afterwards they were glad to seek to him, that wee may learne not to bee proud for outward privileges, nor to contemn the vilest, for they that are vile before men, sometimes are great before God. And Jephthah dwelt in the land of Tob: where Tob was, is uncertaine, but Iosephus and Adrichomius say, that it was in those parts beyond Jordan. H. Bunting saith, it was in the half tribe of Manasseh, 104 miles from Ierusalem, and that it was a pleasant and fruitfull place, according to the name, Tob, good. And there were gathered vaine men to Jephthah. The Vulg. Latine bath hath it, Poor men and robbers. Whereupon Jephthah in that book of Questions upon the Old Testament, ascribed to Augustine, Qu. 43. is called a Captain of robbers, and a most wicked man, and void of all goodnesse. But as Lyra acknowledgeth, the word [robbers] is not in the Hebrew; and if Jephthah were a Captain of such, hee did in those times of warre onely lead them against the enemies to rob and to spoile them, as David afterwards did the like, 1 Sam. 27. Some say, that souldiers were of old called latrones, which wee english robbers, because they stood to their Captaines à latere, by his side; or did weare swords ad latera, by their sides. But to discourse no more about this, because it is neither in the Hebrew nor Septuagint. The word rendred vaine men, is the same before used, Chap. 9. 4. poore men, and void of meanes, and so happily they, with Jephthah their Captain, took spoiles from the enemy, and that not without some skirmishing, whereby Jephthah came to bee famous for his valour.

And it came to passe in proesse of time, that the children of Ammon made warre with the children of Israel, &c. The Vulg. Latine, In those dayes the children of Ammon, &c. the Septuagint, after dayes; Junius, after those dayes or yeares; that is, saith hee, the 18 yeares of their oppression before spoken of: the Hebrew word is מִימִים after dayes, that is, after the time before-mentioned, that Jephthah was cast out, the Ammonites were gathered together, as Chap. 10. 17. not content to spoile the children of Israel in all places, as they had before done; but thinking now at once to destroy and bring the Country under, which they pretended had been taken from them, as v. 13. But there was a secret Providence, whereby they were thus gathered together to their owne greater destruction, now that the Lord inclined to shew mercy to his people after their ferious humiliation. Wherefore a great battail being now to bee fought, they seek to Jephthah to bee their Captain, of whose valour they had heard; this motion comming doubtlesse of the Lord, as appeareth by his Spirit given unto him, v. 29. But Jephthah at the first upbraideth them by their former hatred of him, saying, Yee expelled mee out of my fathers house, and doe yee now seek unto mee in your distresse? wherein they confesse themselves guilty; and now to make him amends, offer him to bee their Head; upon which condition hee goeth with them. It is said before onely, that his fathers sonnes drave him out; but here, that this was objected to the Elders of Gilead, as if done by them. To this Lyra answereth, that it is likely his brethren were some of these Elders that came unto him; and that he was not expelled without the consent of the Elders of the City, giving judgement against him.

They promise to make him head of all the Gileadites, and so they did v. 11. that is, of all on the other side of Jordan, of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasse. For the other tribes, they could promise nothing, but it appeareth, that after his victory, and the Ephraimites chastised for their insolvency, hee was Judge over all Israel, Chap. 12. 7. and therefore he is reckoned with other Judges, 1 Sam. 12. 11. whom God sent them. And Jephthah uttered all his words before the Lord in Mizpeh. These words were the words of Covenant betwixt Jephthah and the men of Gilead, that hee should be their Head from thence forward, and fight for them, and that they should bee obedient unto him and his command. They had sworn before to him, v. 10. and now he sweareth to them when what in Mizpeh, the place of their assembling, hee was constituted their Head; and because an oath is a calling of God to witnesse, he is said to have uttered the words of his Oath before the Lord, and not for that the Tabernacle was there, for that was in Shiloh. Some think that these words were words of Prayer uttered by Jephthah, before he attempted this war: and some, words of inquiring of the Lord by the High Priest arrayed in his Priestly habit and pectorall, touching the successe of this battail: but because Jephthah was not yet upon the point of going to battail against the Ammonites, but sent first to expostulate with the King of Ammon, these are but improbable conjectures.

Jephthah being made Head of the Gileadites, now sendeth to the King of Ammon, to know the reason of this invasion; who answereth, that Israel had taken his Land from him, from Arnon to the river Iabock and to Jordan. But *LyraVatro.V. 4.Junius.V. 7, 8, 9, 10.LyraJosh. 18.

Benjamin.V. 12, 13.V. 14, 15.*

V. 16, 17,
18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Numb 21. 29.
1 Sam. 11. 7.
Lyra. Cajetan.
Cathus.
Form.
Serrarius.

Note.

V. 24.

Lyra.

V. 25, 26.

1 King. 6.

Melchior Canus

Jephthab replyeth, that they tooke nothing from Edom, Moab, or Ammon, whose Countreys lay one by another, but passed peaceably by them, and then coming to Sibons Countrey, who was King of the Amorites, hee resisting them in their passage, they fought against him, and tooke and possessed his Countrey from Arnon to Jabbok, God giving it unto them. Of this, see Numb. 21. 24. and that the land of Sibon then taken by Israel had been the land of Moab, Ammons brother in times past, but long before conquered by the Amorites. And of their kind dealing with the Ammonites, Deut. 2. But why doth the King of Ammon challenge Israel for taking away his land? when as we do not read, Numb. 21. that it was the land of the Ammonites, but of the Moabites, before that Sibon tooke it. But that part of it had been the Ammonites, it appeareth, Iosb. 13. 25. where the coast of Gad is said to bee half the Land of the children of Ammon; and it may bee that the King that now reigned over Ammon, was King of Moab also; and this is intimated, v. 24. where Kemesh, which was the God of the Moabites, is said to bee his God, for Melchom was the God of the Ammonites, as hath been shewed, Chap. 10. 6. and therefore hee challengeth this Land to be all his, both by the right of Moab and Ammon; thus Lyra, Cajetan, and Cathusianus. But some thinke that the King of Ammon spake untruly, and pretended a right to this Countrey onely for a colour of justice to his warre now undertaken. But if so, Jephthab would have answered him accordingly; but because hee doth not, it is plaine that hee and the people under him had sometime a right unto it, and therefore I preferre the former resolution. We may see here in Jephthab a great deale of wisdom and moderation, in that before hee entred upon this warre, hee sendeth to treat peaceably of the cause; so it is commanded, Deut. 20. and love requireth, that warre should not bee made, but upon meere necessity, nor subjects lives hereby put in danger, as Augustus Caesar said, I had rather save one subject, then kill a thousand enemies.

Wilt not thou possesse that which Chemosh thy God giveth thee, &c. Jephthab having cleared the Israelites from the imputation of wrong doing to the Ammonites, by relating truly the order of their proceedings, now useth divers arguments to make the Ammonites to desist from this warre: 1. Because God, whose all Countreys are, had given Israel this Countrey; and if their God Chemosh being in their opinion a God, and so such an one as to whom they ascribed the giving of them such places as they obtained, should give them any Countrey, they would make no doubt but to hold that; so, and much more would Israel hold and possesse the Countreys given them by the true God. And thus Lyra expoundeth it, which Chemosh thy God possesseth, or maketh thee to possesse, that is, in thy opinion. And herein Jephthab had reference to the conquests of the Ammonites and Moabites of old made in that Countrey, which now they held: for they attained it by expelling the former inhabitants, Deut. 2. 10, 20, 21. and this victory whereby they got that land into their possession, they impiously ascribed to an Idol, according to which Jephthab here speaketh, and seeing they held what they had gotten by the sword, there was as good reason that the Israelites should doe likewise. 2. Jephthab reasoneth from the long time that Israel had possessed this Countrey, even 300 yeares; neither did Balak the King of Moab ever strive with them about it, although hee had as good right, and was as great a King as he that now reigned; and he meaneth not onely Balak, but the Kings succeeding him in all that time, but hee nameth him, because hee reigned at the time that the Israelites first possessed that Countrey; and therefore if hee had had any right, would doubtlesse at the beginning have stood for it. Touching the number of yeares here spoken of by Jephthab, they were not, saith Lyra, precisely 300, but 267: for onely 480 yeares passed from the coming of the Israelites out of Egypt untill Tolam 4 yeares, and of these here 174 from Jephthab, and before the taking Sibons Countrey 39. being together 213. which deducted out of 480, there remaine but 267. Some to justify Jephthab, say, that the times of their oppressions are also to bee reckoned; but so not 300, but 340 would bee found at the least, and the account can by by no meanes agree with 1 King. 6. wherefore it is better to hold with others, that Jephthah made the most of the time of quiet possession, which hee pleaded for, and stood not precisely upon the just number of yeares, but they being almost 300 hee mentioned this number, as being most full and compleat; upon these premises Jephthah concludeth, that hee sinned not against the King of Ammon, nor yet the children of Israel, but that hee did them apparent wrong in invading their Countrey, which hee prayeth God to judge.

And the Spirit of God came upon Jephthah, and hee passed over Gilead and Mannasse, and Mizpeh, and from Mizpeh to the children of Ammon. Hee went through all these places to gather an Army, and so came upon his enemies.

Then Jephthah vowed a vow to the Lord and said, If thou wilt without faile deliver the children of Ammon into my hands: then it shall bee that whatsoever cometh to meet mee out of my house, when I returne in peace, shall bee the Lords, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering: Jephthah being now ready to goe to battaile seeketh helpe of God by vowing unto him a burnt-offering, but for so much as hee vowed not any thing certaine, but that, which should first come out of the doore of his house to meet him, it is questioned, whether hee did not rashly and indiscreetly in making this vow, and whether hee did indeed offer up his daughter for a burnt-offering, because shee came first out to meete him? The Fathers generally condemne Jephthah for making this vow, and performing it. Ambrosius saith, hee made it rashly, and the performance of it was parricide. Tertullian calleth him a mad man for vowing that to God, which hee abhorred. Chrysostom saith, that hee was moved by the suggestion of the Devil. Nazianzen saith, it was a rash vow. Anastasius Nicenus, that nothing was more wicked, then it. Theodoret, that it was a foolish promise. Procopius calleth it evill, unjust and impious, and ascribeth it to the Devils suggestion through pride and vaine-glory. For any living thing might not bee offered in sacrifice to God, for no uncleane beast might be offered, nor man-kinde; but at his returne, who more likely to come out to meete him, and to congratulate his victory, then his wife or his daughter, he having no more children; or his dog, whose nature is to run and fawn upon his Master? touching any beast that was cleane and fit for sacrifice, hee could not expect the coming forth thereof out of his house, as being a thing usuall. It was therefore a most rash vow, and unlawfull to be made, and therefore ought not to have bin performed. But some argue that Jephthah is said immediately before to have had the Spirit of God to come upon him, therefore what hee did herein was by the instinct of the Spirit, as when Abraham was bidden to sacrifice his son Isaac, being otherwise unlawfull, but then to him lawfull. And as Samson by the like instinct pluckt the house downe upon his owne head together with the Philistines, thus voluntarily killing himselfe. Againe God heard his prayer, when hee made this vow, and shewed his approbation thereof by giving him victory; neither is he any where blamed for this fact, but commended as one of Gods worthyes, Heb. 11. Wherefore they hold both that his vow was lawfull, and that in sacrificing his daughter hee did lawfully. For that hee did sacrifice her, is the common tenet of the ancient Fathers, as of Tertullian lib. 3. contra Marcion. c. 4. Origen, Nazianzen, in orat. de laude Maccabeorum. Justin Martyr, qu. 99. Severus Sulpitius, Chrysostom, Rupertus, Hugo de Sancto victore, Isidor, Iostatus, Josephus, &c. But they generally taxe him therefore, as hath beene already shewed. But some contrariwise hold, that hee did not offer her up in sacrifice, but onely gave her to God to serve him in fasting and prayer in perpetuall virginity, being separated from the common condition of others, after the manner of votaries, as R. David, Lyranus, Arius Montanus, Vatablus, Estius, Pagninus, Junius, &c. And Junius saith, that shee was made a Nazarite for ever, but out of the ignorance of the law in those corrupt times, the Father holding, that his vow must necessarily be thus kept, and the daughter believing the father and therefore confirming it by her consent, and so shee was not redeemed, as shee ought to have beene,

Levit.

V. 27.

V. 29.
Hugo Cardin.

V. 30.
V. 31.

Ambros. lib. 1. officiorum cap. ult. Tertull. Chrysost. Anastasius. Nazianzen. Theodoret. Procopius.

Deut. 12. 30; 31. 32.

Serrarius. Sallianus. Hieronym. epist. ad Iulian. Jephthah obtulit filiam virginem, ideoque inemeratice sanctorum ab apostolo positus est.

Tertull. Origen, Nazianzen, Justin Martyr, Sulpitius, Chrysostom, Rupertus

R. David, Lyra, Arius Montanus, Vatablus, Junius

Levit. 27. 1, 2, 3, 4. &c. Their reasons are 1. because the vow was made by a disjunctive particle, it shall bee the Lords, or I will offer it, that is, if it bee fit for sacrifice, for thus 1 the particle expounded and may be rendred, as Gen. 26. 11. Exod. 1. 10. 21. 15. 2. Because it is not said, that he offered her in sacrifice but did unto her according to his vow, that is, not being fit for sacrifice, he consecrated her to God, to live a perpetuall Virgin 3. Because shee desired to goe to the mountaines two moneths to bewaile her virginity, not her untimely death. 4. Because the word rendred to lament, v. 40. signifyeth also to speake unto, or to talke with, the daughters of Israel went 4 dayes in a yeare לחנות to speake unto and to comfort the daughter of Jephthah, which they could not have done, if shee had bene killed and offered in sacrifice. Thus I have shewed the diversity of opinions touching this matter, but which to follow I can hardly resolve: for the intent of Jephthah in vowing seemeth plainly to have bene to offer an extraordinary sacrifice unto God of one most deare unto him, and therefore not of any beasts, which had bene too small a matter to vow in this case of so great moment, but of Wife, Daughter, or Servant, to whom it was proper to come out of the doores of his house to meete him, and it is said, that hee did according to his vow, wherefore it seemeth, that hee sacrificed her, and not separated her onely as one devoted unto God. And on the other side the Arguments brought seeme to bee strong, that hee did not sacrifice, but separate her, and if hee had intended or attempted to doe otherwise, there were men doubtlesse expert in the law, that in the two moneths respite would have advised him to the contrary, it being a thing, that the mercifull God doth so much detest, that humane blood, which the Devill delighteth in, should be shed to him in sacrifice. But because it is expressly said, that hee did unto her according to his vow, which must be understood of his intention in vowing, this allegation to the contrary is vaine, and because wee never read of any woman under the Old Testament, that lived in perpetuall virginity, herein to serve God, no not of any Nazarite, such as shee is pretended to have bene made, that by reason hereof lived apart, man without woman, or woman without a man, for this was none of the conditions required in a Nazarite; I rather assent to that most ancient tenet, that Jephthah did sacrifice his daughter, but herein I cannot be carryed with the current of most of the Fathers to hold, that hee was rash and foolish in making this vow and impious in performing it, because hee is said to have had the Spirit of God to guide him, had such successe hereupon, and is no where blamed, but highly commended, Heb. 11. Hee vowed thus then by the instinct of the Spirit, and out of a most pious resolution even against naturall affection hee performed it, the conscience of so sacred a tie urging him hereunto, as Abraham sometime prepared to doe the like upon Gods command to his sonne Isaac; wherefore Jerome saith, not the sacrifice of Jephthah, but the minde of the offerer is praised. As for the reasons alledged to prove, that hee did but devote his daughter to the Lord, they are easily answered. 1. That here cannot be put for or, because hee meant not any thing usually offered in sacrifice, but mankind, as hath bene shewed, and so the second argument falleth also. 3. Shee bewailed her Virginity, because it was a reproach in those dayes to dye childlesse. Lastly, the word לחנות signifyeth as well to lament, as to speake unto. If it bee demanded how it could bee that God should move to such a sacrifice, so contrary to his owne Law, or be so cruell to an innocent Virgin? I answer, seeing all men and women must dye, it was no cruelty in God, at whose liberty it is to take away this life, when, and how hee pleaseth; as neither in suffering his holy Martyrs to bee cruelly butchered and slaine by the hands of persecuters, for hee both can, and doth make abundant recompence for such sufferings, in his heavenly Kingdome. If therefore hee would have this done in a mystery, and hereby try the love and obedience of Jephthah, who can or dare blame him therefore? Jephthah did mystically set forth Christ; as Jephthah, so hee was cast out of his brethren the Jewes, as the sonne of an harlot, and a deceiver;

Numb. 6.

Hieronym. in Jer. 7.

Hugo Cardin.

as Jephthah signifieth apertion or opening, so hee openeth the understanding and the way of life; as hee fled into the land of Tob, and poore men gathered unto him, so Christ and his Gospel being rejected by the Jewes, hee went by his Apostles to the Gentiles, whose Land was a good Land, as Tob signifieth, because they brought forth fruit abundantly, and there the people that flocked unto him, were such as before time were vaine men, and poore, because wicked and empty of all goodnesse. The Gileadites that seek to him to bee their Head against the Ammonites, are Christians by repentance turning to him, both of the Jewes and Gentiles against Heretiques and other enemies: for many Jewes seeing the signes after his death, were converted, and there shall be a turning one day of that Nation, Hos. 3. 4, 5. 2 Cor. 3. Rom. 9. the sacrificing of his daughter, a Virgin, was Christs sacrificing of his humane nature, pure and spotlesse as a pure Virgin: the Virgins from yeare to yeare lamenting this, are Christians keeping the remembrance of Christs passion yearely with griefe and sorrow. Thus Hugo, and Isidor, and Augustine, who although hee inclineth rather to blame Jephthah, yet he saith, that hee might happily be moved therein by the Spirit of God, and that for some great mystery, and then who dares blame him for errour? Ferus also acknowledgeth the same mystery, but condemneth the vow and fact of Jephthah, and yet hee saith, no man ever durst determine whether Jephthah did well or ill herein, because it is uncertaine whether hee did it by the motion of Gods Spirit, or of his owne minde, seeing this is not revealed. Whereas in justification of Jephthah it is said, that the Spirit of God came upon him, and hee is commended, Heb. 11. hee saith, the like is said of Gedeon, yet his setting up of an Ephod was a sinne, and of David, but hee sinned by adultery; so although Jephthah were an holy man, hee was not free from sinne, but hee doubtlesse repented of it and was saved. And hee labourereth to prove, that hee sinned in making this vow, because when Abraham was moved by God in the like, hee hindered him from sacrificing his sonne Isaas, but hee suffered Jephthah to sacrifice his daughter; the one hee commanded to kill his sonne, and suffered him not, to commend his obedience; the other vowing it of his owne head, hee suffered to kill his daughter to deterre all others from rash vowes; thus hee: but the examples brought of Gedeon and David prove nothing touching Jephthah, for their sins were taxed and punished, but so was not Jephthah, but blessed after his vow, and praised after the execution. And there was a diverse mystery in Abrahams fact, and in Jephthah's, for which God dealt with them diversly: Abraham was stayed from sacrificing his sonne, to shew that Christs Deity suffered not. Jephthah was not stayed from sacrificing his daughter, to shew that Christ should suffer in his humanity. Or as Ferus hath it, that hee should assigne the Church to sufferings by the hands of persecuters, and thus to bee, as it were, sacrificed to his glory. The daughter of Jephthah, so willingly submitting her selfe to bee done to, as her father had vowed, may be an example of obedience to Parents to all children.

Isidor.

Ferus.

CHAP. XII.

AND the men of Ephraim gathered themselves together, and went northward, and said unto Jephthah, Why didst thou passe over against the children of Ammon to fight, and didst not call us? &c. As Chap. 8. they had through pride stirred up dissention against Gedeon; so they quarrell here with Jephthah, envying it, that any famous victory was obtained without them: but vengeance would not suffer them now to goe on in their pride any longer, but by their commotion so unjustly made, they got a grievous fall. They went northward, because Mizpeh in Manasseh on the other side Jordan, where Jephthah dwelt, was northward from Ephraim. Whereas they challenge him for not calling them to this warre, this was but a pretext, for hee had called unto them, as hee saith, v. 2. and they refused to come, and therefore hee with a few men adventured his life, and God had given him the victory. Wherefore there was no reason that

V. 1

V. 2.

V. 4.

Q<sup>u</sup>.

Lyra.

V. 6.

The Mystery.
Ferm.

Hugo Card.

Matth. 12. 37.

V. 7.
H. B. Patriarchs
travailes.

V. 8.

Ferm.

that they should deale thus unkindly with him, to fight against him, when as they should rather have been thankfull to him for delivering them from their common enemies. But the Ephraimites, as it seemeth, were nothing moved hereby, but reviled the Gileadites, saying, that they were runagates of Ephraim and Manasseb, in so much that Jephthah with his Gileadites were enforced to fight against them, and smote them, and when they fled, prevented them in taking the passages of Jordan, where they slew such of them as remained alive to the number of 42000. But how could the Gileadites bee said to be runagates or fugitives of Ephraim, and in the midst of Ephraim and Manasseb, as it is in the Hebrew, seeing they dwelt beyond Jordan, and the Ephraimites with the Manassites placed next unto them on this side Jordan? Ans. It is thus said, because they came all of one common stock of Joseph, amongst whom they would in thus saying, set forth the Gileadites as most abject and vile amongst all his posterity: so, as that being compared with Ephraim and Manasseb, they were of little or no reckoning; thus Lyra saith the Hebrewes expound it: but some take it as spoken of Jephthah and his company, because he was expelled from his Fathers house, and fled from his brethren, and haply they glanced at that in particular.

The meanes whereby they tried the Ephraimites, was by pronouncing Sibboleth in stead of Shibboleth, that is, by their lisping: but why the word Shibboleth was made the meane of tryall, rather then any other word, Lyra saith the reason was, because the word Shibboleth signifieth a current of water, wherefore as any of them came to passe over the water, they were put to the pronouncing of this word; it signifieth also an eare of Corne, and so it is rendred in the Vulg. Latine, Dic Seboleth, quod interpretatur spica; but here the other interpretation seemeth to agree best. Myſtically by Jephthah destroying the Ephraimites, Ferm understandeth Christ after his passion, whereby hee overcame the spirituall enemy, comming against the Jewes, and destroying them by the Romans, because they had blasphemed and railed upon him, as the Ephraimites upon Jephthah. His discerning of them by pronouncing Seboleth in stead of Shibboleth, saith Hugo, setteth forth the judging of worldly men, who speake nothing but words of vanity, talking of nothing, but wordly things and vaine-gloriously, and not of heavenly, so that of their talke there cometh no fruit neither is there any weight therein, as Seboleth signifieth an eare of chaffe, but Shibboleth an eare full of corne, so likewise Lyra; which conceit I mislike not, but onely because Seboleth hath the same signification with Shibboleth, although the one bee written with S and the other with W. But thus Seboleth may set forth vaine talke and Shibboleth substantiall, because one of the letters of the name of God, viz. W is wanting in Seboleth, or the pronounciation is not so full as in Shibboleth; and by thy words thou shalt bee justified, and by thy words thou shalt bee condemned, v. 7.

Then Jephthah dayed and was buried, &c. His buriall is said to have been in one of the Cites of Gilead, but Hebr. it is in the Cities of Gilead, whereupon some relate, that Jephthah was so esteemed of for his valour, that they cut his body in pieces when he was dead, and carried a part to each of their Cities, and there buried it.

V. 8. And after him Ibzan of Bethlehem judged Israel, &c. Here the History of three Judges is briefly runne through, of Ibzan, Eln of Zebulun, and Abdon of Pirathon in Mount Ephraim, of whom nothing is said, but only that they judged Israel, the one 7 yeares, the other 10, and the last 8 yeares, saying that Ibzan is said to have had 30 sonnes and 30 daughters; and Abdon 40 sonnes, and 30 nephews, that rode upon 70 Asscolts, see the like before, Ch. 10. 4. It seemeth, that nothing memorable happened in the dayes of these Judges, and therefore such brevity is used about them: yet as Ferm noteth, hereby it appeareth that they were worthy men, because they kept the people from sinning by Idolatry all their dayes, as appeareth, in that after the last of them dead and buried, they are said to have sinned, Chap. 13. 1. and not before. Whereas Abdon is said to have been buried in the Mount of the Amalekites, which was in

Pirathon,

Pirathon his City, and therefore within the Ephraimites lot, it is not to be thought with some, that the Amalekites now dwelt here, but in times past, from whence it still retained the name, for the Amalekites now dwelt eastward beyond Jordan, as appeared, Judg. 6. 3.

CHAP. XIII.

AND the children of Israel did evill in the sight of the Lord, and bee delivered them into the hands of the Philistims forty yeares. How these 40 yeares are to bee reckoned, is very doubtfull, because they cannot come within the number of yeares that Samson judged Israel being but 20, Chap. 16. 31. Wherefore some will have these yeares to bee the time of an interregnum betweene Abdon and Samson; some to begin 20 yeares before Samson, in the time of the other Judges, and to continue all his time; and some reckon 20 of these yeares to Samson, and 20 to Ely, who is said to have judged Israel 40 yeares, 1 Sam. 4. 18. The first of these cannot bee admitted, because so the number of yeares from their comming out of Egypt to the building of Solomons Temple, will exceed that number, 1 King. 6. 1. as hath been shewed upon Josh. 24. 32. Against the second this seemeth to make, that they are not said to have been delivered into the Philistims hands, till after the death of Abdon: and against the third this maketh, that it is said of Samson before he was borne, that he should begin to deliver Israel out of the Philistims hands, V. 5. Therefore the Philistims oppressed them before that Samson was Judge. How any thing can bee answered to that which is objected against the first and third, I see not; but to that against the second, it may bee said, although their doing evill, and being delivered into the Philistims hands be not spoken of till after Abdons death, yet this might be done before, not long after the beginning of the time of the first of these three Judges, because all things in the sacred History are not alwayes set downe in the same order wherein they were done. Yet Eusebius, Genebrard, Lyra, and Tostatus are for the third, because Samson did but begin to deliver Israel from the Philistims, and they were still grievous enemies to them in Elies time. Whereas it is objected, that Israel was under the oppression of the Philistims before Samson was borne: it is answered, that this is no where plainly affirmed, but when Samson was a man growne, Chap. 14. 4. and therefore that of his beginning to deliver Israel out of the Philistims hands, might bee spoken by way of Prophecie, before that Israel fell into their hands; and to this, as most probable of all these Opinions doe I subscribe. The next words then, wherein the history of Samson is begun: There was a man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah, &c. are not so to bee understood, as if before this Israel had sinned, and was delivered to the Philistims, but because the Lord would have the whole history of Samson knowne, from his birth to his death; the manner of his birth, which was many yeares before, is here set downe. From the time of the Philistims having dominion over Israel, viz. 40 yeares, Ferus noteth, that this was a greater punishment then any that they had yet suffered, for they were never under any enemy so long; which intimateth, that they which sinne againe and againe after punishments and deliverances, shall bee punished more grievously, according to that, Goe thy way and sinne no more, lest a worse thing befall thee. Of Zorah, the City, of which Manoah was, see Josh. 19. 41. and most aptly was one raised up of this place and tribe against the Philistims, because it was neare unto them. Josephus saith, that Manoah was the best man among the Danites, and that his wife was very faire, and that he was jealous of her, and much grieved because hee had no childe by her; for which cause hee prayed most earnestly to the Lord, who sent an Angel to her being alone, to bring her this joyfull message, that shee should conceive and beare a sonne. In Samson God shewed his power, saith Ferus, more then in any of the Judges before-going, in that he caused a barren Woman to beare him, and gave him such extraordinary strength, as if hee would

V. 1.

Euseb. in Chron.
Genebrardus,
Ch.

V. 2.

Ferus.

Note.

Joseph Antiq;
lib. 5. c. 10.

Ferus.

V. 3, 4.

V. 5.

Joh. 4.

would raise them up a deliverer out of the stones, that his power being herein acknowledged, they might at length begin to feare and serve him.

The Angel appearing to Manoah his wife, told her, that although shee had been hitherto barren, yet now shee should conceive and bear a sonne, bidding her to abstaine from wine and strong drinke, and from eating any thing uncleane, because he should be a Nazarite from the wombe, therefore no rasour must come upon his head; and hee saith, that he should begin to deliver Israel from the Philistims.

1. Hee telleth her that shee was barren, that shee might bee the more attentive to him, as to an Angel or Prophet of God, which knew secrets, as the woman of Samaria gathered that Christ was a Prophet, because hee told her of her husbands. 2. Because this childe should bee a Nazarite, he forbiddeth her wine and strong drinke, as is forbidden to Nazarites, Numb. 6. to teach, that a mother which would have an holy childe, must her selfe be holy and temperate, for the childe commonly taketh after the mother. 3. According to the law of Nazarites, hee saith, that no rasour should come upon his head all his life time, other Nazarites were such but for a time, and then they were shorne, but this childe must be a Nazarite for ever. 4. Hee saith, that he should deliver Israel, a man separated to serve God in a strict and austere kind of living in private, and never exercised in feates of Armes; that he should at length come forth and fight against whole Troopes of the Philistims alone, and beat them downe, was admirable; but thus God to shew his power ordained that it should bee, whose wayes are not like mans wayes, but by contemptible and unlikely meanes worketh wonders when he pleaseth; thus Ferus. But shee is forbidden wine and strong drinke also, and the eating of things uncleane by the Law, Levit. 11. because the childe in the mothers womb, partaketh with her, and liveth upon the same nourishment, that her child therefore might live according to the law of Nazarites, both from the wombe and in the womb, these things are injoynd her: and it is to be held, that it was meant that she should continue in this abstinence all the time that shee gave him suck, there being still the like reason in regard of the childe. Touching the eating of any uncleane thing forbidden her, which is more then is spoken of in the law of Nazaritisme, Numb. 6. and more then needed, because this was forbidden to all the people of God, Levit. 11. it may bee conceived that the corruption of those times was such, that they lived not according to the Law; and therefore shee in particular was put in mind of this also, as being a thing as much to bee shunned, by a Nazarite especially, as Wine or strong drinke.

Hee shall begin to deliver Israel; this is spoken to shew that hee should not, as other Deliverers, utterly subdue the Philistims at once, but by little and little waste and destroy many of them, and weaken them so, as that they should not bee able so powerfully to oppresse the Israelites as in former times, but they should by his meanes have some respite from their tyranny.

V. 6, 7.
V. 8, 9, 10.Ferus.

Vers. 6, 7. Manoah's wife having seen and heard all this alone, telleth it to her husband, who prayed unto God, that the man of God might come again, and was heard, and the Angel was sent againe, &c. In Manoah's wife, saith Ferus, wee may see an example of the womans subjection to her husband, and of the unity wherein they lived together, in that shee rested not in the vision which shee had seene, but first told her husband, that shee might have his counsell; a thing wherein Eva failed when the Serpent spake unto her, and so fell most foully; and he likewise having heard his wives relation of a man comming to her alone, upbraided her not, but being confident touching his wives chastity, prayed, that the Angel appearing in the likenesse of a man, might come againe to instruct them touching the ordering of the childe. For touching the woman, hee had heard already what shee should beware of, but no particular instructions had been given touching the childe, wherein he gave an example of an holy sollicitude to all Parents about the education of their children according to the will of God. And in all these things this married couple are to bee imitated by all others in the same estate, by the wives being subject to her owne husband, and taking his advice in all matters of moment, their

their living together in love and unity and in their solicitude about the good education of their children. The Angel appearing againe and being desired by Manoah to give him directions, how to order the childe, answereth nothing touching him, but touching his mother, as before, supposing, that hereby it would easily be understood, that hee should abtaine from the same things, seeing he was to be a Nazareite. Then Manoah prayeth him to stay, till he had made ready a kid, and hee refusing to eate, hee craved his name, but was denyed it, the Angel saying, why dost thou inquire after my name, which is secret? that is, according to Lyra, because Angels have names according to message, that they are sent about, and so hee that is called by one name now, varyeth his name afterwards, when hee is sent upon another message, and because hee knoweth not, what that shall be, till that it is revealed unto him, hee saith here, that his name is secret: thus hee following the Hebrews, who ground this upon Esa. 6. where the Angel, that touched Esa.'s lips with a coale from the Altar, is called Seraphim, because of that employment, but was not of the order of the Seraphim. I thinke rather with Ferus, that hee reproveth him for asking after his name, as being a point of curiosity and no way tending to edification, and herein we are all forbidden to enquire after such things, and to pry into the secrets of the Lord: so likewise to Jacob asking the name of the Angel, that wrestled with him, hee said, Why dost thou inquire after my name? For the Angels doubtlesse have names, whereby they are distinguished one from another, as Michael and Gabriel, and Raphael, but they are not to be knowne by us in this mortall life any further, then it pleaseth God to reveale them. For these words, which is secret, the Vulgar Latine hath, which is wonderfull, and Junius, scilicet que mirificus, the reason of which he saith, may be gathered from that, which followeth, v. 19. the Angel of the Lord did wonderfully: and the text favoureth this, because the same word פלא, which is here used, is againe used there, and it signifyeth either secret or wonderfull, neither is there any word in the Hebrew signifying which is, but according to Junius, and hee was wonderfull.

So Manoah took a kid with a meat offering; and offered it upon a rocke, and the Angel did wonderfull, &c. If it be demanded, how Manoah being no Priest could offer sacrifice, and that out of the place appointed, viz. the place of the Tabernacle? It is easily answered, that this was extraordinarily done by particular direction, as Gedeon's sacrifice before: But Lyra and some others say, that Manoah offered it not, but brought it to the Angel, who offered it, hee and his wife onely looking on: but because v. 16. the Angel bad him offer a burnt-offering to the Lord, it is rather to bee held, that hee offered it, and the Angel went up in the flame, which it seemeth came miraculously out of the rock, as before when Gedeon offered. v. 21. Then Manoah knew, that it was an Angel of the Lord, and said, wee shall surely dye; because wee have seene God, &c. In the like feare was Gedeon, Ch. 6. 22, 23. of the ground of which feare see Exod. 33. 20. but his wife useth divers strong Arguments to expell this feare out of him. Then the woman conceived and bare a sonne and called his name Samson, &c. This name is thought by Jerom to come of שמש the Sunne, so that Samson signifyeth either their Sun according to some, or a little Sunne being a diminutive word, according to others; Josephus expoundeth it Robustus, because as the strength of the Sunne in the heat thereof, so his strength was irresistible. And the childe grew and the Lord blessed him, and the Spirit of God moved him at times in the tents of Dan. That is, the Lord put the Spirit of fortitude and strength into him, extraordinary, some signes whereof hee shewed amongst those of his tribe, viz. the Danites, who dwelt in tents, at such times as the Spirit moved him hereunto, whereby some hope might bee conceived of his future valiant acts to bee done against the enemy.

V. 13, 14.

V. 15, 16,

V. 17, 18.

Lyra.

Ferus.

Gen 23 19.

Junius.

V. 19.

Lyra

Bonfrerius.

V. 21, 22;

V. 23.

V. 24.

Hugo Cardin.
Mercerius.

CHAP. XIII.

V. 1, 2.

H. Bunt. Patria.
navailles.
Lyra.

V. 4.

V. 5.

V. 6.

Note.
Ferm.

V. 7, 8, 9.

Qu.

And Samson went downe to Timnath, and saw a woman of Timnath of the daughters of the Philistims, &c. Of Timnath see before Gen. 38. 12. where Judah is said to have gone thither to sheare his sheepe, and Job. 24. 30. for H. Bunting will have this Timnath and that to bee all one, but forsomuch as that Timnath was in Mount Ephraim, but this, as Lyra saith, in the Philistims Countrey nearer to the Sea, see Job. 19. 50. he was deceived. To this City of the Philistims Samson goeth downe, for now the Israelites being under their dominion, they might freely goe amongst them and returne. But whereas Samson is said to desire one of their daughters to wife, which is against the law, Deut. 7. it is said to have come of the Lord, that he might take occasion to quarrell with the Philistims, which his parents knew not, and therefore dissuaded him from it. But it seemeth, that Samson knew it, and it was revealed unto him, and he made his parents acquainted with it, whereupon they yeelded to his desire, for otherwise both hee and they had sinned herein, which is not to be thought of them, because they were godly and devout persons: thus also Lyra, who further inquireth, what neede there was, that Samson should seeke occasion to fight against the Philistims, seeing their unjust holding of any part of Israel inheritance from them was a sufficient occasion, and answereth, that they were now under the Philistims dominion, and so by covenant happily and oath obliged unto them, and therefore he could not without breach hereof make warre against them, unless some new occasion were offered.

Then went Samson downe to Timnath and his father and mother, and came to the vineyards of Timnath, and behold a young Lion roared upon him, &c. Here is the first particular act expressed, whereby Samson gave prooffe of his strength, and it seemeth, that hee was now gone aside from his Parents upon some occasion, for hee rent the lion in pieces, as a kid, having nothing in his hand, but told not them of it, therefore they were not present, when hee did it. And when hee did this, it is said, the Spirit of God came upon him, to shew that hee had not this great strength of himselfe, but by the Spirit, as also appeared afterwards, when the Spirit of God left him, Judg. 16. 20. And it was by a singular providence, that a fierce young lion now encountered him, that hee might with the more courage, this valiant act being done, set upon the Philistims afterwards. In that Samson would not wed without his parents consent, all young men and women, saith Fermus, may learne their duty, viz, to obey their parents even in their marriages, and parents should not tyrannically force them to match contrary to their liking, as Samsons parents did not. And in that hee, which should deliver Israel from the Philistims, joyned himselfe in affinity with them, hee noteth well, that God goeth about such things, as hee will bring to passe the cleane contrary way: because matching into any stocke is a meanes commonly of the more amity and love, although it bee by some Princes perverted to an occasion of quarell to enlarge their dominions, wherein they marry as Samson did, but not having the same spirit to move them, but ambition and covetousnesse; although he did well, they sinne greatly herein.

After the Lion thus slaine, Samson having his parents with him agreeth to marry that woman, and descending for the celebrating of the muptials hee findeth bees and honey in the Lions carcase, whereof hee taketh and eateth and giveth some to his Parents. Wherefore did Samson goe to see the Lions carcase? Doubtlesse not out of curiosity, but that by seeing it againe he might bee the more confirmed; and hee was now also brought hither againe by a secret instinct of the Spirit, that hee might see another wonder, a swarme of bees making their nests there, a thing, which they naturally abhorre from, for bees harbour not in stinking, but cleane places. Onely God, who can doe all things, caused it thus to bee at this time, that a foundation might bee laid laid of his riddle, and quarrell with the Philistims, which follow, v. 12, 13. &c. Of the bees being delighted in sweet flowers and cleane things, and abhorring from all stinking things, write Pliny, Varro, Collumella, and others; but Lyra and Abulenſis say, that there are two kinds of Bees, the City Bee, which indeed is so cleanly, and the Countrey Bee, which is not, and therefore these Bees might bee of this kinde. But no Naturalist writeth of any such kinde of bees, and therefore it is but a conjecture. Some thinke that the carkasse was consumed to the bare bones, and so stanke not, and that the bees were bred of the putrifaction of the Lions dead body; but this was miraculous, because although bees breed of Bullocks, waspes of Horses, and hornets of Asſes, yet of Lions no such thing hath ever been observed. The Vulg. Latine and Septuagint, for carkasse, have, the mouth of the Lion, but Hebr. it is the carkasse. Whereas it is said, Hee gave of the honey to his father and mother; Comestor addeth, and to his Spouse also. And whereas at the nuptials it is said, That they brought unto him 30 young men to bee his companions, hee saith, that the men of Timnath did this, pretending that they should keep him company during the feast, and bee merry with him, but intending that they should bee his keepers, for feare of any attempt to bee made by him through his great strength: so likewise Ferus and Lyra, and others, they pretended to doe this in friendship, and to honour him, but they were indeed set to resist him, if the case should so require.

And Samson said, I will now put forth a riddle unto you, and if you can certainly declare it unto mee within seven dayes of the feast, I will give you 30 sheets, and 30 changes of garments, &c. This is the onely example of propounding a riddle in all the Scriptures, but amongst the Greekes it was a thing commonly used at feasts, but not upon such paines, but the condition was to drinke a cup of wine to him that resolved it, or salt water to him that could not resolve it; so Polux, Athenens, Aristophanes and others. Wee may see here how much our marriage feasts are gone from that they were of old; for now they are kept with drinking and dancing, and wanton dalliances, but then with exercises of the wit, whereof some good might come. For sheets, the Septuagint and Vulgar Latine have syndones, linnum garments; and hereby are meant shirts, which goe next the body, covering it all over; by the other 30 change of garments, are meant coates, which are commonly worne above. The riddle propounded, (when the condition was agreed upon, viz. that if they could resolve it, hee would give them these garments, but if not, they should give so many to him) was this, Out of the eater came meate, and out of the strong came sweetnesse: this he propounded, having in minde that marvailous thing before related, for the Lion eateth other creatures, and was molt strong, but the sweet honey comb which is pleasant meate, came out of his dead body. Some make a question upon Samsons eating of that which came out of a Lion, which is an uncleane beast, whether he sinned not? because Levit. 11. 34. that which toucheth the carkasse of any uncleane beast, is uncleane, and may not bee eaten. I answer, God provided this honey here extraordinarily, that Samson might eate of it, and therefore it was no fault in him; as neither the taking up of the jawbone of an Asse, which was uncleane also, and drinking out of it, and other things that hee did, which were not lawfull ordinarily to bee done, but by Divine dispensation they might be done by him. The riddle propounded Samsons companions could not expound in three dayes, but afterwards comming to his wife and threatening her, shee with teares prevailed so, that before the 7 dayes of the Feast were ended, Samson expounded it to her, and shee to them, and they to Samson. Whereas shee is said to have wept before him 7 dayes, it may bee demanded how this could bee, seeing they came not to her with their threatenings till the 7 day? Answe. Although it is said, that they could not expound it in 3 dayes, and that they threatened not her till the 7 day, it followeth not, but that they might importune her, and shee her husband from the beginning; but Samson putting her off 3 dayes, and shee them, they set upon her afterwards with more violence, threatening destruction to her and her fathers house, un-

Lyra. Tostatus.

Bonfrerius

Schol. Hist.
V. 12.Ferus.
Lyra.

V. 12.

Ferus.

V. 14.

Qu.

V. 15, 16,
17, 18.

Qu.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Gen. 29. 27.

V. 18.

Lyra.

V. 19.

Qu.

V. 20.

lesse shee learned out the exposition of the riddle for them. Or else they having studied upon it by themselves 7 dayes in vaine, laboured with her about it by prayers and intreaties till the 7 day, and then threatened her, and shee all those 4 dayes laboured by teares with Samson, till shee prevailed; and these are said to bee 7 dayes, because the greater part of the 7 dayes of the feast; so Lyra. Or shee is said to have wept 7 dayes, that is, some of the 7, as Christ is said to have appeared 40 dayes, that is, divers of the 40 from his resurrection to his ascension; so Hugo. Touching their speaking to Samsons wife upon the 7 day, Lyra saith, it was not the 7 day of the feast, but the Sabbath day, which was one of the 7 festivall dayes, viz. the fourth, but called the 7, because the Sabbath was the 7 day: But I see not, how by the 7 day any other can bee understood then the 7 day of the feast, seeing the reckoning is altogether made hereby, and it was the 7 day towards Sun-setting, before that they could know the exposition of the riddle, so long did they labour with Samsons wife, and shee with her husband, before that hee would disclose it; but hee that was most strong in body, was not so strong in minde, but by a womans weeping and teares hee was at length overcome. For the feast of 7 dayes continuance, it was a thing then usuall at marriages, Samson having the exposition of his riddle brought unto him upon the 7 day before the Sun-set, said, If yee had not ploughed with my heifer, yee had not found out my riddle: A metaphoricall speech to set forth the finding out of a mans secrets by the helpe of his wife; for hee that plougheth the ground, discovereth that which was before hidden; and hee likeneth his wife to an heifer, propter muliebrem insolentiam, saith Lyra. And hee that useth any thing of another mans to get advantage against him, may well have this proverb also applyed to him.

And the Spirit of God came upon him, and hee went up to Askelon, and slew thirty men, &c. Here was a bold attempt, shewing invincible courage and strength, in that one man alone durst come into a populous City, and there slay 30 men, and take their spoile to give to those 30 that had expounded his riddle. What did all the rest of the Citizens whilst he was doing this? Verrily, it is to bee thought, that for feare of him they ran away and hid themselves. But how was this justifiable, hee owing garments by covenant to some, to goe and take them from others being slaine, therewith to pay them? Ans. In all this Samson sinned not, because by the Spirit of God comming upon him he was moved unto it, but for us it is not lawfull, but a great sinne to doe the like. The thing that outwardly provoked Samson to this, was to bee revenged for the injury done unto him, in that by threatening his wife, they had wrested the exposition of the riddle from him, whereas the condition was, if they of themselves could find it out.

Then his wrath was kindled against the Philistims, and hee went away to his fathers house, but his wife was given to his companion. Here that began to worke, for which the Lord moved him to marry a wife of the Philistims, hee was now made their professed enemy, but they themselves were the first cause hereof, both for the indirect meanes which they used to resolve his riddle, and in that his wives father, contrary to the law of marriage, gave her to another man. Samson was angry with the Philistims, who happily derided him when they received his gifts, and with his wife, for her treacherous dealing in bewraying his secrets, so he left her in his wrath for a time, and went to his fathers house, but her father taking it for a finall departing, and conceiving that Samson had quite rejected her, marryeth her to one of his companions, that is, one of the 30 brought to be his companions during the feast: for that this was the cause of giving her to another, may bee seen, Chap. 15. 2.

CHAP. XV.

V. 1.

BUT it came to passe within a while after in the time of wheat-harvest, that Samson visited his wife with a Kid, &c. Although being so provoked, hee was angry angry with her, yet now he putteth all anger away, and returneth to his wife in all love and kindnesse, giving herein an example to all men, and married men in speciall, not to dwell in anger, but soone to bee reconciled againe, and specially to the wife the husband ought to bee reconciled, considering the womans weaknesse, wherein hee ought to beare with her as with the weaker vessell. And this is noted to have been in the time of wheat-harvest to prepare to the relation following of burning up their standing corne. This was the placable mind of Samson, who thought to forgive and forget all former injuries, supposing that the Philistims would doe likewise. But when hee came unto her with his Kid, as a token of his kindnesse, hee found it otherwise with the Philistims; for shee was given to another man, and hee was not permitted to goe in unto her, which was a manifest injury, because although hee went from her for a while, yet hee did not put her away, and therefore shee ought not, leaving him, to have been married to another. So that herein was a second occasion of quarrell with the Philistims given unto Samson, which hee being set to revenge not his owne wrongs onely, but the wrongs of the people of God, ought not to neglect, being also appointed by God, before he was born, to deliver Israel from the Philistims: wherefore the apology made by her father, v. 2. I thought that thou hadst hated her, & his offering another daughter unto him that was fairer, would not satisfie him, but for this injury done him by the Philistims, he took 300 Foxes, and tying two & two together by their tayles, he put them into their standing corn, with firebrands fastened between them, and so burnt up their shoocks, standing corn, olives, and vineyards. Her Parents and kinsfolks, saith Ferrus, most probably consented about the taking of his wife from him, and giving her to another, and amongst the Philistims there were none that prohibited it, therefore hee imputeth this fault to the Philistims of that place in generall. But what hee did in way of revenge, is not lawfull for us ordinarily to doe, for wee must not revenge our selves, but love our enemies, and suffer wrongs. It is then to bee considered, that he had an extraordinary calling in hostile manner to invade the Philistims, in which case it was lawfull for him, both to spoile their goods and to destroy them, as it is lawfull for all others to doe against enemies, against whom they may lawfully make warre. For his burning up of their olives and vineyards, this ought not to be done in an enemies land, Deut. 20. 19. but this of Samson was such a way of infesting the enemy, as that it was out of the compasse of that Precept, the hurt intended here, being to their standing corne onely, and that other following upon it accidentally to their vineyards. If it shall seeme marvellous that Samson could take so many Foxes at one time, Lyra answereth, that it is not likely that he took them alone, but used men skillfull in taking them with nets, who might soone, in a Countrey so full of them, furnish him with so many, as well as a Warrener can take in a short time 300 Couies. For his tying fire-brands betweene their tayles, hee saith also, that was by something put betweene them, which might not burne asunder, and which might keep the fire from burning the Foxes, through the space betwixt tayle and tayle.

Then the Philistims said, Who hath done this? and they answered, Samson the sonne in law of the Timnite, because hee tooke his wife and gave her to his companions; then they came up and burnt her and her father with fire. The companions of Samson had before threatened this unto her, Chap. 14. 15. unlesse shee learned for them the resolution of Samsons riddle, and now it commeth accordingly upon her and her father. Whence note, that they who yeeld to doe any wickednesse for the avoyding of a danger, shall surely fall into it, for shee did wickedly, in treacherously seeking the resolution of the riddle to betray Samson, and now shee smarteth for is: and so likewise the Jewes, who feared, if they let Christ alone, that the Romans would come and take away their City, wherefore they crucified him, and had their City destroyed indeed.

And Samson said, Although yee have done this, yet I will bee revenged on you, &c. and he smote them hippe and thigh, with a great slaughter, &c. Hereby it appeareth that Samson set himselfe against the Philistims, not so much to revenge

Ferrus.

Note.

V. 2.

V. 4. 5.

Ferrus.

Lyra.

V. 6.

Note.

Joh. 11. 48.

V. 7. 8.

Josephus.

Ferus.

Hebrai.

Burgensis.

August. qu. in Judic. Lyr.

Ferus.

Junius.

H. Bunt. Patria.
travails.

V. 9.

the wrong offered unto him about his wife, (for then hee would have ceased as fully satisfied, when her owne Countrey-men to revenge that wrong offered him, had burnt her and her father, and as Josephus saith, all her kindred) but that by destroying the Philistims hee might doe the publike office, to which hee was appointed of God, tending to the deliverance of his people from their tyranny. Therefore when hee saith, Although yee have done this, yet I will be revenged on you; his meaning is, hereby I will not bee stayed from hostily invading you, but as yee for your tyranny and oppressions of Israel deserve, I will smite your persons as well as I have done your goods, now that ye have by your unjust dealing with mee made me your enemy. For Samson knew well enough, that what they had done against his wife and her father, they did not in taking his part; but for vexation at the great losse which they had sustained: They did it not, as Ferus hath it, out of zeale against unrighteousnesse, but in fury and madnesse for their losse. But what this meaneth, Hee smote them hip and thigh, divers conjecture diversly; some Hebrewes, because the horseman sitteth with his hips upon his horse, and the footman goeth upon the strength of his thighs and legs, say, that hereby horsemen and footmen are meant. Some Hebrewes more anciently, as Burgensis hath it, that Samson without any weapon, onely by kicking them upon the hip and thigh, made a great slaughter of them. Some following the Vulg. Latine, which is, so that being amazed, they laid their hip upon their thigh, that hee smote them so grievously, that they sat downe astonished, and laying one leg over another, studied how to be revenged upon him therefore, so Augustine, Lyr., &c. As if one should say, saith Augustine, hee smote them hand upon the cheek, that is, so as that leaning the cheek upon the hand, they studied what to doe. Hee mentioneth also another exposition, because it is not Hebr. hip and thigh, but hip upon thigh, he smote them with the hip or leg of some beast upon the thigh, and so slew them, as afterwards with the jawbone of an Ass: But hee resteth not in this, because it is not probable that he smote them all in one place. Ferus, he smote them so, that they shrunke up their bodies together, if they might any way avoid his strokes. Of all these expositions, that seemeth to mee to bee best, which is for his smiting of them with his feet and heeles, and thus Junius understandeth it, who rendereth the words, percussit eos crure vibrato in femur; and he expoundeth it, he set upon them with no other weapon then with his foot, as being a cowardly people, and herewith hee smote them upon the thigh or side; for so also ירך signifieth, and thus hee destroyed them. And this ought not to seeme incredible, considering his great strength, and his slaying of a fierce Lyon before, when he had no weapon in his hand. If hee had slaine them with the thigh of any other creature, it should surely have been mentioned, as the jawbone of an Ass is afterwards; if footmen and horsemen had been meant, there were other words whereby to expresse this more plainly, and it is least probable that their sitting downe as astonished is meant, or the shrinking up of their bodies to avoid his strokes, because this was no time thus to doe, but rather, if they could, to betake themselves to flight. And hee went downe and dwelt in the top of the rocke Etam, the Vulg. Latine, hee descended and dwelt in a denne in the rocke Etam, that is, saith Comestor, in a strong Hold there. The word בסתר bisgnaph properly signifieth in the bough or branch, that is, a part which most probably was a den fit to dwell in, and of some good strength. This Etam was in the tribe of Judab, where, as H. Bunting hath it, was a rock or strong Hold in which Samson dwelt, and being decayed, it was afterward repaired by Jeroboam, 2 Chron. 11. 6. But how is hee said to descend thither, and yet the Philistims are said to have come up against Judab, where hee was? Ans. Because it was a place lower then other parts of Judab, and then Zorab where Samson dwelt before, yet higher then the Philistims Countrey, who dwelt by the sea.

Then the Philistims went up, and pitched in Judah, and spread themselves in Lebi, that is, 6 miles from Etam, a place here called Lebi by anticipation, for Lebi signifieth a jawbone, and it was so called, because Samson slew here with the jawbone of an Ass 1000 men, v. 15. it is called, v. 17. Ramatb-Lebi, that is the lifting up of a jawbone.

The

The men of Judah fearing the Philistims, and knowing that their quarrell was against Samson, came at their request 3000 of them to Etam, and bound Samson with two new cords, and so brought him to the Philistims at Lebi: but first Samson causeth them to sweare unto him, that they would not fall upon him: Hee yeelded himselfe unto them to bee bound, saith Lyra, that the Philistims might not slay them for his sake: for the comming up of their great Army, (to denote the greatnesse whereof, it is said, They spread themselves in Lebi; as covering a great breadth of ground) was either to bind and carry Samson away captive, or if their desire were not fulfilled this way, to fight against Judah. And hee caused them to sweare unto him, lest by attempting any thing against his life themselves, they should bee endangered of being destroyed by him. The Philistims had already seen, saith Ferus, the hand of God in Samson, against which there was no resisting but by penitency and humiliation, yet they, as men insensible, harden themselves, to the procuring of a greater blow from Samson's hands; so wicked men sometime punished by the hardnesse of their hearts and impenitency, procure unto themselves greater destruction. And here was a great deal of pusillanimity and unbelieve in the Israelites, in that seeing the Philistims come up they feared, when God had stirred them up so mighty a Champion, for they could not bee ignorant of his exploits, so that there was no reason that they should now bee affraid, but have ticked to their Champion, trusting by him to bee delivered from this great Army. But they contrarywise for feare binde him, and so doe what in them lyeth, to bereave themselves of this great benefit, shewing herein both ingratitude towards Samson that had so well deserved of them for killing up their enemies, and infidelity towards God, for which they had no full deliverance by him, but onely as it is said, hee began to deliver Israel, the Philistims being still permitted many yeares after, to rule over them, as hath been shewed upon Judg. 13. 1. Thus want of faith hindereth men from enjoying the good they should, and the well-deserving are ill requited amongst evil men, yet they ought not hereby to bee discouraged, or use their power to revenge themselves, as Samson did not. For although hee was able, hee smote not the men of Judah, to helpe whom hee had received his strength, neither should any faithfull person use his power against the people of God, but against his enemies, and for them. The faith of Samson was most strong, for although hee were delivered bound into the Philistims hands, yet hee feared not but hee should prevaile against them, as appeareth by his speech to the men of Judah. But those that were in danger for his sake, hee would rather suffer any thing himselfe, then not bring them out of it againe. It is a marvaile that Samson being of so great strength, as to encounter with an whole Army, did not comfort the men of Judah comming to binde him, willing them rather to forbear, and saying, that hee would goe and abate their courage, which in reason he might seeme to bee more able to doe, being free, and taking a weapon in his hand, then when he was bound. But partly, because they were fearfull and unbelieving, & partly, that the power of God in him might the more appear, he was thus first disabled, and then to their greater astonishment and confusion he brake these bands, and fell upon them and slew them with that which came next to hand. Thus God suffereth the case of his to be brought to that, that it seemeth desperate, and then sheweth his power, that hee may bee the more glorified, and trusted in.

And when hee came to Lebi, the Philistims shouted against him; and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and the cords became as flaxe, &c. They shouted for joy, doubting not but that they should now worke their will upon Samson, but it fell out cleane contrary, so the hope of the wicked perisheth. And Samson was supplied with strength sufficient in the time of need, against which all binding could doe nothing. so the Lord will bee neare unto his that trust in him to supply them with help when they have most need thereof.

And he found a new jawbone of an Ass, and took it, and therewith he slew 1000 men.

This was miraculous, that one man having so many armed men about him, without

V. 10, 11, 12, 13.

Lyra.

Ferus.

Note.

Note.

Note.

Note.

V. 14.

V. 15.

Ecclef. Historia

Lyra.

V. 16.

Ioseph.

Ambros.

Perus.

Hieron. Scholast.
histor.

without any weapon onely with a brittle jawbone should knock downe and kill so many men, and put all the Army to flight, as mult needs bee understood, and Comestor hath it. And when hee had thus done, hee sung a triumphant song unto the Lord, as Moses and Deborah had done before, which was very short, or as Lyra hath it, the beginning of it onely is set downe, in Hebrew there is an elegant paranomasy in the words בלחי חמור החמור חמור חמור Josephus and Ambros. say, that these words were vauntingly spoken by Samson, in the praise of his owne strength, and therefore God punisht him with so great thirst, that he was in danger of death hereby, but Lyra and Perus, Jerom and Comestor hold it to have bene a song of praise unto God: and this is most probable, because his thirst came upon his great labour, & herein he most piously sought to God for succour, without acknowledging any fault, and was heard, v. 18, 19. Touching the words there is a difference, our translation hath it, with the jawbone of an Asse beapes upon heapes, with the jawbone of an Asse I have slaine 1000 men. but the Vulgar Latin, with the jawbone of an Asse, with the jawbone, pulli asinarum, of the young of shee Asses, I have slaine &c. Ours is followed by the Rabbins, Pagnine, Vatablus, Junius, Tigurini interpretes, &c. and the word חמור signifyeth an heape as well as an Asse, and the second word is of the duall number to shew, that this heape was great enough to make two heapes, and according to this reading it is more elegant the same word being brought againe aptly in a divers signification, whereas if it should be read, shee Asses, there can bee no reason given why it should be put in the feminine gender in the plurall number. And hee called that place Ramath Lehi, that is, the lifting up of a jawbone, that by the very name this miraculous slaughter of the enemies might be alwayes remembred to the praise of God.

V. 18.

Arias Montan.
Chald. Paraphr.

And hee was sore athirst and called on the name of the Lord, &c. and God clave the hollow place of the jaw and there came water out of it, &c. Some by the hollow place, out of which this water came, understand a place indented in the ground by the jawbone cast out of Samsons hand, but it is plainly said to have bene the hollow of the jawbone, or the hollow, that was in the jaw, that is, the place, where one of the grinders stood, and from hence water flowed out miraculously, as out of the head of a Fountaine, and when Samson had drunke hereof, his spirit revived, and hee called the name thereof En-hakorch, it is in Lehi to this day. En-hakorch signifying the fountaine of one calling; and because it is said to bee in Lehi to this day, it is held still to have remained a fountaine flowing with water from age to age, for both the writer of this booke, who wrote it some yeares after this was done, affirmeth to have continued untill his time. And Hieronymus saith, that it remained a spring of water, till his time, and Glycas saith, in the suburbs of Eleutheropolis is still seene a spring called the jawbone.

V. 19.

Hieron. epiraphio Paul.
Glycas ann. P. 2.
V. 20.

And Samson judged Israel in the dayes of the Philistims 20 yeares: see the same againe, Ch. 16. 31. in the dayes of the Philistims, to shew that his 20 yeares were part of the time, that the Philistims had dominion over Israel, as was shewed upon Ch. 13. 1.

CHAP. XVI.

V. 1.

THen went Samson to Gaza and saw there an harlot, and went in unto her, &c. Hitherto the valiant acts of Samson have bene set forth and his piety: now his fowle fallings into sinne follow, and so into misery and death, that the weaknesse of the best may appeare, that who so standeth may alwayes take heed, lest hee fall. The Hebrews seeke to salve the matter, saying that shee was no harlot, but an Inne-keeper, as the word also signifyeth, and that hee went in to her onely to lodge all night, as travellers use to doe. But both the circumstance of seeing her and so going in unto her, and of loving Dalila after this evince, that hee committed the foule sinne of fornication with her her, as with Dalilah, but it is to bee thought in the time of his misery, which followed, that hee repented and was forgiven, because Heb. 11. hee is numbered among the Saints. Gaza was one of the chiefe Cities of the Philistims, and hither it is likely, that Samson came to seeke occasion againe against the Philistims, that hee might try his strength further upon them. But it is most probable, that hee came now of his owne minde, presuming upon his strength, because it is not said, that this came of the Lord, and so God withdrew his grace from him for a punishment of his presumption, and hee ran into the sinne of fornication. v. 2. And it was told the Gazites saying, Samson is come in hither, and they compassed him in and laid waite for him, &c. And Samson rose at midnight and tooke the doores and the two posts, &c. Although hee sinned by fornication, yet as long as he sinned not against the law of Nazaritisme, the Lord out of his great mercy passed it over, and supplied him still with this stupendious strength, the like unto which was never heard of in any man, to plucke up and to carry away the gates and postes of a great City, which accordingly were without doubt great and heavy and strongly fixed, so that he could not be hereby kept in, it shewed plainly a supernaturall and divine power, against which the strongest gates and walls are nothing to defend the wicked inhabitants within. The place, to which hee carryed these gates was an hill before Hebron, this saith H. Bunting, was 20 miles, Adrichomius, a place neare Gaza, but that could not bee, because it is described by Hebron, neare unto which it was, and that was, as Adrichomius himselfe saith, 14 miles from Gaza. And this tending to the increasing of the miracle. What the watchmen did all this while it is not said, but it is most probable, that they were asleepe, it being now midnight, or stood amazed seeing him doe such a wonderfull thing, and not daring to resist, or to pursue him.

After this he loved a woman in the valley of Sorek, whose name was Dalilah. The river Sorek, which ran through this valley, saith Jerom, was by E-leutheropolis northward, where a little village remained to his time called Capharsorek, and Adrichomius placeth it in Dan, but Josephus in Palesina: which is most probable, and that Dalilah was a Philistim woman, because the Lords of the Philistims dealt with her to betray Samson, as followeth, and his wife and the harlot, to whom hee went in before, were Philistims. Sorek signifyeth a myrtle, which beareth berryes, of which pleasant wine is made: the river Sorek had the beginning in the tribe of Judah, and ran through the Philistims Countrey, the valley about being a most pleasant place, full of vines and myrtles. This woman is held by some to have bene Samsons wife, as by Chrysostom, Ephrem, and Prosper, but Josephus, Ambrosius, Suidas, Tostatus, Ferrus, &c. say, that hee lived also in fornication with her: for of his taking her to wife there is no mention made, as of the Timnite daughter before. And Ferrus noteth that having once fallen, and cast the feare of God away, hee made now no conscience of committing the same foule sinne againe and againe, till that hee was brought to misery: Wherefore let us take heed of falling, and if wee fall, rise speedily up againe, lest sinne follow sinne, and unavoidable judgment after all. The five Princes of the Philistims perceiving the love of Samson to Dalilah, seeke to her to betray him, promising unto her great summes of money, if shee could learne out, wherein his great strength lay, that he might be deprived of it and come into their hands; wherefore shee inticed him, and being thrice deluded at the last hee truly certified her, that if his haire were cut, hee should become weake, another man, &c. Dalilah is wonne by money, and shee though a weake woman, overcometh Samson, and delivereth him bound into his enemies hands. Which is set forth, that every man may take heed of the whorish woman, seeing what misery Samson was brought by such an one. Her house, saith Solomon, is the way of death, to such an house Samson going came to bee bound, blinded, and to suffer a world of misery. But why did the Philistims imagine the strength of Samson to lye in something, of which hee might bee deprived, seeing they that are most mighty men are made so by nature? Answ. It is not improbable, but

V. 2.

H. Bunt Patria.
travailes.
Adrichomius.

V. 4.

Hieron in loc.
Hebr.
Josephus.

H. Bunting Pa-
tria, travaux.

Chrysost Hom.
15. in Math.
Ephrem. contr. impia mulieres
Prosper lib. de promiss. Cap. 22.
Joseph. Amros.
Epist. 70.

Ferus.

Note.

V. 5, 6, 7, 8,
9, 10.
V. 11, 12, 13.
V. 14, 15,
16, 17.

Note.
Prov. 2.

Q

V. 7.

but that hee had sometime spoken something in generall, whereby they gathered it, although hee alwayes kept secret, what that thing was, and now being importuned by his Dalilab, hee would not a long time tell her, but first; If they take 7. greene withs, that were never dried, and binde mee, &c. the Vulgar Latin, si 7. nervicis funibus ligatus fuero, the Sept. likewise have וַיִּבְּדוּ nerves of beaſts, which being twiſted together will make a moſt ſtrong binder. The word וַיִּבְּדוּ here uſed ſignifyeth either a nerve, cord, rope, or rod, which being wound greene maketh a with. It may be indifferently taken therefore for a nerve or with, and herein Samſon might ſeeme to ſpeake probably: for what ſtrength of man is able to breake 7. of theſe together. Hee had indeed broken cords, wherewith he was bound before Ch. 15. 13. but this might ſeeme to bee a binding much ſtronger: wherefore ſhee beleevd him and bound him therewith, but when the men laid in wait were ready to take him being thus bound, he eaſily brake them, and ſo they durſt not approach.

V. 11.

2 If hee were bound with new ropes, but hee brake theſe alſo as threads. Now although ſhee cryed out both theſe times, The Philiftims are upon thee Samſon, yet they lay hid ſtill, and appeared not, till that ſome triall was made, and ſo hee remained ſecure, not knowing, that there were men hidden in the chamber to take him. For otherwiſe hee would without doubt both have ſlainethem, and ſeeing the treachery of Dalilab have taken heed of her.

V. 13.

3. If thou weaveſt the 7 lockes of my head with a web, and ſhee faſtened it with a pinne, &c. The ſpeech of Samſon being not full, but the faſtening with a pinne left to be underſtood, iſthus ſupplied by the Sept. If thou weaveſt the 7 lockes of my head with a web, and faſteneth it with a pinne to the wall, The Vulgar Latin, et clavam his circumligatum terra fixeris; Juniuſ thinketh, that having weaved his 7 lockes, into which his haire was diſtinguiſhed, ſhee bound on a pinne and faſtened it to a pillar. It was doubtleſſe ſome long pinne of iron, ſharpe at the end like a nail, that ſhee drave into ſome ſtud of the houſe ſo faſt, that it might ſeeme impoſſible for him to remove from that place, till the Philiftims lying in wait had taken him, he lying bound thus by the haire of the head, and this is intimated, v. 14. hee awaked out of his ſleepe and went away with the pinne of the beame and the web.

Juniuſ.

V. 14.

V. 15, 16.

V. 17, 18, 19.

Laſtly Dalilab ſeeing, that none of theſe wayes would take effect, ſhe urgeth Samſon more, that being overcome at the laſt, hee telleth her all his heart, and the haire of his head was ſhaved contrary to the law of Nazaritiſme, and the Lord departed from him, and his great ſtrength failed, and hee was taken by the Philiftims. It is not to bee thought, becauſe when his haire was cut off, he became weake, as another man, that his great ſtrength lay in his haire, for then other Nazarites ſhould have had ſuch invincible ſtrength alſo, but it was a gift extraordinarily given him of God that hee might deliver Iſrael, and as long as hee continued in his calling of a Nazarite not ſuffering a razor to come upon his head, this gift continued, but ſo ſoone as hee was ſhaven hee loſt it. And it came to paſſe by a juſt judgement of God, that hee was ſo beſotted through the love of an whore, as to reveale his great ſecret, that hee might bee puniſhed for his licenciuſneſſe this way, both now, and before in Gaza. If any man ſhall ſay, if the tranſgreſſing againſt the law of Nazaritiſme was the cauſe of Gods depriving him of this great gift, it ſhould ſeeme, that hee was worthy to bee deprived of it long before, becauſe a Nazarite might not touch a dead body, or come at it, but hee was amongſt heapes of the dead Philiftims, when he had ſlaine them, and from 30 men being ſlaine hee tooke garments. But Lyra answereth well, Samſon although a Nazarite, was not in this tyed to the law of ordinary Nazarites, becauſe his calling was to kill and to deſtroy the Philiftims, v. 19. when his haire was going off, ſhee is ſaid to afflict him, becauſe his ſtrength went then from him, or when his haire was all cut off ſhee afflicted him by waking him out of his ſleepe, whereupon hee found his owne weakneſſe and came immediately into miſery. But it may further be demanded here, how the Philiftims knew, that his ſtrength was now gone from: for although it was moſt probable, that hee had had revealed his whole heart truly to Dalilah, yet because he had so often deceived her, they could not certainly ground upon it, unlesse they saw some signe of weaknesse now in him? To this Lyra and others answer rightly, that although there be no mention made of her binding him at this time, yet it is to be held, that shee bound him as at other times that shee might hereby make tryall, and now he being awakened, and not able to breake the bands, it appeared that his strength was gone.

Lyra, Ferm.Qu.

The Philistims having taken Samson put out his eyes, and made him to grinde in a mill at Gaza, binding him with fetters of brasse, and putting him in prison; a just punishment for being drawne by his eyes after an harlots beauty, therefore his eyes are now cruelly put out; hee voluntarily suffered himselfe to be bound by her, a stranger, therefore hee cometh into the hands of strangers, and was bound by them; hee could not use his liberty and freedome in Gods service well, therefore hee is now imprisoned and made to worke like a slave: thus God punisheth sinne in the kinde. They slew him not, but put his eyes out, that hee might indure misery the longer, and bee no more able to hurt them; they bound him with fetters of brasse, because, they saw, that other bands could not hold him, and they made him grinde in prison after the manner of captaines in those dayes, to adde unto his affliction, and that hee might not eate bread grain. The Hebrews, as Comestor hath it, say, that they also made him lye with women of able bodies, that hee might of them beget lusty children, and Lyra, that they interpret his grinding in the mill thus, but this, is obscene and absurd. Wee may see in this example the ficklenesse of worldly glory, in that ere while none upon earth was so glorious as Samson, but now none more miserable. But this is the reward of sinne, and although all fornicators, and wicked persons are not served thus, yet spiritually they suffer as Samson did. 1. By comming thus into the hands of their spirituall enemies. 2. By having the eyes of their mindes blinded. 3. By being bound with an evill custome of sinning, that cannot be broken. 4. By being caſt into the prison of obstinacy. 5. By making them to labour without end in his workes, which is the grinding in his mill.

Humbert the haire of his head began to grow againe, after that hee was shaven. When his haire was cut off, his strength went away, because that speciall thing concerning Nazaritisme decreed concerning him before hee was borne, was transgressed: but now in his affliction hee was carefull to live like a Nazarite againe and to nourish his haire, till it came to that length, that it was of, before hee was shaven, wherefore God now supplied him of his mercy with the like strength againe, that his enemies might not alwayes triumph in his misery, but be destroyed, as they were well worthy for their sinnes, and Israel might hereby have deliverance from them, for which Samson was appointed. By thistime it is likely, that hee was througly humbled for his sinnes past and sought unto God for mercy, and therefore although for a time hee afflicted him, hee shewed mercy at length againe unto him, and gave him might to be revenged upon the Philistims, who were as the rod of God unto him for a time. So God leaveth none of his finally: but when he hath corrected them, that they might not perish for ever, he turneth againe unto them in much compassion, but hee utterly destroyeth the wicked, whom for a time hee hath used as his chastising instruments; and it is not unjust in him after this to destroy them, as a father, when hee hath done correcting his childe with a rod, may well take it and cast it into the fire. For although God useth the wicked to chastise the vices of his, yet they sinne so greatly in chastising them, as that they are well worthy when the faithfull having sinned have tasted of the cup of his wrath, to drinke the dreggs thereof even to the bottome. Thus these wicked Philistims sinned, when they were made instruments to punish Samson. 1. For that they ascribed their prevailing over him to their idoll Dagon, 2. In that they aggravated his misery by propounding him as their common laughing stocke, they derided the miserable. The Lords of the Philistims gathered together to offer a great sacrifice

V. 21.

Form.

Note.

Eccles. Histor.

Note.

Form.

2. Cor. 4. 4. E

V. 22.

Note.

V. 23. 24.

V. 25.

Note.

Note.

Lyra.

Arias Montan.

Josephus.

Ambros. Epist.
70.

V. 26.

Ferm.

Note.

Object.

Object.

Lyra.

sacrifice to Dagon their god, and they said, Our God hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hands. And when the people saw him, they praised Dagon likewise. Thus because things fell out prosperously for a while unto them; they thought, that they did well in serving Dagon, an idoll, whereas it was through Gods judgement against Samson for his sinnes, that hee came into their power. So the wicked commonly flatter themselves because of their prosperity, and have no conscience of their evill doings: but prosperity doth not alwayes argue well doing, but the wicked are sometime lifted up hereby, that they may take the greater fall. Dagon is thought to come of אֵד a fish, it was an idoll having an humane shape upward, and the shape of a fish downward, according to the forme of some monsters in the Sea. Diodorus Siculus writing of this idoll by the name of Derceta saith: In Ascalon, in Syria, there is a famous Temple of a goddesse called Derceta, and therein an image having the face of a woman, but the rest of the body all like a fish. For this Derceta being once taken with the love of a proper young man, by whom shee had a daughter, through sorrow and shame cast herselfe into a lake and was turned into a fish, for which cause the Syrians abstaine from fish, and worship fishes as gods; Of Dagon see more 1 Sam. 6. 4. Hee had an head and hands, but no feet, that wee read of, as a fish hath none, which confirmeth this that upward hee had the shape of a man or woman, downward of a fish. By such vanities of old were the heathen led. And when their hearts were merry, they called for Samson, that hee might make them sport which hee did: that is, saith Lyra, because hee was blinde, by going sometime against a pillar and sometime against the wall, and sometime stumbling and falling. Arias Montanus saith, that it was by dancing, but it is not probable, that Samson would doe any thing to move them to laughter, but rather the sport, that was made by him was passive, they jesting and laughing at him, and happily one while one striking him on the eare, and then another, and asking him, who did it, or other wayes most grossely abusing him, so that hee being of an ingenuous and valiant minde had rather indure death. And thus the Sept. have it, they mocked him; Josephus, they convitiated him in their cuppes, so likewise Ambros. gravibus in eum insultabant convitiis.

And Samson said to the lad, that led him, Suffer mee to feele the pillars whereupon the house standeth, &c. Hitherto of Samsons great sinnes and punishment suffered therefore, now followeth his being received to grace againe, and the judgement through his strength comming upon his enemies. For that God received him to grace appeareth, because he heard his prayer and strengthened him to pull downe the house upon the Philistims heads. Although hee had sinned foully, yet he did patiently beare his grievous punishment without murmuring, and prayed to God as his God, wherein his repentance and faith appeared. And from hence wee ought all when we have sinned, to be stirred up to repent and by faithfull prayer to seeke againe unto God for mercy, seeing he is easily entreated by those that turne unto him. If it be objected, that Samson prayed, that he might be revenged, whereas the Lord saith, Revenge not your selves, for vengeance is mine: It is answered, hee indeed that hath no calling to take revenge, sinneth, if hee seeketh it, but Samson had a calling to it, because hee was set up to deliver Israel, and therefore to take revenge upon the Philistims their enemies. If it bee further objected hee slew himselfe together with the Philistims, which for any man to doe is most impious: It is answered, hee did not this out of despaire, or without a calling, but to deliver Israel, and to glorifie God by his death, as his calling required: for hee could not now otherwise deliver the people of God, but by putting his owne life in certaine hazzard, even as they, that runne into apparent danger of death in fighting against the Turkes for the good of many miserable Christians being hereunto appointed by their superiors: wherefore Samson in this deserved no blame, but rather high praise and commendation; so Ferm. It was not, saith Lyra, out of malice for the wrongs done unto unto him, but out of zeale, that hee thus sought the Philistims destruction, because they blasphemed the true God and magnified their idol Dagon. And because hee could not otherwise take vengeance on them, hee did it with the losse of his owne life together, being moved doubtlesse by an infinit from God, because hee gave him such miraculous strength to doe it. So that here is nothing to patronize those that desperately make away themselves; or run rashly into deadly dangers. In asking the lad that led him, to bring him to the two pillars, which supported the house, hee might happily be thought to desire this, saith Lyra, to rest himselfe against them, as being over-wearyed: but I thinke rather hee was suffered to lay hold upon them, that the Philistims might laugh at his vanity, holding it impossible for him to pull them downe, supposing him still to be as weake, as at their first taking of him. But thus God suffered them to be infatuated, against that, which they had notice of to their destruction. For otherwise having learnt once that his strength lay in his Nazarinish haire, a man would wonder, that they shaved him not againe and againe to make sure worke against the mischief, that otherwise they might feare hee would doe them. The house, where this great slaughter was made, is held generally to bee the Temple of Dagon, where they sacrificed and feasted. The number slaine is said to be 3000 of men and women, that stood upon the rooffe, besides all the Lords of the Philistims, and so many within, as the house could containe, and thus hee is said to have slaine more at his death, then in his life, and by this meanes the children of Israel had a breathing time given them from the Philistims oppressions.

Then his brethren came downe and tooke him, and brought him up and buried him betweene Zorah and Elhtaol, &c. so the body of this servant of God was not suffered to lye amongst the Philistims, but was honorably buried amongst his people, about which such care was commonly taken for the hope of the resurrection, when the bodies of all the faithfull shall be made glorious, and therefore it is fit in the meane season, that they should be laid up with honour. As Samson dying slew more enemies, then living, so saith Ferus, doe all the faithfull, some vices they mortify, whilst they live, but then they kill all, that have had dominion in them.

Mytically by Samson Christ was figured out, 1. In his name taken from the Sun, as hath beene shewed, for Christ is the Sun of righteousness. 2. In that hee came of a barren woman to deliver Israel being full of misery, so Christ came of a Virgin, from whom no fruit could bee expected to save his people. 3. The Angel foretelleth his birth and condition, he shall be a Nazarene, and begin to deliver Israel, and giveth a signe by ascending in the flame which burnt the sacrifice: so the Angel Gabriel foretold the birth of Christ, and his condition, that hee should bee holy and the Sonne of God, and gave a signe in Elizabeth, who beyond all expectation had now conceived. 4. Samson grew up and the Spirit came upon him, so Christ grew in stature and favour with God and men, and had the Spirit without measure. 5. Samson tooke a wife of the Philistims, but his Parents were against it, so Christ tooke a spouse of the Gentiles, the Jews being left, but this was taken indignly by his ancient people the Jews, but some of them, that is, the Apostles at length consented, and furthered the marriage by their preaching unto them. 6. Samson going about the taking of a wife is incounred by a Lion, but he slayeth him without a weapon: so Christ was tempted by the Devill, but hee overcame him and confounded his forces. And he likewise cometh against the faithfull, but is by faith subdued, and cannot hurt them: for thou shalt tread upon the Lion, or the Aspe, and the Basiliske, Psal. 91. Esa. 11. 7. Samson tooke hony out of the Lions carcass: so Christ causeth hony to come from them, that before were Lions, that is, sweet and heavenly doctrine, as from Paul, and of Lions hee maketh Bees, when the hard hearted are made mercifull, the cruel gentle, the proud humble, &c. 8. Samson propoundeth a riddle to be expounded to his companions promising a reward, but they could not expound it, but by the helpe of his heifer: So Christ, saith Hugo, propounded the Scriptures to the Apostles,

V. 27.

V. 30.

V. 31.

Ferus.

The Mystery.
Mat. 4.

Pet. 5. 8

Hugo Cardin.

Numb. 6. 19.

Lyra.

Apostles, but they could not expound them, that is, the Prophecies touching him, till they beleaved his incarnation, and this was ploughing with his heifer, for the man Christ, by whose blood wee are cleansed from sinne; was prefigured by a red heifer; or they could not expound them without light coming from him. Or as Ferus, the companions of Samson set forth the Jews, amongst whom Christ was preaching, and whom hee used familiarly, but they being treacherous against him, hee went away angry, when hee departed up to heaven, as Samson went angry away from the Philistims. 9. Samson returned againe in wheat harvest to visit his wife with a kid, but is rejected, and with Foxes tyed together and fire-brands fireth their corne, so Christ came in the time of Pentecost by his Spirit, that by his Apostles indued herewith hee might visit the Church of the Jews, but being rejected hee bringeth the Roman with fire and sword against them, thus Ferus; but Lyra will have his going among the Gentiles by the Apostle to preach, and so his desire to be joyned to a Church amongst them to be here prefigured, but the Roman Emperor, as their father withstood it, but hee kindled in their harvest the fire of love, &c. but the first is better. 10. The Philistims came up to binde Samson, and the men of Judah delivered him bound into their hands, but he brake the bands, and slew them with the jawbone of an Ass, and being athirst had water miraculously out of that jawbone: so Christ was bound by the consent of Jews and Gentiles, with the bands of death, hee himselfe permitting it, but hee brake these bands and came forth, and onely by the tongues of his Ministers, who were base and contemptible, as the jawbone of an Ass, he subdued thousands, but then hee cast them away, as it were, as Samson did the jawbone, when he suffered them to come into the hands of persecutors, and when the faithfull hereupon were much perplexed, he gave them comfort by working miracles at their sepulchres. 11. Samson came downe to Gaza and loved a woman there, and going in unto her was watched, but hee arose at midnight and carryed away the gates of the City: So Christ, through the love of mankinde having descended into the grave had a watch set about his sepulcher, but hee arose and destroyed the gates of hell, and went up to the Mountaine of God, that is, heaven. 12. Samson loved Dalilah and by her was betrayed, being first 3 times bound, then his eyes were put out &c. But his haire growing his strength returned, and the Philistims, though for a time rejoycing were by his might destroyed: So Christ loved the Church of the Jews, but was betrayed amongst them, and put to death, but even then his power departed not from him, but was onely hidden for a time, breaking out againe afterwards, when the Apostles, that before fled, returned and went about courageously preaching, and the house wherein his enemies were, was pulled downe upon them, when their City and Temple were destroyed, onely herein he was unlike unto Samson in that hee dyed not together, but liveth for ever. Thus Ferus, who also addeth, that hee was bound 3 times, when hee tooke upon him the sinnes of those before the law, under the law, and under the Gospell. But the putting out of Samsons eyes doth better set forth the blindfolding of Christ, and then their ignominious usage of him, as the Philistims used Samson, the shaving of his haire, the departing of the divine helpe for a time from him, as hee cryed out, my God my God why hast thou forsaken mee? Samsons voluntary offering of himselfe to death after his binding and carrying it away, Christs voluntary dying for our sins, when he slew more then in all his life time, because hee now destroyed him, that had power of death, that is, the Devill, Heb. 2. 15, 16.

CHAP. XVII.

After Samson there were no more Judges in Israel, untill Eli and Samuel, whose History should therefore follow in the next place, which is set forth, 1. Sam. But because there were three remarkable things, that happened in the dayes of the Judges, 1. Micahs idolatry. 2. The villany of the men men of Benjamin. 3. The marriage of Ruth a Moabnesse, to Boaz, and her conversion to the faith, therefore it seemeth good to the Spirit of God, first to set forth the histories of these things. What time this thing and the rest were done, is uncertaine, but here it is said, in those dayes, in the Vulgar Latin, but Hebr. without any noting of the time, There was a man of Mount Ephraim, whose name was Micah, onely v. 6. the time is described thus, in those dayes there was no King in Israel, but every man did that, which was right in his owne eyes. Josephus placeth the history of the Levite, whose wife was abused, and of the Tribe of Benjamin hereupon almost all destroyed, which followeth Ch. 19. next unto the death of Joshua and Judahs prevailing against Adonibezek, Judg. 1. for after this, hee saith, the people of Israel growing to be full of abuses, that villany was committed and so much blood was shed. Then the Canaanites prevailing against the Tribe of Dan pent them up in the Mountaines, so that they had not roome for their necessary occasions, wherefore they sent out 5 men to search into the Mediterranean Land, and going a dayes journey towards Sidon they found a fruitfull place, and having certified it, the Dynites went with an Army and subdued it, and built a City there and called it Dan, according to the history here following, Ch. 18. 29. And if that expedition of the Danites was neare unto Joshua's time, then this of Micah, an appurtenance of it must needs be about the same time also. Josb. 19. 47. the Danites having too strait bounds and going out and taking Lebethan, and calling it Dan, is spoken of, as if it had beene in Joshua's dayes, but, as there was shewed, it was set downe by anticipation: Yet it is not probable, that they tarried till after Samsons time, before they thus sought to enlarge themselves, but did it soone after the death of Joshua. And this is one argument used by Junius to prove that time, Judg. 2. 11. to be the time of doing these things; a second is, because Jonathan is said now to have bin Priest unto the Danites, Ch. 18. 30. who was grand-childe unto Moses by Manasseh, as he saith. 3. Because the history following this Ch. 19. 20. must needs be of things done about that time, seeing Phinees was yet High-Priest, as is noted, Ch. 20. 28. and Jerusalem was wholly in the Levites hands, as appeareth, Ch. 19. 11, 12. whereas it was subdued part by Judah soone after Joshua his death, Judg. 1. 8. and part by Benjamin, v. 21. Lyra therefore and Comestor are both for this time, & Ferus also, but Lyra saith, that some of the Hebrews stand for the time, that Oibniel was Judge, but Josephus sheweth plainly, both that Cushanrishathaim oppressed Israel after this, and also that the Kenezite, who was Oibniel, fought against him after this. I doubt not then, but the time of doing these things was, as Josephus hath it, but they are placed here, that the history of the Judges gets might not be interrupted, and that such memorabile things might not be altogether omitted, seeing that hereby it appeareth, that not without cause God had beene formerly so severe against his people in giving them into their cruell enemies hands, they are here finally added. For that description of the time by the Anarchy, that now was, there was no King in Israel in those dayes, it seemeth also, as Junius noteth, to imply all this to have beene done betweene Joshua's time and Oibniels. For although a Judge differed much from a King, yet men might not doe whatsoever they thought good even in the Judges time, but he had some coactive power to restraîne them from evill, by punishing the evill doers, according to the Law, wherefore Moses that was no King, yet is said to have beene a King in Jeshurun, Deut. 33. 3. Why Junius calleth Jonathan the grandchilde of Moses by Manasseh, when as hee is said to be the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh, I know not, but in the Vulgar Latin, Moses is put for Manasseh, Ch. 18. 30. the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, because Gershom is known to come of Moses, and not of Manasseh, now the name Manasseh is yet put in the Hebr. as Bonsferius noteth out of the Rabbins for reverence to Moses, that he might not seeme to have so wicked a grandchilde, that so soone became a Priest unto idols, but hee is written the son of Manasseh, as noting him rather worthy to be called the sonne of Manasseh, so infamous afterwards for idolatry, and therefore to intimate this, Manasseh is written in Hebrew here with 2 elevated above the other letters and this marke o upon the top, and a

V. 1.

Josephus. Antiq. lib. 5. c. 2.Junius.Lyra.
Ecles. Histor.Bonsferius

note in the margin, and if 2 as is hereby shewed it ought to bee, be left out, there will onely these letters remaine משה Moses. Having thus found out the time, the histories follow, and first of Micah.

Ferus.

V. 2.

Lyra.

There was a man of Mount Ephraim, whose name was Micah, and hee said unto his mother, the 1100 shekels of Silver, that were taken from thee, about which thou cursedst &c. behold the Silver is with mee, &c. It seemeth, that Micah had stoln this money from his mother, but hearing her curse the theife, and say, that shee had devoted it unto God, and to his service, his conscience was troubled, and hee soone confessed, that hee had taken it, and so restored it againe, willing her to doe therewith, as shee had vowed, and haply telling her, that hee meant to have imployed it to the same purpose; whereupon shee calls him the blessed of the Lord; thus Ferus, and Lyra almost to the same effect, the Vulgar Latin for these words, which were taken from thee, hath, which thou hadst separated, whereupon the former exposition goeth, but by the Hebr. Text it doth not appeare, that his mother made this known, before that he had confessed the theft. Some, saith Lyra, because the summe is 1100 shekels, and Dalilah had received of each Lord of the Philistims for betraying Samson 1100 shekels, hold that Dalilah was Mica's mother, but this is a conjecture altogether without ground, seeing this was done long before Samsons time. For that reading which thou hadst separated, Hebr. it is אשר לקח לך which were taken to thee, Junius, quod captum est tibi, and one Sept. translation, which thou tookest to thy selfe: but another Sept. Pagninus, Tygurini interpretes, Cajetan, &c. have it, which were taken from thee, but לך signifyeth not from thee, but to thee, and therefore it seemeth to imply some speciall use, for which shee had laid this money aside, which Jerom supposing for that, which followeth, to bee for the service of God, according to her blinde devotion, rendred it, which thou hadst separated, and if it be thus taken, the stealing of this mony from her is not mentioned, but left to be understood. Or it might be money taken for her not long before by Micah or some servant of hers, which shee now missing ragged and cursed, as followeth, about which thou cursedst, Lyra saith, our expositors commonly take it for her vowing this money unto God with an oath, but the Hebr. word, hee confesseth, properly signifyeth cursing. Now Micah hearing his mother to rage thus confesseth unto her, that hee had the money, as Ferus noteth, having stolne it, but now hearing, that it was devoted to God, hee was terrifyed, and restored it: whereupon hee observeth, how blinde devotion worketh more in the superstitious, then the feare of breaking Gods command: for he was not troubled at his theft, but hearing that this money was devoted to make an Idol and Teraphim, he feared. But how came it to passe, that hee or his mother were so taken with these things? Hee answereth, they thought, that if it were acceptable to God to worship at the Tabernacle, which was in Shiloh, to which they could goe but once a yeare, it would bee much more acceptable to set up some image unto him, and to get a Priest, and to have sacrifices offered, and to worship him before this dayly at home. But in the meane season they looked not into the word of God, appointing one place onely to doe sacrifice in, and straightly forbidding images, and they were led on onely by a good intention. Whereby wee may see, that good intentions justifie not our actions, but then is our service acceptable to God, when it is regulated by his word. The neglect hereof is the fountaine of all superstition in the Church at this day. As a silly woman here first in blinde devotion makes an Idoll, and setteth up idolatrous worship in private, but hereby an whole tribe, the tribe of Dan was soone infected: so some melancholike person first deviseth a way by himselfe to serve God in a singular manner, and soone after many follow him herein, and then another doth the like, and this is seconded with the suffrage of a company of unlearned Priests, and so the whole Church is filled with superstition. But in all this nothing is heard favouring of idolatry, but the name of the Lord, and they that erre thus thinke that they do highly please God, and are next unto him in sanctity, thus Ferus being himself a Fryer, but shewing plainly a milke, as there was cause,

Ferus.

Note.

Note.

of

of the many superstitutions in men of such orders of the Church of Rome, whereof he was a member, and shewing the true originall of all this, viz. the not going by the Word, but by mens own phantasies, when as the written Word onely should be our rule in all our devotions. And the like was observed before touching Gedeon with his Ephod, Judges 8. 27.

Micah having restored the money to his mother, she said, I had wholly dedicated it to the Lord from my hand for my son to make a graven Image and a molten Image, the Vulgar Latin for more expreſſion, I had wholly dedicated it to the Lord, that my son might receive it from my hand, &c. Iunius, dimissura de manu mea filio meo ad faciendum &c. for a graven Image and a molten image, Tostatus hath it a graven Image or a molten, holding that one Image onely was made, which hee proveth v. 4. Because although it bee rendred, they were in the house of Micah, yet Hebr. it is in the singular number, it was in the house of Micah, and Ch. 18. 31. one Image onely is spoken of, unto which may be added, that hereby her intent was to represent the Lord, who is but one. But it is most plaine Ch. 18. 14. 17. 18. that there was made both a molten Image and a graven. As for the mention made onely of the graven Image, Ch. 18. 31. haply that onely is spoken of, and the other understood, and likewise it is said, v. 4. It was in the house of Micah, that is, the graven Image: the other being understood, or it was, that is, this whole preparation of the graven Image, molten Image, Ephod, and Teraphim, was in his house, for which hee is said to have had an house of gods. As for that one Lord represented hereby, it is no marvaile, seeing they were so grosse as to set him forth by Images, that they made not one, but many; imagining, as the heathen, one to be the principall and the other inferior to him.

And his mother tooke 200 shekels of silver, and gave them to the Founder, &c. Hebr. it is onely 200 of Silver, and before a 1100. of Silver, but under this phrase shekels are commonly understood, a common shekel being of our money 1 s. 3. d. the Kings shekel 2 s. d. the shekel of the Sanctuary 2 s. 6. d. of this money a molten Image was made; that is, by being melted and cast into a mould, and a graven Image, that is, one carved and graven, the rest of the money it is most likely was employed about vestiments, and other appurtenances, as it followeth, v. 5. Micah made an Ephod and Teraphim, the Vulgar Latin, an Ephod, that is, Priests garments and a Teraphim, that is, idols. An Ephod was a garment of the High-Priest made with great cost, of which see Judg. 8. 27. and hereby, saith Lysa, was meant both it, and all other Priestly garments: For as they would have a Priest to offer to these new made gods for them, after the manner that was used at the Tabernacle, so garments like unto those were prepared accordingly. And Teraphim idols are called Gen. 31. but Lysa saith, hee knoweth not whether they bee gods, or idols, which are set forth by Teraphim, because the Hebrews understand the head of one first-borne dedicated to the Devill, and spiced well, that it may last long without corruption, upon the tongue a plate of gold being placed with the name of the Devill written thereon to give answers. And indeede because a Teraphim is mentioned, as something diverse from the graven and molten Image, it is plaine, that common idols cannot bee meant hereby, but something of another kinde. Hugo Cardin. because the word Teraphim is used in a good sense, Hos. 3. 4. the children of Israel shall bee without a King, and a Priest, a Sacrifice, an Ephod and a Teraphim many dayes, understandeth the Cherubims and Seraphims hereby, which were there pictured, as Cherubims at the Tabernacle were placed above the Mercy seat. But it seemeth rather to set forth the breast-plate that was in the Ephod, having the Urim and Thummim in it, whereby the Priest gave answer to those that came to inquire of God, because it is named together with a sacrifice and Ephod, and Priest, to be without which was to bee in a miserable estate: so Judg. 18. 5. the Levite in the house of Micah was desired to aske counsell of God for the Danites, implying this Teraphim to bee, as it were, an oracle to consult with. And Idols wherein the Devill gave answers to idolaters, are therefore called by this name, Ezek. 21. 21. Zechar. 10. 2. 2 King. 23. 24.

V. 3.

Junius.
Tostatus.

V. 4.

V. 5.

Lysa.

Hugo Cardin.

and

- and Micah consecrated one of his sonnes, who became his Priest, Hebr. Hee filled the hands of one of his sonnes, it is a phrase to set forth consecrating of a Priest, because Levit. 8. 26, 27. Aaron and his sonnes were consecrated by filling their hands with the fat of the ram of consecration, the shoulder and oyled cakes, &c. Tostatus thinketh, that this sonne was his first-borne, because the first-borne served in this office, before that the Tribe of Levi was taken in their stead; but it was a presumptuous part in Micah to take upon him to consecrate a Priest and no Levite, shewing, how greatly out of order all things then were.*
- v. 6. In those dayes there was no King in Israel, &c. Here is set forth the foundation of all these wicked doings, and of those that follow, there was no King: that is, no Sovereign power of King or Judge to restrain the overflowing of wickednesse: whence note, that an anarchy is the worst estate that is, yea worse then a tyranny, for now idolatry is committed, violence is offered, women are deflowred, & abused unto death, &c. for this was done after Joshua's death and before the stirring up of a Judge, as I have shewed already in the beginning of the Chapter.*
- And there was a young man of Bethlehem Judah, of the family of Judah, &c. Micah having made one of his sonnes his Priest, now it is shewed, how he accidentally met with a Levite and entertained him for his Priest. Hee is said to bee of the family of Judah, saith Lyra, by his mother, but his father was a Levite: The Vulgar Latin hath it, of his family, that is, of Micahs kindred, say some, but this, saith Lyra, is false, and contrary to the Hebrew Text. Of Bethlehem Judah, this is so called, because there was another Bethlehem, in the tribe of Zabulon, Iosh. 19. This poore Levite wandred to get a place, where hee could, because all things being now out of order, the tithes for the Levites maintenance were not paid, so that they were forced to seeke some other way to get their living. This Levite cometh to Micahs house, and hee agreeth with him for Viſtualls, 10 shekels a yeare and a suite of apparell to bee his Priest, or household chaplain. Hebr. for a suit of apparell, it is, an order of apparell, the Sept. &c. & iuanion, the Vulgar Latin vestem duplicem, the Chald. Paraph. par vestium. Thus it is noted also in Nehemiabs time, that the Levites were forced to wander, because their parts were not given unto them. This Levite being poore for Viſtualls consenteth to many wickednesse, 1. To be consecrated a Priest, when hee was not of the sonnes of Aaron. 2. To offer sacrifice in an unlawfull place, for it ought not to bee offered but onely at the Tabernacle. 3. To offer and to doe service to Idols. Thus for food and raiment, and for the love of worldly gaine the foulest finnes are committed even by those of the holiest tribe, and the people are pleased and humoured in their wickednesse.*
- And Micah said, Now I know the Lord will doe mee good, seeing I have a Levite to my Priest. See here, how through blindness and ignorance this man promiseth himselfe prosperity from God, when as all that he did was a provoking of God to judge him: for although hee had now a Levite to his Priest, yet, as hath beene shewed, sinne was herein committed divers wayes. Hee thought surely, that hee did not well before in consecrating to this office his owne sonne, but of the other finnes concurring in his blinde devotion he had no sense. Onely because the Leviticall tribe was chosen of God, hee blessed himselfe, how grossely soever hee erred. And thus the Zealous Roman Catholickes, because they confesse and have absolution from a Priest; or a pardon from the Pope, in whom there is succession, thinke themselves most happy, although they commit most grosse idolatries, and many other abominations.*

CHAP. XVIII.

HERE againe it is first repeated, that there was in those dayes no King in Israel, to denote this to bee the originall of the wickednesse here spoken of, viz. the violence done by the Danites unto Micah, and the corrupting of that that whole tribe with idolatry. Next the Danites seeke them some more inheritance, for all their inheritance had not yet falne unto them, this was soone after Iosua his death, Ch. 1. 34. the Amorites held the chiefe part of their inheritance and so straightened them, and of this they complained even in Iosua his life time, Ios. 19. 47. and there this expedition is briefly set downe by anticipation, but here more largely. The Danites send out five men to seeke for more roome to inhabit in, they passe by Micahs house, and lodge there, for hee as it seemeth, was a great man, and wealthy, and therefore they being Israelites, he entertaineth them, which shewed his hospitality. Being there they saw the Levite, and were by him informed of the Images and the Teraphim, wherefore they pray him to inquire of their way, which hee did, and promised them prosperity. It is said, they knew the Levites voyce, and turned in thither, that is, saith Lyra, they knew by his voyce, that hee was of Bethlehem Iudab, because although all the Israelites spake one language, yet they of one place differed in their dialect, from those of another, so Lyra, as our north countrey men differ from us in their speech, and hereby may easily be known from the southerne. And hee saith, that they turned in thither, that is, to the lodging assigned to the Levite. But by what meanes could he consulting with a dumb Idoll foretell, what successe they should have in their way? To this Lyra, some hold, that hee spake thus to please them having no answer from the Idoll; but the Hebrews, that the Devill answered out of the Idoll, God permitting it for their greater delusion, who were addicted to Idols, that they might be the further gone in error, who loved not the truth, and so finally bee damned therefore. Ferus saith, that God might answer by this Priest, as hee used the mouth of Balaam, and Caiaphas to speake the truth, and oft times of wicked Pastors, to try these Danites. And it seemeth that they were hereby drawne away to Idolatry, because it fell out truly according to his prediction, and by their meanes the whole tribe; for hereby they gathered that this service before Images here pleased God, as well as that which according to his word was done before the Tabernacle. But this was their ignorance of the word which had given warning here-against, Deut. 13. And they were worthy to bee thus given over, because they would inquire in an unlawfull place, and of an unlawfull person.

Then the five Men came to Laish, and saw the people how they dwelt carelesse, &c. This Laish is also called Lesbem, Ios. 19. 47. and being taken, Dan, after the name of Dan, the father of the Danites. It was furthest north of all the Land of Canaan, since called Cesarea Philippi, because re-built by Philip the Tetrarch in the honour of Tiberius Caesar; and because it lay furthest northward, this speech is sometime used to set forth the north and south bounds of the holy Land, that is, the whole longitude from Dan to Beerseba; and here afterwards Jeroboam set up one of his golden Calves. From Micahs house in Mount Ephraim to this Laish, saith Hen. Bunting, were 104 miles, from Zerab and Eshtaol to Mount Ephraim 24 miles. And this people is said to have dwelt securely like the Zidonians, that is, a people having a very strong City, and so fearing no enemies, and farre from Zidon, so that the Zidonians could not readily helpe them, and farre from all others that might rescue them; and had no businesse with any man, that is, they were in no league with any other people; for businesse, Hebr. דבר a word or matter is put. Now besides all these things that might encourage the Danites to this expedition, it is inserted. And there was no Magistrate in the Land, which might put them to some in any thing; Hebr. there was none destroying any thing in the Land, the possessor of that Kingdome; for this exposition is nearest unto these words, וְאֵין מְכַלִּים דָּבָר בְּהָרָע יוֹרֵשׁ עָרָא. And it was one reason rendred of their secure dwelling, whereby the Danites might the more confidently come against them; there was none of the destroyers of any thing in the Land, as in other places, that possessed or dwelt in that Kingdome. They had no enemies either domesticall or foraine that annoyed them; and as no enemies, so no confederates to helpe them in case they should bee set upon: for both the Zidonians and all other people dwelt fast from them; which is the full meaning of this verse, and expresseth a state more secure.

V. 1.

V. 2.

V. 3, 4, 5.

Lyra.

Ferus.

V. 7.

H. Bunt. parvar
travailes.

secure. The Vulg. Latine, Nullis eis penitus resistente; the Sept. Not able to speake a word in the Land, inheriting treasure. Junius, Necesse quinquam, qui de re nulla pudore afficeret in ea terra heredem imperii: in stead of which two last words the Vulg. Latine translation hath it, and of great riches, following the Septuagint. Why a Magistrate putting to shame or not, should be spoken of here, I cannot see, because if there had bin none among them to punish misdemeanors, they could not have lived securely, but in continuall feare of violence from the evil-minded; wherefore I preferre the first. Or if we take ככלים for putting to shame, of כלם, the two last words may be expounded inhabitant of that Kingdome, or inheritor there, and so being joyned with מן the sentence will bee this, There was none inheritor in that Kingdom confounding a matter in the Land; that is, there were no domestick troubles by reason of any hot-spirited, or doing violence, but all quietnesse.

The five searchers returning, informe their brethren how they had found this Land, and incite them to goe to possesse it, which they doe, and march out of Zorah and Eshtaol, 600 men of warre; first to Kiriath-jearim in Judah, then to Micahs house. From Zorah to Kiriath-jearim were 16 miles, from thence to Mount Ephraim where Micah dwelt 8 miles. Of Kiriath-jearim, see before, Josh. 15. & Josh. 18. here they lodged by the way without the City, not within it, as the words v. 12. doe declare, Behold it is behinde Kiriath-jearim; and as Lyra noteth.

When they were come to the house of Micah, the five searchers informe them that there was a Molten and graven Image, and a Teraphim, and Ephod, all which they tooke away with them; and when they were about it, being expostulated with by the Levite, they easily perswaded him for greater dignity, to joyne with them in this their robbery, and to goe away with them to become a Priest unto their whole tribe. The phrase used to the Levite, when they would have him to hold his peace, was this, Lay thy hand upon thy mouth; For thus silence was wont to bee expressed, Job 21.5. Job 29.9. Pliny and Macrobius say, that the Romans had a Goddess called Angerona, the Goddess of Silence, with her finger laid upon her mouth. In a Temple at Egypt, where Isis and Serapis were worshipped, there was an Image with the finger upon the mouth also, to shew, that it should bee kept in silence that these were mortals. And Harpoerates the God of Silence was also amongst them thus pictured. Whereas they perswade him rather to bee Priest unto a tribe, then to one man, it is not to bee understood, that the whole tribe removed their seat to Laish; for the tribe of Dan for a great part dwelt still in Zorah and Eshtaol, and these were onely 600 men of war, whereas the whole consisted of many thousands; by a tribe then, they understand a good part of a tribe, and that of good note. In this Levite we may see, how ambition and covetousnesse work in those that bee worldly minded in the Ministry, they are altogether led by dignities and profits here, and care not for Gods glory, or to keep a good conscience.

Micah seeing what was done, gathereth his neighbours together, and pursueth after the Danites, and cryeth out unto them, and chargeth them, saying, Tee have taken away my Gods and my Priest, and what have I more? the Vulg. Latine for the last words, hath, And all that I have: the meaning being, according to Lyra, not that they had taken any thing away from him, saving those things which pertained to idolatrous worship; but of these hee made such account, as that hee made no reckoning of all that hee had in comparison hereof. But Micah being threatened by them, returneth home, and they passe on to Laish, and destroy the people destitute of all helpe, and burne the City, and this is said to have been in the valley by Bethrebo. Rebo was a City in the north, nigh unto Mount Libanus, Numb. 13.22. being part of the lot of Asher, Josh. 19.28. but it was not subdued by them, Judg. 1.31.

And they set up the Image, and Jonathan the sonne of Gershom, the sonne of Manasseh, hee and his sonnes were Priests unto the tribe of Dan, untill the time of the captivity of the Land. Here two questions may bee made: 1 How Jonathan a Levite, could come of Manasseh, of which somewhat hath been said before,

V. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

H. B. Patriarchs
travellers.

Lyra.

V. 14, 15.

V. 19.
Plinius.
Macrobius.
Pierius.

Note.

V. 22.

V. 24.

Lyra.

V. 28.

V. 30.

fore, Chap. 17. 1. 2 What captivity is meant, untill the time whereof, hee and his are said to have been Priests unto Dan? Lyra saith, that captivity made by Salmanasar, 2 King. 17. but yet hee citeth Jerome, who saith, that the captivity of the Ark is meant, when it was carryed away by the Philistines, and this Lyra confesseth to bee most probable, because in the next verse there is another description of the time that Micah his graven Image stood, viz. all the time that the house of God, or Tabernacle was in Shiloh, and so long onely it seemeth to be meant that Jonathan was Priest, and his sonnes, but no longer: For in Samuels dayes, the worship of God was restored to the first purity; and therefore Idols were certainly beaten downe, and idolatrous Priests were removed, and this was the time of carrying the Arke from Shiloh, to the warre against the Philistines, after which it was brought back no more thither, but to Kiriath-jearim, where it remained 20 years. And this is followed by Junius, who rendreth the last words of v. 30. Usque ad tempus, quo migravit e terra: in the Vulg. Latine it is, Usque ad tempus captivitatis sue; but our Translation answereth verbatim to the Hebrew. Wherefore I thinke rather, that two times are in these two verses described, the time of the Idols standing made by Micah, v. 31. and the time that Jonathan and his sonnes were Priests to the tribe of Dan, not onely to minister to this Idol, but to others set up afterwards; when this was taken away, v. 30. even all the time from hence till the Babylonish captivity, there being yet intermissions, when good Judges and Kings ruled, that tooke away such abominations. For Jeroboam set up a Calfe in Dan after Micahs Idol put downe, and other wicked Kings of Israel that succeeded him, followed him in his sinnes, till the time of that captivity.

CHAP. XIX.

Here followeth another most lamentable accident of a Levites concubine, or wife abused unto death by the men of Gibeah in Benjamin, whereupon that whole tribe almost perished, to shew further the misery of that State where therein is no King. Josephus relating this history, saith, that hee took her to wife, and that the time of her departure from him, was within foure months after that he had marryed her. And that the cause was the quarrels that were between them, shee being a faire woman, for which his affection was greatly towards her, and shee not answering him with the like, contentions arose, whereupon shee went away to her Parents, &c. This Levite dwelt in Mount Ephraim, not farre from Micahs house, and hee tooke his concubine from Bethlehem Judah, where Micahs Levite had sojourned, before that he came unto him, Chap. 17. 7. so that the strange accidents here, and in the former Chapters set downe, happened to those of the same places, whereby we may gather, that many more villanies were then committed throughout that kingdom. An odious woman, such as this was, is one of the foure things that disquieteth the earth. Shee played the whore against him, and went away from him to her fathers house. The Vulg. Latine, Septuagint, and Josephus likewise speaketh of 30 furlongs, and of 20, counting 5 furlongs to a mile. In that coming to Gibeah no man entertained them, till that this old man came from his worke, who was more hospitable, wee may note both the inhumanity of that people; and that of old there were neither Innes nor Alehouses, into which a man might bee received in his travaile for his money, nor Bakers, nor Victuallers in Cities, of whom hee might buy bread or other provision. But the manner was then to take beasts laden with provision, as this Levite had two Asses and a servant with him, and provender for the beasts; and at night if any hospitable person would receive him that travailed into his house to lodge him, hee went in, otherwise hee lay in the street; as the two Angels said to Lot, that they would lye in the street all night, or in the field, as Jacob neare Beihel pitching a tent there. This inhospitablenesse and inhumanity

Qu.

1 Sam. 5. 1.

V. 31.

Ierem.

2 Kings 17.

Joseph. Antiq.
lib. 5. c. 2.

V. 1.

Prov. 30. 21.
V. 2.

Note.

Heb. 13. 2.

Qu.

V. 22.

Note.

Joseph.
Lyra.

Note.

V. 23, 24.

V. 25.

Ferm.

V. 29.
Lyra.

ty was in the men of Gibeah a fore-runner of their destruction, as the like had been in Sodome. It is then a most wicked thing to be thus unkind to strangers in their travaile, and a most excellent to bee hospitable, as Abraham and Lot.

Touching Gibeon or Gibeah, the place, where this was done, Josh. 21. 17. it is said to have beene a City given to the Levites out of Benjamins lot, how then did the Benjamites now inhabit there? Ans. The Levites did not now enjoy what was given them, all things being so out of order, which made them wander and sojourn, where they could get a living, others in the meane season possessing their rights, and so did the Benjamites, Gibeah. Some thinke, that Levites dwelt there and Benjamites amongst them.

The wicked men of Gibeah, that came to the old mans house, where they were entertained, are called sonnes of Beliall, that is, faith Ierom, in his translation, without a yoke, but of this phrase see before Deut. 13. 13. Like the most wicked and unnaturall Sodomites they require not his wife, but him to beebrought forth unto them, that they might know him, that is, satisfie their filthy lulis with him. See how averse some are from all goodnesse, they not onely gave no hospitality, but would not suffer these strangers to be quiet in another mans house, and this is an high degree of sinning, to doe no good, and to hinder others from doing good also. Iosephus against the common exposition of Christian Doctors faith, that these wicked men asked the man to beebrought forth unto them, that hee might deliver his wife, and this Lyra seemeth to assent unto, because when they had his wife, they were content: but this their contentment was forced, seeing they could not have the man.

Hereby wee may see, to what an height of impiety these men were grown so soone after the death of Ishua, so that some horrible judgement could not but bee now expected to come upon them, as it did, to their destruction. The old man to save his guest from so unnaturall an abuse, offereth them his owne daughter a Virgin and the Levites concubine, as sometime Lot had offered his two daughters to the Sodomites in the like case, Gen. 19. 8. where it hath beene already considered, whether such an offer were justifiable or not.

Then the Levite put forth his concubine unto them, who led her away and abused her, &c. For so it must needs bee understood, that they tooke her to their owne houses, because they are said at the springing of the day to let her goe, and so that shee came to the doore of the house, where her Lord was. This abuse offered unto her, whereupon shee dyed immediately, as Fermus noteth, was a just punishment by God brought upon her for her former adultery, v. 2. for now shee perished in her kinde by adultery, although the act was most hainous in those, that committed it. And although wicked doers escape the sword of the Magistrate, yet they must not looke finally to escape the hand of God, who will punish every one in his kinde, onely repentance preventeth his wrath.

The Levites wife being dead hee carryeth her home upon his Ass, and then divided her body into 12 parts, and sent them into the 12 Tribes of Israel, that is, faith Lyra, two parts into the two halves of Manasseh: for to Benjamin it is not likely, that hee would send any part, where this villany had beene committed, lest they should slay his messengers: and they that were sent, doubtlesse had it committed to them to relate, what had beene done, which was the cause of their carrying this strange spectacle about, that every where they might be the more moved to take revenge. Others by the 12 Tribes understand Benjamin also, because onely a little part of that Tribe was guilty hitherto, and not the whole Tribe, till that by abetting these malefactors it became all guilty.

CHAP. XX.

V. 1, 2, 3.

THE children of Israel being stirred by the Levites messengers assemble all together in Mizpeh before the Lord, being 400000 men, but the Tribe of of Benjamin was not with them, but onely heard of this great Assembly. And they are said to have come altogether, as one man, even from Dan to Beersebab, that is, from the two utermost boundaries of the land on that side of Jordan, where the land of Canaan lay, except the Benjamites, for Dan was furthest north, and Beersebab south, and all the land of Gilead, that is, the Reubenites, Gadites, and half Tribe of Manasse dwelling on the other side of Jordan. Mizpeh where they assembled, was not the place, where the Tabernacle then was, for it was now in Shiloh, Judg. 18. 31. but a place, wherein there was a Synagogue or oratory to congregate to pray in, 1 Maccab. 3. 46. and the Hebrews say, that here was the first beginning of Synagogues. Some will have Mizpeh to be a City in the Tribe of Benjamin, but Ierom placeth it in Judab, and indeed sometime it is said to bee in Judab, as Iosh. 15. 38. and sometime in Benjamin, as Iosh. 18. 26. whereby wee may gather, that it was a bordering City betwene both, and possessed part by one Tribe and part by the other, as Ierusalem was, and so it was a fit place for the nearnesse, for all the Tribes to assemble hither about this businesse. Amongst those, that assembled and presented themselves before the Lord in this place, it is said, there were the chiefe of all the people, the Vulgar Latin hath it, omnes anguli populi, the Princes being so called, because they are like the corner stones, in a building, holding all the building together: So likewise they are called 1 Sam. 4. 38. Zephani. 3. 6. and Hebr. it is פְּנֵי אֲגֻלִּי.

They being all here assembled together inquire of the Levite, how that hainous wickednesse was committed, to whom he answereth, that the men of Gibeab beset the house, wherein hee was, thinking to slay him, and that they forced his concubine unto death &c. Hee saith, that they would have slaine him, meaning by Sodomitically abusing him, as they did her by ravishing her, but Josephus saith, that they threatened to slay him, unless hee would deliver her unto them. Hearing this, and being fully certified of so abominable a wickednesse committed by the men of Gibeab, they resolve with one consent to goe against Gibeab to bee revenged, and that by lot, ten being set apart out of 100. and 100. out of a 1000. to fetch victualls for all the rest, whilst they were in this expedition. But before they set upon the City, they send throughout the Tribe of Benjamin, desiring, that the actors in this wickednesse might be delivered unto them to be put to death, but they refuse to hearken unto them, and contrariwise assemble together to defend Gibeab, being 26000. and the men of Gibeab 700. and amongst these 700. left handed, that could sling stones at an haire's breadth. The Vulgar Latin, for 26000. men of Benjamin hath 25000. and so hath the Sept. translation and Josephus, but herein, saith Lyra, it is corrupted, the translators finding v. 35. and v. 44, 45. &c. that there were slaine onely 25000. and 100. and 600. that fled to rock of Rimmon, thought, that there was an error in the Hebrew, and there fore altered it, putting a lesser number for a greater to make the reckonings to agree. But how they may bee made to agree accounting 26000. here, hee sheweth not, Tostatus saith, that 1000 of them most probably were appointed to fetch Victualls for the rest. Bonslerius is bold here for to stand for the Vulgar Latin, and against the Hebrew, affirming it to be corrupt, But for so much as the Hebrew is the fountaine, we must rather stand for the purity thereof, and reforme all translations hereby. For the difference in the numbers, although 25000. and 100. onely are numbred of the slaine that day, and 600. that fled to Rimmon, in which numbers there want 1000. of that here set downe, yet there is no reason to count this number greater, then the truth, because v. 48. a company are said to bee slaine, besides all these, in every City of Benjamin, unto which 1000. at the least might well be fled, thinking to save themselves there, thus also Lyra and the Hebrews. For the 700. men amongst them said to bee left handed, that could sling stones out of a sling at an haire's breadth, the Vulgar Latin rendreth it thus, besides the inhabitants of Gibeab, which were 700. most valiant men, fighting as well with the left hand as with the right, which could sling stones, &c. Thus making all the men of Gibeab ambi-dexteri, and all alike skillfull, which is incredible. There were 700. then, as the Hebrew verity hath it, amongst

V. 3, 4.

V. 8, 9.

V. 12, 13, 14.

Tostatus.

Bonslerius.

V. 16.

Iunius.

Philostr. vita Apollonii lib.
2. c. 12.

V. 18.

Ferus.

Lyra.
Patriar. tra-vailles.V. 20, 21.
V. 23

mongst all the Benjamites Army thus expert in slinging stones, which did wonderfully strengthen that side, and made them doubtlesse so bold, as to set upon a number so much greater then themselves. Iunius thinketh the saying to bee hyperbolicall, they could sling stones at an haires breadth, but there is no neede herein to flee to hyperbole's: for wee doe read of matters as rare in other histories. Philostrotus writeth of some of the Indians, that they did throw so skilfully out of a sling, that they would touch the haire of the childes head with a stone and not hurt the head. Gothus a Souldier was so skilfull an Archer, that hee would hit an apple placed a farre off upon a staffe with his arrow and not misse, which he having boasted of was related to King Harold a Saxon, who would have him to try his skill upon an apple placed upon the head of his owne sonne, hee then setting the childe with his back towards him, that hee might not feare or move at the comming of the arrow; took to him three arrows, and shooting with one of them hit the marke, and being demanded by the King, why hee tooke three arrows, hee answered, that if hee should by chance have shot his sonne into the head, hee might bee revenged upon the head of the King by shooting the other two at him, that had beene the author of so unnaturall a murder. One Soranus having shot an arrow up into the aire, shot another at it falling and split it. Commodus the Emperor could strike any thing with dart or arrow, that hee set his eye upon, so Herodianus and Sabellianus. A certain Indian, saith Plutarch, in the dayes of Alexander the Great could shoot an arrow into a little ring and through it. Domitian, the Emperor, saith Suetonius, could shoot a wilde beast first on the one side of his head, and then on the other in the forme of a paire of hornes. And such skill hath beene attained by daily practice, as in the Bakarian Islands, saith Florus, mothers would not give their sonnes any other meat, but what they had first beaten downe with a stone out of a sling. And David seemeth to have beene inferior to none in this skill of slinging when hee smote Goliath with a stone, and slew him. Whereas it is said, that these 700. were left handed, Hebr. it is, slow up their right hand, but of this phrase see before in the story of Ehud, Judg. 3. 15.

And the children of Israel went up to the house of God, and asked counsell of God, &c. The Israelites may seeme herein to have proceeded rightly, as also in sending before to the Benjamites to have the wicked men of Gibeab put to death, who had committed so foule a sinne, and before that inquiring of the Levite the certainty of the matter, so that it may seeme strange, that they should at the first have so ill successe, and bee repelled twice with the losse of so many men, especially being bidden by God, of whom they asked counsell, to goe against them. But as Ferus noteth, they offended in that they trusted to the equity of their cause and to their great multitudes, and not in God only and in his helpe, which is intimated in this that they asked not of God at the first, whether they should goe up to fight against Benjamin, and whether hee would deliver the Benjamites into their hands, but as if they were sure to prevaile through their great strength, they asked onely, who should goe first up, v. 18. and the second time although they wept, and asked, whether they should againe goe against Benjamin, yet they fought not helpe from God by fasting and prayer and sacrificing, which they did after their second great overthrow, and then prevailed, v. 26, 27. &c. The house of God, to which they went up all these times, was the Tabernacle at Shiloh, as may bee seene by comparing Ch. 21. 2. with v. 12. and therefore for more expression, v. 27. the Vulgar Latin hath it in this Ch. The Arke of God was in Shiloh in those dayes. And Shiloh, saith Lyra, was neare to Gibeab, so that they might easily goe thither, H. Bunting saith, it was within 2. miles, but Mizpeh, from whence they went first to Shiloh to inquire of God, was from thence 48. miles.

The Israelites comming, after that they had inquired, to fight against Gibeab, are by the Benjamites slaine to the number of 22000. But then they encouraged themselves, the Vulgar Latin, they trusting to their fortitude and number set the battaile in aray, but yet before this they went up to the house of God againe, and wept, and inquired, yet notwithstanding, they are slaine the second time to the number of 18000. The cause of all this ill successe, say the Hebrewes, was, because the tribe of Dan being lately corrupted with idolatry through the Idols of Micah was not first punished by them therefore, according to the Law, and purged. But the true reason seemeth to bee that before rendred by Ferus, for they that trust in men shall fall, although their cause bee just: and happily there were many grosse offenders in the Israelites Army, who till they were rooted out, they could not proceed with any successe, as Joshua could not against Ai, till Achim was cut off; and God in his just judgment had appointed this to bee the way to cut them off. For it is intolerable, that they should take upon them to punish sinne in others, who are foule offenders themselves. Or happily it was displeasing to God in the whole Army, that they went about to punish sinne in the men of Gibeah, without first humbling themselves for their own sinnes, and taking them into their consideration: for hee that will cast a moat out of another mans eye, must first cast the beame out of his owne eye. Therefore when they had fasted, and offered sacrifice for the expiating of their sinnes, at the third onset they prevailed. Whereas they are said to have wept before their second going against them, and to have humbled themselves; that was not so much out of any sense of their sinnes and unworthinesse to become chastisers of the sinnes of others, but rather out of an indignation, that they being so many, should bee beaten back by so few. Lastly, if they should at the first have prevailed, they would have been ready to attribute the victory to their owne strength, and so not to have given to God the glory; whereas, being twice defeated, they learned God to bee the giver of all victories, and to magnifie his mercy for it at length attained. And by this example wee are taught: 1. That the goodnesse or badnesse of a cause, is not to bee measured alwayes by the good or bad successe in battail, for Benjamin had a bad cause, and yet prevailed, and Israel contrariwise. 2. A good cause shall certainly prevaile at length, and the bad shall goe downe, and the abettors of it, although they may prosper and lift up their heads for a time. 3. The way to prevaile in battaile, is to humble our selves first for our sinnes in fasting and prayer, and so to proceed, with trusting not in our owne strength, but in God onely. 4. To this end wee must consider, that great Armies of men, and other warlike preparations are nothing, for God can give victory to a few over a farre greater company. Wherefore not mens preparations, but Gods favour is all in all for the getting of the victory.

of

When the children of Israel being twice beaten by the Benjamites, went the third time to the house of God, it is said, That they offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, for the Arke was there; and Phinees the sonne of Eleazar ministered before it in those dayes; which is spoken, to shew that they might lawfully offer sacrifices, seeing it was before the Arke, and a lawfull Priest was there ready to minister about these sacrifices. And by this speciall mentioning of Phinees, it is made plaine at what time these things were done, viz. not long after the death of Joshua, as hath been already shewed upon Chap. 17.1.

And Israel set liers in waite round about Gibeah, &c. Here the manner of the Israelites proceeding against the Benjamites is set forth, and their destroying of them; first, generally and briefly to v. 38. Secondly, more particularly, how the liers in waite set the City on fire, and so gave a signe to the rest; and how many perished in one place, and how many in another, and how many escaped by fleeing to the rocke Rimmon, v. 38, 39, &c. to the end of the Chapter. For their proceeding by laying of an ambush, it seemeth that they were taught of God thus to doe; for thus Joshua also did against Ai, when the victory was promised him; and David came upon the Philistines behinde, at Gods direction, and smote them. But that which is said, v. 33. is somewhat obscure, And all the men of Israel rose up out of their places, and put themselves in aray at Baal-Tamar; and the liers in waite rose and came against Gibeah, and there came against Gibeah 10000 chosen men, &c. After that the bat-

Not.

V. 27, 28.

V. 29.

Iosh. 8.

2 Sam. 5: 23.

V. 33.

taile was begun, how could they rise out of their places? and if all Israel rose and set upon them now, who were those ten thousand chosen men? or how is it said, first they rose against the Benjamites, and then the lyers in waite came upon Gibeab: whereas by that which followeth, it appeareth, that the lyers of waite came first against the City, and gave a signe to the rest? By all Israel, we may understand the maine body of the Army, which lay at Baal-Tamar, a village, as Jerome saith, neare Gibeab, whilst some were sent out to begin the battail; by the 10000 chosen men, so many going foremost out of this great body, or placed elsewhere most conveniently to come on, when they should see their opportunity; and whereas the lyers in waite, comming against Gibeab behinde it, are spoken of after the rising up of the maine body of the Army; here the order is a little inverted, and therefore the same story is againe repeated in the particular relations following, and all things are put in due order. Whereas the lyers in wait are said to have come out of the meadows of Gibeab, the Vulg. Latine hath it, from the west part of Gibeab, so also the Septuagint, but the word is מַעְרָה signifying a denne or lurking place; and not מַעְרָה signifying the west. Junius hath, a denudatione Gibeab, i. after that it was left destitute of men, who issued out against Israel. How the word commeth to be rendred a meadow, or denudation, I see not. Pagnin and Polanus render it, a Denne, and this doth very well agree as fit to hide them in.

V. 35.

The number of the Benjamites slaine is said to bee 25000, and 100, and yet v. 46. they are summed up onely 25000; but this is, because in the second numbring, regard is not had unto so small a number as that of 100, to set it downe againe, because the whole summe had beene so exactly set downe before. For the difference between these sums, and that of 26000, v. 15. see what hath been already said upon that verse.

Touching the more particular description of their proceedings in this war, when the ambush had given a signe of the City being taken by fire, the Benjamites looking back and seeing it, & the men of Israel, who seemed to flee before, to return upon them, they were greatly terrified, and sought to flee into the wilderness, but they were prevented, because they were inclosed on every side, and slaine to the number of 18000. Then in their fleeing to the rock of Rimmon, they slew 5000 men, and to Gidom 2000 more. Touching Rimmon, Jerome saith it was 15 miles from Jerusalem; Josephus calleth it the rock Rhea. For these words, They pursued them to Gidom, the Vulg. Latine hath it, They pursued them when they went furib. r.; but Gidom, if it bee not taken properly, signifieth their occision, for גִּדְמוֹ whereof it commeth, signifieth to kill, and so it may better be rendred, to their destruction; the Sept. retaineth the Hebrew word, whereby it appeareth, that they tooke it for a proper name.

V. 38, 39, 40
41. &c.
Hieron. de locis Hebr.

V. 47.

V. 48.

*Tostatus.
Dionys. Carthusian.*

Out of this great destruction, 600 are said to have escaped, that fled to the rocke Rimmon, and they abode there foure months. And the men of Israel turned againe and smote them in every City, both men and beasts, and burnt their Cities. This may seeme to bee a point of great cruelty, to rage thus against all ages and sexes, and the very beasts, leaving nothing alive, and Tostatus condemneth it therefore; but others justifie it, holding that both this, and the destruction of Jabesh Gilead in the chapter following, was done according to the will of God, for the great abomination committed amongst the Benjamites, and by them maintained. And this is most probable, both because they made not this warre without consulting with the Lord, and with his Priest Phinees, an holy man, who would have otherwise opposed such proceedings; and after this destruction, they were grieved for the cutting off of this Tribe, which sheweth that they would not have done it but for Gods command. And lastly, the like was sometimes done before against places accursed for sinne, as, Numb. 31. 17. Josh. 7. 24. and is commanded for idolatry, Deut. 13. which was so appointed, that the greater terror might be stricken into all men against sinning likewise, and in some sort to represent the destruction to come at the last day, when no sex, age or degree shall be spared.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXI.

THere being but 600 men onely left of all Benjamin, and not one woman; here it is remembered what a vow all the men of Israel had made out of their fury against Benjamin, tending to the utter extirpation of that Tribe, for they had vowed not to give any of their daughters unto them to wife, wherein, as Ferus noteth, they did rashly and uncharitably. This their vow was therefore sinfull. 1 Because against charity. 2 Without any direction or word from God. 3 Against his order, who had made 12 Tribes, and given them singular blessings, and to the tribe of Benjamin in speciall. Wherefore now they repent and are humbled therefore, grieving to thinke, that one of their Tribes was in danger of being quite cut off. With Ferus agreeth Tostatus, holding both the vow to bee unlawfull, and that it ought not to have been kept, because God would have all the 12 Tribes to remaine, and none of them to be quite cut off; and because in denying them wives, when they had no women of their owne, they exposed them to the danger either of fornication, or of marrying Heathen women, and consequently of being drawne to idolatry. But some hold this vow to have been lawfull, because an whole City might bee destroyed for idolatry, and therefore an whole Tribe, for so great and unheard of abomination made the sinne of all by patronizing the actors of it. I subscribe rather to Ferus, that the vow was rashly made, but in zeale against sinne, they thinking then for ever to extinguish so impious a Tribe; for which yet (because they had no warrant, there being not the like reason of a City and a Tribe, God having some famous instruments of his glory to raise out of every Tribe, according to Prophecies fore-going of them, and Paul in speciall out of this Tribe of Benjamin) they now seeing by a singular providence some of this Tribe preserved, begin to consider their error, and grieve to thinke, that they had laid a foundation against their ever multiplying again, by making so rash a vow, and repent thereof. But because a vow is a sacred tye, and may not bee broken, unlesse the doing of the thing vowed be directly sinfull, I hold against Tostatus, that they ought to make conscience of keeping this vow, especially there being other wayes to bee excogitated of furnishing these Benjamites with wives, as the sequell declareth. This vow is said to have been made in Mizpeh, v. 1. that is, before the warre began; v. 18. it is said, that they had sworne, Cursed bee hee that giveth his daughter to Benjamin to wife; and v. 5. another vow made at that time is also commemorated, viz. to destroy that City that should not come up to helpe in these warres; so that zeale wrought with them, not onely to cut off the wicked, but such as would not helpe in cutting them off. Being before the Lord now in Shiloh, they weep to thinke upon the utter ruine of a Tribe like to bee, and they complaine hereof, and build an Altar, and offer sacrifices; but this was done, saith Lyra, in thanksgiving for their victory. But how is the building of a new Altar justifiable, when as they had one before made by Moses, and it was unlawfull to make another, as wee may see, Josb. 22? Ans. It was not altogether unlawfull, but in any other place besides that where the Tabernacle was, nor so neither at extraordinary times, and upon extraordinary occasions, such as this was, when happily they had direction from the Lord also to doe thus, to shew the greater thankfulness. Having done thus, they are againe affected with Benjamin's case, and cast about, how they might doe to helpe them to wives, who survived. Then they remember the oath made by them against such as came not up to Mizpeh to joine in these warres, and finding that Jabesh Gilead came not up, they sent against that City 12000 men to destroy them, their wives and children, onely sparing the virgins that had knowne no man, which were 400, and these they gave to the 600 Benjamites to bee their wives, but yet they were not sufficiently supplied. The Vulg. Latine for 12000, hath 10000, confessedly erroneously. Here was a wonderfull change in the Israelites, as Ferus noteth, towards the Benjamites surviving, in that all enmity be-

V. 1.

Ferus.

V. 2.

Tostatus.

Deut. 13.

Gen. 49.

Deut. 33.

Numb. 30. 1.

V. 3, 4.

Lyra.Qu.

V. 5, 6, 7, 8.

V. 9, 10.

V. 11, 12.

V. 13, 14.

Ferus.

Note.

H. Bunting Patriar, & avails

Qu.

Ferm.

Qu.

Lyra.

Tostatus.

V. 19, 20.

Lyra.

Ferm.

ing laid aside, they now study and labour to procure their welfare againe; and thus it ought to bee with all that punish offenders, bee angry with their sinnes, and use severity against them, but compassionate their persons being in misery. And in these Benjamites we may see the singular providence of God over his people in their greatest misery and most desperate estate, in that hee turned their enemies to bee their friends, beyond all that they could expect. Jabesh Gilead was a City in Gilead, 52 miles from Shiloh, and therefore farre from Gibeab. And happily because the men of that City were farre off, and so thought it did not concerne them what was done in Gibeab; or because they had not so much zeale for justice, as to put in for a part in revenging so horrible a fact, they sate still, expecting the event of this warre at home, holding it best to save themselves from a great deale of labour, charge, and danger. But now they pay deare for their being so worldly wise; but whether the Israelites did well in taking this severe revenge upon them and their innocent children, is a question, but Ferm resolveth it rightly, because they separated themselves from the community of Israel, in seeking to be revenged upon so great abomination, they were worthily counted enemies, and destroyed; inferring hereupon, that such Christians as in the publique affaires of the Church, wherein there is need of their helpe, withdraw themselves, and helpe not their mother the Church, with all their might, are not worthy to bee counted sonnes of the Church, but enemies, and to bee proceeded against accordingly. Moreover, the Israelites had bound themselves by oath hereunto, and as Josephus hath it, the men of Jabesh being sent unto, refused to come to this warre. For other questions made here, how they knew the virgins, and whether they spared any, but such as were now marriageable? To the first, Lyra answereth, that they made them to passe before the Arke, and by a sign given there they were knowne. Tostatus, that they they used the helpe of ancient women to distinguish them. And to the other question, that all Virgins were spared, as well those that were yet children, as the marriageable, these being given to the Benjamites to wife, and those reserved, to bee afterward marryed within their owne Tribe. But because they are bidden to destroy all the women and children, except the Virgins that had knowne no man: I thinke it plaine, that it was meant onely such should bee spared as were of age, but yet unmarried, and these might be known by their habit and manner of going, and by the relation of their mothers and friends, before that they had killed any of the females, or discovered the end of their enquiry hereabout.

The next project for the Benjamites, which yet wanted, to get them wives, was, that they should lye hid in the Vineyards, and observe upon the Feast day of the Lord, when the daughters of Shiloh should come out to dance, and then suddenly come upon them, and catch every man a wife, and goe away with them to their owne Countrey. And in doing thus, saith Lyra, it was not sinned, either by the Elders that gave this counsell, for they had sworne onely, not to give them any of their daughters to wife, or by the men of Shiloh, because although they had their daughters, yet it was without their giving them, neither were they acquainted with this project, or by the Benjamites, because they did onely as they were directed by those that had authority. Ferm confesseth it to have been an evill to take, and carry away, and marry other mens daughters against the will of their parents; yea, and worse then theft; for which cause by the civill law a greater punishment is appointed therefore, viz. death. But it seemeth good at this time unto them, rather to tolerate this, then that the oath of the Lord should bee broken, and so his Name bee in danger of being made contemptible amongst the common sort of people. I cannot but thinke with Ferm, that this catching up of other mens daughters was a fault, and out of this case punishable, but now necessity requiring it, tolerable; especially, if their consent, and the good will of their Parents was forthwith obtained, as was most probable it should bee, they having such mediators to speake for them, as the Elders of Israel, who were then of greatest power in that Common-wealth. But what Feast was this, and what dancing was that that of the Virgins at it? Tostatus holdeth it to have been some feast at a Fair once a yeare, or some festivall of that place for the pleasure and recreation of the inhabitants, as many Cities and Villages have in some Countreys their peculiar feasts; and to iustifie this, he alledgeth Iosephus, who saith, thrice in a yeare they came to Shiloh, their wives and daughters followed ad mercimonium, that is, to buy wares. But the words of Iosephus, are ἐκ τῆς καθήκουσας, signifying rather, ad publicum conventum aut. solemnitatem. And because it is said three times in the yeare, Bonfrerius gathereth, that this feast was one of the three generall feasts of the Passeover, Pentecost, or feast of Tabernacles; as also because it is called a feast of the Lord, and was kept in Shiloh, where the Arke now abode, to which place therefore all the people were bound to come up these three times in the yeare to keep these feasts. I am not of Tostatus his minde, that it was a Faire-feast, or some other time of merry meeting upon pleasure, because it is called a feast of the Lord: Neither doe I thinke with Bonfrerius, that it was one of the three generall solemnities, for then they would not have said, there is a feast of the Lord yearly in Shiloh, as if it were kept onely by the inhabitants of that place, their daughters onely going out in dances and singing into the fields in praising God, because although the males onely were bound to come to those three solemnities, yet many women and virgins came also from all parts of the Land, and being there, without doubt would bee ready to joyne with the daughters of Shiloh, in any act to the praise of God; and if so, they also should have been in danger to bee taken as well as the Siloan women. Whereas Iosephus saith in his Greek Copy, three times a yeare, which giveth occasion to this conceit, that it must bee one of the three most solemne feasts; Gelenius his Translator hath it not so, but every yeare we have a custome in Shilo to come together to a celebrity, correcting Iosephus herein by the Scripture, which speaketh not of three, but of one feast kept by that people in the yeare, wherein they had this singular custome, that their daughters went out to dance. And it seemeth even by the relation of Iosephus, that this was not a thing knowne generally how they kept this solemnity, because hee saith, the Elders being in a study for the Benjamites that yet wanted wives, one came unto them and said, wee have a custome every yeare in Shiloh, &c. whereas if this feast had been one of the three, their custome had been generally knowne, because they came from all parts to those feasts. It seemeth therefore to mee, that this was the feast of blowing Trumpets the first of the seventh Moneth, being a time of great mirth and joy above all other new Moones, especially where the silver Trumpets were kept, which place now was Shiloh, where the Tabernacle abode. For the people came not together from all parts to keep this Feast, but each City kept it by it selfe. Or rather some singular feast kept in Shiloh onely to the honour of God, in way of thankfulness for choosung it to place his Tabernacle there, and that happily upon the day that it was first set up there from yeare to yeare. The dancing of the daughters of Shiloh now was not in levity and wantonnesse, nor in the company of men, but modest and holy in praising God, as Miriam's dancing, Exod. 15. 20. for if young men had been amongst them, the Benjamites could not so easily have taken them and carryed them away. Shiloh here described by Bethel, and the way to Shechem and Lebanon is said by Jerome to bee in the tribe of Ephraim, and neare to the lot of Benjamin, and therefore the fittest place that they could have been appointed to get them wives.

Now to encourage the Benjamites to this enterprize, the Elders tell them, That if their fathers or brethren cometo us to complaine, wee will say, Bee favourable to them for our sakes, because wee reserved not to each man his wife in the warre; for yee did not give unto them at this time that yee should bee guilty. The Vulgar Latine hath it, Non rapuerunt eas more bellantium atque victorum, sed rogantibus, ut acciperent, non dedistis, & a vestra parte peccatum est. This reading, howsoever different from the Hebrew, is first expounded by Lyra, and then it is rendred according to the Hebrew, and so expounded. For this, they have

Tostatus.Bonfrerius.Numb. 29. 1.
Numb. 10. 10.Hieron. de loc. Hebr.

V. 22.

Lyra.

Lysa.

Junius.

V. 23, 24.

not taken them away by the right of warre, &c. that is, as if they were taken captive to use them hardly as servants and slaves, but lovingly and kindly as wives; but because yee gave them not unto them asking, yee have sinned, that is, having bound your selves by oath not to give them, yee have sinned, for that yee looked no better to them, to keep them from being stolne away. For the other truer reading according to the Hebrew, which is in our new Translation, Wee reserved not to each man his wife in the warre; Wee tooke not for each man a wife in the warre, that is, in the warre which wee made against Jabesh Gilead; Neither have yee given unto them, as though in time yee should bee blamed; that is, now that they have taken your daughters, if yee be content with it, and so give them as it were unto them, yee shall beare no sinne of going contrary to your oath in so doing, because they were taken without your knowledge or consent, for it is not likely that the men of Shiloh knew any thing of this project, till that it was put in execution. Junius hath the first clause thus, Wee reserved not to each man his wife in the warre; that is, when we fought against Benjamin wee destroyed the wives of these men amongst others; and the second clause thus, Nam vos non dedistis neque jam reeritis, expounding it as before; thus also others. But the Hebrew being rendred word for word, is thus, Wee tooke not for each man his wife in the warre, because yee have not given them unto them at this time yee have sinned, and thus almost goeth the Geneva Translation. According to which the meaning must bee, because yee expostulate about them at this time, and are not yet moved in compassion to your brethren in this their necessity to let them have them, yee make your selves guilty of the sinne of inhumanity and want of brotherly affection, howsoever yee thinke, that in regard of your fore-passed oath, yee should bee guilty in permitting them to goe away with them; for the clause before going, I subscribe to Lysa, because the word properly signifieth we tooke not. Besides these, there is another reading, with a supply of one word, thus, Because yee gave them not unto them according to the time, wherein yee should sinne; for Hebr. it is נעם according to the time, that is, yee need not feare being guilty of sinne by reason of your oath, although now yee consent, because your oath bindeth you not at this time, seeing the case is diverse, yee doe not directly give them, but in pity consent now, that they are by the direction of authority taken and carryed away. Let the judicious reader follow which of these expositions he pleaseth.

This being done, the Benjamites depart to their possessions, and rebuild their Cities, and all the rest of the Israelites returne every one to his Tribe and to his family.

The Book of R V T H.

CHAP. I.

WHO wrote this little Booke, is uncertaine, some say Hezekiah, some Esdra, but most Samuel. The Hebrews make no distinct booke of it, but an Appendix to the book of Judges, because these things, as the first verse sheweth, were done in the dayes of the Judges. It is entituled Ruth, because the history of Ruth is herein set forth, and was thought worthy to have a place amongst the holy Scriptures, because the line of King David, and consequently of Christ is herein set forth, and this is the chiefe scope of all the holy Scriptures, to shew him unto his people, and that hee was the blessed seed promised. It is placed next unto Samuel, and after all the history of the Judges, because Samuel writeth of David the King, who was the sonne of Jesse, the sonne of Obed, the sonne of Booz and Ruth, as is shewed in the end of this Booke; wherefore it was most fit that it should come betwixt the Judges and Kings, as a preparative to the history of Jesse and of David his son, the most famous King of Israel.

It came to passe in the dayes when the Judges ruled, that there was a famine in the Land, &c. The things set forth in this Book were done, as hereby appeareth, in the dayes of the Judges, but in what Judges times, is uncertaine. Josephus, Comestor, and Zonaras say, that this was in the dayes of Eli, who judged Israel forty yeares, but this cannot bee, because Obed must needs bee very aged when he begat Jesse, and Jesse of great yeares, when he begate David; as by and by shall bee shewed; but if Obed were borne after the tenth yeare of Eli's government, as upon the premises must bee granted, because v. 4. Ruth dwelt in Moab 10 yeares, before shee came to bee marryed to Booz, hee could bee but 40 yeares old when David was borne. The Rabbins and Lyra hold Booz to have been that Judge who was called Abesan, Judz. 11. Gallianus, Abimelech and Tola to have been Judges that ruled when these things were done. The Chronicle of the Jewes called Seder Olam, that these things began under Ehud. Tostatus, at the end of Barak, or the beginning of Geddon. But the best way to finde out the time, as neare as wee can, is to goe by the genealogy set downe, Ch. 4. 18, 19, &c. Judah begate Pharez, Pharez Hezron, Hezron Ram, Ram Aminadab, Aminadab Salmon, Salmon Booz, Booz Obed, Obed Jesse, and Jesse David. And Matth. 1. 5. Salmon is said to have begotten Booz of Rahab, so that these things must be done at such a time after Rahab, as may agree with the time that David was borne, to finde out which, wee must have recourse to 1 King. 6. 1. where it is said to bee 480 yeares from the time of their comming out of Egypt, to the fourth yeare of Solomon's reigne: out of these then deduct 40 yeares of Moses, 4 of Solomon, 40 of David's reigne, and 30 of his age when he begun his reigne, together 114, there will remaine 366, which must bee divided between Salmon the husband of Rahab, Booz, Obed, and Jesse, and the greatest age that may be for generation must be allowed to each of them, or else the time will not agree. Reckon we then that Rahab bare Booz being 80 yeares old, for Sarah bare Isaac at 99. and in our dayes that are so declining, some women have borne children being above 60. and if shee were 20 at the taking of Jericho, 60 of these yeares will goe to her time, then allow 102 to Booz, and as many to Obed and Jesse, when each of them had these sonnes born unto them, and the whole time will bee made up. Neither is it incredible, that they should have children at so great an age, seeing many hundreths of yeares since, even in these our times wee doe read of one Petrus Ernestus that begat a child after 80 yeares of his age; and not long before in Thuringia, there was a man aged 150, who was confirmed by the Bishop of Bamberge; and in this our land this very yeare 1635. dyed one Thomas Parre at London, being 152 yeares old, and 9 moneths, in the history of whose life it is said, that hee did penance for incontinency, being aged 105 yeares. And if according to this account wee reckon to Rahab 60 yeares after the Israelites comming into Canaan; and to Booz, when hee begate Obed of Ruth, 102 yeares, the whole will bee 162, and from their comming out of Egypt 202, whereof 40 were spent in the time of Moses, 17 of Joshua, 40 of Othniel, 80 of Ehud, 25 of Deborah, who judged 40 yeares. In her time then most probably happened this great famine, when Jabin so sorely oppressed Israel 20 yeares, and Elimelech with Naomi his wife and children were forced to goe into Moab to sojourne there, staying 10 yeares, till that by meanes of Deborah and Barak the times grew more prosperous, and then Naomi with her daughter in law Ruth returned, and at length obtained a good husband Booz her kinsman for Ruth. Hugo Cardin. standeth for that opinion, that Booz was the Judge Abesan, and so doth Lyra, and so hee saith hold the Hebrewes, and that Ruth was the daughter of Eglon King of Moab, whom Ehud slew; but Abesans or Ibsans time was not till above 100 yeares after Deborah, as yee may see in the computation which I have made upon Josh. 24. 32. And Eglon was slaine long before that, so that he could not have a daughter now living

V.1.

*Josephus Schol. Hist.*Rabbini, Lyra.Seder Olam. Tostatus.

2 Sam. 5. 4.

Hugo Card.

to

to marry and beare a childe. That none therefore might be carried away with this, or that of Josephus and others, so grossly erring, I have taken these paines to finde out the time. Now although the time of these things was towards the beginning of the Judges, yet they are not there set forth, but after and immediately before the history of the Kings for the arguments sake, matters touching the Progenitors, of King David, whose history followeth soone after: Whereas Lyra and others make 3. in this line of the name of Booz to avoid the necessity of reckoning so many yeares to him and Obed and the rest, before they begat, I have already confuted it in my first Text: Matth. 1. This booke is compared by Hugo to a little Bee, great in fruitfulness for the waxe and honey, which it gathereth for light and medicine, for the history is little, but the mystery touching Christ and his Church herein set forth is great.

Touching the famine here said to bee in the land, that is, in all the land of Canaan, as the Chaldee expresseth it, by reason whereof Elimelech with his wife and children went into Moab to sojourn, it seemeth, that it was a very great one, seeing Elimelech, who is thought to have beene a rich man, was forced to seeke reliefe in another country, and hee dying there and his two sonnes, his wife Naomi with her daughter in law Ruth returned not, till after 10. yeares, when shee first heard of the fruitfulness of the land of Canaan againe. This famine then must needs last above 10. yeares, because it is not to bee thought, that a man of ability would immediately goe out of his owne country for food, but having first spent his owne provision at home, which could not be little, and therefore not spent in a little time. But admitting it to be of 10. yeares continuance onely, it was a very great famine, and so a great judgement, but the people were exceedingly wicked and idolatrous in those dayes, as wee may see in the foregoing history of the Judges, when this happened, and therefore it is to be held, that this great judgement was sent, a fruitfull land was turned into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwelt therein. For so it was threatned, Levit. 26. 19. Deut. 28. 16. The Hebrews, saith Lyra, affirme, that the Sun stood still a certaine time to move the people to repentance, and then there being no amendment, at the sight of this prodigy, this grievous famine followed, and Elimelech, one of the Nobles of Israel being weary of the multitude of poore people, that came begging to his gate, went away into the Country of Moab with all his goods, but there hee consumed and grew poore, and dyed both hee and his two sonnes through Gods just judgement. Thus hee, and yet 1 Chron. 4. 22. following Ieroms translation, which hath it, who made the sunne to stand, et viri mendacii, for that, which is in our translation, Jokim and the men of Chozebah, hee expoundeth the first of Elimelech, that hee by his prayers made the Sun to stand still for a signe to that wicked generation, as Joshua had done, that they might bee hereby moved to repentance, but they not being moved, a sore famine was sent, whereby hee was forced to goe with his family into Moab: the other, virii mendacii, hee expoundeth of his two sonnes Mablon and Ciblon, who are said to be men of lyes, because taking each of them a wife, they yet had no children. Now if Elimelech were so gracious with God, that hee could cause the Sun to stand still for a time, it is strange, that hee should be so hard hearted to the poore, and after this so notably judged. To passe this over then, as a figment of the Rabbins, whereof they are full, Elimelech forced by the famine went to Moab to sojourn, * which was not farre from those two Tribes and halfe on the other side of Jordan, for there lay the plaines of Moab, and hee and his two sonnes and wife are said to be Ephraimites of Bethlehem Judab. They are called Ephraimites, because of the City of Ephrata, otherwise named Bethlehem; for it was first called Ephrata, saith Hugo, from Ephrata, the wife of Caleb, who was buried there, afterwards Bethlehem for the fruitfulness thereof, for Bethlehem signifyeth the house of bread: this Ephrata also, saith he, was Miriam, the sister of Moses, and called Ephrata, that is, shee saw fury, because the Lord in his wrath had smitten

Psal. 107.

Lyra.

* H. Bunting
Patriar. 174. vailer, saith Mo- ab was 40. miles from Bethle- hem.

Deut. 1. 5.
V. 2.

Hugo Cardin.

smitten her with the Leprosy, but according to others this City was called Ephrata, because it saw wrath in the time of this famine, but Babylon afterwards, because made fruitful againe. But all these are vaine speculations, seeing this City had both these names long before this, Gen. 35. 19. Elimelech comming to Moab dyeth, his two sonnes take wives of the women of Moab, one called Orpah, and the other Ruth, and after 10. yeares they both dye. Here although Ruth be named last, yet she was the wife of the first Mablon, see Ch. 4. 10. and Orpah of Chilion, so Iosephus expressly affirmeth. The Rabbins unto that tale of Ruth, that she was the daughter of Eglon King of Moab, adde another touching Orpah, that shee was afterwards the mother of Goliath, which is most absurd: for shee was of Moab, hee of Gath, and shee lived divers ages before him. But they were deceived by the name of Goliath his father Arapha, being somewhat neare to Orpah, which is grosse, the difference also of these names being more in the Hebrew. A question may here be moved, whether Mablon and Chilion sinned not in taking these wives of the heathen? Answ. The Moabites were not of those heathen, which were forbidden them to make marriages with, Deut. 7. 3. but because they were idolaters, the same reason was of force against marrying with them, that was against marrying with the Canaanites, and that Orpah and Ruth were both such, when these men tooke them, and still when they were dead, appeareth by the speech of Naomi unto them, v. 15. Behold, thy sister is gone backe unto her people and unto her gods, returne thou also. Howsoever then it had not beene unlawfull for Mablon and Chilion to marry them if they had beene converted, yet in that case it was unlawfull, as also Tostatus teacheth, and happily for this sinne God slew them, and gave them no issue. But when Boaz married Ruth, she was converted, and so the case was altered: Yet because Deut. 23. 3. it is said, a Moabite shall not enter into the congregation to the tenth generation, it may be doubted whether Boaz his marriage with her be justifiable: but, as hath beene already shewed upon that place, that law concerned the men, & not the women, if they were made profelytes. Tostatus also moveth two other questions before this about Elimelech: 1. Whether he and his family might not alwayes have dwelt in Moab? 2. Whether Israelites dwelling in other countreys were bound to resort to the temple 3. times in the yeare? To the first he saith, they might not, for the danger of idolatry, and for feare of forgetting the law by continuall absence; and lastly, because they could not fulfill that law of appearing at the Temple 3. times in the yeare: affirming in answer to the second question, that all Israelites, wheresoever they dwelt, were bound so to doe. But forsomuch as this was a thing impossible for the length of the way betweene some Countreys, where the Jews dwelt, and Ierusalem, except they should doe nothing else but travaile from one end of the yeare to the other, and they that were in a journey, were excused from comming up to the principall of these feasts, the paschever, it is certaine, that they were not bound to come every time from all places, but at some times, as the length of the way, and their other necessary occasions would permit. And thus the Jews have understood this law, witnesse Iosephus, who saith, that they sent their tribute money for the Temple, which they were to pay yearly, by some other faithfull persons, if they dwelt farre off, which they would not have done, if every one had gone up in his owne person. And in another place speaking of those that were bound to come up thrice a yeare, he saith, they ought to come from all the limits of the land held by the Jews. And Philo saith, that they, who dwell farre off, or be in a farre journey, although they come not to sacrifice with their Countreymen, yet they shall not be deprived of their common honour, because this is no sinne in them, seeing one Countrey cannot containe so populous a Nation, but they must necessarily send out colonies into other lands. And Tostatus himselfe confesseth, that Elimelech during the time of his abode in Moab, was not bound to come to Ierusalem to these three feasts, because it being a famine, hee could not be supplied with necessaries for such a journey. And as for his

V. 3, 4, 5.

Rabbini.

2 Sam. 21.

Qu.

Tostatus.

Qu.

Numb. 9. 10.

Ioseph. Antiq;
lib 16. c. 4

Antiq. 4. c. 8.

Philo lib. 3. de vita Mosi.

his answer to the former question, there is no reason, if one might goe and dwell in another Countrey 10 yeares together, but that, need requiring, hee might goe and dwell there alwayes. And Acts 2. wee read of Jews devout Persons, that dwelt in all Countreys, who were at Jerusalem at Pentecost.

V. 6,7,8.&c.

After 10 yeares abode in Moab, Naomi having lost her husband & both her sons prepareth to returne with her daughters in law into the land of Judah. But upon the way she willeth her daughters to returne home againe, wishing well unto them. They being much affected unto her offer to goe on with her, but at length Orpah is perswaded to return, but Ruth clave constantly unto her, and would not be parted from her by ought, but death. For the words of Naomi used to her two daughters in law, when shee perswaded them to returne, v. 8. Goe, returne each to her mothers house, Lyra saith, that shee spake so, because either their fathers were dead, or daughters doe more familiarly converse with their mothers.

Lyra.

And for her next words, v. 11. Are there yet more sonnes in my womb, that they may bee your husbands? hee saith, that this was spoken according to that law whereby it was provided, that a brother dying without issue, his brother should take his widow and raise up seed unto his brother. Lastly, touching the speech of Naomi to Ruth, when her sister was gone backe, v. 15. Behold, thy sister in law is gone backe to her people and to her gods, returne thou asier her, to which she answereth: Entreat mee not, for whither thou goest, I will goe, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall bee my people, and thy god my god, and where thou dyest, I will dye, and there will I bee buried. Seeing Ruth inclining to her religion and to turne one of Gods people, shee most earnestly dissuaded her and propounded unto her the hard conditions, that they must bee subject to, that would turne Jews, that hereby shee might prove the stedfastnesse of her resolution, as it is necessary, that they who will turne to the true religion, should first bee acquainted, what is required of such. Shee therefore, as the Hebrews say, told her first, that the Jews must not goe out of their owne Countrey, except in the case of great necessity. 2. That a woman must not bee alone with a man, unlesse hee be her husband. 3. That the precepts of the law, to which a Jew is subject, are very many, even 613. 4. That it is unlawfull for a Jew to serve divers Gods. 5. That there were divers kindes of death appointed for offenders amongst them, as stoning, burning, strangling, and killing with the sword. And according to these particulars Ruth directed her answer: to the first, whither thou goest, I will goe, that is, I will not goe out of the countrey, unlesse with thee: to the second, where thou lodgest, I will lodge, that is, I will alwayes be in thy company, and therefore with no man alone: to the third, thy people shall be my people, that is, I will be as they are, subject to all the laws: to the fourth, thy God shall bee my God, that is, I will worship none other, but him alone: to the fifth, where thou dyest, will I dye; that is, I will be subject to the law to bee put to death, if I deserve it, as thou art. God doe so to mee, and more also, if ought but death part thee and mee. Here Ruth bindeth herselfe by oath never to leave Naomi, for this was an usuall forme of swearing amongst the Hebrews, God doe so, that is, judge mee so, as hee hath threatened the transgressors of his laws, or as severely as ever hee hath judged any.

V. 19.

Naomi therefore suffered Ruth to goe with her, and they came together to Bethlehem, &c. From hence to the end of this Chapter nothing else is related, but the trouble that was amongst the Bethlehemites at the returne of Naomi, to see her intimes past a wealthy woman having an husband and children, now to come out of Moab alone without wealth or attendants, poore and a widow and childelesse. They aske therefore amongst themselves not without admiration, is this Naomi? but shee biddeth them not to call her Naomi, that is, faire or pleasant, but Marah, that is, bitterness; and thus the Vulgar Latin hath it expressly. And this her returne was at the beginning of barley harvest, that is, about the time of the pascheover, and therefore the Chaldees hath it, in the ascension of the pascheall day, for the day after the

V. 20.

V. 22.

the Pasſeover they were appointed to offer a ſheaf unto the Lord, and not to eate any of their corne of that year, till this was done.

Lev. 23. 10, 11.

Mystically by Elimelech, ſaith Hugo, underſtand Chriſt, for Elimelech ſignifieth my God the King, and hee was born in Bethlehem, by Naomi, the Church, which is beautifull; by their two ſons, two companies, one of the Prophets, by Mahlon, ſignifying, from a window, becauſe they opened a window, as it were, to give the firſt light; and the other of the Apoſtles, by Chilion, ſignifying perfection, becauſe they perfectly underſtood, and taught the myſteries of the Goſpel: by the two wives of theſe two men, the Jewes and the Gentiles, viz. the Churches gathered together by both theſe companies amongſt the Jewes and Gentiles. By Elimelech dying, Chriſt dying; by his two ſons dying, the Prophets and Apoſtles dying after that: the Church Naomi then remaining deſolate, prepareth to returne to her heavenly Countrey; and Orpah, that is, the Church of the Jewes, leaveth her, but Ruth, that is, the Church of the Gentiles, cleaveth ſtill unto her, by conſtancy in the true faith. Whereas Naomi her diſſwading of her daughters from going with her, may not ſeem to agree to our mother the Church, becauſe ſhe perſwadeth all to the Faith, and diſſwadeth none from comming, hee ſaith, that either this is to bee underſtood, as ſpoken by way of tryall, for wee muſt try the ſpirits, diſſwade from comming, to prove how earnestly they are bent to come; or the very caſe of the Church after the death of Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, was very diſſwaſive from comming to it, becauſe it was under bitter perſecution, contemned and deſpiſed. For her two daughter-in-laws following her for husbands, by whom they might have iſſue, this ſetteth forth particular Churches deſiring good Paſtors to bee ſet over them, but when the univerſall Church groweth old, and paſt child-bearing, or to that, that ſhee hath no children ready, but they muſt ſtay till they be growne up, ſhee telleth her daughters, that ſhe hath no worthy Paſtors for them, and if there bee any Paſtors to come, of which there may bee hope afterwards, there would be danger in ſtaying for them, as whiſt Thamar ſtayed for Shelah, of falling into the ſinne of fornication: This is verified in the declining time of the Church, wherein ſome Pariſh Churches are without worthy Paſtors, and ſome have the young Nephews of Biſhops put upon them, they taking the profits, in the meane ſeaſon, whiſt they grow up, and thoſe under unworthy Paſtors are in as bad caſe, becauſe they ſeek not iſſue, but their owne worldly profit. And here hee further compareth Biſhops preferring their brethren and kiſmen to Benefices, unto Lot begetting of his two daughters, Ammon ſignifying, my people, and Moab, from my father; but this was done in the night, to ſhew, that to doe thus is a work of darkneſſe, and ſuch Biſhops follow the Shechemites preferring Abimelech their kiſman to their owne confuſion. Naomi her bringing of Ruth to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley harveſt, which was the time of the Paſſeover, ſetteth forth the Primitive Church bringing the Church of the Gentiles to the benefits of Chriſts paſſion then undergone, for hee ſuffered about that time, and inſtituted his Supper.

The Myſtery.
Hugo Cardin.

Judg. 9.

CHAP. II.

Here it is ſhewed how God provided for Ruth, that for pieties ſake forſooke her owne Countrey to live with her poore mother in Law Naomi an Hebrew in the land of Iſrael, by marrying her unto Boaz. The firſt ground of this marriage was, Boaz was a kiſman of Elimelech, and hee was a mighty man of wealth. The Hebrews, ſaith Lyra, affirme, that Salmon the father of Boaz, and Elimelech were brethren, and ſo the husband of Ruth, and Boaz were couſin germans, and to this hee inclineth: And whereas the time of Salmon agreeth not with Elimelech, who muſt needs bee too long after Salmon, hee reſolveth it, by making three of the name of Boaz, the grandfather, father, and ſonne, and the laſt he ſaith married Ruth. But if this bee granted, which

V. 1.

Lyra.

V. 2.

V. 4.

V. 5.
Ly. 2.

V. 8.

V. 10, 11, 12.

V. 13, 14.

V. 15, 16.

Note.

Chald. Paraphr.

V. 17.

V. 20.

I have shewed elsewhere, is but an imagination, it maketh Elimelech never a whit the elder or nearer the time of Salmon, and so is nothing to the purpose. Elimelech more probably was the sonne of Salmons brother, and so his sonne the kinsman of Booz once removed, for there was one nearer, as is shewed, Ruth 3. 12. To the field of this Booz Ruth came accidentally to gleane, whereby her poverty appeareth. Of leaving Corne for the poore to gleane and gather, see the laws, Levit. 19. 9. & 23. 22. Deut. 24. 19. After a while Booz commeth amongst his reapers, and said, The Lord bee with you, whereby wee may see, that the custome of saluting those whom a man meeteth, is very ancient, and also of such as we come unto, as the Angel comming to the Virgin Mary, began his message with a salutation.

Then hee enquireth touching Ruth, and is certified who shee was. Now it may seeme strange, saith Lyræ, that hee should enquire rather of her then of any other gleaner there, but according to the Hebrews he observed some singular modesty in her, which was, that shee gathering the standing eares of corne that were left standing, sate downe to gather them that were falne, lest by stooping any part of her legs should bee seene, but this is ridiculous: hee might rather enquire of her, because shee was a stranger, and either in habit or complexion differing from the Israelitish maids.

Booz hearing who shee was, speaketh kindly to her, and biddeth her to stay by his Maidens, and not to gleane in any other field all the harvest, and when shee was athirst, to goe and drinke at the Reapers bottles. Whereas hee speaketh of his Maidens, and her going out with them to gleane, is spoken of, ver. 22, 23. it is not to bee thought that they gleaned for Booz, for that had been against the Law, whereby the scatter was allotted to the poore, but being poor Maid-servants, he gave them leave to gleane for their own benefit.

Ruth hearing Booz speake so kindly to her, bowed her selfe downe to the ground, admiring his curtesie to her being a stranger, and hereby hee was moved to be yet more kinde unto her, both in words, telling her what hee had heard of her, and praying to God for her; and in deeds, as hee had before bidden her to come and drinke with his servants, when shee was thirsty: so now hee added, At meale time come hither, and eate of the bread, and dip thy morsell in the vinegar; and hee reached her parched corne, and shee had enough and to spare. Lastly, he bade his servants to suffer her to gleane amongst the sheaves, and to let fall some Corne for her. Whereby wee may learne, as Ruth, to be thankfull for favours received, and that reverence and thankfulness to Benefactors procure yet more favour. For these words, v. 13. Let mee finde favour in thy sight, the Vulg. Latine hath it, I have found favour; the Hebrew, I shall finde favour, for it is in the future tense, and so it may have a good sense thus, I doubt not, but I shall finde favour henceforth with thee, seeing thou hast already thus comforted mee, although most unworthy, as being inferior to any of thy Maids. Whereas at dinner time hee bade her eate bread, and dip her morsell in the vinegar, it is to hee understood, that by bread any kind of food is set forth, and vinegar served to coole them in that hot Countrey, and specially in the hottest time of the yeare, as in harvest. The Chaldee understandeth bread properly, and by vinegar pulse made with vinegar, and eaten with bread. And hee reached her parched corne, the Vulg. Latine, shee gathered together parched corne unto her self; but the word is a masculine, and therefore cannot bee expounded by her, but by him, that is, Booz, most probably, as the Chaldee hath it expressly; the Sept. render it ἐπέσπειρεν αὐτῇ βοὸς, Booz reached unto her by heapes.

When the evening did come, Ruth did beat out the corne which shee had gleaned, and it was an Ephah, that is, a bushel, as hath been shewed upon Exod. 16. where an Omer is said to be the tenth part of an Ephah. Then shee took it up, and went home to Naomi, and told her where shee had gleaned, &c. whereat shee rejoyceth, and telleth her, that Booz was one of their next kinsmen, saying, Blessed bee hee of the Lord, who hath not left off his kindnesse to the living and to the dead: the Vulg. Latine, who hath shewed the same kind-kindnesse to them being dead, that hee did to them living, that is, to Elimelech and Mablon living, and now they being dead, to Naomi and Ruth their widowes. In saying that hee was one of their next kinsmen, Hebr. בן עמ of our redeemers (for so the next kinsmen were called, for the right which they had to redeem either land or wife, or to bee revenged for bloodshed, see Levit. 25. Numb. 35. 12. she intimateth some hope that he might redeeme the land of Elimelech, and so Ruth his sonnes wife being without issue to bee his wife.

Mystically by Booz, wee may againe understand Christ; by the comming of Ruth into his field, the Church of the Gentiles working with him in gathering sentences of the holy Scripture set forth by the eares of corne let fall by the reapers, who are his Ministers: Booz his charging Ruth not to goe to any other field to gleane, setteth forth Christs giving a charge to the faithfull amongst the Gentiles to cleave to the truth received, and not to goe away to any Gentilish errors any more. Ruths humbling of her selfe, setteth forth the humility of the faithfull, as not comparing with Gods Primitive church. Lastly, Ruths going on to gleane in the fields of Booz, till all the barley and wheat-harvest were brought into the barnes, the Churches feeding and gathering of Divine knowledge even unto the end.

The Mystery.
Glos. Ordin.

CHAP. III.

HERE Naomi deviseth a way to preferre Ruth her daughter in law, in marriage with Booz, and to this end shee directeth her to wash, annoint, and to cloath her selfe with her best apparell, and so to goe down to the floore where Booz winnowed barley, and lodged, and there when hee was in bed, to lye downe at his feet; all which shee did accordingly. And hee finding her there at midnight, and hearing who shee was, and for what end shee came, viz. to desire him to doe the office of a kinsman unto her, and to marry her, praised her therefore, and promised to fulfill her desire, and so early in the morning hee dismissed her with six measures of barley, that is, as one hath it, six gallons.

H. Bunting Pa-
triar. travails.

Shall I not seeke rest for thee? that is, saith Lyra, to preferre thee to a rich marriage, that thou maist not have need for want to toyl and labour so much, and thou maist have the comfort of issue, which yet thou wantest, and is a thing so much desired by women.

V. 1.
Lyr.

Behold hee winnoweth barley to night in the threshing floore. At the time of winnowing, say the Hebrews, as also of sheep-shearing and the vintage-ending, men used to make feasts for their servants and workmen, and a great heape of corne being dressed up, the Master thereof stayed all night at the floore after the feast ended, taking up his lodging there, that his corne might bee kept more safely, and according to this custome Naomi speaketh, behold hee winnoweth, that is, hee hath a winnowing of corne, which is ended this night, and therefore he will now feast and lodge there.

V. 3.

Wash thy selfe, and annoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, &c. the Vulgar Latine inducere cultioribus vestibus, for more expreſſion, as it is most probable, that shee meant, shee should deck up her selfe in the best manner, that shee might find the more favour in the eyes of Booz. If this shall seeme not to agree with the time, seeing it was darke night, and so her neatnesse could not bee discerned: I answer, it was uncertaine, as carefull as shee was to conceal her selfe, whether shee should not bee seen. 2 In the morning shee might be seen, and although shee made haste away, yet shee returned not so early, but that Booz could see to measure her six measures of barley, and therefore might see her also. For annointing, it was much used of old, as we may see, 2 Sam. 12. 20. 2 Sam. 14. Psal. 104. 15. Psal. 45. Isa. 61. Judith 10. 3. Hest. 2. 12. Matth. 6. 17. and it was of the head and face, to make the countenance the more chearefull and pleasant, but not to alter the colour or complexion, as annointing and painting is used by vaine and proud women now adayes, more like unto Jezebel then Ruth, by the ruine of the former of which soone after this vanity following, it were to bee wished that all other women would take warning. For her going to lye downe at his feet, it is to bee understood, that threshing floores were open, and so free for any to come into, even in the night season; onely a tent happily might be pitched for the time to shelter the corn and men from the raine and dew that might fall in the night. But for the thing here counselled by Naomi to bee done, a question may be made, whether it was not unlawfull to advise a woman to goe to a man alone in the night season, and to lye there neare unto him, yea, under the same covering, and to use such speeches unto him, as whereby he might be allured to lye with her; For this was to doe the office of a kinsman, howsoever not out of marriage, but in marriage, and all this when he had made his heart merry with eating and drinking, in which case there is the more danger. Lyra, and Dionysius Carthusianus seem to blame the counsell of Naomi, although they excuse the fact of Ruth, because there was another nearer of kin to her then Booz, who must first refuse, and to seek to get an husband in this manner was scandalous and dangerous, but for Ruth, shee being a stranger, and newly converted, and so not knowing the laws of marriages amongst the Jewes, seeing shee did nothing but follow the directions of Naomi, who shee thought could better instruct her, shee was free from all blame. Contrarywise Theodoret, and Tostatus, and others justifie them both, because Booz was well known to bee righteous and of good government, so that hee would not offer to commit that sin; and Ruth to bee so vertuous that shee would not suffer it. And if there were another man nearer akin to Ruth, yet happily, either Naomi knew it not, or else shee had no hope of preferring her in marriage with him, but Booz had already shewed her such favour, that shee presumed upon his good will. Neither was there any thing done that was immodest herein, for by the Law Ruth might require the next kinsman, who in the Hebrew phrase is called a brother, to doe the duty of a kinsman by raising up seed unto his dead brother, and to this end to marry her. For her going to this end to lye downe at his feet, and to desire him to spread the skirt of his garment over her, by this phrase nothing else was meant, as Lyra hath it, but that he would take her to wife, for when a man married, hee laid his skirt over her. Tostatus thinketh that shee desired him to lye with her, which is grosse; and by Booz his answer it appeareth, that shee meant onely that hee would take her to wife, &c. Neither did shee put off her cloaths to lye down, but lay downe apparelled as shee came forth: and she lay not by his side, but at his feet; and the Scripture in concluding this history, freeth them both from any act of incontinency, by saying, Shee lay at his feet untill the morning, and then rose up before one could know another, that is, suddenly. One saith, that he doubteth not but all this was done by instinct from God, or else such holy women would never have done and spoken so.

V. 3.

And it came to passe, at midnight the man was afraid, and turned himselfe, and behold a woman lay at his feet: the Vulg. Latine, and hee saw a woman lying at his feet; that is, saith Lyra, following R. Solomon, hee reached out his hand and felt upon her head, whereby he knew that it was a woman, but hee feared that it had been some evill Spirit, or a Theef; and if so, hee saw, is put for he found or perceived. But in the Hebrew there is nothing, but, behold a woman lying, &c. so that it is not necessary to hold that he discovered her sex till she spake.

And Booz said, Blessed be thou of the Lord, for thou hast shewed more kindnesse at the latter end, then at the beginning, in as much as thou followedst not young men, &c. Booz is so farre from taxing Ruth, as hee would have done, if shee had immodestly desired him to lye with her, as some thinke shee did, when shee said, spread thy skirt over mee, as that he greatly praiseth her, because she was not carryed by carnall lust, but onely by the desire of issue, to seek an husband, which appeareth, for that shee followed no young man to this end, but

Lyra. Dionys. Carthus.

Theodoretus. Tostatus.

Deut. 25. 5.

Lyra.

Author imperfecti operis, Chrysost.

V.8.

Lyra.

V. 10.

but one aged, and because in seeking to a kinsman of her dead husbands to raise up seed unto him, and so to continue his memoriall and name, she shewed the greatest kindnesse unto him that might bee; she had shewed kindnesse to him in his life time, by living lovingly with him, but then he could requite it with the like, but he being dead, and she of another Country, to forsake it to seek issue for him in the land of Israel, this was a kindnes in her far greater.

For all the City of my people knoweth, that thou art a vertuous woman: this was spoken by Booz, to shew, that hee would without doubt yeeld to her desire, but that hee must not doe any thing to wrong another man; who was nearer to her then he, as he sheweth, v. 12. For, all the City of my people, Hebr. is, all the gate of my people, that is, saith the Chald. Paraphr. the whole Sanedrín, or bench of Judges and Rulers, for they sate in the gates to give Judgement: so likewise Varabius and others; but the Sept. render it, the whole tribe of my people; and Pagninus by a Synecdoche, the whole City; and because all the City came together also to the gate for Judgement, it is best to take it thus generally. For the man, who he saith, was nearer to her, Lyra saith he is not named, because unworthy, for that he would not raise up seed unto his brother; but the Rabbins ready to determine any thing, because they would seem to be ignorant of nothing, lay hold upon the word וְיָדָע v. 13. signifying well, and say that his name was Tob. V. 14. And she rose up before one could know another; that is, before it was light, in the very dawning of the day, so that if a man should have met her, he could not know her by the face. And herein both he and she were carefull to prevent all scandall, because men are generally suspicious, and apt to speak the worst.

And he said, Bring the vaile that thou hast upon thee, and hold it, and he measured her six measures of barley, &c. This vaile was a covering which she put upon her most outward, made of linnen, and therefore the same word used but once more onely in all the Bible, viz. Isa. 3.22. is by Jerome rendred linteamina; the Sept. here render it μεσώματα; it was most probably her apron, in which it is not unusual for a woman to carry things. For six measures of barley, Hebr. it is six barleys, as Lyra rightly observeth, so that it is uncertaine what measures they were, but that they were very small, appeareth, because shee was able to carry them all away together. By these six, saith R. Solomon, were set forth the six blessings upon the Messiah, that should come of her, which are reckoned up Isa. 11.1. The spirit of wisdom and counsell, &c. The Chald. Paraph. for six measures, hath 6 sata, which make two Ephaes; the Tygrin Interpreters have six Ephaes, both which are most improbable, sith that neither her apron could hold the least of these quantities, being two bushels at the least, neither could she carry it.

Mytically Booz his winnowing of barley at the threshing floor setteth forth Christs living and preaching amongst the Jews, for he is said to have his fanne in his hand, and thoroughly to purge his floor, after which he did eat and drink at his last Supper with his Disciples, as Booz with his servants, and then laid him downe to sleep the sleep of death, when hee was crucified. By Ruth washing her and anointing and cloathing her in the best manner, the Church of the Gentiles washing by repentance, anointed with grace, and cloathed with righteous acts, coming to Christ after his death, for they received not the Faith before; and then uncovering the place of his feet, by looking into the mystery of his Incarnation, she lyeth down by constant meditating hereupon, and is comforted in her thus doing, and bidden to continue thus doing, till the morning of the resurrection, the Lord promising then unto her marriage in heaven, by her so much desired, before the light of which morning, before one could yet see another, he measureth unto her 6 singular gifts, reckoned up Isa. 11.1.

CHAP. IV.

Then went Booz up to the gate, and sate down there, and behold the kinsman of whom Booz spake, came by; and he said, O such an one turn aside and sit downe here, &c. The gate was the place of Judgement, as hath been noted before, and therefore to this place Booz now cometh to treat before the Elders of the City about the redee-

V. 11.

Chald. Paraphr.

V. 12.

Lyra.

V. 14.

V. 15.

Lyra.

R. Solomon.

The Mystery,
Lyra, Hugo
Card.

V. 1.

Deut. 25. 27.

Vatablus.

V. 3.

N. 4.

Levit. 25.
Tostatus.

Bonfrerius.

V. 4. 5. 6.

Deut. 25. 5.

redeeming of Elimelech's land, and of Ruth his sons wife together, which thing ought publickly to bee done, as many acts betwixt private men are done amongst us before a Judge or publike Notary for the greater assurance. And here Booz sate downe, because hee was one of the Elders, and so happily was that other kinsman, and therefore he fitteth down also. For his comming by at this time, it seemeth plainly to have been accidentall, hee peradventure going through the gate of the City about some other businesse. For these words, O such an one, whereby Booz calleth him, Hebr. פו פלני אלמני which are words, as Vatablus hath it, that signifie nothing, but are put for the name of the man, whose name is not expressed, and therefore they are not the words which Booz used, for hee certainly knew his name, and called him by it, but the writer of this Book either not knowing it, or not willing to set it down, expressed it by these common words, as the Lawyers put cases by the names of John a Stiles, or John a Noker. They being set there together, and other Elders of the City also comming together by this time, to the number of ten, hee propoundeth the matter to this kinsman before them, thus; Naomi who came out of the Countrey of Moab, selleth a parcell of Land which was our brother Elimelech's; and I thought to advertise thee thereof, that thou mightest buy it before the Elders of my people; and if thou wilt redeem it, redeem it, and if not, tell me, that I may know; for there is none to redeem it but thou, and I am after thee, &c. In saying Naomi selleth, he meaneth, she is about to sell, that is, having an estate in her husband Elimelech's land during life, after which it was to go to the next kinsman, she is now willing to sell her time away, being grown poore, and not being able to stock or occupy it, or to stay till another year to reap fruit of it: In which case the nearest kinsman was to have the first offer, and if hee refused to buy it, then the next to him might, and if no kinsman, then it might bee sold to any other man till the year of Jubilee, at what time it was to return to that family again. Tostatus, because Hebr. it is a preterperfect tense, hath sold, gathereth, that Naomi had already sold it, and therefore Booz advertising this kinsman to buy it, meaneth to redeem it from him that had already bought it. But this cannot be gathered from the tense, because the enallage of the tense is usuall amongst the Hebrews, saith Bonfrerius; or these words, she hath sold, may admit of this exposition, she hath set to sale, because she could not sell to any other except the kindred first refused; but by what law such a sale is forbidden, I cannot finde, but onely that if it be sold to another, the kinsman hath liberty to redeem it, Levit. 25. 25. And therefore were it not for the words following, v. 5. What day thou buyest it of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it of Ruth also, I should have concluded with Tostatus, but seeing these words make it plaine that it was yet to be bought of Ruth and Naomi, I understand the preterperfect tense here, as the present, for which it is often put, because the Hebrews have no present. Naomi selleth, or is now upon selling.

The kinsman hearing the Land propounded, said, he would buy it, but then Booz telling him of Ruth, whose name hee had hitherto purposely concealed, saying, that hee must together take her to wife, to raise up seed unto his dead brother, her former husband; he said he could not redeem it, lest hee should marre his own inheritance. For the better understanding of which, it is to be known, that if one brother dyed without issue, the next unto him must take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother; and the first born springing from this marriage, was to be counted the dead mans son, and to enjoy his inheritance; and if the man marrying a brothers wife should never have any more sons, he must carry both the inheritance of his legal father, and of his naturall father also; and thus his naturall father should have his name quite put out, seeing he was not reputed his son, neither was called by his name, but by the name of his mothers former husband. And hereupon it is that this kinsman refuseth Ruth, because as it seemeth, having yet no children, hee might bee in danger of losing his inheritance, the son of another carrying it away, and by this meanes to have his name put out also. The like danger to which was not to Booz, because hee being ancient, happily had other sons before by other wives.

wives. Yet upon any occasion it was a fault in the next brother to refuse to take his brothers wife being childlesse, because it was against Gods law, and he that refused, if the woman required him, was publickly to have this disgrace by her done unto him, viz. to have his shooe pluckt off, and to be spitted in the face. But the fault of this kinsman was not so great, because Ruth required not him but Booz, and therefore he refusing her was not so served; but onely it is said, This was the manner in former time in Israel, concerning redeeming and changing, to confirme all things, a man plucked off his shooe, and gave it to his neighbour, and this was a testimony in Israel, viz. that he had given up his right unto him; so the kinsman drew off his shooe and gave it to Booz, as is to bee understood. Josephus therefore erroneously relateth this history, when hee saith, that Ruth plucked off his shooe, and spat in his face, for there was a peculiar law for that made by God, Deut. 25. and it was not to confirm or passe away any thing to another Man, but onely in a singular case of a brother refusing to take his brothers wife to raise up seed unto him, whereas the plucking off here mentioned was upon a custome, and no law in every passing away of a mans right to another in any thing. This was an ancient custome, and it seems was stilused, but afterwards left, which made Josephus, being ignorant hereof, as is likely, so to erre. And it seemeth to have been a fit symbole or signe of a mans giving up his right to another, because in taking possession, hee goeth and setteth his foot upon the possession, Possessio being quasi pedum positio; and therefore by treading under foot, having dominion over is commonly set forth, Psal. 110. 1. Deut. 33. ult. Luke 10. 9. and contrarywise to pluck off the shooe, and to give it to his neighbour, was an apt symbole of dispossessing himselfe, that hee might take possession. Quinquarborum for shooe, hath glove, because the Chaldee rendreth it by נרקה a glove, but the Rabbins sonetime expound that word by sheath, or case containing any thing, and so it may bee a shooe as well as a glove, and the Hebrew word נעל is every where rendred a shooe.

Booz then calleth the Elders and people to witnesse, that he had bought the land of Elimelech, Mahlon, and Chilion, and Ruth Mablons wife to bee his wife, that is, he had now right to buy it of the hand of Nomi, and to hold the possession untill an heire should be born of Ruth to enjoy it afterwards. Whereas it may seem that Booz did not take Ruth to wife, as he pretended, viz. to preserve the name of Mablon, and that his name might not bee put out in Israel, because Obed that came of this marriage, is not called by Mablon, but by Booz in the genealogies. I answer, this doth not prove that hee intended it not, but because hee was a mighty man of wealth, Mablons name, by whom the childe might at the first be called, was soon drowned by his name; and it may bee also that the genealogy was thus set forth to grace Booz for his piety, by putting him into the holy line, and thus also it is best understood, whose naturall son Jesus was, and how he came of Judab according to Gen. 49. 10.

Then all the people and the Elders blessed Booz, and prayed, that Ruth might build up his house, as Rachel and Leah did Israel's; and that his house might be like the house of Pharez, which Pharez was born by Tamar to Judab, and of whom Booz came. They mention Rachel and Leah in blessing, because they were most fruitfull, and by bearing many children they built up the house of Israel; whereas their maids Zilpah and Bilhah were fruitfull also, they are not yet spoken of, because they were servants, and their children were counted to their Mistresses. Sarah and Rebekah were not so fruitfull, and therefore passing them over, they mention these. And Rachel is placed before Leah, because shee by right was Israel's first wife. And of Pharez mention is made, because from him the line of David is begun, by whom hee was made famous, so Lyra. And hee was also famous for the numerosity and principallity of his children, amongst their brethren of the tribe of Judab; and because hee was the founder of the people of Bethlehem, otherwise called Ephrata, whereby the blemish was done away, that was by the incestuous copulation of Judab with Tamar, whereof Pharez came. Do thou worthily in Ephrata, and bee famous in Bethlehem; the vulg. Latine, ut sit exemplum virtutis in Ephrata, & habeat celebre nomen in Bethlehem;

V. 7.

V. 8.

Josephus Antiq;

Quinquarborum

V. 9, 10.

V. 11.

V. 12.

Lyra.

Numb. 2. 3.

V. 13.

Lyra.

V. 16.

V. 17.

V. 18.

The Myſtery.
Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.

referring it to Ruth, the Chald. Sept. and Tygurine agree with ours, referring it to Booz, in the second person, and so goeth the Hebrew text.

Then Booz took Ruth to wife, and shee bare him a son, by whom the neighbors comforted Naomi, and called his name Obed. And here the Lord is said to have given Ruth conception, because she was married to an old man, and yet conceived with childe so soon, whereas before being married to a young man Mahlon, shee conceived not all the time that he lived with her, so that this was a singular act of Gods blessing. And Naomi became nurse unto it, that is, dry-nurse, for otherwise she could not nurse it by giving it suck; the Vulg. Latine to expresse this, hath nuricus & genale fungebatur officio. But how did the women her neighbours say unto her, that Ruth was better to her then seven sons? Answer. A certain number is put for an uncertaine, seven for many, and in bearing this son, which might be a cherisher of her in her old age, seeing he was like to be wealthy enough, comming of such a father; Ruth was better to her then many sons, if she had had them by Elimelech, who was poore. And they called his name Obed, that is, serving or ministering, because he should minister unto Naomi of his subsistance.

Now these are the generations of Pharez. &c. From henceforth to the end is the genealogy of David from Pharez, to prepare to his History following in the next Book.

Myſtically, by Booz going up to the gate, and sitting there, both Lyra and Hugo understand Christ conceived in the Virgins womb, which was myſtically set forth by the gate of the Temple, Ezek. 44.2. by which it is said no man should enter, because the Lord had come in by it, but it should be shut up as the wombe of the Virgin Mary; by the kinsman that came by, John the Baptist, who was before him, and whom he caused, as it were, to sit down by him, when he had familiar conference with him, but he disclaimed being Bridegroom to Ruth, the Church; he was not worthy to unloose the latchet of *Christ*s shooe, but hee loofeth his own, and giveth it him, when as hee openeth the myſtery of the faith in him, and giveth way unto him, and willet him to take the Bride, when as he sought by praising him, as the Bridegroom, to draw all men unto him. So Christ tooke the Church, and begat Obed, that is, a faithfull people of the Gentiles, observing and obeying the Lord. And Naomi was nurse, that is, the ancient Church of the Jewes, which now can have no children of her own, yet she nourisheth up the Church of the Gentiles, when as by the holy Scriptures by her set forth and preserved, this Church is confirmed in the faith, and excited to a vertuous and holy life.

A

A COMMENTARY
UPON THE FIRST BOOKE OF SAMUEL.

PREFACE.

THE two Bookes of Samuel and of the Kings are called foure books of the Kings by the Latines; but by the Hebrews they are divided onely into two, Samuel and Malachim, or Kings, saith Hugo, as they must needs be to make but 22 Bookes of Canonickall Scripture in the Old Testament, as hath been shewed in the entrance of Ioshua. Yet Jerome in his Prologue upon this Book, saith, that some distinguish the Old Testament into 24 Bookes, holding Ruth to be a Book by it selfe, and the Lamentation of Jeremiah, reckoning them amongst the Hagiographa; which number of 24 was set forth by the 24 Elders, Rev. 4. 10. For the Author of these two Bookes of Samuel, it is generally held that he wrote them unto that place where his death is described; and from thence that which followeth, was supplied as some thinke, by Gad or Nathan, some by Hezekiah and Ezra. Hugo following the Ord. Glosse, saith, that the history after Samuels death, was written by David till the end of his time, then by Solomon and other Kings, or by their appointment, successively for their times; and that Jeremiah brought Samuel and Kings into one continued history, which appeareth, because his prophesie endeth as these Bookes. The history here, and in the two Bookes of the Kings, set forth from Eli to the last Babylonish captivity, is of 570 years. How Eli came to be Judge, is not said, but it is most probable, that after Samson there was none other Judge extraordinarily stirred up, and so the forme of government was by an Aristocracy, that is, the Councell of Lxx, above all which the High-priest being for his time, executed the office of a Judge or supreme Magistrate, 1 Sam. 4. 18. and thus Eli at this time Judged Israel. For the drift of this History, it is, as of the Book of Judges, to shew how the promises and threatenings of the Law tooke effect, the Judges, and Kings, and people that transgressed being grievously punished, and those that kept the

Hugo Card.

Jerome in pro-logo.

Peter Martyr.

Origen Hom. 1.
in Iudic.

Ecclef. Historia

the law, graciously preserved and made famous by wonderfull victories over their enemies, that wee by these examples might bee warned againstt evill and excited to well doing. Moreover, as Origen noteth, the temperall deliverances of Gods people from many dangers and miseries in these Bookes recorded, doe give us occasion to consider of a greater deliverance wrought for us by Christ, and to meditate upon our happinesse herein, seeing this is the scope both of the law and prophets to bring us to Christ. And the captivities and miseries of the Kings and people sinning serveto put us in minde of a farre more grievous misery to come in hell fire for ever, and so to make us flee from sinne. The Bookes of Samuel, saith Comestor, have their name from the writer, and those of the Kings from the matter in them handled. And because the history of Samuels birth, life and gettes take up a great part of this Booke, it is begun with his parents, and with their commendations.

CHAP. I.

V. 1.

V. 2.

Lyra.

Hugo Card.
1 Cor. II. 31.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

THere was a certaine man of Ramathaim Zophim of Mount Ephraim, whose name was Elkanah, the sonne of Jeroham, the sonne of Elihu, the sonne of Tohu, the sonne of Zuph an Ephrathite. And hee had two wives, the name of the one was Hannah, the name of the other Peninnah, &c. This Booke, saith Lyra, beginneth with the history of Judges Eli and Samuel, that we might see the first occasion of altering the government from Judges to Kings. The sonnes of Eli were wicked, 1 Sam. 2. 12. and so were the sonnes of Samuel, 1 Sam. 8. 1, 2, 3. which made the people weary of their government, and so to desire a King to be set over them, of the difference betwixt whom and a Judge enough hath bene already spoken in the entrance of the booke of Judges. Of the Kings both here and in the two Bookes of Kings some were set up by God, viz. the godly, and some by his permission, viz. the wicked, for none ever attaine to this high dignity, but by God, Prov. 8. 15. and in the history of these two last Judges, and of Kings good and evill, both Samuel, Kings and Chronicles are spent. These Bookes of Kings, saith Hugo, do well follow the Judges, because after judging our selves followeth the eternall Kingdom. First is Genesis setting forth the fall of man into sinne, and his going downe into Egypt, and his afflictions there, to shew, that misery followeth sinne. 2. Exodus, shewing his bringing out of Egypt. 3. Leviticus shewing his instruction in divine Ordinances. 4. Numbers, shewing his temptations by enemies for the better arming of him. 5. Deuteronomie, his confirming by the recapitulation of the law. 6. Ioshua shewing his bringing into the promised land. 7. Judges, shewing, that when men abuse the benefits bestowed upon them, they shall be punished therefore. 8. Kings, to shew, that after judgement, and reformation hereby, the everlasting Kingdome of heaven shall follow, to which the number of 8. doth aptly agree. To returne now to Elkanah. Hee is said to be of Ramathaim Zophim, the first of which words is of the duall number to shew that there were two Cities called Ramath, or that Ramath was divided into two, so Iunius Comestor saith, that Ramathaim was Arimathea by Iosephus called Ramath, and v. 19. it is Ramah, and Zophim is added either to shew, that they stood upon two high places, as it were looking one upon another, for ΠΕΥ of which Zophim cometh, signifieth to behold, or that from hence a watchman might see afarre off, or that here Prophets dwelt, who are called seers or watchmen, and this last is followed by the Hebrews. The Chaldees Paraphrast hence gathereth that Samuel came of the Prophets, and so doth Ben. Gerson, and it is not improbable, because Elkanah, the father of Samuel came of Chor, 1 Chron. 6. 22. 27. and his race did minister before the Lord by musike, v. 33. and some of them by the Spirit of Prophecie indited some of the Psalmes, as their titles doe declare: so Peter Martyr, who also conjectureth, that from Zuph, one of Elkanah his progenitors here named, and the eldest, these Prophets had this name of Zophim, whereby the the Cities of Ramathaim are set forth, Comestor saith that Elkanah was the 19 from Caath comming of Isshak, and Chore, Ch. 9. 5. wee read of the land of Zuph from whence Iunius thinketh that Zophim cometh, as if it had bene said Ramah in the land of Zuph, which tooke the name from Zuph, the first in Elkanah his pedegree. Zuph is called an Ephraimite, because hee and his posterity lived amongst the Ephraimites, as being a Levite hee might well doe, because the Levites were dispersed throughout all the Tribes, to teach the people in all places, and the Kohathites had Cities in Ephraim, Iosh. 21. 20. There are two other reasons of the name Ephraimite, 1. Hee was so called, that was an inhabitant of Ephrata or Beithlehem, or that was borne there. 2. He might be so called, saith Ierom, because his mother was of Ephrata. But neither of these wayes, saith P. Martyr, could Zuph or Elkanah, bee called an Ephraimite; not the first, because Ephrata, or Beithlehem was in Judah, and he came not of Judah, but of Levi: nor the second, because a man never had his name from his mother, unlesse it were in case that shee had the inheritance of her father. That hee was called an Ephraimite because hee dwelt in Mount Ephraim, holdeth also Lyra, and Iunius, and Hugo saith, that an Ephraimite might bee put for Ephraim, as the men of Ephraim were called Judges 12. 5. or hee might be called an Ephraimite, as Rabanus hath it, from Ephrata, the wife of Caleb, who bare Elkanah, yet saith Hugo some hold, that shee was the sister of Moses. But to let this passe, as already confuted. Judg. 12. 5. maketh it plaine, how hee might be called an Ephraimite from the place of his dwelling: for when Iephthah his men would know the men of Ephraim from themselves, they asked each one, as hee fell into their hands, Art thou an Ephraimite, so that it was usuall to call him, that dwelt in Ephraim, an Ephraimite: Whereas Comestor, an Ephraimite of Ephraim was distinguished from one of Ephrata, because the one was written with f, the other with ph, in Hebr. they are both alike written with n see the places. Whereas the genealogy of Elkanah here drawne may seeme to bee taxed by St. Paul, forbidding the study of genealogies, Paul Martyr answereth the study of genealogies taxed by was that, which was vaine, and without any profitable use onely for vaine-glory: but of this genealogy drawing there is good use, for knowing now, that Samuel came of Chorah a Levite, and yet a most wicked man, who perished by a strange judgement in his wickednesse, we learne 1. that the blessing of Levi by Moses, Deut. 33. Hee shall teach Israhel by laws, &c. was not vaine, for Samuel a Levite was eminent for this. 2. That children do not alwayes suffer for the iniquity of their fathers Ezek. 18. for Samuel, that came of so bad a father, was never the lesse famous, and gracious with God.

Hee had two wives, because one was barren, saith Lyra, hee tooke another: but Hugo, that this was by dispensation of the Spirit of God, wherefore he sinned not herein, as did Lamech, Gen. 4. who tooke two for lust. And this was not the case of Elkanah alone, but of Abraham, Jacob, David, &c. Who were never reproved for having more wives, and therefore most probably dispensed with for the increase of posterity, as that time required, whilst the people of God were contained within one family. For even Iehojadab, the High-Priest tooke unto Iosh the King two wives, 2 Chron. 24. 3. but now the case and times being altered under the Gospell it is altogether unlawfull as Peter Martyr sheweth at large in 1 Sam. 45. 34. and as I have touched before, upon Gen. 4.

And this man went up yearly to worship and to sacrifice to the Lord God of hostes in Shiloh, &c. Hereby his piety appeared, for the Lord had appointed, that every male should appeare before the Lord yearly 3. times, at the Feast of the Pascheover, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles, Exod. 23. 17. the reasons whereof see there. Now Elkanah his comming up yearly is to bee understood according to this law, of his comming up 3. times in the yeare, and because none must now appeare empty, hee brought his offerings for sacrifice, and the place to which hee came, was Shiloh, because there was the Tabernacle ever since that it was set up there. Iosh. 18. 1. For this word yearly, the Vulgar

Hieronymus tradit Hebr.

*Iunius.
Hugo Car.
Rabanus.*

P. Martyr.

Note.

*V. 2.
Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.*

P. Martyr.

V. 3.

Hugo Cardin.
Lyra.

Vatablar.

24.

P. Martyr.

Rabbini.

August.
Peter Martyr.

V. 4.

Schol. Hiflor.

Levit. 3. c 7.

19.
Lyra.

Peter Martyr.
August. Tract.
26. in Iohan.

gar Latin hath, statutis temporibus, whereby Hugo understandeth the three Feasts times before spoken of; so likewise Comestor. But Lyra saith it is uncertaine by the Text, whether hee went up so often, or once onely in the yeare to the passeover, because they that dwelt farre off, were spared from comming the other two times, or upon some other reasonable cause, and this hee labourereth to prove touching Elkanah from v. 7. where he is said to have done so yeare by yeare, Hebr. it is מימים ומימים miimim jamimah, by Kimbi expounded, from yeare to yeare, as the words are plainly v. 7. so that his going up cannot bee proved indeed by the Text to have beene any more then once in the yeare: but because Elkanah was a godly man, and therefore doubtlesse observed the ordinances of the Lord in every thing, I doubt not but hee went up three times yearly, and one is onely mentioned, when his wives also went with him, as they were not injoynted to doe, because women had many necessary impediments, but yet did out of piety most commonly, as other women also did in all parts of the land. Whereas Lyra saith, that they which dwelt farre off, needed not to come up any more then once in the yeare, it is neither true except they dwelt out of the land as hath beene already shewed upon Ruth 1. 6. and if it were, yet this concerned not Elkanah who dwelt neare enough to Shiloh. If it be demanded, how Elkanah being a Levite could bee said to come up at times, when as the Levites were continually to serve about the Tabernacle? P. Martyr answereth, 1. That his time of serving might now be expired, hee being past 50. according to the Law, Numb. 8. 25. 2. That all the Levites did not serve about the Tabernacle, but were dispersed amongst the Tribes to teach the people in all places, and to judge of causes: which last onely I subscribe to, but not to the first, because it is expressly said, Numb. 8. 26. even after 50. they should minister with their Brethren in the Tabernacle to keepe the charge &c. Yet, as Tostatus noteth, it is likely, that hee came oftner to the Tabernacle to serve there, as was the duty of a Levite. For his going up to Shiloh hee also questioneth how this could bee spoken, seeing Ramathaim was an high place; and answereth that hee went downe first by lower grounds, and then ascended againe, to pray and to sacrifice, or to worship and to sacrifice, by the first the low prostration of the body being intimated in prayer, from whence the Rabbins observe prayer to bee the chiefe, and more excellent then sacrifice, because it is first named; and before wee come to receive the Lords Body, saith August. we should worship and fall downe before him in prayer. Thus P. Martyr, whose words are, Fideles antequam Christi corpus fide & spiritu percipiant, illud pro se affixum cruci & mortuum supplices adorant, atq; in ejus adoratio ritum communionis antecedit, whereby adoring of his body is not to be understood that Papisticall adoring of the Host, as they call it, in the forme of bread, but of him in his humanity, although abated to the death of the crosse. But this of worshipping of the sacrifice before the offering of it is but ill inferred hence, seeing Elkanah is not to bee understood to have adored his sacrifice, but God first, and then to have sacrificed: for it is להשתחוה ולזבח to bow himselfe and to sacrifice to the Lord.

And when the time was, that Elkanah offered, hee gave to Peninnah his wife and to all her sonnes and daughters portions: that is, not to each one new apparell, as some, saith Comestor, expound it, but parts of sacrifice, which hee offered, for it being a peace-offering part was to bee burnt upon the Altar, part went to the Priest, and the rest to the offerer to feast withall, that is, all, but the fat and kidneys, which were for sacrifice, and the wave brest and right shoulder, which were the Priests, the rest then Elkanah had now unto himselfe and gave portions hereof to his wife and children to feed upon. The times of bringing these sacrifices then were times of feasting and rejoicing before the Lord, and the meat which now they did eate, was holy and figured out the flesh of Christ unto them, so that they looked not onely at the meat, which they ate but at Christ to come, of whom they did partake by faith. Therefore saith Peter Martyr, Augustine sheweth the same thing to have beene propounded in their sacrifices, sacrifices, and in ours, onely a diversity was in the signes; and this is according to the Apostle, 1 Cor. 10. They did all eat of the same spirituall meat, &c. that is, not as the Papists object, they ate of the same spirituall meat amongst themselves, for then his argument had been of no force, but the same, that we eate of by faith, although hee had not then taken flesh, for to faith hee was slaine from the beginning of the world, and therefore had flesh alwayes to feed the faithfull withall: Wherefore Augustine saith, our sacrifice and theirs were the same in respect of the matter, and they differed onely in circumstances, ours being yet in vertue greater, in profit better, in act more easie, and in number fewer. If it be demanded how he saith, in vertue greater, if they received Christs body as well as we? P. Martyr answereth, because to us things are made more manifest, as being plainly taught; whereas to them, they were taught but obscurely and darkly set forth by figures; so that we may have a more firme faith in Christ then they could, if we speake of the generall state of the Church in those dayes; although it is not to bee doubted but that Abraham, David, and others, that had revelations from God, excelled even the best in these times in faith.

But to Hannah hee gave a worthy portion, for hee loved her, but the Lord had shut up her wombe: the Vulg. Latine, he being sad, gave to Hannah a part; Hebr. מִנְה נָחַת אֶפֶס one part of faces, that is, according to Ben Gerson, an excellent part, consisting of fat on the one side, and leane on the other. Pagninus saith, either it may be understood, he gave it her falling upon his face, and praying for her in respect of her barrennesse: Or, because אֶפֶס signifieth also anger, it may be understood thus, hee gave it her being angry or sad, because she was upbraided continually at these times by her adversary Peninnah; or he being angry because she was no more chearly at these festivall times gave it her. I subscribe to the first, he gave her a goodly portion, that look'd better then any of the rest; and so the reason added holdeth best, for hee loved her, that is, he loved her most, as Jacob did Rachel; thus also the Chaldee Paraphrast, and Iostatus, Jerome, and Cajetan. But the Lord had shut up her wombe; hereby is shewed, that barrennesse and fruitfulnessse come not onely by secondary causes, but according to the good pleasure of God. This Jacob acknowledged before in Rachel, and it is said expressly, that God had shut up all the wombs in Abimelechs Court, and that they were healed by the prayers of Abraham.

And her adversary provoked her sore, &c. that is, upbraided her by her barrennesse, which in those dayes amongst the people of God was reproachfull: 1 Because it was against that precept at the beginning, Increase and multiply. 2 Because as a blessing it was promised to Abraham, that his posterity should bee multiplyed as the stars of heaven; and therefore to be barren was thought to be a curse. 3 Because every one desired that the Messiah might come of her posterity. 4 Because the Israelites were then the onely peculiar people of God, and to increase the number of them was by all greatly desired. It was also reproachfull amongst the Heathen; for a certain Lacedemonian an old man a batchelor, as he passed by one, he rose not up unto him, and being asked the reason, seeing age was there thus revered, he said, thou hast no childe which may rise up to me when I am old. And amongst the Romans, there were divers immunities granted to them that had many children, so P. Martyr. But this was so onely during the time that God led his people by outward blessings, but now it is an honour not to marry, and to be without children, so that it be for the kingdome of heaven; neither are the married pronounced blessed for having children, but for that their names are written in heaven, yet for the increase of Gods Church, to have children, is a thing desirable in them, and matter of joy.

Howsoever Peninnah ought not to have been proud of her own fruitfulnessse, as it seemeth she was, nor to have upbraided Hannah by her barrennesse, as shee did, especially at a festivall time, which was a time of rejoycing together before the Lord; for it is said, shee dealt thus by her from yeare to yeare, when shee came up to the house of the Lord. Some, saith Pet. Martyr, by Peninnahs provoking

Revel.

Aug. contr.
Faustum, l. 29.
c. 12. Virtute
majora, utilitate meliora, actu facilia, numero pauciora.

V. 5.

R. L. Ben Gerson
Pagninus.

Gen. 30. 2.
Gen. 20.

V. 6.

P. Martyr.

V. 7.

V. 8.
Lyra.

V. 9.

Hugo Cardin.

Peter Martyr.

V. 10.

Note.

Lyra.

1 Sam. 8. 1.

Peter Martyr.

Numb. 3. 38.

provoking of her, understand her urging of her to pray to God, who onely hath power to make a woman fruitfull. But this is most improbable, because to have good counsell given her, would not have made her vexe and weep, and to sit and eate nothing for sorrow, as it is said shee did. Elkanah against her reproaches, comforteth Hannah, saying, Am not I better to thee then ten sons? that is, saith Lyra, following the Hebrews, then the ten sons of Peninnah are to her, that is, maist thou not have more comfort of mee, and of my great love, then shee can have of all her children, seeing shee is not so greatly beloved of mee. But others hee saith, understand it thus, Am not I better to thee, then if thou hadst ten sons? but this standeth not with so good reason, because if she had had many children by Elkanah, his love would still have been greater, rather then lesse towards her, with whom I likewise hold.

And Hannah rose up after they had eaten and drunke, &c. Junius, after hee had eaten: the Sept. after they had eaten, which is thus rendred, lest there should seeme to bee a contradiction in this verse, to that v. 7. shee ate nothing; Hebr. it is אָחַר אָכַלְתִּי after eating, and after drinking, as Hugo hath well noted here, who yet followeth the Vulg. Latine, wherein it is so, after shee had eaten and drunke; and to reconcile it with the words before-going, shee ate nothing, hee saith, shee ate so little, as that it was counted as nothing; but hee finally sleeth to the Hebrew, after eating, that is, the time of others eating in that holy Feast ended: So that from these words it cannot bee inferred that now shee had eaten ought. And it is to be held, saith Peter Martyr, that shee had at this Feast according to the words before-going, eaten nothing, because being sad and grieved, if shee had eaten, shee had offended against that precept, Deut. 12. 7. There yee shall eate before the Lord, and rejoyce; and this is Aarons meaning, Levit. 10. 19. when Moses reproveth him, because hee had not eaten of the goat after the death of his two sons, hee said, If I had eaten to day, should I have been accepted? that is, being sad and grieved. 2 Because, v. 15. she saith, that shee had drunke neither wine nor strong drinke, and v. 18. after that shee had prayed and been comforted by Eli, shee is said to have put away her sadnesse, and to have eaten; thus also Ben Gerson holdeth, although David Kimbi be of a contrary minde, holding that shee ate a little. Fasting then as shee was, she rose up and went to pray unto God, that he would take away this her reproach. She was in bitterness of soul, and prayed to the Lord, and wept sore; and it is noted, v. 9. that Eli the High-priest sate by upon a seat by a post of the Temple. As Hannah did in her distresse, when shee was reproached by Peninnah, not render reproaches for reproaches, but betooke her selfe to prayer, so ought all both women and men to doe, as David saith, They requited mee with hatred for my good will, but I gave my selfe unto prayer: so Sarah, Gen. 16. 5. when shee was despised by Hagar, said, The Lord judge between mee and thee. For the seat where Eli sate, Lyra saith, that it was an honourable seate for the High-priest, where he used to sit and judge the people; but the Hebrewes hee saith, hold, that now hee first sate upon it, and was made Judge, which cannot bee, because hee judged Israel 40 yeares, and Samuel was borne soone after this, but Eli was very aged, Chap. 2. 22. and Samuel is said to bee a childe, Chap. 3. 1. That opinion of the Hebrews, howsoever I thinke it unworthy to bee received, as being without all ground, yet the arguing of Lyra against it, is of little force, because although Eli was very aged, when Samuel was yet called puer, a childe, it doth nor hence follow, that hee could not sit 40 yeares Judge from about the time of his birth: for the word נָעַר rendred childe, doth also signifie a servant, or one that ministrereth, although of a middle age, and Samuel could not bee much lesse then 40 when Eli dyed, because hee and Samuel judged Israel 40 yeares, and Samuel is said to be an old man, before that Saul was made King. The seat where Eli sate, was the proper place, saith Peter Martyr, of the High-priest, for on the east, at the entrance of the Temple, was the place for Aaron and his sonnes, as the Gershonites place was westward, the Cohabites southward, and the Merarites northward, who were all the Levites: Before the entrance of the Tabernacle then sate Eli, that came of Aaron, and and there about him stood the other Priests, for, as Kimbi saith, none might sit downe in the court of the Lords house, but the High-Priest onely, for this was not permitted, no not to Kings. Hee fate here to instruct the people touching the rites and cerenonies of Gods worship, and other ordinances of the Law, if any came to inquire of him, and to see that none should come to the Tabernacle in their uncleannesse: And here in his sight the people came to pray before the Tabernacle, which was a signe of Gods presence, and therefore Hannah came hither also. But to goe to any particular place to make our private prayers wee are not now bound; but in every place wee must lift up pure hands unto God: They went to the Tabernacle, because it was a figure of Christ; but now Christ being come, we goe to the Tabernacle when in his Name we pray, wheresoever wee be.

And shee vowed a vow, and said, If thou wilt indeed looke upon the affliction of thy handmaid, and give mee a Man-childe, &c. Peter Martyr moveth two questions here; 1 Whether Hannah did well in asking a Man-childe, thus prescribing to the Lord what kinde of childe shee would have. 2 Whether shee could vow for her childe.

For the first, it may seem that shee did not well in thus asking, because shee knew not whether the having of a sonne would bee good for her, or no, as wee know not whether any outward thing being enjoyed by us, would bee good or evill for us, because it is uncertaine whether wee shall use it well or ill. And Chrysostome saith, How may I know, whether I shall obtaine that which I aske of God? If I aske nothing against his will, nothing unworthy of his majesty, nothing earthly, but all heavenly and spirituall; and in the Lords prayer wee are directed to aske for outward things, onely by a generall petition, Give us this day our daily bread. Plato also thinketh it a most hard thing to determine particularly, what wee desire in prayer, and therefore that it is safest to aske good things onely in generall, according to the prayer of an Heathen man, Give me all things that be good, and keep away all evill from me. Peter Martyr answereth, that Hannah without doubt did well in thus praying, because there being two things requisite in asking any outward thing: 1. That the having of it should not bee our utmost end aimed at herein, but the glorifying of God hereby; 2. That wee desire to use it well: they both concurred in her; for shee craved not this sonne for her owne content and pleasure, but that shee might dedicate him to God, to serve him continually to his glory. Shee was also indued with the Spirit of prophesie, whereby shee knew what manner of sonne she should have. And for our desiring of any outward thing in particular in prayer, to approve it, he citeth Augustine, saying, What we may wish for, we may pray for, and also what God hath promised to such as obey him: For thus Moses prayed for victory over the Amalekites; Abraham, that Ismael might live; and Paul to be delivered from danger. Indeed, as our Lord saith, We must first and chiefly seek the kingdome of God, and outward things but in a second place.

For the second question, shee may seem to have vowed this vow rashly, because shee knew not whether her husband would ratifie it, and then it could not stand: And againe, shee knew not whether her son would bee free from blemishes, or no, and so fit, or unfit to serve the Lord in his Sanctuary; or whether he would follow that strict course of life, never to drinke wine, &c. or, whether his body would be able to goe without it. But that her husband consented, appeareth at the least afterwards, v. 22. where he is said to goe to performe his vow, her vow being called his, because hee consented to it, and v. 23, 24. for without her husbands consent, the wives vow cannot stand; but seeing he so dearly loved her, and the thing vowed was so good, she made no doubt at the time of her vowing, but that she should easily prevaile with him to ratifie it. Again, for fitnessse in every respect for this holy service and order, that was necessarily to be understood, so as that if the childe should have proved blemished, or too infirme, the vow had been dispensed withall. Lastly, for her power over her childe, shee could admonish him what a vow shee had made

D Kimbi.

I Tim. 2.

V. ii.
Peter Martyr.

Qu. I.

Chrysost. Hom.
8. in I Tim.Plato in Alci-biade.Aug. Epist. ad Proban

Qu. 2.

Peter Martyr.

Numb. 30:

Obj<sup>ct</sup>.

Ossander.

1 Cor. 7.
Ephes. 4. = 3.Obj<sup>ect</sup>.

V. 12, 13, 14.

V. 15, 16.

V. 17.

Lyra.

P. Martyr.

Qu.

Matth. 6.

Luke 18.

Matth. 6.

Note.

* Chrysost. following the Sept. translat. saith, that Eli's servant reproved her, from hence gathering her admirable patience, Hom. 1. de Hanna.

touching him, and perswade him to keep it, and so it was not to be doubted, but that he in obedience to his parents, would take upon him the vow made for him, as his owne vow. If it be said, then parents may devote their children to a Monasticall life in their infancy also, and they shall be bound hereby. Ossander answereth, that there is not the like reason of Nazaritisme and Monckery: 1 Because this is grounded upon Gods ordinance, Numb. 6. that not. 2 There was no great difficulty in keeping this vow, but to keep that, is not in the power of any, saving of some few to whom it is given. 3 To lead a Monasticall life is held meritorious, but this not; thus hee: And hereunto we may adde, that a Monasticall life is not onely not of Gods ordaining, but against that precept, Let every one continue in that calling wherein God hath called him; and let him worke with his hands the thing that is good. If it be said, the son of Elkanah being a Levite, was the Lords without vowing to serve him, and much more being Hannah her first born. Sol. But a Levite, was not to enter into his service till 25. neither was he to serve in Nazaritisme, and his time determined at 50. whereas Hannah voweth her son from his childhood even all the dayes of his life. In saying, There shall no razor come upon his head; by mentioning one point of Nazaritisme, she meant the other also of drinking of wine, &c. Tostatus addeth, that other Levites served by course, but hee always without intermission, Deut. 18. 6. and to this of not drinking wine understood, consenteth Joseph. Philo, Theodoret, and the Sept. adde these words, Hee shall drink no wine.

Eli perceiving Hannahs lips to move, but hearing no voice come from her, thought she had been drunken, and chargeth her accordingly: But she telleth him, that shee had neither drunke wine nor strong drinke, but prayed in her affliction; then Eli saith, Goe in peace, and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition. Eli, saith Lyra, bade her put away her wine, that is, goe away untill the force of it was over, and sleepe, and then come againe and pray. And hee might the rather be moved to thinke that these gestures in her came from wine, because it was a festivall time, saith Peter Martyr, and the time of eating and drinking was now past; and it is not improbable, but that some even at these holy feasts made themselves drunken with wine, because the like fault is taxed at Love-feasts, 1 Cor. 11. 21. Whereas shee is said to pray in her heart, without uttering a voice, her lips onely moving, he moveth also a question, whether the voice may not be used in our secret prayers? and answereth, there is no need of a voice, because God heareth the desire of the heart, but sometimes it is not unprofitable to utter a voice to stirre up our spirits, that will be ready otherwise to languish; and if in our earnestnesse a voice sometime breaketh forth, it cannot but be acceptable to God; thus hee: but we must have a care, lest in using a loud voice in our private devotions, wee affect not the hearing of men, that they may praise us; for this is all one with going into the streets to pray to be seen of men, which is taxed for hypocrisie. For her praying thus secretly, it was not because shee asked any thing dishonest, which she might be ashamed to utter, as may be gathered from the speech of Athenodorus, cited by Seneca, that some heathen men did, He hath profited well that asketh nothing of God, which hee is not ashamed publikely to professe. And shee is said to continue praying, to intimate a duty to us, if wee would speed of that which wee desire, wee must continue to aske, as the widow of the unjust Judge. Often repetitions and much babling indeed is condemned, where the spirit and fervency is wanting, a confidence being had in such repetitions, and many words, but to be long in our private prayers sometimes, is commended by the example of Christ, who sometime continued all night in prayer.

Hannah being * reproved by Eli, although unjustly, answereth him againe reverently, My Lord, I am a woman of a sorrowfull spirit, &c. and again, Count not thy handmaid for a daughter of Belial, &c. shee doth not bid him reprove his owne sons, who were drunkards and whoremasters, as a woman of an intemperate spirit would have done, but mildely answereth for her selfe, and telleth him what shee did there, and what caused those motions in her. Here then was a meek spirit indeed, which before the Lord is much set by, and therefore her example would be followed by all others, especially having to doe with superiours. A daughter of belial; what is meant hereby, see Dent. 13. 13. one without a yoke, one unprofitable and that shall not prosper, and such shee confesseth shee should have been, if shee had been drunken, for such are all drunkards, for they are unruly. 2. Unprofitable to themselves and others, daily consuming the blessings of God in riot and wasting their substance. 3. They prosper not in this world, or in the world to come, 1 Cor. 6. 10. as Willet noteth here. Hebr. it is אֵל חַוָּה אִתּוֹ בְּתוּלָה בְּלִיעַל Give not thy handmaid before a daughter of belial; whereupon some thinke, as Peter Martyr hath it, that Peninnah was present, and that shee desired him not to charge her thus before her, calling her a daughter of belial; but he followeth the former sense, because it is not probable that so modest and good a woman would bee so virulent against her greatest adversary; thus also the Vulg. Latin and Iunius render it, before being taken here for, Give her not for, that repute her not for. Of sons of belial, that cast off the yoke of Gods Law, is, see how all sorts of wicked men are set forth hereby, 2 Sam. 22. 5. 2 Chron. 13. 7. Judg. 19. 22. 1 Sam. 2. 12, 17. & 10. 17. & 25. 17. 2 Sam. 16. 7. 1 King. 21. 10. 2 Cor. 6. 15.

was

For Elis praying that her request might bee granted, when hee was by her apology satisfied, his speech may seem to bee propheticall, and so doubtlesse shee conceived of it, in that having heard him say so, she answered, Let thy handmaid finde grace in thy sight; and then went away to that holy Feast, being chearfull and sad no more, Hebr. it is, Thy handmaid shall finde grace in thy sight, that is, to be prayed for by thee, and so I doubt not but to have my desire granted.

The next morning after this they all return home, and Hannah conceiveth and beareth a son, and calleth his name Samuel, but they return not without worshipping first. And touching Hannahs conceiving, it is said, God remembered her, not that hee at any time forgetteth his, but hee is said to remember her, when he did for her that which shee desired, in the very phrase which shee had used in her prayer. And Elkanah is said to have knowne her after their returne home, to intimate that he refrained from companying with her whilst they were at the Feast, not that there is any impurity in the husbands going in to his wife, but that nothing might then take their mindes off from their devotions, as appeareth, 1 Cor. 7. 5. and that they might not contract any outward legall pollution, which then made unfit for those Festivalls, or to come neare the Lord, Exod. 19. 16. although there was never any sinfulness there-in, any more then in touching a dead body, or any issue in the flesh, which also made uncleane. When the time was come about, Hannah conceiveth and bare a sonne, &c. she conceived immediately, but brought forth when the time was come about, that women use to goe with childe; therefore these words, When the time was come about, are placed before the mention of her conception by an Hebraism, as God is said to have dried up the waters, and divided them, when as they were first divided, so Isa. 64. Thou hast been angry with us, and wee have sinned against thee; when as they first sinned, and then God was angry; it is a figure called Hysteron proteron, first the revolution of time is spoken of, and then her conceiving; whereas shee first conceived, and then the time being come about, brought forth; to make which more plaine, our Translation hath it, When the time was come about, after shee had conceived, shee bare a sonne, but Hebr. it is as before. For the name Samuel, Hebr. שְׁמוּאֵל Shemuel, of ש put for שאל to aske, and מ for מִן of, and י him, and אל God, as the reason is commonly rendered, and Hannah her selfe giveth a reason: By this name shee would both put her selfe in minde, and him, that hee was not hers, but the Lords, that accordingly he might serve him, and she might the more willingly part with him for Gods service.

And Elkanah and all his house went up to offer his yearly sacrifice and his vow, that is, not onely as hee used to doe in other yeares, but as Peter Martyr

Note.

Willet.

Peter Martyr.

V. 18.

V. 19, 20.

Peter Martyr.
Exod. 14.

V. 21.

hath it, he brought Eucharisticall sacrifices for the benefit received, in that God had given him a son by Hannah, which he so greatly desired, and happily hee vowed something now to God, although it be not expressed, besides the childe, to shew his thankfulness.

V. 22.

V. 22. But Hannah said, I will not goe up untill the childe bee weaned. This refraining of Hannah to come now up to the Tabernacle, may seeme to bee against the Law, Levit. 12. 6. whereby a woman after puerperity is enjoined, when the dayes of her purification bee ended, to come with a lambe, or two turtle doves or young Pigeons to bee offered for her cleansing, for shee went not till the childe was weaned; and there was a double weaning, saith Lysa, 1st. from the dugges at the end of three years, the other from the milke of childehood, when he beginneth to use other ordinary meats at the end of 10 yeares. And it is not likely saith hee, that shee went up with her childe, till hee was of this age, because hee was not fit, till then to minister or doe any little service in the Tabernacle, so likewise Hugo hee stands for 12. yeares, and Junius hath it, untill hee bee educated, that hee may be able to minister. Peter Comestor saith, either at 7. when the 2. weaning was, or at 12. when the 3. and if at 7. hee was brought to be instructed, if at 12. immediately to minister. The Hebrews thinke, that shee weaned him at 2. yeares old and brought him to the Tabernacle, and this seemeth most probable; because Ch. 2. 19. it is said, shee made him a little coate and brought it to him, when shee came up from yeare to yeare, and because it is incredible that so holy a woman would stay from the house of God, 7. or 10 yeares together; and lastly, because the weaning of Samuel, is expressely said to bee from sucking, v. 23. so that when shee had weaned him from the breasts, shee went up with him. Willet, that followeth the other opinion reasoneth from his ministring immediately after that hee was brought before the Lord, which hee could not doe being so young, and from the trouble that would have beene in the Tabernacle to have any so young there. But although it be said, that hee ministred, when his parents were gone home, it is not necessarily to bee understood that he did so immediately, but so soone as hee was able to doe any service; and for his bringing up, it might well be together with the little ones of other Levites or Priests neare the Tabernacle, without any trouble to it. And Theodore. qu. 5. in 1 Reg. is plainly of this opinion, that he was brought to the tabernacle immediately after weaning from the breast. For he saith, so soone as shee had weaned him, shee offered him to God, and with him a bullocke equal to him in age: and thus much by the way touching the time, when Hannah came up with her son. Now although she stayed but 2 yeares before she came, how did she fulfil the law of comming at the end of 40 dayes? Peter Martyr answereth, happily the childe was weake, and so unfit to be brought any sooner, although the Virgin Mary brought her sonne to the Temple at the due time: and howsoever for many dayes are set, yet it is not to be understood, that the woman was tyed to come just at that time, because shee might be weake, and so unfit for travaile, or her childe sicke. But this was not Hannahs case but another extraordinary reason detained her, viz. Because when she should come, shee meant to leave him at the Lords house for ever, and not to redeeme him with 5 shekels, according to the law, Numb. 18. 15, 16. It is true, ordinarily, a woman was to come with her offering immediately after the dayes of her purification ended, and if any necessary impediment came in the way, so soone after, as it was removed. But Hannah intending when shee came, to offer her sonne to the Lord, and to leave him to his perpetuall service, and to recompence her delay with a farre greater offering, then a lamb, as shee did v. 24. Shee tooke him with three bullockes, an Ephah of flowre and a bottle of Wine, was certainly no delinquent in staying thus long, before shee came, especially seeing the time was not so precisely stood upon for these things touching women and children, as wee may see in that when as by law it was provided, that the first-borne should bee redeemed at a moneth old, and then presented before the Lord, yet commonly it was not so done, but when the mother went up with Lysa.

*Hugo Cardin.
Junius.
Schol. Histor.*

Willet.

*Qu.
Peter Martyr.*

V. 24.

Numb. 18. 16.

with her purifying offering divers dayes after, shee brought her childe with her, as did the Virgin Mary; Tostatus saith, that shee being a Levites wife was not bound to bring an offering for her first-borne, as other women, because the Levites were taken for all the first-borne of Israel; others that she might come to the Tabernacle with her offering, and yet not goe at the Feast time any more, till Samuel was weaned, although it bee not recorded. And it is to bee understood, that although Hannah stayed thus long, before shee came to the Tabernacle, yet it is not to be thought, but that shee frequented the synagogue for her exercise in publique religious duties, that no woman may take example from hence to absent herselfe from Church all the time of her giving sucke. From Ramathaim otherwise called Ramah or Ramah, where Hannah dwelt, to Shiloh was 12. miles, and therefore the childe being so soone as hee was put from the dugges to be brought hither Hannah might well be dispensed with, although shee came not so long a journey, till that time.

Elmah agreeth to this proposition of his wife praying God to establish it, that is, that shee and the childe might live, and that when he should be weaned hee might be brought to the Tabernacle and serve the Lord there all the dayes of his life. From hence Peter Martyr commendeth the like good agreement betwixt man and wife to all married persons, alledging the saying of Aristotle, a maker of a family is a kinde of tyrant to his servant, a King to his children, but for his wife, hee should rule over her by an aristocracy, not according to his owne lust, but according to his dignity, prescribing her nothing touching her distaffe, needle and maides &c. but leaving her herein to her owne will and judgement. In which nothing is to bee mistilied, but that even to servants a Master must not bee a tyrant, but doe unto them that which is equall, for whosoever doth wrong to any, God will bee avenged upon him.

And when shee had weaned him, shee tooke him and 3. bullockes and an Ephah of flowre, and a bottle of wine, and brought him to the house of the Lord in Shiloh, &c. the Vulgar Latin hath it, 3. measures of flowre, but as Hugo confesseth, it is corrupt, it being in Hebrew an Ephah. A question here is moved, seeing v. 25. only one of the Bullockes was offered, wherefore the other two served? Lyra saith, they were given to Eli, to whose care the childe was now committed. Peter Martyr alledgeth two other divers opinions. 1. Of David Kimbi, that the other two were for feasting, because they were wont to make a feast, when they weaned their children. 2. Of R. Levi Ben Gerson, who saith, that they were offered upon two other days of the Feast: but Peter Martyr thinketh, that the first being offered for a burnt-offering, the other two were used for peace-offerings, the greatest parts whereof were to Feast withal: & thus the quantity of flowre agreeth, because an Ephah contains 10. tenth deales, and by the law it was provided, that 3. tenth deales should bee offered for one bullocke, and to three Bullockes then went 9. whereunto the tenth was added ex abundantia, out of liberality. I thinke rather with Lyra, that the other two Bullockes were given to Eli with her sonne, and so much flowre and wine as was spared from the sacrifice of one Bullocke, that is, all but 3. tenth deales of flowre and halfe an hin of wine, according the law, Numb. 28. 13, 14. because it is said expressly of one Bullocke, it was offered, which would doubtlesse have bene spoken of the other two also, if they had bene offered. Moreover it standeth with reason, that shee bringing her sonne so young to Eli should give some gratuity, that he might with the greater care take this charge upon him. I hold then, that the Bullocke offered was no burnt-offering, but a peace-offering, for a benefit obtained, with part of which they feasted, having flowre and wine also with them for that purpose, and the remainder of both was given to the Priest together with the other two Bullockes. Now an Ephah of flowre was a bushell, or thereabouts, and the bottle of Wine by the Vulgar Latin rendred amphora, if it were the least amphora but one, 9. gallons, for amphora is by Hugo said to be 3. modii, and one modius was 3. gallons; and

Luke 2. 24.

H. Bunting Pa-
triar. travails

V. 23.

P. Martyr.

Aristot. lib. 8.
Ethicorum.Col. 4. 1.
Chap. 3. 25.

V. 24.

Hugo Cardin.
Qu.
Lyra.P. Martyr.
D. Kimbi.

R. L. Ben Gerson

Numb. 28. 12.

V. 28.

D. Kimbi.

R. Levi.
Gerson.

Junius.

Peter Martyr.

Willet.

Peter Martyr.
Junius.

The Mystery.

if so, then after one bullock offered and the flowre and wine belonging thereto, there remained to their disposing of flowre 5. gallons & somewhat more, & likewise of wine One Bullocke being sacrificed Hannah goeth to Eli and sheweth him the childe, which she had prayed for, and saith, therefore I have lent him to the Lord, as long as hee liveth, he shall be lent unto the Lord, and be worshipped the Lord there. At her first comming to Eli shee saith, Ob my Lord, as thy soule liveth, I am the woman, &c. the Vulgar Latin, I beseech thee my Lord, let thy soule live, Hebr. בן אדוני, Oh or I beseech thee, Junius, attende Domine, this whole speech is to insinuate into Eli so, as he might the more lovingly receive her childe, and bee as it were a father unto him, wishing him long life, to the end that hee might bring him up, to David Kimbi, but Ben. Gerson takes it for an oath to assure Eli and to move him the more, because shee had before him prayed and hee had dismissed her with his blessings; and this is the more probable. Shee saith shee had lent him to the Lord all the dayes of his life. The words here used answer to those before going in the Hebrew thus, for v. 27. are these words יחז יהוה שאלתי אשר שאלתי, here אנכי השאלתיהו ליהוה כל הימים אשר היה הוא שאל ליהוה The Lord hath given my request, which I asked, and I have rendered or lent him to the Lord all the dayes, that hee shall be asked for the Lord. for the same word, שאל in divers voyces signifyeth both to aske, to give, or render or to lend. Thus also the Vulgar Latin, Junius eum precario datum sisto Jevove omnibus diebus, quibus fuerit precario rogatus. Our translation must needs be acknowledged here not to be so good, both because there is no word signifying all the dayes of his life and the word שאל Schal is never put for lent, but asked; her meaning is, according to Peter Martyr, hee shall serve the Lord in his house as long as he shall require it; which shee spake thus, because shee knew not, how the Lord might afterwards imploy him, as indeed he did Ch. 7. taking him from serving at the Tabernacle to bee Judge over his people, when hee went and dwelt at Ramah again. And hee worshipped the Lord there, the Vulgar Latin, they worshipped, the Hebr. ישתחו which Gen. 47. 31 is used for a verb of the singular number, when it is said, that Jacob worshipped, and as Willet noteth, in the plurall it is ישתחוו: hereupon a question ariseth, who is said to have worshipped? Junius saith, the childe, Peter Martyr, Elkanah, Willet following the Gen. Version, Eli; I thinke with Junius, that Samuel is meant; whereas it may seeme, that it could not be so, because he was too young, I answer, to worship and to serve the Lord is all one, and this it is meant hee did at the Tabernacle, although not at this instant, but there his mother left him and as soone as hee was fit, he served the Lord and worshipped him there. To draw it to Eli is most improper, and forced, because it was no new thing in him to be noted, that he worshipped there, and of Elkanah nothing was spoken before to intimate him to be the man, that was meant, therefore seeing it was an hee, it must needs be Samuel, and so this history is aptly closed up, Samuel was brought to the Tabernacle very young and presented to Eli, who received him, and so he abode there and served and worshipped the Lord, as hee grew fit in a Leviticall office. Elkanah signifying the possession of God, saith Rabanus, mystically setteth forth the ministry, Peninnah and Hannah his two wives two Churches of the Jews and Gentiles, for that of the Jews was first fruitfull, this of the Gentiles barren, but at length shee conceived, and is made glad through a sonne, a Samuel, that is, his name God, as Shem, and Θ and El signify, this is when the Faith of Jesus is entertained into the heart, &c.

CHAP. II.

HERE first Hannahs Canticle of praise is set downe for the benefit received, v. 1, 2, 3. &c. to v. 11. and then the history of Elis sonnes, and of their wickednesse, and how their Father reproveth them, v. 11, 12. &c. to v. 18. and v. 22, 23. &c. to v. 26. there being interlaced something more touching

Samuel

Samuel, Hannah and Elkanah, v. 18, 19. and to v. 22. and v. 26. Lastly, a Prophet is sent to Eli to reprove and threaten judgements against him and his house, v. 27, 28. &c. to the end of the chapter. Touching this thanksgiving of Hannah; it is said, shee prayed, and said, for thanksgiving is a species of prayer, 1 Tim. 2. 1. Wherefore the Pharisee when he gave thanks, is said to pray, and praising of God is of the nature of prayer to procure the flowing down of more blessings upon us, according to that saying of August; decurfus gratiarum a nobis est recurfus gratie ad nos; Ustablus saith that hereby shee commended her sonne Samuel to Gods blessing, and therefore it is said shee prayed; Borrbew saith, that shee prayed herein against the enemies of Gods Church, and Ben Gerson will have the last words in partie. v. 10. a prayer, the adversaries of the Lord shall bee broken in pieces, out of heaven shall bee thunder upon them, &c. as it came to passe, Ch. 7. but that was rather propheticall, then petitory, neither is there any petition in all this holy hymne. For the thanksgiving it hath these parts. 1. Hannah rejoycing. 2. A description of the Lord, v. 2. 3. A reproof of the wicked for their pride and vaine boastings, from which shee dehortheth them, v. 3. 4. A reason, why no man should boast himselfe, because God knoweth and pondereth it; and can easily crush the proudest and lift up the meekest; v. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. 5. A prophesie of comfort to his Saints and of destruction to the wicked, and of the King Christ his Kingdome, v. 9, 10. According to this the Chaldee Paraphrast, and David Kimhi say, that this hymne was a prophesie, wherein Hannah being carryed with the Spirit, 1. In the person of the Church expressed her joy, for that God had given her Samuel, such a sonne as shee foresaw should beat downe idolatry, and uphold the truth. 2. Prophesied of the beating downe of the enemies of the Church, Assyrians and Grecians, Gog and Magog. 3. Of the Kingdome of the Messiah. 4. Of the last judgement, when the Saints shall be taken up to everlasting felicity, and the wicked sent away into endlesse misery. In inditing this song of thanksgiving shee did but as Moses had done before, and Deborah, and after, David and others for great benefits, and the Virgin Mary, whose hymne Peter Martyr noteth to bee much like unto this, as the case of either of them was much alike, because Hannah was barren, and shee was a Virgin, and so not likely to beare a son, and as Hannah hath it, My heart rejoyced in the Lord, so Mary, My soule doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoyced, &c. as shee, there is none holy as the Lord, so Mary, hee that is mighty hath magnified mee, and holy is his name: as shee, tulke no more so proudly, and the hornes are broken, they that are full have hired out themselves for bread, &c. so Mary, hath scattered the proud in the imaginations of their hearts, hee hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich hee hath sent empty away. Now whereas women are forbidden to speake in the Congregation, Willie answereth well, ordinarily they were forbidden, but not when any woman was moved extraordinarily by the Spirit, as Hannah was, and so Hannah under the New Testament, and other women, upon whom was powred out the Spirit of prophesie, according to that, I will powre out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sonnes and daughters shall Prophesie, and Philip had 4 daughters Prophetesses, wherefore as of a man, so it is spoken of a woman prophesying, thus also Peter Martyr.

My heart rejoyceth in the Lord, my borne is exalted, my mouth is enlarged over my enemies. As sorrow maketh one to mourne in silence, so joy causeth one to speake freely in his praise that putteth an end unto his sorrow, and maketh him to rejoyce. In the horne lyeth strength of horned beasts, and therefore it was an usuall phrase amongst the Hebrews, by the exalting of the horne Metaphorically to set forth the conferring of strength, and to Hannah had God now given strength to conceive and bring forth a sonne, thus Peter Martyr; Lyra saith, that by horne is set forth in the Scriptures, the motion of the heart carrying it to any hard thing, and if the rule of right reason be wanting, and of Gods law, it is called the horne of pride, but if it be thus regulated, an exalted horne, because by the benefits received the heart is lifted up through hope of receiving greater benefits of Gods liberality, and thus the horne of Hannah was exalted,

Luke 18. 11.

P. Martyr.

August.

Ustablus.

Borrbew.

R. B. Gerson.

P. Martyr.

Chald. Paraphr.

D. Kimhi.

Exod. 15. Judg.

1.

Peter Martyr.

Willie.

1 Cor. 14.

A. Ra 2.

Peter Martyr.

1 Cor. 11.

V. 1.

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

exalted, shee hoped for the increase of grace here and of glory hereafter. And she faith, my mouth is enlarged over my enemies, because Peninnah and her children were vexed to see her to have this cause of opening her mouth so magnificently to praise the Lord.

V. 2.

D. Kimbi
Ben Gersan.Isa. 6.
Note.

Lyra.

There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none besides thee, nor any rocke like our God; the Vulg. Latine, there is none strong as our God; the Sept. there is none holy as our God: the word is רצ signifying a rock, and metaphorically fortis, and fortitudo, strong, or strength, and so the Rabbins. Hannah here celebrateth the power and might of God, in that hee shewed himselfe able to change her nature, from barren to fruitfull, whereas no secondary cause can doe any thing, but as hee hath appointed, but he can do whatsoever it pleaseth him, neither can any power withstand him. I thinke, that the word strong is aptest here. Shee praiseth God also from his holinesse, as the chiefe of his attributes, whereby the Angels continually praise him; and hence wee learne to bee in love with holinesse, whereby we doe most resemble God. There is none holy as God, saith Lyra, because hee is essentially holy: and the same may bee said of strong. And he is not onely holy and strong beyond all comparison, but besides him there is no God, the Gods of the heathen are not onely not so holy or potent, but indeed are nothing, for there is no more Gods.

V. 3.

D. Kimbi.

Arius Montan.
Junius, Osiand.Vatablus.
Bornaus, Pellican.
P. Martyr.

Take no more so exceeding proudly, neither let arrogancy come out of your mouth: the Vulg. Latine, Do not multiply to speake lofty words, glorying, let old words goe out of your mouth: Hebr. Do not multiply to speake lofty words of pride, let swelling or hardnesse goe out of your mouth, or that which is old: For all these significations, saith Peter Martyr, hath the word פנ, yea פנ saith Pagninus, first and chiefly significeth to waxe old, so that here the Vulg. Latine is to bee preferred. And aptly she faith, doe not multiply, because Peninnah had often upbraided her by her barrennesse, being proud of her owne fruitfulness; and that which is old, because of old shee had thus vexed her, For the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed; for knowledge, Hebr. is knowledge, so likewise the Vulg. Latine, deus scientiarum; David Kimbi saith, hee is thus called, because he is the most intelligent of all others, and knoweth all particular things, for all knowledges without any change in him are inherent in him. For these words, by him actions are weighed, in the Hebrew text is, actions are not weighed, but in the margin it is, by him, or, to him, for ל is in the margin, and נל in the text, wherefore some expound it as negative, rendring the words thus, actions are not directed or disposed, that is, without him, or, against his will; for whatsoever men thinke and intend, they can bring nothing to passe but as hee willeth, so Arius Montanus, Junius, Osiander. Some as affirmative, Vulg. Latine, Septuagint, expounding it either of God, his purposes shall come to passe, or of men, by him the actions of men are ordered, disposed and directed. Peter Martyr taketh it either way, thus: 1 Affirmatively, to him workes are prepared, that is, his enterprises stand firme and are all perfected. 2 Negatively, the attempts of men shall not stand, neither can they hinder his will. Any of these wayes the sense is good, but I preferre the affirmative, both because it followeth most aptly thus, hee is a God of knowledge, by him actions are moderated, and not at your wils, wherefore your proud bragges are vaine, and because the word in the margin commonly is apposed, that the Reader might looke at that and so understand the Text the better, and yet because both are held to come from the Spirit of God, they erre not, that take it either way. These words, for the Lord is a God of knowledge, &c. are a reason, why Peninnah and hers should no more so insult, because they knew not what should come to passe, but God knoweth all things, and how to abate the pride of the insolent, and to exalt the afflicted.

V. 4.
Lyra.

The bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that stumbled are girt with strength, that is, saith Lyra, the bowes of Peninnah and her children, who did shoot reproachfull words at Hannah, as out of a bow; for stumbled, the Vulg. Latine hath, the weak, whereby she meant her selfe, and such as shee was, weak for profligation, but now by Gods blessing she was strengthened to bear fruit, thus thus also Hugo, saying, that by the metaphor of one with a bow, shee being strong in times past to beare was set forth, because a bow belongeth to the strong; and it is to be noted, that Hebr. there is nothing signifying men, but the strong in the plurall number. Peter Martyr understandeth the words properly, expounding them of those that goe to warre well-armed, and of those that are unarmed, as the Egyptians and the Israelites, for the Egyptians bowes were broken, when they were overthrowne, and the Hebrewes fleeing before them naked were strengthened. But it is best, first to bring the words to Hannah's case as neare as may bee, and then to extend them to other acts of Gods power also. For these words, those that stumbled, or the weak, Hebr. is נכסלים such as fall through weaknesse of their knees and loynes. And as Hannah of weak was made strong to beare, so by the former words, the bowes of the mighty are broken, she seemeth to intimate, that Peninnah now ceased bearing children, which is further confirmed, v. 5.

They that were full have hired themselves out for bread, and the hungry ceased; so that the barren hath borne seven, and shee that hath many children is waxed feeble. Here also, saith Lyra, is another metaphor, shee compareth Peninnah to the full, because shee was full of children, for it is thought that shee had ten, according to Chap. 1. 8. but now shee was in the case of those that let themselves for bread, that is, empty and poore enough of children: For the Hebrewes say, that so soone as Hannah had one childe, two of Peninnah's sonnes dyed; and by that time that shee had foure, six more of Peninnah's dyed; and when shee saw her to bee with childe againe, shee fearing the death of those two that remained, besought Hannah to pray for her, and so they were spared; and because they were spared at her prayer, they were thenceforth counted Hannah's children, and so together with her owne five spoken of, v. 21, she had seven, as it here followeth. But this soundeth like a fable of the Rabbins, and therefore Lyra rejecteth it, and that worthily, because at this time Hannah had onely one, Samuel. Againe, Hannah compareth her selfe to the hungry that are filled, for so he readeth it after the Vulg. Latine, because she desired children as an hungry person doth food, but now was satisfied in this matter. For these words, hath borne seven, the Vulg. Latine hath, very many, which Lyra approveth, because it is most according to the sense, seeing it cannot bee justified that shee bare precisely the number of seven, neither by the reckoning of the Rabbins already spoken of, nor yet as others count, five children of her owne, and two of her sonne Samuel's, for this was long after this Canticle, unlesse it shall bee thought, that herein she spake prophetically. Moreover he saith, that the moderne Hebrewes take this word שבע for satiety, shee bare children till shee was fully satisfied. Hugo seemeth to bee affected with the former comment of the Hebrewes, but differeth in this, that hee saith, when Samuel was borne, one of Peninnah's sonne dyed, and so another, and a third unto all her seven children, when shee had borne five, and Samuel two, applying hereunto that, Jerem. 15. Shee was weakened that bare seven sonnes, &c. But before this, hee saith better upon the first words, the full have hired out themselves for bread, that is, Peninnah full of children was empty as a begger, that beggeth his bread, because all hers were counted nothing in comparison of Samuel: the hungry were filled, that is, Hannah, who ate nothing before for sorrow, being in hope of a son eateth and drinketh with joy, Chap. 1. 18. Peter Martyr by the barren bearing seven, understandeth nothing else but many, as the word seven is commonly used for a full number. And to that question, how shee could speake this, before shee had borne many; hee answereth, shee spake by the Spirit. If it be said, shee bare but six, he answereth, six was very many for her being before barren, and therefore the word seven is used to set forth very many. In all which I subscribe unto him, but whereas he draweth the former words altogether another way, viz. to the Gibeonites that hired themselves out for hewers of wood, &c. I cannot but, leaving him, approve rather of Lyra and Hugo, because all things are to bee applied to the present case as much as may bee in the first place, and then for the

Peter Martyr.

V. 5.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Peter Martyr.

Iosh. 9.

the more glorifying of Gods power extended to others. For these words, the hungry have ceased, according to the Hebr. the meaning is, they have ceased to hire out themselves for bread, having now no further need, as being fully satisfied, to doe like the needy and beggerly, and so it is the same in effect with these words, the hungry are filled, in the Vulg. Latine.

V. 6.

Hugo Card.

Invidia Siculi non invenerit tyranni majus ma-len, sed to men-um.

Peter Martyr.

The Lord killeth and maketh alive, hee bringeth to the grave, and bringeth up, that is, saith Lyra, hee bringeth downe to the grave the children of Peninnah; and maketh alive, and bringeth the children of Hannah; for the word שׁוּחַ by the Vulg. Latine rendred hell, it signifieth, saith hee, the grave, from which the Lord did, as it were, bring up Hezekiah before adjudged to death. Hugo applyeth it altogether to Hannah and Peninnah, the one the Lord vivified by giving her children when shee was dead unto conception before, and he brought her up from grievous affliction, metaphorically set forth by hell herethe other hee killed, as it were, and brought downe to hell, by afflicting her through extreme sorrow for the losse of her children, and to see Hannah made fruitfull, for there is not a greater misery then envie. And thus hee saith, these words cohere with the former, they being an explication or reason of them, The barren hath borne seven, and she that was full of children waxed feeble, because the Lord did, as it were, strike her dead with sorrow, and put her to great torment, but Hannah had life, and joy, and gladnesse put into her. Peter Martyr expoundeth this also onely in generall of Gods bringing men sometimes to extreme misery, and then lifting them up with comfort; and through extreme sicknesse to such a passe, as that all men despaire of their life, and then restoring them to health againe, see the same phrase, D. ut. 32. 39. and thus he dealt with Hezekiah and Jonah, and our Lord first died, and then rose againe, and so must wee: and thus it is in our justification, wee must first be cast down in the sight of our sins, and then be erected with comfort through faith in Christ. All which is good, but the prime thing intended is the magnifying of God for his dealings in particular with Hannah and Peninnah, and so although wee have no certaine ground for it, yet it is most probable that Peninnah did not onely cease bearing of children, when Hannah began to be fruitfull, but also suffered the losse of some or most of them. Which may bee a warning to all women, that they bee not proud of their bearing many children, nor insult over any barren Hannah, for God can soone alter the case. Willet here setteth downe foure acceptions of the word שׁוּחַ. 1 It signifieth the grave. 2 By a metaphor, grievous adversity. 3 The state of those that feelee themselves forsaken of God, as Cain and Saul. 4 The state of the damned, but here it is used according to the second, for Hannah lay in sorrow before, as in the grave.

Note.

Willet.

V. 7.

Hugo Car.

V. 8.

R. L. Ben Gerson.

Psal. 113.

The Lord maketh poore, and maketh rich, hee bringeth low and lifteth up. In this verse and the 8. saith Hugo, the same things are againe set forth in other words. He maketh Peninnah poore in children, and Hannah rich in children. Out of the dust hee lifteth up the poore, and the begger out of the dunghill to set him with princes, &c. This is specially meant according to the letter of Hannahs exaltation in Samuel her sonne, who was set upon the Throne of glory, when hee was made Judge over Israel, and anointed Kings; generally of the proud and high, and of the humble and low, and mystically of Christ; so likewise Lyra; and Peter Martyr having expounded it generally, applyeth it in particular to Samuel. And Ben Gerson hence admonisheth the rich not to bee proud, and the poore not to despaire, because God can easily pull downe the one, and raise up the other. For the pillars of the earth are the Lords, and hee hath set the world upon them. Here is the reason rendred, why the Lord can doe this, hee is of infinite power, as appeareth by his laying of the foundations of the world. Lyra distinguisheth both this and the rest of this Canticle, thus, here is the magnification of the Lord: 1 In respect of his power in the act of Creation, the pillars of the earth are the Lords. 2 In respect of his wisdom in the act of governing, v. 9. hee shall keep the feet of his Saints. 3 In respect of his Justice in the act of due punishment, the wicked shall be silent in darknesse, &c. that that is, 1 In the darknesse of sinne. 2 In the darknesse of hell. Hee shall give the kingdom to his King, &c. that is, to Christ, who at the last shall come gloriously in the form of a man, and judge all men, Jah. 5.

The pillars of the earth, saith Peter Martyr, the earth is called, because it is as a foundation whereupon all other things are set, as upon pillars, the aire, and all the heavens, for they all compasse the earth, being set thereupon as upon a foundation.

He will keep the feet of his Saints, and the wicked shall bee silent in darknesse, &c. V. 10. The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken in pieces, out of heaven shall he thunder upon them, the Lord shall judge the ends of the earth, and give strength unto his King, and exalt the borne of his anointed. By footsteps, Peter Martyr well understandeth all kind of actions, studies, and enterprises, which God keepeth, when he guideth them, and prospereth them herein, that feare him; for, his Saints, Hebr. חסידים a word coming from חסן signifying mercy, because God doth embrace them with mercy. Now in saying that hee keepeth their feet, hee meaneth not so, as they shall never fall, but so, as that they shall not fall into perdition. And the means whereby hee keepeth them, are intimated by the antithesis next following, the wicked shall bee silent in darknesse, his saints therefore are kept by the light of the Word and Spirit, for the one availeth not without the other; but the wicked are destitute of all internall light, and so are in darknesse, not onely in respect of their many miseries, but also because their understanding and reason is darkened, and hereby their ruine is caused, and they being judged, shall have their mouths stopped by their owne conscience accusing them, and so goe into everlasting destruction, which is called utter darknesse; where, although they shall howle and cry for torment, yet they shall bee in silence, as Kimhi hath it, in respect of braggings and boastings, whereof they have been full before, some boasting of their nobility, and some of their riches, &c. but now they shall all lye in silence, and not speak a word more of these things. And so this aptly answereth to that v. 3. being a prophesie of Gods bringing downe all the proud and wicked, as hee did Pharaoh, and of his continuall providence over the godly, For by strength shall no man prevaile, that is, when the godly are preserved and comforted, and the wicked confounded, it is not by the power of the one sort, that they attaine to this comfortable condition, nor is there strength in the other sort to resist their judgement, but God in mercy saveth his, and in justice destroyeth the wicked irresistibly. And this the reason, saith R. Levi, why a mighty King is sometime overcome by the weak, because there is no strength in man, but God giveth victories as it pleaseth him.

The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken in pieces; Who are Gods adversaries, saith D. Kimhi, but the enemies of the godly? so likewise Augustine; by vertue of the Covenant betwixt God and his Saints, their enemies are counted his enemies, and wee in like manner must count his enemies our enemies. These shall be destroyed all as a thing broken in pieces, as a potters vessel. And thus shall it be, saith Peter Martyr, with both the Antichrists, the Turke and the Pope. Out of heaven shall hee thunder upon them; this is added to shew their sudden and miraculous destruction. This was according to the letter, fulfilled against the Philistines, 1 Sam. 7. 9, 10. and that it shall not bee the case of the Philistines alone, but of all the wicked in the world, the next words doe declare, The Lord shall judge the ends of the earth, and this shall bee at the last day of judgement, that no man in any corner of the world may think to escape. R. Levi, saith Peter Martyr, expoundeth this of Samuel being Judge of all Israel, but hee rather thinketh according to the letter, that in the next words the time is declared when these things shall bee done, viz. When hee shall give strength to his King, and exalt the borne of his anointed; viz. when hee shall change the government by Judges, into the government of Kings; then both Philistines and all other enemies of Gods people, Amalekites, Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites, &c. shall be so brought downe, as that they shall scarce have any power left them any more. For although by Judges, whom God at divers times raised

Peter Martyr

V. 9.

V. 10.

P. Martyr

D. Kimhi

R. Levi

V. 10.

D. Kimhi

Aug. de Civit.

l. 17. c. 4.

Psal. 2.

P. Martyr

fed up, they were delivered from their enemies, yet they were eſtſooner oppreſſed againe by them; but when David and Solomon reigned, the power of Philiftims, and all other enemies about was cruſhed in pieces. But myſtically by his King and anointed, both hee and all others underſtand Chriſt, who ſhall come one day to judge and to deſtroy all the wicked in all parts and corners of the world; and becauſe that his coming ſhall bee in great power and glory, hee ſaith, Hee ſhall give ſtrength to his King, and exalt the horne of his anointed, and according to this, Zachariab the father of John Baptiſt, ſpeaking of Chriſt, ſaith, Hee hath raiſed up for us the horne of ſalvation, in the houſe of his ſervant David: and to the Meſſiah the Chaldee Paraphraſt alſo applyeth this propheſie, and ſo doe many Rabbins more, that lived before Chriſts Incarnation. Our Lord indeed hath now wonderfull ſtrength, and is highly exalted, but then all his enemies ſhall bee put under his feet, never being able to riſe up againe. Whereas it may ſeeme not to agree to Chriſt, that is here ſaid, Hee ſhall give ſtrength to his King, &c. for Chriſt being God, hath all power and glory, and as hee is Man, hee is by vertue of the union with the Godhead, partaker of the ſame power and glory from the firſt: Lyra anſwereth well, it is true, the man Chriſt had all power from the firſt, authoritative, but not executive, for all things were not actually ſubjected unto him in the time of his humiliation, but after his reſurrexion hee ſaith, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth, then he began to make Kingdomes ſubject to him farre and wide, and at the laſt will ſubdue all men actually, and all things, and then ſhall hee in his humane nature ſhine in glory above the moſt glorious Angels, how much ſoever hee was with out forme or beauty here. Jonathan in his Chaldee Paraphraſt, expoundeth all this Canticle as propheticall, thus: Firſt, knowing by the Spirit, that her ſonne Samuel ſhould bee a Prophet, and doe wonders; and a Judge, and ſave the people from the Philiftims, ſhee ſaid, My ſoule hath exulted in the Lord. Secondly, foreſeeing, that Heman, Samuel's ſons ſon, and his 14 ſons ſhould bee fingers in the houſe of God, ſhee added, My horne is exalted. Thirdly, foreſeeing the captivity of the Arke by the Philiftims, and their being compelled to ſend it back againe with gifts, ſhee ſaid, My mouth is enlarged over my enemies, &c. Fourthly, foreſeeing Sennacheribs great brags againſt the God of Israel, and his Armies and his confuſion, ſhee ſaid, There is none holy as the Lord, there is no God beſides him. Fifthly, foreſeeing Nebuchadnezzars deſtroying of Jeruſalem, and his glorying herein, ſhee added, Speake no more ſo proudly, &c. becauſe the Lord is a God of knowledge, hee knoweth what time to take revenge upon you; as hee did indeed, driving Nebuchadnezzar from his kingdom, and Belſhazzar his grandchild he gave, together with Babylon, into the hands of Darius and Cyrus. And by him thoughts are prepared, that is, theſe things which be hidden from the eyes of men, are foreſeen and determined in his mind. Sixthly, foreſeeing that Antiochus Epiphanes would pollute the Temple by Idolatry, and overthrow Gods ordinances, but that Judas Maccab. and his brethren, who were weak in compariſon of him, ſhould beat him, and purge the Temple, ſhe ſaid, The horns of the mighty are broken, and the weak are girt with ſtrength. Seventhly, foreſeeing the conſpiracy of Haman againſt her people in the dayes of Ahaſueruſh, and Haman's overthrow with his children and adherents, ſhee ſaid, The full have hired themſelves out for bread, and the hungry are ſatisfied; for Haman that was ſo rich and full, fell downe to Hefter, and intreated for his life, and, ſo that it might have been granted, without doubt hee would have been content to have ſtripth himſelfe of all his wealth and honour, and to have become a humble ſervant unto her. Untill the barren hath borne ſeven, and ſhee that had many children waxed feeble; that is, Jeruſalem, which is now as a barren woman, becauſe her children ſince her deſtruction by the Romans, have been caſt out and diſperſed in other Nations, ſhee remaining deſolate; but in the time of the Meſſiah ſhee ſhall bee rebuilt and replenished againe, and then all Nations ſhall bee ſubjected to the Jewes, and the Roman Empire utterly waſted and brought to nothing; and in like manner hee expoundeth the next words, The Lord killeth and maketh alive, &c. hee brought the Jewes downe to

Matth. 24. 30

Luke 1. 69.
Chald. Paraphr.Pſalm 110. 1.
1 Cor. 15. 25.

Lyra.

Matthew 28.

Eſay 53. 1.
R. Jonathas.1 Chron. 25.
1 Sam. 6.

2 Kings 19.

2 Kings 25.

1 Maccab. 1.
1 Maccab. 4.

Hefter.

to death and to the grave, but quickened them againe by the Messiah, thus advancing him out of the dust to the throne of glory: He shall keep the feet of his Saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darknesse; that is, he shall keep the Jewes, that they fall not into the darknesse of sin, and after into hell, but the Gentiles shall bee destroyed, yea, he shall judge all the ends of the earth at the last, and the horne of the King Messiah shall bee most highly exalted; thus he. But hereby, saith Lyra, it appeareth, that their expected Messiah is the Antichrist, because when hee commeth, the Roman Empire shall goe downe according to 2 Thess. 2. 8. For my part, I doe not mislike the conceit of the Rabbins, but onely whereas he fed himselfe with an hope of a Messiah yet to come in the flesh, and drew the prophetie to that, we may understand it of his coming in power to convert the Jewes, and to bring them back to their own Kingdome with great joy, at what time the barren Church of the Jewes shall bring forth children abundantly; and the Roman Empire that was full of children before, both for the Emperor sometime reigning there, and for the Pope deceiving and drawing to him the Nations round about, shall be made desolate: and of his coming to judgement, when all the wicked shall bee destroyed, and the godly saved everlastingly; for when all this is done, the horn of his Christ is indeed most highly exalted. But if it bee according to Jonathans taken as prophetically, it must first have some verity in it, being understood according to the present case of Hannah, and of Samuel and David following soone after, and then understood also as pointing moreover prophetically at those particulars.

Now the sonnes of Eli were sonnes of Belial, they knew not the Lord, &c. Before this it is said, That Elkanah went to his house to Ramah, which was before called Ramatbaim, but Samuel ministered to the Lord before Eli, which is to be understood, not immediately after Elkanah's departure, for hee was then too young, but so soone as hee was growne fit and able to doe some little service about the Tabernacle in setting up Lights, and attending upon Eli: And more particularly, as some thinke, hee being now full seven yeares old, and therefore hee is now called vy and this was the eighth yeare of Eli's High priesthood. Now that of Samuel is inserted here before the mention made of the wickednesse of Eli's sons, how hee ministered to the Lord, that the fault of Eli's sons might appeare the more foule; for contraries, saith Lyra, being set together, are made the more manifest. And hereby it appeareth that Elkanah was of the tribe of Levi, because otherwise his son could not have served in the Tabernacle. For the name whereby the sonnes of Eli are called, viz. sonnes of Belial, enough hath been said already upon Chap. 1. 16. and they are said not to have knowne the Lord, because they denied him in their doings; or in thus saying, it is shewed, how they were sons of belial, that is, without a yoke, because they had cast off the yoke of Gods ordinances and lawes, as if they had not knowne them, taking a contrary course of their owne devising about his sacrifices, and in the manner of their living, as the next words doe declare. Peter Martyr thinketh that they are truly said not to have knowne the Lord, because they studied not his Word, whereby alone God may be truly known: so Kimbi saith, they knew not the Divine right, and the true laws of the holy Ministry, wherefore they devised for themselves another right, and excogitated a new way of doing. The Chaldee Paraphrast rendreth it, They were destitute of the feare of the Lord; and Peter Martyr himselfe at the first concurrerth with my exposition beforegoing, they knew not the Lord, that is, they did and lived, as if they knew him not; and if they were ignorant of the rights prescribed by the Lord concerning their office, nothing could bee spoken more shamefull of Priests. But because it was knowne even to the common sort of people, how they ought to have proceeded, as appeareth, v. 16. I cannot thinke that they erred thus, because they knew not, but because they regarded not Gods ordinance, so profane or Atheisticall were they.

The Priests custome towards the people was, when any man brought a sacrifice, their servant came with a flesh-hooke with 3 teeth in his hand, whilst the flesh was

Lyra.

V. 12.

V. 11.

Lyra.

Contraria iuxta se invicem posita magis elucescent.

Peter Martyr.

Chaldee Paraphr.

V. 13, 14.

V. 15.

Vatablus, Iu-ns, Borrbens.

P. Martyr.

R. Levi Ben Gerson.

V. 17.

Lyra.

in seebing, &c. 15. also before they burnt the fat, their servant came to him that sacrificed and said, Give flesh to the Priest to roast, for hee will not have sodden flesh but raw, &c. The finnes of Elies sonnes about the sacrifices are set forth here to be three. 1. In that whereas the right shoulder and breast onely of the peace-offerings, were allotted to the Priest, Levit. 7. 31. they tooke more, even whatsoever the flesh-hooke brought up out of the pot, kettle or caldron, which was sacrilege. 2. In that they would serve themselves before the Lord, to whom the fat was first to be burned, and then the Priest was to have his part, which was great presumption, neither would they have it sodden, but raw, that it might be dressed to their liking, which was gulosity. 3. In that they stayed not to take it at the offerers hands, but extorted it by violence, which was rapine, as Vatablus, Juvius, and Borrbens have noted. And this their sinne will appeare to be the greater if we consider, what a large portion was allotted unto them out of the sacrifices. If a sacrifice were brought for sin by any private person, all but the fat, was the Priests; indeed if it were for the sins of the Priest, or of the whole Congregation, it was wholly to be burnt without the campe: Of a sacrifice of peace-offerings there was a threefold division, part was to be burned upon the Altar, part went to the offerer to feast withall before the tabernacle, and part to the Priests, viz. as the Hebrews note, so me of every principall part, of the trunke or body the breast, of the members the right shoulder, and of the head the two cheekes. Wherefore they being so largely provided for, it was a foulesin in the sonnes of Eli to take more, in any sacrifice. Again they sinned no lesse in taking it, before the fat was burned to the Lord: for the Altar, was as it were, the Lords Table, now they would not stay til his part was offered, but serve themselves first, as if servants should presumptuously take their owne dinner before they had served in their masters; and seeing the offering of part first was a sanctifying of the whole, they inverting this order fed not, as they ought to have done upon holy meate, but upon prophane and common: thus P. Martyr and B. Gerson. Hugo Card. saith, that the custome was so soone as the Beast was fleaed, to take the fat and burne it on the Altar, and then presenting the flesh there to take all the parts away againe and boyle them, lastly the shoulder, breast, &c. being boyled were given to the Priests; but now they contrariwise took their parts away first raw, then offered the fat and came with a fleshhook to get what they could more, when the offerers parts were in boyling, so that they sinned all the five finnes that are in gluttony. Preproperè, laute, nimis, ardentè, studiose. 1. Because they would have it, before the fat was burnt. 2. Raw. 3. They sent with a fleshhook. 4. This their foule desired. 5. They tooke it by force. Moreover, as Martyr hath it, this may seem to be a light sin, because it was but about meat for the belly, but sinne is not to be measured thus, but by the command of God, which to transgresse in any thing is intolerable, as we may see in our first parents. And unto these finnes they added the sinne of adultery, so that there being 4 cardinall vertues, as the Philosopher speaketh, Wisedome, Justice, Fortitude and Temperance, they sinned against them all, because they were ignorant of Gods Ordinances, and had need, that the people should put them in minde thereof, v. 16. they were most unjust, and fortitude degenerated into daintines about their diet; and against temperance they sinned, in that they refrained not from their neighbours wives, no not in the time, when they came up to the Tabernacle for devotion. And the like finnes, saith hee, reigned amongst the Cardinalls of Rome. And this made men to abhorre the offering of the Lord. Their finnes about the holy things redounded, 1. To the ignominy of Gods sacrifices, and consequently of God. 2. To the great hurt of the people, who because of these abuses would not many of them bring any more offerings, as the abuse of the Sacrament amongst the papists depriving the people of the wine maketh many that feare God, to refraine from communicating with them. In concluding this of their finnes it is said the sinne of the young men was very great, Hebr. חַטֹּאתַיִם of the children, so likewise the Vulgar Latin, peccatum puerorum, which Lyra expoundeth thus, they were called children, as Samuel is called a childe, v. 18. not in age, but in conditions, although hee were yet but a childe in yeares, and and his ministring before the Lord then is againe remembred to condemne them the more, and to commend him, in that such a childe attended better upon the service of God in his place, and lived better then they, who were men and fathers happily of children, 1 Sam. 4. 19.

For Samuel's ministring before the Lord in his childhood somewhat hath beene already said, v. 11. but here it is further added, girded with a linnen Ephod: of an Ephod wee read for the High-Priest, Exod. 28. 6. but that was made of gold, blew purple and skarlet, this of Samuel was such, saith Lyra, as the Levites used in their ministry, made onely of linnen; and of linnen Ephods worne by the Priests, wee read 1 Sam. 22. 18. and David is said to have danced before the Arke in a linnen Ephod, so that when any came to minister before the Lord in any kinde, it seemeth, that they used linnen Ephods; and white garments are spoken of as garments used to expresse joy, Eccles. 9. 8. So that, as Willet noteth, there were three kinds of Ephods, 1. of the High-Priest, 2. of the Priests and Levites, which were holy, 3. a civill garment of the same fashion worne sometimes by others being about sacred duties. Theod. qu. 8. saith, that for the excellent grace appearing in him & the hopes conceived of him, Eli imparted unto him this honor. Iofatuz, because no mention is made of an Ephod for Levites, thinketh it to have bin a lay mans-garment.

Moreover his mother made him a little coat and brought it up to him from yeare to yeare, &c. That is, to be worne under his Ephod at Feastivall times, saith Peter Martyr; whereas Kimhi holdeth, that shee carryed it away againe and brought the same from yeare to yeare, hee rejecteth that, because when hee grew to a greater stature, it would have beene too little for his use. This is written to shew the motherly care of Hannah over her sonne Samuel, although shee had given him away, yet shee ceased not to provide somewhat for him from time to time. And this her piety was well approved by Eli, and her diligent resorting to the Tabernacle, in so much that he blessed her and her husband, and God gave her five children more, whereby we may see, that there is nothing lost, but much gotten by giving to the Lord.

Now Eli was very old and beard of all that his sonnes did to all Israel, and how they lay with the women, that assembled at the doore of the Tabernacle, &c. These women, saith Lyra, were such as came to the Tabernacle after the time of their purification ended, according to the law, Levit. 12. so likewise Hugo, but he saith, that some hold, that they did not lye with them, but for money gave leave to their husbands to lye with them, before their purification, because it is said, they made the Lords people to transgresse, so Jerom. Ben Gerson saith, that Eli's sonnes lay not with them, but deferred to offer their offerings, when they brought them, so that they were sometimes constrained to lye abroad before the Tabernacle all night. Because if they had sinned by adultery, Eli their father would have spoken of it, when he reprov'd them, or the man of God, when hee came to taxe Eli for their wickednesse, which neither of them doth, but onely of their abuses about the sacrifices of the Lord. But the Text is plaine, as Peter Martyr hath it, they lay with them, and the verb is masculine, therefore these are but vaine imaginations. Eli being old and dim-sighted, so as that hee could not see, they waxed bold to commit these horrible wickednesses. In setting forth these womens assembling to the doore of the Tabernacle, Hebr. the word העבירות is used being taken from the marching of souldiers, because, as David Kimhi hath it, the custome was, that they who came to be purified, should come together in companies, like troopes. Of souldiers of women assembling to the doore of the Tabernacle, read Exod. 38. 8. many of which came for devotion, as Hannah Luke 2. and did, as it were, militare deo as the Levites, touching whom this word is also used, Numb. 4. 3. and this aggravateth the sinnes of Eli's sonnes, in that they committed this wickednesse with such holy women and neare so holy place, being nothing moved with the reverence thereof, or of him that dwelt there.

And hee said unto them, Why doe yee such things, &c. Hee being High-Priest and Judge should have punished them according to their sinnes, but hee onely re-

V. 18.

2 Sam. 6. 14.

Willet.

V. 19.

Peter Martyr.

V. 20, 21.

V. 22.

Lyra.

V. 24.

Hieronymus, de tradit. Hebr.
Ben Gerson.

P. Martyr.

Barbani.

V. 23.

1 Tim. 3.
Hieron. lib. 1.
contra Iovin.
Quia corripuit filios derelictos patris propter obscurationem fidei, damnavit eum.

V. 24.

Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.

P. Martyr.

V. 25.

Lyra.

Math. 12.

P. Martyr.

1 Ioh. 1. 6.

Pellican.

proved them, whence it came to passe, that they still went on in their finnes and were nothing amended, and thus Eli also became guilty of their wickedness. And because it is supposed, that when the children are wicked and out of order, there is fault in the father, the Apostle forbiddeth him to be made a Bishop, that hath not his children in subjection with all chastity, and Jerom saith, that hee whose children live unchastly, cannot be a Bishop, saith Peter Martyr. Eli corrected his sonnes with the lenity of a father, not with the authority of an High-Priest, and because hee was bound to correct them thus, he was punished not onely for their iniquity, but also for his owne, as Jerom hath it.

To make the Lords people to transgresse, that is, discouraging them by your abuses from bringing sacrifices, as they ought to doe, so Lyra, but Hugo erroneously, because yee make them goe in to their wives, before their purification: for it was in the matter of sacrifice, as also Peter Martyr saith. If one man sinne against another, the Judge shall judge him, but if hee sinne against the Lord, who shall plead for him? Here Eli aggravateth the finnes of his sonnes, in that hee sheweth them not to be against the second table and man, but against the first and so immediately against God, for any abuse in the service of God is against God. For the meaning of these words, Lyra saith, placari ei deum potest, God may be pacified towards him by prayer and sacrifice, in this reading following the Vulgar Latin, but if he sinneth against God, what meanes of pacification are now left? not that it is impossible, that he should be forgiven, but most difficult, as it is said of him that sinneth against the Holy Ghost, hee shall never be forgiven. But this was absolutely spoken, and therefore it is ill brought for a parallel to this by Lyra. Peter Martyr first setting downe the exposition of the Hebrewes, the Judge determineth commonly of trespasses, done by one man against another, and so they come againe, after great fallings out, to be reconciled to one another: but if the trespass be against the Judge himselfe, hee being both the party offended and Judge, the offender can expect nothing but severe punishment from him, and likewise from God the Judge of all, if he committeth sinne against him immediately: for when one man sinneth against another, God is also offended and sinne is committed against him, because his law is transgressed, but that which is immediately done against God, onely is here said to be against God, and the other kinde against man. After this of the Hebrewes hee bringeth his owne, which is this: if a sinne be committed against man there are sacrifices, whereby it may be expiated, but when the sacrifices themselves are corrupted, there are no meanes now left to expiate such a sinne. And this I take to be most genuine. For whereas in our translation it is read, the Judge shall judge him, Hebr. it is ופללו אליוהים God shall be entreated for him, and the next word rendred, plead or crave for him, is the same verb, and because craving of pardon and obtaining it was by sacrifice, it is well expounded, his sinne may be expiated by sacrifice, but sith the corrupting of sacrifices was a most hainous kinde of sinning against God, it is said on the contrary side, touching this sinne, if a man sinne against God, who shall plead, or make atonement for him? the meanes of atonement being thus perverted and taken away, it cannot be. And although אליוהים be sometime rendred Judges in other places, yet there is no reason here to goe from the proper signification, especially it being a plurall and joyned with a verb of the singular number, as it never is, when men Judges are set forth hereby. Yet I doe not thinke, that every sinne about sacrificing, although it were very great, was such, as that no meanes now could be used for the expiating thereof, for the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sinne, and even for errors about holy things there were sacrifices. Indeed hee that had no grace to repent, after grosse sinning, but went obstinately on still in sinne, for his sinne there was no expiation, not because it was unpardonable, but because his heart was incapable of repentance, so Pellican, and this was the case of these young men, which made their father to speake thus unto them, as the next words shew. Notwithstanding

standing they hearkened not to the voyce of their father because the Lord would slay them. And of any that sinne presumptuously it may also truly be said, who shall entreate for them? for their case is even almost desperate, because such doe hardly ever repent, neither will their obdurate hearts admit of grace at any time to repent. Thus wee see, how Eli was severe enough in words towards his wicked sonnes, but forsomuch, as hee did nothing against them, in expelling them from the Priests office, and cutting them off, as they that sinned presumptuously ought to be dealt withall, neither did hee rip up their sinnes in particular, or charge them herewith, as certainly perpetrated by them, and as utterly distastd by himselfe, (for he said onely, I heare ill of you by all the people, as if he went onely upon hearsay and were put on by the people thus to checke them) hee made himselfe guilty of their wickednesse, as Peter Martyr noteth, who also addeth, that Chrysost. saith, hee should have abdicated them, and put such impudent knaves quite from the Priest-hood: so Marcion having iturated a certaine maid was expelled from the Church by his father, a godly Bishop. But happily Eli refrained from thus doing, lest the High-priest-hood should by this meanes goe from his family, but that, which hee thus fought to avoid, hee brought upon his family, as hereafter followeth. Now because it is said the Lord would slay them, a question is moved, How this could bee, seeing hee willeth not the death of a sinner? Answer. Hee willeth it not indeede, as the cause hereof, but as a just Judge, they being obstinate and incorrigible sinners hee would for a punishment of so great wickednesse destroy them, hee willed not their destruction directly, but by consequence, because hee would doe justice upon such sinners, to which effect Lyra. Or the word because noteth the signe, not the cause, saith Hugo, as in saying of that woman, a sinner, Luke 7. Because shee hath loved much many sinnes are forgiven her, it is not meant, that her love was the cause of this forgivenesse, but the signe. Peter Martyr saith, 1. That Ezek. 18. it is spoken of penitent sinners, here of obstinate. 2. According to August, as Lyra had it before, hee willeth not the death of a sinner simply, but per voluntatem retribuentem, as he cannot but in justice thus punish the impenitent sinner. Some referre it to his eternall decree of reprobation, which is the first cause of the perdition of the wicked, and the second is their owne obstinacy in sinning, but so his will must come in as a cause of this obstinacy and destruction, whereas hee decreeth to reprobate onely upon the fore-sight of their finall impenitency arising out of their owne corruption, and want of grace. The best is to hold, that for their impudent and abominable sinning the Lord would lay this spirituall judgement upon them, viz. the withdrawing of his grace, so as that they regarding no admonition should at length receive their just reward, destruction by a violent death here, and after that perdition for ever in hell fire: so Junius. Of giving men over in judgement to hardnesse of heart, see more in my notes upon Rom 9.

And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with the Lord and men. Of his growing before the Lord, see v. 21. now this is added for further explication, that by his growing when hee ministred before the Lord is meant not onely his increasing in stature, but in vertue and grace, which made him amiable to God and to all good men, as contrariwise Elies sonnes were abominable to all. And this praise of Samuel is so often inserted that their abomination might appeare to be the greater.

And there came a man of God unto Eli and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Did I plainly appeare unto the house of thy father in Egypt &c. And did I choose him out of all the Tribes of Israel to bee my Priest, &c. wherefore kick yee at my sacrifice? &c. Who this man of God was is not expresse, and therefore, as Lyra saith, divers conjecture diversly, some that it was Phinees, and some that it was Elias, but neither truly, for Phinees lived 350 yeares before, and Elias 208 yeares after; some, that it was an Angel, and some Elkanah, the father of Samuel. But leaving all these, as meere conjectures, as Peter Martyr doth, because the Scripture saith nothing in particular, who this man was, I determin, that hee was some man

Peter Martyr.

Ezekiel 18.

Lyra.
Hugo Card.

Peter Martyr.

Borham.
Pellican.

Junius. Oflander

V. 26.

V. 27.
V. 28.

Lyra.

P. Martyr.

man extraordinarily stirred up, and indued with the spirit of prophesie to rebuke and denounce judgements against Eli and his family, as those most corrupt times required, but his name is unknowne: yet Junius saith, it was Samuel, whose calling to speake thus to Eli is set downe, Ch. 3. per vs epaon; and Willet maintaineth this, 1. Because there was no Prophet in those dayes else, as the Chaldee upon Ch. 3. 1. 2. v. 12. there is a reference to this. 3. Because Samuel feared to tell Eli thus much, which argueth that it was not told him before: so likewise Iosephus, Antiq. lib. cap. 11. That hee was a Prophet, the phrase, a man of God declareth, because Prophets peculiarly were thus called, and therefore hee speaketh as a Prophet, thus saith the Lord. The Hebrewes say, that the prophesying of Eli now failing because of his great age, another Prophet was sent unto him, as though age could make a man unfit for to prophesie, or a Prophet might in no case be reproved by a Prophet, when as David a Prophet was reproved by Nathan, and the Prophet that spake against Jeroboam having disobeyed, was threatened by the old Prophet, that seduced him. Wee may note, that even the High-Priest is subject to reproof for his sinnes, as Aaron also was before sharply reproved by Moses, and Peter afterwards by Paul: whereby wee may see, how great the pride of the Pope of Rome is, that hee will be subject to the reproof of no man, but of God onely; so Symmachus once decreed, and the Popes flatterers say the same at this day. For the speech made by this Prophet to Eli; 1. Hee commemorateth the benefits and favours of God towards Eli's Progenitors, in that hee chose Aaron in Egypt, when hee was bondslave, to bee his High-Priest, to come neare unto him with sacrifice, incense and the Ephod, and provided liberally for his maintenance by giving him all the offerings of the children of Israel. 2. Hee upbraideth him by his ingratitude, in that having so much for his maintenance given unto him, and being so greatly honoured of God he againe dishonoured him so much about his sacrifice. 3. He threatneth him and his whole family with great misery to come.

For the first, this appearing to the house of his father, was according to Lyra, Exod. 4. 27. when God spake unto Aaron and bade him goe and joine with Moses his brother, for then say the Hebrews, hee told him, that hee should bee High-Priest, although it be not there expressed; and they hold before this, that hee was a Prophet and prophesied in Egypt, and reproved the Hebrews for their idolatry there, and that one of his Sermons was recorded by Ezekiel, so Peter Martyr. Very anciently therefore did God grace the house of which Eli came, by conferring the Priesthood upon it, the duties whereof here remembred were, 1. To offer sacrifice. 2. To burne incense to God upon the Altar of incense. 3. To weare the glorious Ephod with the Urim and Thummin, of which see Levit. 8. and therein to minister in the Sanctuary. The maintenance allowed to the Priests was all the oblations brought by the people, see Numb. 18. which was a very liberall maintenance, whereupon both the High-Priest and the rest of the Priests might have lived plentifully and honourably.

For his ingratitude. v. 26 Why kicke yee against my sacrifices, &c. and honourst thy sonnes above mee, &c. Hee spake thus unto him, because they did, as it were, tread Gods Ordinances touching the order about sacrifices under their feet, vilipending them, and preferring a new order of their owne devising to satisfy the better both their covetous and epicurish mindes; and because Eli ate of the meat also, as is most probable, thus disorderly taken and roasted, hee is joyned with his sonnes in the offence, why kick yee, &c. And because neither for this, nor for their foule adulteries hee punished them, as he ought to have done, hee is challenged to have honoured his sonnes above God, who had so much honoured him, and his fathers house, which was the highest degree of ingratitude that could be.

For his threatening. v. 30. I said surely that thy house and the house of thy fathers should walke before mee for ever, the Vulgar Latin, should minister before mee for ever, more expressing the meaning that they should execute the Priests office and Ben Gerson.

1 Kings 13.

Note.
Exod. 32.
Gal. 2. 11.

1.
Lyra.

2.
V. 29.

2.
V. 30.

and abide in that high dignity alwayes, but now saith the Lord, farre bee it from mee, &c. A question is here, when this promise was made to Eli and to his fathers house, because wee read of none in particular? Answer. Some say, that Aaron having two sonnes, Eleazar and Ithamar, when there was so great corruption in Israel, by idolatry and all manner of licentiousnesse, of which wee read Judg. 19. 20. &c. Eleazars house was put from the High-Priesthood, and it was translated to the house of Ithamar, because that family had beene negligent and remisse in withstanding such abominable wickednesses, and the family of Ithamar acquiting it self better, God made this promise, although it be no where expresse, till now. Others because no such promise is expresse in any place, but onely to Aaron and to his house, Exod. 28. 43. and Cb. 29. 9. that they should bee Priests unto God by a perpetuall decree, and the other is but a tradition of the Hebrews, some hold, that nothing else is meant here, but that Eli and his posterity being of the Priests that came of Aaron, should have continued so alwayes, as those that came of Eleazar Aarons eldest sonne, but now one part of his posterity should be cut off in them, for their great wickednesse, so as that they should not bee in so holy and honourable an office any more. For to Phinees the sonne of Eleazar, the High Priesthood was promised for ever, Numb. 25. 12, 13. and therefore it could not after this be promised to Ithamars family: thus Junius, and after him Willst. But I subscribe rather to the other, because the Lord saith, I will raise mee up a Priest, not Priests, that is, an High-Priest, and hee shall walke before mine anointed alwayes, that is, in the dayes of the King, whom I will set up, this shall be done, as it was in 1 Kings 2. 35. when Zadok was made High-Priest, and Abiathar was put downe; for in the time of Saul, Abijah, the sonne of Abinuh, brother to Icbabod was High-Priest still, and hee was of the posterity of Eli. And it is not said that Elies Posterity should bee quite cut off, but that none should live to bee an old man, and that they should bee poore, and humbly crave of the High-Priest to bee admitted to execute the Priests office for bread. v. 35, 36. Yet I confesse, that when I looke into the genealogies of the sonnes of Aaron, and finde none to have come of Ithamar, but onely of Eleazar, I can see no reason, why it should bee so, but that Ithamars sonnes failed not long after this judgement denounced, or if any survived, they were in Solomons time rejected, as unworthy of the Priests office for ever, unlesse they were after so poore and despicable inferior Priests, that they were past over in silence, as if they had not beene; see more v. 33. And hitherto of the first question, another is made, How the Lord saith, now it shall not be so, whether there be any variableness with God, and if there be not, as indeed there is not, how it is said here, I was thus determined, but now it shall be otherwise. Answer. When God promiseth any good to any particular persons, a condition is alwayes to be understood, if they be obedient unto him, and contrariwise for his threatening, see Jerem. 18. 7, 8. &c. So the promise of God to Eli and the house of his father was to be understood with a condition, so Peter Martyr. There is the like condition of the promise of life and salvation to all the faithfull, they must persevere in faith and obedience to the end: but they that are of the election, shall bee so kept by the Spirit given unto them, that they shall either not fall, or if they fall, rise againe by repentance and be undoubtedly saved, as the election of the seede of Abraham can never be frustrated, notwithstanding their long falling off. For those that honour mee I will honour, &c. that is, say the Hebrews, because Phinees the sonne of Eleazar honoured mee with all his might, I will honour his family and advance it againe, but Eli & his family, because they have despised mee, shall come into contempt. But the thesis is generally true in all men, as Peter Martyr saith, and to honour God is, 1 by being zealous for his glory, and not incurring any thing against it, 2 to live godlily, 3 to hearken to the voyce of wisdom, 4 to give credit unto God, as Abraham did &c.

Behold the dayes come, that I will cut off thine arme, &c. By arme, saith Lyra, understand the power and authority of the High-Priesthood, which was cut off

Qu.

Peter Martyr,
Lyra, Hebrai,
Osiand Borthens.Junius Willst.

1 Sam. 14. 3.

1 Chron. 6.

Qu.

Iam. 1. 17.

Peter Martyr.

Rom. 11.

V. 31.
Lyra.

1 Kings 2.35.

Peter Martyr.

V.32.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Junius.

Willet.

off 80 yeares after by Solomon, when Abiathar, that came of Eli, was removed, and Zadok set up, who came of Eleazar. For from this time to that were 40 yeares of Samuel and Saul, and 40 of David. Comestor addeth that his arme is spoken of also, because the right arme of the sacrifice belonged to the Priest. Moreover by his arme, that should be cut off, is meant the cutting off of his children in the midst of their age, as Hophni and Phinees, his two sonnes, and therefore it is added, there shall not be an old man in thy house, so likewise v. 32. This, saith Peter Martyr, is by some expounded as not meant of their age, but wisdom, they should be children in wisdom, and so incapable of any high dignity: but hee preferreth the literall meaning, either they should be cut off by a violent death, as many of them were, 1 Sam. 22. by Saul, or pine away and so dye for sorrow, to see Eleazar's family so preferred, and themselves despised, see for proof of this vers. 33. Ofander thinketh, that it was meant, they should all dye, before that they attained to the age of 30. and so before they could be admitted into a Priest Office. Now this punishment was first denounced, and long after inflicted, that Eli yet living might be more affected with his sinne unto repentance, and that his posterity might have space of repentance, but not being amended the more justly be thus judged. To shew, that they should pine away for sorrow, it is added, v. 32. Thou shalt see thine adversary in the habitation, in all the wealth, that God shall give Israel, &c. the Vulgar Latin, in the Temple in all the prosperity of Israel, that is, saith Lyra, thou shalt see the posterity of Eleazar in high honour in the Temple, which Solomon shall build in the most flourishing time of the people of Israel, and so when the greatest multitude of sacrifices shall be brought unto the Temple, and the Priests shall be most liberally provided for, this being a corrasive to thy heart to thinke of thy being cut off from so great an happinesse. Some, saith Comestor, hold, that it was meant, that the Priesthood should be translated from Aarons posterity to Samuel, but falsely, seeing Samuel was never a Priest, and the Aaronites continued Priests till the captivity of Babylon. If it be demanded, how it could be said, that Eli should see it, so much as hee lived not to that time; hee answereth, it is not meant precisely of his person, but of those that came of him, thou in thy posterity shalt see, &c. To the same effect Peter Martyr, the two families, that came of Aaron, were as two wives, whereof one is counted the others adversary, and the felicity of the one is a pining and vexation to the other. Even as the families springing from the same King, as the house of York and Lancaster. Junius rendering the words in a diverse manner thus, For after that thou shalt behold the straights of my habitation, for all that wherein God would have done good to Israel, expoundeth them of the straight by the taking of the Arke by the Philistines, Ch. 4. which should not have beene, but contrariwise good should have beene done to Israel, if hee and his children had administrated their Priests Office rightly: but now after that hee had scene this to his great grief hee should dye, and after him there should be no old man of his family for ever, but every one should from time to time dye in the midst of his strength. And this exposition is justified by Willet, because of Eleazar's family comming to the High-priesthood in stead of Elies, it is spoken, v. 35. but the word אויב doth most properly signify an adversary, as it was used before, Ch. 1. 6. in speaking of Peninnah Hannah's adversary, and the next words are verbatim, in all the good, that hee shall doe for Israel, so that the exposition first brought doth best agree, for it is not an adversary in Gods house to the prejudice of the good of Israel, that is here spoken of, such as the Philistines was, but Elies adversary sitting as chiefe ruler here in the best and most prosperous times. In the Hebrew there is neither thy enemy, nor my habitation, but אויב מנוח, an enemy, an habitation or house, so that it may be read, thy enemy having an house, &c. that is, a sure house, according to v. 35. Whereas that verse is objected, as making against this exposition, because there one is spoken of to be set up in the roome of Eli, I answer, this doth not hinder, but that hee may be spoken of here also, but here more obscurely, there more plainly, it being further further exprest what good should bee done to Israel, and when, viz. in the time of Gods anointed Solomon, who should build a glorious Temple, and enrich the kingdom.

And this shall bee a signe unto thee, that shall come upon thy two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, in one day they shall both dye. Before this having said, that there should not bee an old man of his house; And v. 33. The man of thine that I shall not cut off from mine Altar, shall bee to consume thine eyes, and to grieve thy heart, &c. that is, although my meaning is not to cut off every one of thy posterity from the Priestly office, yet hee that surviveth, shall live in such poverty and misery, and bee so macerated through envy to see his adversary to highly preferred, and himselfe so debased, as that his life shall bee but for his greater punishment, for his owne terrour, and example to others, as Cains life was: so that here againe by thine eyes, and thy heart, wee are to understand the eyes and the heart not of Eli in person, but of his race, thus Lyra. And more particularly wee may understand by the man surviving Abiathar, who escaped when Saul slew al the rest, but his escape was but to endure more vexation and misery, when he saw Zadok preferred to the High-priesthood, himself being put down; so Will.

For the signe here given, it was, that when part of the judgement threatned should come to passe, the rest, which was to come after, might bee the more confirmed, as by the untimely death of his two sons to come very shortly, hee might bee well assured when this was done, that all the rest to come many yeares after, should bee accomplished also. Now false Prophets have given signes, as well as true, Deut. 13. but there have alwayes been these differences; 1 They have sometimes followed, sometimes not, these alwayes without faile. 2 They were ambiguously propounded, these plainly. 3 They tended to idolatry and superstition, these to the glory of God; so P. Martyr.

And I will raise mee up a faithfull Priest, &c. and hee shall walke before mine anointed for ever. This, as was before shewed, was Zadok; but how is it said that hee should walke before his anointed for ever? Ans. In these words was implied a change of government from an Aristocracy into a Kingdome; and because Kings were anointed to this high office, the King, that then should reigne, is set forth by the name of Gods anointed, and this particularly was Solomon, before whom Zadok should minister, which is meant by standing before him for ever, or, all dayes, as it is Hebr. that is, the Priesthood being never more taken away from him and his posterity, as from Eli, but abiding with him all Solomons dayes, and all the dayes of the Kings succeeding him, as long as the Common-wealth of Israel should continue; and so Kimbi noteth upon 1 Chron. 7. that Zadoks Posterity continued in the High-priesthood till Ezra's time; and this is also meant by the words before-going, I will build him a sure house, hee shall walke before mine anointed; that is, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast, Hee shall minister to him by doctrine and erudition; not bee of greater dignity or excellency: and D. Kimbi saith, before him, is about the King, for the High-priest as the inferiour, came alwayes before the King, but onely when the King went to aske counsell of him from God, for then hee was before the Priest in an inferiour place, as Jeshua was appointed at such times to come before Eleazar the Priest; so that here is no ground for the Popes superiority above the Emperour, and making him to come before him, as he hath often done.

And it shall come to passe, that every one that is left in thy house, shall come and crouch to him for a piece of silver, and a morsell of bread, &c. It may seeme, saith Peter Martyr, that seeing they were of Aarons posterity, they could never come to this great want, for so much as the offerings, and tenth of the tithes were to bee distributed amongst them; and if any through any blemish were unfit for service, yet he must hence bee also maintained. But it is to bee understood that Abiathar the last High-priest, who came of Eli, for treason was not onely put from the Priests office, but commanded to goe and live apart at Anathoth, where his house was, having no more either to doe at the Altar, or any maintenance,

V. 34.

V. 33.

1 yr. a.

Gen. 4.

1 Sam. 22.

Will.

P. Martyr.

V. 35.

1 Kings 2 25.

D. Kimbi.

Chaldee Paraphr.

Numb 27. 21.

V. 36.

Peter Martyr.

tenance,

Lyra.

tenance there-from, wherby it must needs be, that he lived in great poverty, and his children were poor, which made them come, as Lyra, following the hebrews, hath it, and crouch to the High-priest, and crave the meanest Priestly office for necessary maintenance: For a piece of silver, he hath an half-penny, as the word אנורה signifieth, it is the same with gerah, the twentyeth part of a shekel, according to Peter Martyr. And now if wee put all the judgements upon Eli's family together, wee shall finde that they suted with his, and his sonnes sins: 1 In that as hee honoured his sons above God, so hee both lost his honour, and them also. 2 As they abused the sacrifices, so now his posterity had no more to do with the sacrifices, but at the allowance of another. 3 As they abounded with dainties, and in fleshly pleasures, so now they were in want and misery.

The Morall.
Lyra.

Greg. in Pastor.
Cum pastor per abrupta graditur consequens est ut grex per precipitium sequatur.

Morally, by Eli's sonnes were set forth wicked Ministers of the Gospel; their boy comming with a three-hooked instrument to pluck flesh out of the pot, their sensuality carrying them to these three: First, the lust of the heart, that is, bodily pleasures. Secondly, the lust of the eyes, that is, worldly profits. Thirdly, the pride of life, that is, honours and dignities here. And as they made men to abhor Gods sacrifices, so these by their lewdnesse, that they have no care to doe good works, but live most wickedly: for when the Pastor goeth by abrupt places, it must needs bee that the flock should follow to a precipice, and perish.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

Skel. Hister.
Hugo Cardin.

Hieron. Predicatio si rara est non sufficit, si
assidua, vilescit.

Peter Martyr.

Josephus.

V. 2.

Junius.

THe Word of the Lord was precious in those dayes, and there was no open vision. For the wickednesse of the Priests, saith Lyra, there had been no revelations or visions a long time; wherefore it is said, The Word of God was precious, that is, rare; for rare things are precious, seldome did the Word of God come to any extraordinarily, to shew what should bee done afterwards; thus also Comestor. Hugo saith, it was both for the sinnes of the Priests and the people, that God sent no Prophets, nor Angels, and alledgeth Esa. 13. A man shall be more precious then gold, to prove, that rare things are precious. But whereas some infer hereupon, that preaching seldome is precious, and often preaching should not bee, because this vilifieth it, hee alledgeth, Hebr. 6. 7. of the often falling, of raine to make the ground fruitfull, and the glosse of Jerome thereupon against it, If preaching bee rare, it is not sufficient, but if it bee daily, it is vilified: so that both by the glosse and text; although through the corruption of people, the Word being often preached be sleighted, yet rare preaching, as insufficient, is to be condemned.

Peter Martyr here noteth how Samuel was rewarded for his faithfulness and diligence in his place according to that, Thou hast been faithfull in little, I will make thee Ruler over much; and therefore to make way unto the relation of the word of God comming to Samuel, it is first said, The childe Samuel ministered to the Lord; and then see how the Lord dignified him, although hee were yet very young, for hee is generally held to have been but 12. Revelations, that were then very rare, were yet made unto him, so great grace and favour did bee come into with the Lord, none had that name and fame for a Prophet since Moses, as hee had. There was no manifest vision in those dayes; that is, saith Junius, although there were some private revelations, yet the publike office of prophesying failed.

And it came to passe at that time, when Eli was laid downe in his place, and his eyes waxed dimme, that he could not see. V. 3. Yer the lamp of God went out in the Temple where the Arke was, and Samuel was laid downe to sleep. Being about to set forth the revelation made to Samuel, hee first describeth the time. For these words, at that time, Junius hath, that day, that is, the day in which the Prophet had come to Eli, to threaten him, Chap. 2. 27. at night when Eli and Samuel were both in bed, in the Priests and Levites chambers, neare the Tabernacle cle in the Court thereof, for in the Tabernacle no man might lye; this of that day, is taken out of Ben Gerson, and disliked by Peter Martyr, because it is Hebr. in those dayes; so that it is not necessary to hold it to have been done precisely the night following that day. Ter the lampe went out, that is, before morning, for it burnt all night, and in the morning was ordered againe continually, Exod. 27. 20, 21. the lamps were seven, which burnt all night, and from thenceforth three of them onely being renewed all day, and then all the seven againe at night, according to some; but according to others, five of them were lighted againe in the morning before the morning sacrifice, and that being ended, the other two also; see my exposition there. So that here is a description of the night season, it being yet towards the dawning of the day, for then the lampe began to goe out. A lampe is spoken of in the singular number, because there was onely one golden candlestick with seven branches, wherein seven lampes burned. For these words inserted touching Eli, His eyes waxed dimme that hee could not see; they serve onely to shew, of how great an age Eli was at this time, and that, as Peter Martyr hath it, the reason of Samuel's so readily running to Eli when he called, might appear, because they that cannot see, have need of helpe oftentimes, especially when this cometh upon them by age: yet hee thinketh not but that Eli could see a little, as Jacob being dim-lighted, yet could see the two sonnes of Joseph to put his hands upon them, as hee would. Hee also saith, that the Rabbins note hereupon the great providence of God to bee pointed at, when one light went out, to set up another in his Church, after Eli, Samuel, as after Moses, Joshua; but whereas by Eli's eyes waxing dimme, they say it is not to bee understood of his bodily eyes, but of the eyes of his minde, because it had been to no purpose here to make mention of his bodily blindness, but to intimate, that hee had in times past the sight of Divine things, but now had lost it for the finnes of the people, this hee disliketh as not being said according to the meaning of this place. I thinke that both blindnesses may bee understood here: 1 Of the body, to shew why Samuel was so ready to runne to Eli, as being a thing to which hee had been used. 2 Of minde, to shew what need there was that God should now raise up another Seer in his Church. The Vulg. Latine joyning the next verse unto this, Eli his sight was dimme, and hee could not see the lampe before it went out, hath given occasion to Lyra, and others to inquire how this could bee properly spoken, for so much as the dimmest sight, if it can see any thing, can see the light of a candle, or lampe by night: but he resolveth it well, that the Latine translation is herein corrupt, as also in many other places, for in Hebr. it is both distinguished by another verse, and the words are, And before the lampe of the Lord went out, &c. Samuel was laid downe, &c. but as in confounding these two verses there is an error in the Vulg. Latine, so in our new Translation, and in Junius it is gone from the order of the words in the latter part of the verse, and the Vulg. Latine keepeth the right order, for in the Hebrew it is, And Samuel lay downe in the Temple of the Lord, where the Arke of God was, and so the Vulg. Latin; but Junius and our new Translation, Ter the lamp was gone out in the Temple, &c. and Samuel was laid downe, inverting the order happily, that it might not be thought that any man lay in the house of the Lord. But the order of the words being kept, Ben Gerson saith, it may bee rendred, besides the Temple, where there were chambers for the Priests and Levites to keepe in, and watch the Tabernacle, and this is followed by Peter Martyr, who noteth, that all the families of Levi were placed neare about the Tabernacle, east, west, north, and south; not that Gods house had any need to bee watched, but to teach us to watch alwayes, and to bee sober, and to have our conversation in heaven, seeing wee are a royall Priesthood now so many as bee true Christians. There is a note of distinction under אֱלִי called altnab, shewing that the next words, in the house of the Lord, &c. are to be distinguished, and not to bee read, as shewing the place where Samuel lay.

The Lord called Samuel, and hee answered, Here am I, and hee ranne to Eli, &c.
The Lord called Samuel three severall times, and every time hee thinking that

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

R. L. B. Gerson.

P. Martyr.

Note.

V. 4.

Eli

Septuag.
Chalid. Aram
Mont. Vulg.
Latin.

P. Martyr.

V. 8, 9.

V. 10.

R Kimbi.

R. Kimbi

Josephus.

Hugo Card.

Psal. 99. 6.

V. 11.

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

V. 12.

Eli had called him, ranne to him; and the reason is rendred, v. 7. Samuel yet knew not the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him. Hebr. And Samuel before hee knew the Lord, and before his word was revealed unto him. Which is followed by the Sept. being thus supplied, Thus did Samuel before hee knew the Lord, &c. but the other is followed by the Chaldee, Aram, and Vatab. Vulg. Latine, &c. The sense is all one, but because שָׁמַע terem, signifieth, before that, it is best to follow the Hebrew. Now Samuel is not said, not to have known the Lord, as the wicked sonnes of Eli, Chap. 2. 12. but as the last clause expresseth, hee knew not that the voice which came to him was his, because hee had not yet been used to it; the Chaldee, he knew not the word of prophesie. Gregory, lib. 3. c. 1. saith, the Lord spake in a voice like unto Eli's, so that Samuel knew it not to bee the Lords voice, but thought it had been Eli's. Samuels running to Eli, shewed his diligence, and God ordered it so by his providence, that hee should run unto him three times, that Eli might surely know that it was a Divine revelation, and be affected with it, whereas otherwise hee might happily either not have heard of it, or have sleighted it as a childish dream; so Martyr. But now hee perceived that the Lord had called him, and instructeth him when hee called againe, what answer hee should make.

Then the Lord came and stood, and called, as at other times, Samuel, Samuel, and he answered, Speake, for thy servant beareth; For these words, as at other times, Hebr. שָׁמַע שָׁמַע, in the Vulg. Latine, secundo, most unaptly, for it was the fourth time of his calling. Peter Martyr, semel acriterum; Junius, ut antea; but the Hebrew signifieth, hac vice, sicut alia vice, at this time, as at the other, or, againe and againe, for now he doubled his calling, so as hee had not yet done. Touching his comming and standing, Kimbi thinketh that it was in some visible shape, because the same word is here used that was used in setting forth his standing in Balaams way. Whereas in answering, Samuel speaketh not all the words put into his mouth by Eli, for Eli bade him say, Speake Lord, for thy servant beareth, but hee leaveth out the word Lord; Kimbi noteth it to have been done for reverence to the name Jehovah, because it ought not to be spoken by every one. But this is rightly taxed by Martyr as frivolous, because if so, the High-priest would not have instructed him to speak so: It is more probable, that Samuel through feare forgot part of his answer, as a man being terrified with majesty may easily doe. Samuels being thrice called, saith Josephus, intimated his threefold dignity to come, of a Prophet, a Judge, and a Priest, in that he offered sacrifice. But Hugo saith, hee offered, because Iehobod was then too young, but hee was not for this a Priest; wherefore it is said, Moses and Aaron amongst his Priests, and Samuel amongst, &c. Moreover, any man extraordinarily called might offer sacrifice, and in any place, although ordinarily, the Priest onely comming of Aaron might doe it.

And the Lord said to Samuel, Behold I doe a thing in Israel, at which every one that beareth it, both his eares shall tingle, that is, it shall make him to stand amazed at it: for upon vehement astonishment, certaine commotions and humors are stirred up in the head, and descend with great force into the eares, making them to tingle; so Peter Martyr. Hee meant hereby the great judgement that should shortly come upon all Israel by the Philistims, when the Arke of God should bee taken and carryed away, of which who could heare without astonishment? that the Arke so sacred that none but the Priests might touch it, should bee suffered to come into the hands of barbarous enemies, and so bee scorned and triumphed over, as Lyra partly hath it.

In that day I will performe against Eli, all that I have spoken, &c. that is, saith Hugo, all that I have spoken by my Prophet, whom I sent unto him; and V. 13. I have told him, That I will judge his house for ever, is spoken also with reference to the same. This was the destruction of his two sonnes, and the cutting off of all the rest of his family in their youth, and the putting downe of the survivors from the Priesthood: When I begin, I will also make an end; Hebr. beginning and perfecting; whereby is not meant, that all things spoken spoken of should come to passe at one time, for the removall of his family from the Priesthood was not till 80 yeares after, as hath been already shewed. Mart. I will begin and persue it, but for these words, I have told him that I will judge his house, hee hath it, I will shew that I judge, &c. as if they had no reference to any former threatening, whereas indeed in Hebrew they plainly have, Because his sonnes made themselves vile, and hee restrained them not; the Vulg. Latine, Because hee knew that his sonnes did unworthily, and hee corrected them not: the Sept. they cursed God, and hee admonished them not. Junius, hee repressed not his sonnes, bringing a curse upon himselfe, or themselves: Mart. his sons condemned themselves, and hee prohibited them not. The word used in Hebrew, properly signifieth they cursed themselves, as A. Mont. readeth it, but hereby, as Junius hath it, is meant, that they brought a curse upon themselves by their wickednesse, and hee was not severe enough against them to prevent it, or hee stopped them not in their wicked course time enough; but let them alone till they were so hardened, as that no admonition would doe them good; which is meant, when it is said, Hee restrained them not, so Bortheim.

Therefore I have sworn to the house of Eli, That his iniquity of his house shall not bee purged with sacrifice for ever. For the preterperfect tense, I have sworn, Junius hath it, I swear, because in that which was said before by the Prophet, Chap. 2. there is no mention made of an oath. That the Lord did sweare for confirmation, is no new thing, for hee sweare of old to Abraham, Gen. 22. 16. to confirme his promise, and Numb. 14. 28. to the rebellious Israelites to confirme his threatening: The forme used is Hebr. If the iniquity of Eli's house shall bee purged, &c. somewhat being left to bee understood, as, let mee not live, as Junius, or, let mee not bee God, as Peter Martyr. Our translation and the Vulg. Latine respecting rather the sense, then the rendring of it verbatim, have it, shall not bee purged. But how is it thus said? was their sinne then altogether unpardonable? The Hebrews answer, it could not bee purged by sacrifice, but by prayer, almesdeeds, and teaching and living according to the Law it might, and hereunto they therefore ascribed more vertue then to sacrificing; wherein they were not deceived, if by sacrificing they understood no more then the ceremony of killing and offering up a beast upon the Altar by the Priest to make atonement for the sinner: for this might bee done, and yet the wicked bee still in his sinnes, as is shewed Isa. 1. and Isa. 66. but prayers being penitently made, and the life being reformed, sinnes past are forgiven, see Ezek. 18. Psal. 50. & 51. Dan. 4. 27. But whereas they ascribe more vertue for the expiating of sinne to almesdeeds, prayer, &c. then to sacrificing, if it bee rightly understood, they foully erred. For the shedding of the blood of a beast in sacrifice, was nothing else but a figurative representation of the shedding of Christs blood to come, whereby alone wee are purged from all sin, and therefore in such as had faith in this blood, sin was certainly by sacrificing done away. But because a true and a lively faith was never without penitent prayer, charity, and reformation of life, these are chiefly insisted upon, and sacrificing without these rejected, as insufficient, and plainly arguing one either without faith, or whose faith was dead. The true answer to the question propounded then is, that neither by sacrifice, nor by any other means could their sin be purged, in respect of the punishment threatened, but so many of Eli's house as truly repented, should be purged from the guilt binding over to everlasting condemnation, so Lyra and Peter Martyr.

In the morning when Samuellar so, hee fearing to shew Eli of these things, was charged and advised by him to tell him; and then hee told him all that the Lord had said. One thing is questioned here upon these words, And hee opened the doores of the house of the Lord, seeing the Tabernacle was compassed in onely with curtaines, and had no doores; what doores are meant here? Pellican thinketh that some other house of God is here meant, and not the Tabernacle, because it is called the house of God and the Temple. But that of Osander is more probable, that although a curtaine served in stead of a doore all the time that the Tabernacle was carried about in the wilderness, yet being

V. 13.

Vulg. Lat.

Septuag.
Junius.

V. 14.

Junius.
Peter Martyr.Qu.
Rabbini.

1 Ioh. 1. 6.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

V. 15, 16, 17.

Exod. 26.
Pellican.

Osander.

1 Chron. 25.
Peter Martyr.

now settled in Shiloh, they made doores unto it, and to the Levites it belonged to open and shut these doores; so that Samuel, as Peter Martyr noteth, was still as humble as before, and as attentive about his duty in serving the Priests, although hee were now called to bee a Prophet of the Lord, extraordinary revelations did not puffe him up, neither should knowledge or any other gifts bestowed upon us, puffe up us.

Lyra

V. 17.

Hugo Cardin.

1 King. 22. 15.

Prov. 3. 12.
Heb. 12. 9.

P. Martyr.

V. 19.

V. 20.

V. 21.

Hugo Card.

P. Martyr.

For his not shewing his revelation to Eli, it was a fault, saith the same Author, because revelations are made to the men of God, that they might shew them to others, but because hee was not bidden to shew it to Eli, it was the lesser; but I thinke it was no fault at all, because although revelations must bee shewed, yet it is not necessary that they bee shewed immediately, but in due order, and about this Gods order was, that Eli should first aske about it, and then Samuel shew it unto him. Hee told it not to Eli, till hee asked to know it, because the judgement was so great, that he feared to shew or speake of it, contrary to the manner of those who rejoyce to see and to speake of the faults and miseries of others. But the reverence which hee bare towards Eli being High-priest, also wrought with him, as Lyra hath it.

God doe so to thee, and more also, if thou hidest any thing from mee, &c. that is, God bring as great judgements upon thee, as ever hee did upon any, and greater, if thou shew mee not all, so Lyra. Or, God bring those evils upon thee, which hee hath threatened against mee, if, &c. as Hugo. This adjuring by superiours, was often used in those dayes, and the inferiour being thus adjured, was bound, as the people by Saul, and Micaiah by Ahab, and Christ by Caiaphas. And he said, it is the Lord, let him doe what seemeth good in his eyes. Herein Eli shewed himselfe truly penitent, in that hee submitted himselfe patiently to beare his punishment, hee refused not the chastening of the Lord, and chastenings borne patiently worke good unto the bearer, and shew Gods love towards him; which are things not incident, but onely to the penitent, so Aaron was patient, when his two sonnes were smitten; and David, and Job, and Mauritius, when the Empire was taken from him by Phocas and his wife and children slaine before his face, he said nothing, but justa sunt judicia tua Domine; thus Theod. Chrysost., Procopius, Lycanus, Tostatus; but Greger. Magn. Rabanus, Rupert, thinke that these were not the words of true penitency, because hee amended not the fault, nor punished his wicked sonnes, as they deserved; wherefore his words shewed one inordinately trusting in Gods mercy; for hee trusteth ordinally herein, who amends his fault. Peter Martyr acknowledging that the fathers generally hold Eli to have been truly penitent, and so although hee were punished temporally, hee escaped eternally; yet calleth it in question, because hee might say so in hypocrisie; but seeing this is not revealed touching him, wee are not to question, but to imitate him in his humble submission when we are judged, for happily he sought to correct his sons, but they were now growne incorrigible.

And Samuel grew, and the Lord was with him, and let none of his words fall to the ground, &c. After the revelation made to Samuel, the confirmation of his words are set downe, and then the divulcation, so that all Israel from Dan to Beerseba, that is, from the north-boundary of Canaan, to the south, knew that hee was a Prophet, v. 20. and another apparition in Shiloh made unto him, v. 21. but what was then revealed, is not here set downe. None of his words fell to the ground, that nothing which hee spake failed, but all came to passe. Hugo saith also, it may be understood thus; hee spake nothing of heavenly things, but of earthly, applying it against those that speake altogether of earthly things; but the first is most proper. It is a Metaphor, saith Peter Martyr, taken from liquid things, which perish by falling to the ground, or from buildings ruined; and his words may be understood either of the Lords, or of Samuels speaking by his inspiration. The scope of all this is to shew that Samuel was famous all over Israel, as before his revelations had been rare, v. 1. so now they began againe to be frequent, v. 21. which was a great comfort to the people.

Mytically,

Mystically by the blindnesse of Eli, who could not see the light, the blindness of the Jewes, was set forth, till their Priesthood and Temple, and all were destroyed; so Rabanus.

The Mystery.
Rabanus.

CHAP. IV.

AND the word of Samuel came to all Israel, and Israel went out to battaile against the Philistims. The Vulgar Latin adjoyneth the first of these words to the end of the former Chapter, and then beginneth this a little otherwise, It came to passe in those dayes, that the Philistims came together to battaile, for Israel went out to meete the Philistims to battaile. But in Hebr. this Chapter beginneth thus: And the word of Samuel came, &c. and Israel went out to meete the Philistims in battaile. Whereupon a question is made, what word of Samuel this was, and whether the Israelites were hereby stirred up to this warre against the Philistims? David Kimbi saith, that Samuel spake to all Israel, as the Lord moved him to goe and fight against the Philistims, that thus the judgements threatened, Ch. 3. 11. might take effect both against Israel and Eli's house for their sinnes, thus also Vatablus and Genev. But this is improbable, because it would have made against Samuels credit, he being now newly called to the Prophets office, if at the first hee should have beene author of such a disastrous warre unto them. Moreover the commendation given him before, God let nothing fall to the ground, which hee spake, maketh altogether against this. Wherefore Ben Gerson contrariwise saith, that this was the immediate cause of Israels being overcome by the Philistims, in that they went to this warre without his direction, never consulting with him by the Urim and Thummim: but why the former words are prefixed then here, hee yeeldeth no reason, neither can his conjecture stand, that they went without direction, because the Philistims came out first against them, as the Vulgar Latin hath it, and as in the Hebrew is intimated, in that it is said, they went to meete the Philistims, so that it was no voluntary, but a necessitated expedition. Oflander thinketh, that by Samuels word is meant his Sermon exhorting to repentance. But Peter Martyr best, the word of Samuel came to all Israel, that is, his word against Israel and Eli, set forth Ch. 3. 11. was divulged in all parts of Israel, and then the history sheweth, how it tooke effect, And Israel went out to meete the Philistims, &c. and this being done, all men began to reverence Samuel, as a true Prophet of the Lord, and to have him in great honour. So that in saying, the word of Samuel came to all Israel, the cause is not assigned, whereupon the Israelites went forth to warre, but the means are shewed, how Samuel came to be knowne every where to bee a Prophet, when as his prophesie that they heard of, was accomplished, as is here immediately declared. When the Philistims came forth against Israel, and they went out to meete them, they thought of nothing else, then fulfilling what God had decreed for the punishment of Eli's house and of Israel for their sinnes, but thus God brought about what hee had threatened, that all might feare to sinne, sith punishments will certainly follow, and feare at the hearing of Gods word, one title whereof shall not fall to the ground, but bee all fulfilled. No cause of the Philistims comming against Israel is here expressed, but it may well be thought, that it was to bring under Israel againe who had beene delivered formerly by Samson, and they were the more animated, because Eli their Judge was now old and feeble, &c. And pitched beside Ebenezer and the Philistims pitched in Aphek, the Vulgar Latin, Ebenezer, hath Lapidem adiutorii, the stone of helpe, as the word signifyeth, this place is here so called by anticipation, for it had not this name, till that Samuel called a stone so, which hee set up for a monument of Gods helping them against the Philistims, Ch. 7. 12. where the place is further described. Aphek was a City in Judab, Josh. 15. 53. Junius.

The Philistims prevailing, and having smitten of the Israelites 4000 men, their

V. 1.

D. Kimbi.

Vatab. Genev.
Translat.

Ben Gerson.

Oflander.
Peter Martyr.

Note.

Hugo Cardin.

Junius.
V. 2.

V. 3.

their Elders aske saying, Why hath the Lord smitten us to day before the Philistims, let us fetch the Arke of the Covenant, &c. They, who expound the first words of this Chapter of Samuels speaking to the Israelites to goe out to this warre, hold this to bee spoken by way of complaint, Why hath the Lord smitten us, seeing we came not out to fight without his direction? But without reference to any such direction they might say thus by way of consultation, what might bee the cause, that they might goe more wisely to worke the next time. In saying, Why hath the Lord smitten us, they spake rightly, for the Philistims could not have smitten them, but for some error in themselves, which the Lord strengthened them to punish: otherwise they being the Lords people and the Philistims his enemies, they must needs have gone by the worst. But so fondly foolish were even the Elders of Israel, that they thought not of their owne finnes and of the corruptions in their sacrifices, and in their Priests, and the generall neglect of sacrificing hereupon, but they laid all the fault upon the absence of the Arke, which therefore they fetch into the hoast; A thing never used in times past, since their comming into the land of Canaan, but onely at the siege of Jericho: neither did God appoint it ever to be brought forth for such an end, but onely at that time, although in the wildernesse it was carryed before them for their defence, and as some thinke, to the battaile against the Midianites, where Phinees is said to have taken the holy vessels with him, for this is expounded of the Arke by Lyra, Tostatus and Vatablum. They were therefore thus infatuated now in their counsels, that the two wicked sonnes of Eli, Hophni and Phineas, might be drawne out to their destruction, as had beene threatned, Ch. 2. For the Arke was appointed for a signe of Gods presence amongst them to abide in the Tabernacle, whereunto they should resort to worship, and to receive answers from God for direction in time of need, and not to be carryed forth, that by the helpe thereof they might prevaile. How they might thus doe was often inculcated, viz. By turning from their finnes and keeping Gods commandements, which if they did not, they were threatened with destruction before their enemies, although they had the Arke amongst them. Yet through a superstitious conceit they so doated upon outward signes, that because of the Arke, and afterwards for the Temple of the Lord amongst them all should goe well with them, how wickedly soever they lived. And in this superstition they are imitated by the Papists, who carry the hoast about, ascribing great vertue unto it for any purpose; and likewise in going to warre they weare the signe of the crosse, placing great confidence herein. And thus did many superstitious Christians in the dayes of Tertullian, Cyprian, Chrysostom, &c. as Peter Martyr gathereth from their writings. For Cyprian saith that superstitious women did then carry home the Eucharisticall bread and keepe it in their chests, and Tertull. lib. de monogamia telleth his wife, that used to doe so, and to eate thereof in a morning, that if after his death shee should marry an infidell, hee would thinke, that it were something bewitched, that shee did thus eate. Jerom. contr. Iovinian. that some men, when they had lyen with their wives, would not come forth to receive the communion the next day, but would have it brought home unto them; Ambrose saith, that his brother Satyrus did weare the holy bread about his neck, and that being once in danger upon the Sea, he was hereby preserved in the midst of the waves. But by that which followeth in this history it appeareth, how vaine a thing it is thus to trust in outward things, and to use them otherwise, then God hath ordained. They sent, saith Josephus, to the High-Priest and the Senate to desire, that the Arke might be brought forth, thinking, that all would be hazzarded without it, but having it amongst them that they should undoubtedly prevaile, being ignorant, that hee who had given sentence against them, was greater then the Arke, which was to be revered for his sake. Thus the Arke was brought into the hoast, and with it came the two sonnes of Eli, having a charge given them by their father, if the Arke should be lost, never to come into his sight againe. In this sending for the Arke they erred divers wayes, 1 because they fetcht it without

Peter Martyr.

Joseph. Antiq.
l. 5. c. 11.

without warrant, 2 without pompe or due reverence, 3 they superstitiously trusted in it, as carnall Christians in their Baptisme, and the Eucharist living still in sinne, but they were now punished more then before. Oflander, Pellican, Borbeus. David contrariwise sent backe the Arke, when he fled from Abisalon, 2 Sam. 15.

The Arke is called, The Arke of the Covenant of the Lord of Hosts sitting upon the Cherubims, because in it the testimony was contained, he can easily, as by unresistible hostis both overcome his enemies and succour his people, and over the Arke upon the propitiatory or Mercy-seat stood two Cherubims, or golden Images with the faces of young men, and wings covering the Mercy-seat, as Exod. 25. and from these Cherubims the Lord gave answers Numb. 7. 89. of the reason whereof see in those places.

The Arke being brought into the host the Hebrews rejoyce, but the Philistims feare, and say, Woe to us, who shall deliver us out of the hand of these most mighty Gods? these are the Gods that smote the Egyptians with all those plagues in the desert. Like ignorant heathens, because they worshipped divers Gods, they spake thus in the plural number of the true God. Whereas they feare considering the Plagues wherewith God smote the Egyptians in the desert, it is doubted, how they could speake thus, seeing those plagues were sent in Egypt and not in the desert: Borbeus saith, במדת may bee expounded in the word, or by the word or command of God; but because this word is never so used, although בד, whereof it cometh signifieth a word, and it is not likely, that the ignorant Philistims had the knowledge of the power of Gods word, I subscribe rather to Junius, that they spake thus for the last and greatest plague, wherewith the Egyptians were smitten, when they were drowned in the red Sea, wherein was the consummation of all their plagues, and this was in the desert of Etham. Or else as the Sept. and Vatablus have it, the conjunction and is to bee understood, in Egypt, and the red Sea. Touching the great feare, wherewith the Philistims were now taken, Luci saith, that the Hebrews expound it of some of them onely, who revered the Arke, as in all nations there were some, that feared God, and these spake thus, Woe to us, who is able to stand against these mighty Gods? but others feared not, and therefore replied, these are the Gods, that smote the Egyptians, as if they should have said, they did before them all, that they were able to doe, but against us they are able to doe nothing, plucke up a good heart then and play the men (O see Philistims.) But the words are plainly one continued saying of the same men, who yet desperately incourage one another. Then they fought and prevailed, and 30000 of the Israelites were slaine, and the Arke was taken, and the two sonnes of Eli dyed: and then a man of Benjamin ran to Shiloh, his garments being rent, and upon his head, &c. Peter Martyr here noteth, as a meanes of so great an overthrow given to the Israelites, the great confidence and security, that was amongst them by reason of the Arke, for security giveth much advantage to an enemy, although weaker. If any man shall marvaile, why the Lord would suffer his Arke to be taken and carryed captive by these wicked men, and to be triumphed over, it being so foule an indignity unto him; hee answereth, it had beene a marvaile, if he should not have suffered it thus to be, seeing it was amongst his owne people so greatly abused; and as it is said of the Sabbath, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, so the Arke and Tabernacle and all other holy things were made for man and for his salvation, but this being not now thus used, but contrariwise abused, it was just with God to suffer it to be taken and carryed away from amongst them, as being unworthy of it: For besides the finnes before mentioned, they were grosse idolaters at this time, as is noted Psal. 78. 58, 59, 60. 1 Sam. 7. 3. Theodoret saith, that God in suffering the Arke to be taken taught the Israelites, that living ill there was no trust to be put in the Arke or in him, Curenium legem transgredientes Arcam ad auxilium traherent, que legem intus habebat sitam?

Touching the man of Benjamin, that came into Shiloh to bring tidings,

V. 4.

V. 8.

Q. 4.

Borbeus

Junius.

Exod. 13. 20.

Vatablus.

Luci.

V. 9.

V. 10, 11.

V. 12.

Peter Martyr.

- Lyra.* some Hebrews thinke that it was Saul, who had taken the two Tables that were put in the Arke, out of the hands of Goliath, who was carrying them away, and brought them back to Shiloh, so Lyra. But this is a meere conjecture without ground, and is improbable, because Saul was but a young man, when hee was made King, Chap. 9. 2. and that was twenty yeares after this and more, for so long was the Arke in Kiriath-jearim, before the overthrow of the Philistines by thunder at Samuels prayer, and D. Kimbi reasoneth against it. Who this man was then is uncertaine, but he rent his cloaths, &c. in token of sorrow, see the like, Jesh. 7. 6.
- 1 Sam. 7. 3.
D. Kimbi.
V. 13, 14, 15
16, 17.
Hugo Cardin.
Peter Martyr.
Note.
Willer.
V. 19, 20.
Josephus.
Junius.
Osiander.
Pellican.
Peter Martyr.
- At the coming of this man, great lamentation was made, and Eli hearing the noise, is said to have feared for the Arke, and hearing what was done, and that the Arke was taken, hee fell downe backward from his seat, and brake his neck, being aged 98 yeares, and hee had then judged Israel 40 yeares; the seat where hee sat, was the throne of Judgement, from which being high he fell, when his spirits through feare failed him, Josephus: Hugo saith, that Eli was more solicitous for the Arke of God, then for his sonnes, and yet he speaketh of him as a reprobate, for if Eli, saith hee, who was a reprobate, was so affected in hearing that the Arke was taken, what shall become of them, who heare that Jerusalem is taken, and the faith overthrowne, and yet are not affected with griefe therefore? But Peter Martyr better, most Expositors take this as an argument of Elies piety, holding, that although hee were too indulgent to his sonnes; yet for his owne particular hee was an holy man, and repented, and so although hee perished corporally, yet his soule was saved, as hath been already touched. For hearing of the great slaughter of the people, and of his sonnes, hee was not so much moved, but hearing that the Arke was taken, hee was stricken so, as that hee presently dyed. But yet he saith, this is no certaine argument of his piety, for hee might bee thus stricken, because his dignity and living depended upon the Arke, and hee might now feare, the Arke being gone, that the Priesthood and Common-wealth would come to ruine; but he leaveth it doubtfull, concluding, that if piety makes a man more carefull about the Arke, then for any worldly thing, that they are full of impiety, that grieve wonderfully for the losse of their worldly goods, but have no sense of grief for the true Religion being put downe, and superstition and idolatry set up.
- Willer* useth divers reasons to prove that Eli was saved: 1 Because hee was godly, as appeared by his dislike of his sonnes evill courses, neither is hee any where taxed, but for his want of severity towards them. 2 Hee was patient in bearing the judgement threatened. 3 Hee was zealous for God and for his Arke, being more moved for that, then for the losse of his sons. 4 He was not in those corrupt times tainted with idolatry, and of such Judges it is said, Whose heart went not a whoring, nor departed from the Lord, their memory bee blessed, Eccles. 46. 11. And Theodore commendeth Eli, and Tostatus saith, it is not to bee doubted but that hee was saved eternally; and Lyra, Cartbus. &c. Whereas Chrysostome and Theodore may seem to speak to the contrary, because they name his damnation; and Gloss. Ordin. Gregory, &c. they are to bee understood as speaking of his being condemned to dye the corporall death onely.
- And the daughter in law of Eli, the wife of Phinehas, hearing this newes, and that Eli and her husband were dead, fell in travaile, and brought forth a son, but had no joy thereof, but onely having named him Ichabod, The glory is gone from Israel, shee dyed. Shee was gone, saith Josephus; but seven moneths at this time, but this is incredible, seeing the childe lived, Chap. 14. 3. It seemeth that shee had more zeale in her, then her husband, in that shee tooke the losse of the Arke so heavily. For the name given to her sonne, it is אין כבוד, and אין כבוד glory, Where is the glory? it is gone. Hugo rendreth it by inglorious, or, not glorious; Junius, no glory, as if the words were אין כבוד; Osiander, woe the glory; but Pellican best, Where is the glory? Peter Martyr taxeth this woman for ascribing too much to outward things, as if the Arke being taken, all must needs now goe to ruine; whereas they were delivered from from the Egyptian bondage without the Arke, and many more miracles were without it wrought for their preservation. This indeed was her weaknesse, but her zeale notwithstanding was memorable. In saying, the glory is gone, hee meant, God is gone, because the Arke was a signe of Gods presence, and God was called the glory of his people, because they gloried in him, and hee made them glorious by the mighty acts which hee did for them. The Arke being taken and carried away into the Philistims Conntrey, was a figure, saith Pellican, of the Gospels removing from the Jewes to the Gentiles; so alio Lyra, and others.

Pellican.

CHAP. V.

THe Philistims having taken the Arke, carry it away to Ashdod, into the Temple of Dagon, but the next morning Dagon was falne downe upon his face before the Arke. They set the Arke there, saith Comester, as a Trophee of their victory; but Dagon fell downe, according to Josephus, as adoring the Arke. What manner of Idol this was, see 1 Sam. 16. 23. Junius saith, it was the same which the Heathen called Triton, a God of the Sea, and worshipped by the Philistims, because they dwelt by the Sea. Peter Martyr thinketh it was Neptune; and whereas they carried the Arke away, ascribing their victory to Dagon, hee saith, that the Romans of old in like manner after a great victory carried their Emperour in triumph into the Capitoll, to give thanks to Jupiter: but Fabius Maximus having overcome the Tarentines, tooke not their Gods away, but being asked what should bee done with them, answered, Let us leave them angry with their Tarentines. In causing Dagon to fall, the Lord began to shew his power, who seemed to bee asleepe all this while, as David elegantly speaketh upon this, Psal. 78. Having punished his owne people, he now began to smite the Philistims, when hee seemed to bee of least power. And hee first began with their God, to shew that there was none other God that had power, but hee alone: as when Christ came into the world, all the Oracles of Idols ceased; which Plutarch writing of, and inquiring into the reason, saith, either they were very old and dyed, or the vapours arising out of the earth, wherewith their Prophets being afflated spake, were now stopped, or else the constellations which caused this, were now past. And as one saith, the Philistims were first punished in Dagon the chiefe of their Idols, because in it was the originall of their sin.

V. 1, 2, 3.

Schol. Hist.

Junius.

P. Martyr.

They having set up Dagon, looke the next morning againe, and then he was both falne, and the head and armes of the Idoll were cut off upon the threshold; the head, saith Peter Martyr, signifyeth wisdom, and the armes, power; to shew then, that hee had neither wisdom nor power to helpe them, this was done. The trunk onely remained; the Chaldee, the body of Dagon; Junius, that which resembled a fish, but the words are, Dagon only remained, that is, a fish, as the word Dag signifieth. For the upper part being like a man, and the nether a fish, when the head and armes were cut off, the figure of a fish onely remained.

V. 4.

Junius.

Therefore the Priests of Dagon, &c. tread not upon the threshold of his Temple to this day. They were so faine by seeing this miracle from growing into the contempt of this impotent Idol, that they magnified it the more, holding the very threshold to bee sanctified by the touch thereof; so blinded were they with superstition; so Peter Martyr, who addeth, that by the like superstition at this day, men refraine from treading upon that part of mount Garganium, where the print of Michael the Archangels foot is to bee seen in marble. R. L. Ben Gerson noteth hereupon, that the Philistims by this their superstition tooke a course to continue the memory of Dagons impotency and ignominy many ages after.

V. 5.

Ofander.

P. Martyr.

Ben Gerson.

After the smiting of Dagon, the Lord proceedeth to execute judgements upon the people of Ashdod, for hee smote them with emerods. Josephus saith, that they had the fluxe called dysenteria, which caused their fundament to come out, and

V. 6.

Joseph. Antiq.
l. 6. c. 1.

and

Lyra.

and their entrails, whereby they perished being full of torment. The Vulg. Latine addeth, The farms and fields were full of mice; and a great confusion of death was made in all the City; but as Lyra noteth, this is a corruption which crept in by the unskilfulnesse of the Scribe, and is not in the Hebrew; but because, Chap. 6. a judgement by mice is spoken of, this was by some ignorantly inserted here, and the like hath been done in divers other places. Indeed Iosephus saith also, the fields swarmed with mice, which ate up the standing corne, and all their fruits, but this is not expressed, but left to bee understood from that, Chap. 6. 4. Lyra saith, that their intestines comming out with the dysentery, and hanging out, were full of wormes, and assaulted by the mice. But it is more probable, that the mice wasted and spoyled the Countrey onely, as Iosephus hath it, and the emerods tormented them. The mice also invaded their Ships, according to the Sept. Translation, and herewith they abounded, because they were a Maritime people. Autor mirabil. 8. 5. God justly punished them both these wayes; with emerods, which made their entrails to come out to their destruction, as they had taken the inwards of the Tabernacle, viz. the Arke, out of its place; and with mice, base creatures, as they had worshipped base creatures, which was against the law contained in the Arke, now brought amongst them.

V. 8.

Iunius.

The Asdodites being thus plagued, by the counsell of the Lords of the Philistims send the Arke to Gath, and then the people of that place were smitten, both great and small, with emerods, which were hidden in them, as the Hebrew text hath it. And this was a kinde of emerod, saith Iunius, according to the judgement of Physitians, far more painfull then the other which came downe, because the blood being retained in their inward parts did exceedingly torment them, so that the men of Gath were smitten more grievously then those of Asdod. For the reason of their carrying the Arke thus about, it was according to Comestor, because some thought this plague was by reason of the Arke, some by accident, and some by the corruption of the aire, to try therefore whether the Arke was the cause, it was so carryed about; but, as Iosephus noteth, it went about the five Cities of the Philistims, thus exacting the tribute of iust punishment upon them all for Religion violated, in that they durst lay hands upon so sacred a thing, as the Arke of God. And therefore his singular providence is to bee looked at herein, which swayed their consultations to their owne greater punishment as they were worthy.

Iosephus. In hunc modum quinq; Palestinorum urbes pervagata est arca, velut vitulum per singulas penam violata religionis exigens.

For these words, To Gath let the Arke of God bee brought about, &c. The Vulg. Latine hath it, the men of Gath answered, Let the Arke bee carryed about; and when they carryed it about, the hand of God was against every City, and hee smote the men of every City, &c. favouring that of Iosephus, who saith it went about to all the five Cities of the Philistims. And thus indeed it seemeth to have been done, for Chap. 6. 4. it is said, One plague was on you all, and on your Lords, and therefore according to the number of their Cities, which were five, they made five golden Emerods, and five golden Mice for a trespassse-offering. But in the Hebrew text mention is made onely of Gath and Eckon; neither is it said, The hand of God was grievous against every City, but against that City. Notwithstanding because the carrying about of the Arke to Gath is spoken of, it is implied that it went through the other Cities also, which are not named, and then they were smitten. For all the judgements upon the Philistims are not mentioned in this Chapter, but onely the smiting of those Cities with emerods, that were most plagued, the judgements upon the rest, and that by mice, being left to bee understood, by that which is said Chap. 6. For Gath, Iosephus hath Askelon, saying, that the men of Azotus, for so hee calleth Asdod, sent to Askelon, desiring them of that City that they would receive the Arke, unto which they willingly yeilded; but when it came there, the same effects followed, and likewise whithersoever it came. Tostatus saith, that finding the force of the Arke to bee so great, they were unwilling to send it back to Israel, for feare of arming them hereby against themselves, wherefore they tryed rather first, whether in any place it might be kept amongst them without perill.

Iosephus.

The

The Vulg. Latine at the end of the ninth verse, addeth these words, They tooke counsell, and made them seats of skins; which Lyr. saith they did to defend them from the mice, that gnawed their fundaments hanging out, and that they might sit the more easily. The Sept. have it before this, The men of Gath said, Bring the Arke of God unto us, and when it was brought thither, God smote the City, &c. and then he smote them upon their seats, and the men of Gath made them seats. In both, the last words are redundant, neither doe I know any colour of reason for them. But the former doe best expresse the Hebr. the men of Gath said, because it is אכרו גת so that אכרו they said, is not to bee referred to the Lords, but to the men of Gath, who shewed their willingness to have the Arke brought unto them, not yet fearing any plague to ensue amongst them by reason thereof, wherefore they were plagued more terribly then the Asdodites.

Myssically, saith Gloss. Ordin. by the Arke understand the Testament preached, for they, amongst whom this commeth, but yet they love the posterious things of this life, as the Asdodites were affected even to the nether part of Dagon, when nothing of him else remained, shall bee tormented by reason of these base things, which are but as dung, when they shall fall from them most unwilling, as the entrails of the Philistines came out against their wills, to their great torment, for even so doe these through the love of the world, place Dagon and the Arke together, Dagon that fadeth, and the Arke of the New Testament, which is eternall.

CHAP. VI.

THe Arke having continued in the Philistines Countrey seven moneths, they at length advise with their Priests and Diviners about the sending of it back again to Israel. If it bee demanded why the Philistines kept the Arke so long, being so sore smitten: It is answered, they thought in time their plagues might bee asswaged, and then they purposed to have kept it still, but now seeing the punishment continued, they perceived that hope to bee vaine. A judgement came to them by the Arke, and no benefit, so the Gospel turneth to the condemnation of the wicked, amongst whom it is preached.

Their Diviners both direct them to send the Arke back with five golden Emerods, and five golden Mice for a trespassse-offering, and earnestly exhort them not to harden themselves, as did Pharaoh; for besides the plague of Emerods, Mice marred their Countrey. In this consultation there were three diverse opinions, saith Iosephus: 1 That the Arke was to bee sent back. 2 That because God suffered the Arke to come into their hands, hee had no such care thereof, and therefore this plague was not to bee imputed to the Ark detained amongst them, but to other causes, and over a while would cease againe; and that it was not to bee sent back againe, which were dishonourable to the Philistines. 3 That a middle way was to bee taken, neither to detain it, nor to send it away, but to put the offerings here mentioned into it, and so to set it upon a cart to bee drawne by two young Cowes, whither they would, and this prevailed. In that speaking here of a trespassse-offering, they use the word חטאת which signifieth a lighter sinne, and not זבח signifying a greater; Peter Martyr noteth, that they thought their sinne in carrying the Arke away, but small, which indeed was very great. And for the things given for a trespassse-offering, he saith, by making the figures of Emerods and Mice, they set up, as it were, a monument of their, and their Gods being subdued by the God of Israel, and of his power in smiting and healing them againe, as they hoped would follow hereupon; and therefore it is added, And yee shall give glory to the God of Israel, for then is glory given to him, when his power is acknowledged to bee over all. For these words, v. 3. Then yee shall bee healed, and it shall bee knowne unto you, why his hand is not removed from you: Iunius hath it, or it shall bee knowne; that is, if yee bee not healed, it will appeare to be

V. 9.

The Myfter.

V. 1.

Genev. notes.
Note.

V. 3, 4, 5.

Iosephus.

Peter Martyr.

Iunius.

Lyra.

bee a chance, as v. 9. but the word more properly signifieth, and it shall bee knowne; that is, according to Lyra and others, when the Arke being carryed away, yee shall bee made well againe, it will appeare that his hand was against you hitherto by reason of the Arke taken and detained. For the meanes of trying, whether hee smote them or no, it is deferred to bee spoken of till v. 9. here it being taken for granted, that hee smote them, as they verily held, healing is promised, as most certainly to ensue after the Arkes departure, whereupon they are exhorted not to harden their hearts, v. 6. there that meane of tryall is propounded to convince them all.

V. 7, 8, 9.

Make a new cart, and take two milch Kine, on which never yet came yoke, and fasten them to the cart, and bring their calves home, and lay the Arke upon the cart, &c. As Balaam and Caiaphas, so these Diviners were unwittingly led herein by the Spirit of God to set downe a right way of tryall. For if Kine having calves that went with them, and never used to draw before, should of themselves draw this cart with the Arke, and that a contrary way to that which nature commonly inclineth beasts having young unto, it would plainly appeare that there was a Divine power whereby they were led, which would have the Arke brought home againe to his proper place, and was offended that it was hitherto from thence detained.

V. 10.

According to the advice of these Diviners it was done, and as Josephus hath it, the Kine were brought to a three way leet, to try which way they would take, and they tooke the way to Bethshemesh. God would not have them draw the Arke, saith P. Martyr, back to Shiloh, because that place had been corrupted with the sins of Elis children, but to Bethshemesh, which was a City of Levites, Josh. 21. 16. This, saith one, was from Eckon 12 miles, and within 4 miles of Jerusalem; and the first carrying of the Arke from Aphek by the Philistims to Asdod, was 160 miles. When the Ark was come to Bethshemesh, they of that place being in their wheat harvest, saw it, and rejoiced; And the Cart came in-

Peter Martyr.

H. Bunting Pa-
triar. travails.

V. 13, 14.

to the field of Joshua, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they cleave the wood of the cart, and offered the Kine for a burnt-offering to the Lord. This stone, saith Comestor, is thought by some to have been an Altar which Abraham made unto the Lord, it is called the great stone Abel, v. 18. and it is said both there, and v. 15. that the Levites tooke downe the Arke, and the Coffer, and golden Jewells, and set them upon this stone, Hebr. it is Abel the great, v. 18. and not the great stone of Abel, whereupon some, saith Comestor, doe conjecture, that Abel was not the name of the stone, but of the City Bethshemesh, so called for the great mourning there for the ensuing destruction, for Abel signifieth mourning; and if so, then it is to bee read, They set the Arke by or neare to Abel, upon the stone before-mentioned, which is there till this day. Lyra saith, that the great stone before spoken of, is called great Abel, because of the mourning that was made there, Aben signifying a stone, being changed into Abel, mourning, by the change of one letter onely. Junius thinketh that Abel is put for Aben, a stone. And the Sept. and Chald. doe not read it Abel, but a stone. Osiander thinketh, that the same thing was called both Aben and Abel. Josephus, for great Abel, hath, the great plaine, for Abel signifieth also a plaine. But Arion Montan. and Pagnin agree with Lyra, and that is the best. Whereas they are said to have set the Arke upon that great stone, Comestor saith, besides it, and so it is most probable, because upon the stone they offered their sacrifices.

Schol. Hister.

Lyra.

Junius.

Osiander.

Josephus.

Peter Martyr.

Levit. 22. 19.
Chap. 1. 3.

V. 17.

For their cleaving of the wood of the cart, and offering the Kine in sacrifice, they thought, that being once put to this holy use, and such a miracle being wrought in the Kines drawing the Arke thither, they might not bee put to any common use afterwards, and therefore they burnt them in sacrifice. But forso much as in the Law males onely are appointed to bee offered in sacrifice, these men erred in offering females. For the place, any place was sanctified for sacrificing by the presence of the Arke; and by the standing still of the cart here, this place seemed particularly to bee chosen of God. For the gifts given by the Philistims for a trespass-offering, it was said before, that they were were five golden Emerods, and five Mice, v. 4. But here the Emerods are said to bee five, but the Mice, according to the number of all the Cities belonging to the five Lords, both walled Cities, and Countrey villages, whereby it should seeme, that the number of golden Mice was farre greater then of Emerods. Comeſtor for the clearing of this, ſaith, according to Iſidor, when five Emerods, and five Mice are before ſpoken of, the gifts of five Metropolitan Cities onely are meant; but beſides theſe, all other Cities of the Philiftims unto the great Abel, which was the border of their Countrey, gave golden Mice. Lyra and Hugo ſay, that five was the whole number; but all the Cities belonging to the Metropolitan ſholpe in the expences. But becauſe here is a plaine diſtinction made between the number of Emerods, and the number of Mice, thoſe were five, for each chiefe City one, but theſe without any certain number, according to the number of all the Cities of the Philiftims, I rather preferre the former expoſition.

V. 19. But the Lord ſmote of the men of Bethshemesh, becauſe they looked into the Arke, 50070 men: and it was not onely juſt, but neceſſary, ſaith Rupert, ſo ſeverely to puniſh at this time, becauſe there was danger of thinking the Arke more vile and contemptible, after that it had been ſeven moneths amongſt the Philiftims, to the detriment of all religion Moſaicall. Beſides the cauſe of this plague alledged, viz. their looking into the Arke againſt Gods expreſſe command given, Numb. 4. 15. 20. Lyra yeeldeth three cauſes more: 1 Their fooliſh joy at the coming of the Arke, proceeding from the lightneſſe of their heads, and not from due reverence. 2 Their undue ſacrificing of females. 3 Their ſuffering of the Arke to reſt abroad, and not ſetting up lights before it, nor giving it the due worſhip. And 70 which were ſmitten, hee ſaith, were of the more noble, and 50000 of the common ſort, and thoſe 70 are named firſt, becauſe more worth then all the reſt, as David is ſaid to have been more worth then 10000 of the people: and to note a difference betwixt them that were ſmitten, the Vulg. Latine rendreth it, percuffit de populo 70 viros, & 50000 plebis; but the ſame word וישים is put to both numbers, yet Hebr. 70 are put firſt, and then 50000; wherefore our Tranſlation erreth in putting the 70 laſt. Comeſtor thinketh that the 70 firſt ſmitten were thoſe that tooke downe the Arke, becauſe they were not Priests but Levites, and ſo ought not to have touched it till it had been covered, Numb. 4. 15. Pellican agreeth with Lyra, in the firſt of his cauſes, becauſe they entertained not the Arke with greater reverence, but with ſhoutings, as in harveſt; Borrbemus in the ſecond: but ſeeing one cauſe onely is alledged; their looking into the Arke, I reſt in that. Theodoreſ following the Sept tranſlation ſaith, that ſome who were addiſted to Idols were ſorry to ſee the Arke brought back againe, and ſo were worthily puniſhed, and the reſt of the people, becauſe they would not adventure themſelves to goe and recover the Arke by force from the Philiftims. Their looking into the Arke, ſay the Hebrews, was by opening it, and looking into it; but Willel ſtandeth for their beholding it onely; but then it would not have been ſaid ראונו but ראו-נו. It is true, to looke upon the Arke uncovered, was death for Levites, or common people, but much more out of curioſity to preſume to open it, to ſee what was therein contained, herein for want of due reverence, even the Priests themſelves might bee in danger of deſtruction. For the number ſmitten, it is not likely that 70 are put firſt, becauſe they were more worthy, being either Priests, or Elders, or both, becauſe the word וישים is uſed ſignifying the people indifferently; but 70 are put by themſelves, becauſe they were of Bethshemesh, and the 50000 of people flockd thither from other parts; when they heard the newes of the Arke returned, and happily many of them were ſouldiers that lay there in Garriſon for the defence of the Countrey, becauſe it was a frontier City; ſo Junius. And indeed it is not probable, that in one City alone there were ſo many inhabitants, unleſſe it were one of the greateſt: and Joſephus writeth but of 70 onely of Bethshemesh ſlaine, who preſumed to handle the Arke not being Priests. But why was God ſo greatly offended for this, that they preſumed to looke into the Arke, which Schol. Hiſt.

Lyra, Hug. Card.

V. 19.

Lyra.

Schol. Hiſt.

Pellican.

Borrbemus.

Junius.

which they did onely to see what was there? Ans. First, because it might bee a meanes to expose the Arke to contempt, when they should see nothing else but a Chest covered within and without with gold, for what was there in such things to move them to reverence it? Secondly, because there was an expresse command to the contrary, the breach of which God would never suffer to goe unrevenge, as when the people were charged not to come to Mount Sinai to touch it upon paine of death; and our first parents were forbidden to eate of the tree of knowledge of good and evill. For the transgressing of any commandment of God, is not to bee measured by the thing about which it is given, but by the greatnesse of him that giveth it. 3 Because the secret things of the Lord are reserved to himselfe, but the revealed belong to us. It must suffice us to know these onely, and hereafter to come to see and know the rest in the kingdom of heaven, when wee shall bee perfect. So that hee which dareth now to pry into them, sinneth by presumption, and by confounding the times which God hath distinguished. Some have inquired into secrets, saith Peter Martyr, and yet have been approved, as Abraham and Moses, and the blessed Virgin Mary; but others have been reprov'd therefore, because the one sort inquired out of faith, that they might bee more confirmed; but the other out of unbelieve, and God the knower of all hearts judgeth accordingly. If it be demanded, why the Philistines that looked also into the Arke, and handled it, were not likewise smitten? It is answered, they had not the charge given them, but onely the Israelites, and therefore their sin was not so great as the sin of these men.

P. Martyr.

V. 20, 21.

Lyra.

Joseph. Antiq.
lib. 6. c. 2.

H. Bunt. Patri- archs travailes.

The Mystery.
Lyra.

The people being thus grievously smitten, are full of sorrow and feare, and send to the men of Kiriath-jearim to come and take the Arke home to them. This City, saith Lyra, was more noble, and a safer place for the Arke to bee in, and therefore they desire that it might bee carryed from them thither. Josephus saith, the men of Bethshemesb sent to all Israel, and by a common consent it was carryed from thence, as a place unworthy for their sinne, to Kiriath-jearim, because Abinadab an holy man dwelt there, and his house was thought most fit for so holy a thing to rest in, and the men of Kiriath-jearim were willing to receive it, say some, because they knew the Bethshemites were idolaters, and therefore unworthy that the Arke should bee with them. This was but two miles from Bethshemesb, and was one of the Cities of the Gibeonites, Josh. 9. 17. within the lot of the Tribe of Judah, but given to the Levites. It signifieth a City of Cowes, and stood but one mile from Jerusalem: Here Saul was anointed King by Samuel, and in this place, being called Gods hill, because of the Arke, Saul met a company of Prophets praising God with holy hymnes, and joyned with them in this kinde of prophécying, 1 Sam. 10. And here Jonathan the sonne of Saul thrust out a garrison of the Philistines, which held the men of this place in subjection, 1 Sam. 13. 3. so H. B. in Patriarchs travailes.

Mystically, by the abode of the Arke amongst the Philistines seven moneths, underst and the Gospels remaining amongst the Gentiles till near the end of the world, at what time it shall returne to the Jews again. By the smiting of these men for looking into the Ark unreverently, the smiting of those in the Church that use the sacraments unreverently. And when we suffer thus at Gods hand, we must not, as the men of Bethshemesb, cry out upon Gods severity, but consider our own sins, whereby we deserve it, and judge our selves therefore, and not desire for that wee suffer, to be rid of any holy thing, and to have it removed to another place, but use it more reverently and worthily for time to come: which some not doing, have the Arke taken from them to a people that will bring forth better fruits. If it be demanded why the Arke was not brought back to the Tabernacle in Shiloh again? Ans. Ier. 7. 12. Psal. 78. 60. for the sins of the Priests and people; and therefore it is most probable that God gave direction hereabout by Samuel, although it be not expresse. Rupert saith, that mystically hereby was figured out the synagogue of the Jews, which should afterwards be rejected, and that holy thing Christ removed from them.

CHAP. VII.

THE Arke is fetcht by the men of Kiriath-jearim, and placed in the house of Abinadab upon the hill, and his sonne Eleazar was by them sanctified to keepe the Arke, and here it abode 20 yeares, and all Israel is said to have lamented after the Lord. And it is thought by Jerom and others, that not onely the Arke was now gone from Shiloh, but the Tabernacle also: for it was in Nob, Ch. 21. but not said, when it was carryed thither, and 1 Chron. 16. 39. it is plainly intimated to have beene in Gibeon. Comestor for Abinadab hath Aminadab, and unto these words, where it remained 20 yeares, hee addeth, even unto the 8. yeere of the reigne of Saul, when hee tooke it into tents, and for these words, all Israel lamented after the Lord, hee hath these words, then Israel rested after the Lord, his wrath being pacified towards them. The Vulgar Latin also hath Aminadab in Gabaab, for Abinadab on the hill, and all Israel rested after the Lord. But גבעה is not a proper name in this place, seeing Gibeab or Gabaab was in Benjamin, this in Judah, and the word גמח jinnathu signifieth they lamented, not they rested, but another word written with נח, viz. נוח, so that the translator was deceived by the likenesse of the word, and Hebr. it is Abinadab. Our translation then is the best, in the house of Abinadab upon the hill, for so the word גבעה signifieth, and all Israel lamented after the Lord. Yet 2 Sam. 6. 3. where Dauids removing of the Arke from Abinadabs house is spoken of, it is said Abinadabs house, which was in Gibeab, as being another City, and not in Kiriath-jearim, but of this I shall speake more by and by. Here is no mention made of the Tabernacle any more, for in stead of a Tabernacle the Arke abode in an house, Abinadab is thought to have beene a Levite, and hee being now aged, and unable to doe this service, his sonne Eleazar was appointed unto it: But whether hee were a Levite or not, see more upon 2 Sam. 6. v. 9. Thus the house of Eli was rejected a long time, as was threatened, and afterwards in Solomons time for ever. Of a Tabernacle yet set up for the Arke in the City of David wee read againe, 2 Sam. 6. 17. The sanctifying of Eleazar was nothing else, saith Lyra, but their appointing him to this office to keepe the Arke covered, and to keepe men from approaching any more too neare unto it to gaze upon it. For the abiding of the Arke in Kiriath-jearim 20 yeares, this is generally held to have beene in the house of Abinadab, as the words seeme to imply, for if hee had not dwelt in that City, why should the men thereof have fetcht the Arke thither? Yet Lyra saith, that Gibeab where Abinadab dwelt, was another City in the Tribe of Benjamin, and that the Arke was not now carryed to his house, but long after, having first remained in Kiriath-jearim, then in Mizpah, in Gilgal, and in Nob, and then lastly it was kept in Abinadabs house: of which opinion of his see more upon Josh. 18. 1, 2. in my exposition there. Whereas Comestor saith, it remained here, till the 8. yeere of the reigne of Saul, that cannot bee true, because even in Dauids time wee read of it, as being there still. The reason, that might move Lyra to adjourne the bringing of the Arke to Abinadabs house so long, happily might bee, partly because he could not see, how it could bee true, that it stood there but 20. yeeres, seeing it remained there till the reigne of David, and before that under Samuel and Saul had passed 40. yeares, in the beginning of which time it was first brought thither, if when it was brought from Beisshem. to Kiriath-jearim it was placed there. But this is well resolved by Peter Martyr, Pellican and others, that the 20. yeares here spoken of were not the whole time of the arks being in Abinadabs house, but the time, till the solemne turning of the Israelites, and putting away their idols, at the exhortation of Samuel, as here followeth, v. 3, 4. after which it seemeth, that it abode there still, by that which is said 2 Sam. 6. untill the time of David, but onely that sometimes in this space it was happily removed to other places before mentioned upon occasion, and after a while brought backe to this place againe. But Peter Martyr thinketh, that not the Arke, but the Ta-

V. I. .

Schol. Hist.

Lyra.
Ossander.
Pellican.

Lyra.

2 Sam. 6.

Peter Martyr.
Pellican.
Ossander.

bernacle onely was in those places, Mizpeh, Gilgal and Nob, being disjoyned from the Arke alwayes after the taking of the Arke by the Philistims. For the lamenting of the house of Israel after the Lord: Peter Martyr readeth it, the whole house of Israel lamented, and followed after the Lord. Junius, they lamenting cryed unto the Lord, but herein the sense is more respected, then the rendering of the place verbatim, for so it is, they lamented after the Lord, but the meaning is, they were not moved with repentance by that great overthrow, which they had received by the Philistims, nor by the coming of the Arke backe againe, but having gone on in idolatry and other wickednesse after this 20 yeares together, and suffering much at the Philistims hands, and broken at length with many miseries, they now begin to be humbled, and to cry unto the Lord, as in other times of their oppressions, they had also formerly done.

V. 3.

Joseph. Antiq. lib. 6. c. 2.

All which is implied by the next words of Samuel, If yee returne to the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods, and Ashteroth from among you, and prepare your hearts to the Lord, and serve him onely, and hee will deliver you out of the hands of the Philistims: so that Josephus erred greatly in saying, that the people sought the Lord all these 20. yeares with sacrifices and prayers, which Samuel seeing makes his exhortation unto them. For if they had returned, the Lord would not have left them so long to the oppressions of their enemies, neither would there have been any neede for Samuel at this time to exhort them to put away their strange gods. It is more probable, that being offended with the great slaughter made amongst them at the Arkes returne, they let that stand in Abinadabs house, neglecting to seeke unto it, and following strange Gods, for which cause they were given over to the oppressions of the Philistims, and now wearied with sufferings they lamented, &c. touching Ashteroth and Baalim also, see Judg. 2. 13. If it bee demanded whether Samuel did not exhort them all these 20. yeares, it is answered by Tostatus and others, that without doubt hee did, but could not hitherto prevaile, for he being an holy Prophet and a Judge next after Eli, would not certainly neglect to doe his best endeavour to convert them, even from the beginning of his authority.

V. 4.

Then the children of Israel put away Baalim and Ashteroth and served the Lord onely: for if any other be served together with God, such service is abominable, whether it be an idoll of the heathen, or an image of the Papists; and the word עֲבָדָה, is to bee noted by the Sept. rendered ἐσθλὸν οὐκ, that the vanity of the Popish distinction may appeare, who say that λατρεία is to be given to God onely, but δουλία to saints and images also, for both are appropriated to the Lord, both here and Matth. 4. 10.

V. 5, 6.

Junius.

Then they were all gathered together to Mizpeh to Samuel, that hee might pray for them, as hee appointed, and they drew water and poured it out before the Lord and fasted on that day, and said, we have sinned, and Samuel judged them in Mizpeh. Of Mizpeh see before Judg. 11. in the history of Iephtah, but this was not the same, but another upon the border of Judab and Benjamin, as is shewed Josh. 11. 3. it was neare to Ramah, where Samuel dwelt, and famous for assemblies, Judg. 20. Some of the Rabbins thinke it was the same with Shiloh, where the Tabernacle was; but this cannot bee, if it bee true, which hath beene noted upon Judg. 20. and Ch. 21. 2, 12. And yet I cannot see, why this assembly should now be called to Mizpeh, unlesse the Tabernacle or Arke were there at this time, for to assemble before the Lord, is before the Tabernacle: wherefore it is held by Jerom and Tostatus, that the Tabernacle was now in this place, removed most probably by Samuels direction, and afterwards it was removed to Nob; and where it stood, the people came together & sacrifices were offered, the Arke in the meane season being onely kept safe and covered in Abinadabs house. Yet if an Oratory were there as 1 Maccab. 3. 46. they might assemble thither for his cause. For the water, which they are said to have poured out, Comest. saith it was a cursed water, which any idolater drinking had his lip hereby glued together, inseparably, & there he lugged the people, that is, taught them the judgements of the Lord. Yet some, hee saith, affirme, that hee tooke a certaine idoll and stamped it to powder, and made them to drinke thereof mixed mixed with water, and then by their beards judged who were guilty of Idolatry, and who not. Lyra also reciteth this exposition, but preferreth another of R. Solomon, who saith, that their pouring out of water, was in way of humiliation for their sinnes, by reason whereof they hereby acknowledged, that they were as water poured out, and had no strength: or, that of Jonathan Ben Oziel, they poured out water to signifie the teares, that came downe from their eyes out of the contrition of their hearts. And hee judged Israel there, that is, heard their complaints against one another, and made a reconciliation amongst them. Hugo saith, that they poured out water, to shew, that as water poured out returneth not againe, so they would no more returne to their idolatry. Junius following the Chald. saith, they shed teares in such abundance for their sinnes, as if they had drawne and poured out water in abundance. Peter Martyr having recited the expositions before-going, and rejecting that as a fable, of the water being drunke to try the Idolaters, of which mention is made by Jerom in tradit. Hebr. because the water was not drunke, but poured out, &c. and adding another of some Rabbins, that this was done as a symbole of the remission of their sinnes, as by water filthinesse is washed away; and that of Iosephus, that water was poured out for a drinke-offering, hee concludeth, that nothing else was here meant, but that they drew and poured out water to wash themselves, as in legall purifications it was required. But I rather preferre that before of some Rabbins, that this was done in humiliation, to signifie, that they were all as water poured out, that they ascribing no strength unto themselves, but relying upon God onely, hee might be on their side. Yet for Samuels judging Israel in this place, I hold with Peter Martyr, that most probably is meant his being made Judge now first there, because although it is said before, that he was known to be a Prophet, yet that he was Judge, we read not till this time.

Schel. Hyster.

The Lords of the Philistims hearing that all the Israelites were together in Mizpeh, as Iosephus saith, unarmed, they came up against them; and they being affraid, desired Samuel not to cease crying to the Lord for them; then hee took a sucking Lambe, and offered it up whole for a burnt-offering, and cryed to the Lord, who heard him, and thundered upon the Philistims that day, and they were discomfited before Israel. Iosephus relateth it thus, The people of Israel being at Samuel's appointment, gathered together to Maspha, the Philistims gathered together, thinking to set upon them suddenly, before they should think of their comming, and thus easily to overcome them: Then they besought Samuel to pray for them, who were now altogether unprepared, and had neither strength nor heart to goe to battaile against them, being so often already overcome by them. And when he had prayed and offered a sucking Lambe in sacrifice, the Philistims came in sight before that it was wholly consumed, but then the earth quaked under them, and gaped so in divers places, that many of them fell into it, and the rest were so smitten and burnt in part with often thunders and lightnings, that they had no strength to hold their weapons; wherefore they fled before Israel, and Samuel with the people pursued them, and slew very many of them, and following on his victory, hee recovered the land which the Philistims had formerly taken from them, from Ekrone even unto Gath, neither durst the Philistims come out to fight any more against them, but kept them within their owne bounds all the dayes of Samuel, as it also here followeth, v. 13, 14. Touching the sucking Lambe which Samuel is said here to have offered, some of the Rabbins thinke that hee himselfe did not offer it, but appointed the Priest to offer it, because hee was a Levite; but R. Kimbi better, that hee offered it himselfe, as hee might well doe by reason of his propheticall calling, for by vertue hereof Elias also offered sacrifice, 1 King. 18. It is said to bee a sucking Lambe, to shew that it was of no great worth, and so that God looketh not to the greatnesse of the gift, but to the heart of the offerer; and a Lambe was offered, to set forth the true Lambe of God Christ Iesus, by vertue of the sacrifice of whose death, God is made propitious to sinners. And Samuel cryed to the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him. Some thinke that Hugo Cardin.

Junius.

Peter Martyr.

V. 7, 8.

V. 9, 10.

Iosephus. Antiq.
lib 6. cap. 2.R. L. B. Gerson.
D. Kimbi.

Peter Martyr.

V. 10.

Lyra.

he answered him by fire sent downe from heaven to consume the sacrifice, as the Rabbins: some, that the next words shew how hee heard him, The Lord thundered that day upon the Philistims, &c. and of this kinde of hearing we are certaine, but not of the other. The Philistims came against them at this time, saith Lyra, because that being under their Tribute ever since the taking of the Arke, they were forbidden, to prevent rebellion, at any time to assemble together; wherefore hearing now that they were assembled contrary to this order, they came up against them, but the Lord turned it to their owne destruction, hee fought for his people from heaven, as hee did before, Iosh. 10. and Judg. 5.

V. 11.

Junius.

And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistims, and smote them to a place lying under Bethcar, that is, saith Junius, to a certaine Rock so called, between which and Mizpeh, Samuel is said in the next verse to have set up a stone. It is said indeed, v. 12, Samuel set up a stone between Mizpeh and Shen, as if by Shen, not Bethcar, but some other place, the boundary of the Philistims Countrey were meant; but Shen is by Junius rendred that Rocke, the word properly signifying a tooth; but because this Rock hung over like a tooth, this word is used to expresse it: so likewise Pagnine, and this is by Willet maintained: 1 Because Chap. 14. 4, 5. the same word is put for a rock. 2 Because Iosephus saith, that Bethcar was this rock set amongst the Coreans, from whom it had the name. But hee saith onely, that they pursued the Philistims even to the Correbeans (for that is the name of the place) and there he set up a stone for a monument of this victory, and called it fortis, strong, yet from hence it may bee gathered that the name Bethcar, or Bethcor came from those Coreans, of which hee speaketh.

Pagnin.
Willet.Ioseph. Antiq.
lib. 6. c. 2.

V. 13.

Junius.
Peter Martyr.

The Philistims being thus brought under, are said to have come no more into the coast of Israel; and the hand of the Lord was against the Philistims all the dayes of Samuel. The contrary to this seemeth to bee set forth, Chap. 10. 5. where a garison of the Philistims is said to have been at the hill of God, and Chap. 13. 50. they came up in very great multitudes, and pitched in Michmas; but the meaning here is, that they came no more against Israel with any success, whilst Samuel lived, for Jenathan and his Armour-bearer alone began to overthrow them, and then Saul pursued the victory against them. Junius saith, that they came not to enlarge their bounds any more, but defended them onely by Garisons. Peter Martyr, they came not till Samuel grew old, and his sons having the government committed to them, ruled ill: for then because of their new invasions, the people desired to have a King to fight for them. But this is manifestly against the words of the text, all the dayes of Samuel, and the first is best.

V. 14.

So Israel was againe enlarged, and lived in peace, for the Philistims were subdued, and they were in peace with the Amorites; whereby, as by a generall name, all the inhabitants of those parts are understood, both Philistims and others, the state of Israel was now quiet after this victory, and the Cities before taken from them restored.

V. 15.

Lyra.
Junius.

Peter Martyr.

And Samuel judged Israel all the dayes of his life. How could this be, seeing Saul was made King long before hee dyed? Lyra saith, It is meant only till Saul was made King. But Junius better, even when Saul was King, hee together with Saul judged them still, as appeareth, Chap. 11. 7. Chap. 15. where hee slayeth Agag; and Acts 13. 21. Samuel and Saul are joyned together in the government. And Peter Martyr more fully, although hee made his sonnes Judges, yet hee did not put himselfe out of this office; and when hee anointed Saul King, hee retained still a Judicative power over all, yea, even the King himself; and therefore he reproveth him, and anointeth David for King, so that he was as it were King of Kings, Saul was the ordinary Magistrate, and hee the extraordinary.

V. 16.

Junius.

And hee went from yeare to yeare in circuit to Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpeh, &c. For Bethel, Junius hath, the house of God, expounding it of Kiriath-jearim, where the Arke war, and therefore the people assembled thither at the three great feastivall feastivall times of the yeare appointed Exod. 23. and so it was a fit place for Samuel at such times to come and judge the people there. Gilgal was on the middle of the end of the Land eastward near Jordan; and Mizpeh at the other end westward, and so most fit for the people of all parts to assemble unto. Others take Bethel for a proper name of that City where Jacob had his vision, Gen. 28. H. Bunting saith, Bethel was but two miles from Gilgal, and from Ramab 16, and Mizpeh from Gilgal 30 miles. But Willet defendeth that of Junius, because it is called the house of God where the Arke was, Judg. 20. 18. 1 Sam. 3. 15. Chap. 10. 3. and it is most likely, that because the people assembled thither together at feastivall times, Samuel took this opportunity to come and judge them there. Yet to mee, a place properly called Bethel seemeth rather to be meant here, because the other names are proper, and Assemblies to holy Feasts were not so fit for judging Civill causes; and if hee had taken the opportunities of their meetings at Gods house, he should not have needed to have gone about to other places also, seeing he had them then all together in that one place. Samuel is here set forth for an example to other Rulers and Judges, that they should not put the people to unnecessary toyle in comming over far for judgement, nor otherwise oppresse or poll them, but provide for their good.

Having gone his Circuit, hee still alwayes returned to Ramab, where hee dwelt. But how could hee leave the Tabernacle, to which hee was dedicated by his mother for ever, to dwell in another place? Ans. When God advanced him to be Judge over Israel, hee called him out by a new calling from serving any more about the Tabernacle, and therefore hee might well leave that place to follow his calling, for vows hold no longer but till that Gods pleasure bee revealed to the contrary, so Peter Martyr; upon this see somewhat before, 1 Sam. 1. 28. Borrichius saith, as long as the Tabernacle was in Shiloh, hee was bound by his mothers vow to serve there, but now this place being destroyed, and the abode of the Tabernacle uncertaine, he was bound no longer; but I assent rather to the other.

And there hee built an Altar to the Lord; that is, saith Junius, at Kiriath-jearim, where the Arke was, being therefore called Bethel, v. 16. but it is plainly spoken of Ramab, and so Peter Martyr understandeth it, and others, justifying this his fact, because hee was a Prophet, and so did it by direction from God; although ordinarily no Altar might be made but at the place chosen by God; and the rather might this now bee done, because the Arke had now no certaine place, and happily it might then be brought to Ramab, although it be no where spoken of. Theodoret qu. 15. in 1 Reg. saith, before the Temple was set up, it was lawfull to build an Altar in other places; but because this was done by Elijah at Carmel after the Temple was built, he saith, it was to bee understood as an exception to the generall rule, that the men of God might set up Altars and sacrifice any where. The reason why an Altar was now set up here, was because the people gathered thither together often times to Samuel, and then it was consulted about things pertaining to the Weale publique, which it was not fit to doe without publique calling upon God; and the ground of prayer is faith, the ground of faith, Gods promises, and the promises are sealed up unto us by outward signes; so Peter Martyr.

Mystically by the thunder here sent against the Philistims, Rabanus understandeth the preaching of the Gospel, whereby errors are overthrowne, and pursued even to Bethchar, that is, till all error is purged out, and God is acknowledged, according to the signification of the word, the house of acknowledgement; and then Christ the true Ebenexer, or stone of helpe, in whom all our help and health, lyeth is set up, which is when we beleeve in him.

H. Bunting Patriar. gravitates.

Note.

Qu.

Borrichius.

V. 17.

Peter Martyr.

Deut. 12. 14.

Pellican.

Ofsander.

Rabanus.

The Mystery.

CHAP. VIII.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5

Vhen Samuel was old, hee made his sonnes Joel and Abiah Judges over Israel, and they were Judges in Beershebah, but because they tooke bribes, and perverted judgement, the Elders of Israel came to Samuel, and complained hereof, and asked a King to judge them like other Nations. The age of Samuel, saith Sallianus was now 60, for hee was borne when Eli had been High-priest, and Judge one year, and was 39 when hee dyed.

Lyra.

Iunius.

Borrichius.
Oflander.

Pellican.

Josephus.

Peter Martyr.

Samuel, saith Lyra, not being able any longer to travaile about, as hee had done, by reason of his age, made his sonnes Judges, thinking that they would tread in his steps, but hee was deceived in them. For these words, they were Judges in Beershebah; Junius hath it, even to Beershebah, that is, from Dan to Beershebah, all over Israel, as these two limits are put, Judg. 20. 1. but I cannot see how the word בְּנֵי שֶׁבַע properly signifying, in Beershebah, will bear this construction, for in the place alledged, Numb. 20. 1. it is עַד בְּנֵי שֶׁבַע even to Beershebah. Borrichius therefore and Oflander hold, that they were placed there, because it was furthest remote southward, and next to the Philistines country, where there was neede of the presence of a Judge, that might be able to withstand and provide against that enemy, and Samuel being old, could not now travaile so farre to judge the people. But this is not probable, because Beershebah was none of the places to which Samuel had used to travaile, but Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpeh. Pellican thinketh, that they dwelt there to vex the people, by making them to come long journeys for judgement, and there seemeth to mee to bee some antithesis between that which was before said touching their father Samuel his travelling about to divers places to judge the people for their greater ease, and their sloathfulnesse, abiding alwayes in one place onely, and not travelling about, or dividing themselves to severall places, that thus at the least the people might bee put to the lesse labour; and so this is mentioned not without some taxation, that they preferred their own ease and pleasure before the good of the Common-wealth; thus also Peter Martyr: yet I doe not thinke that they did thus purposely to vex the people, but out of a neglect towards them. If it bee said, this is not likely that they lived both in one place, and went not abroad to judge, seeing their father was yet living, and so hee would not have suffered it. I answer, it is likely, that being once in authority, they would not bee ruled by their father, as neither would Eli's wicked sons, nor some others since, that have bin made Kings whilst their fathers lived, but have rebelled against them. Josephus saith, that one of them dwelt in Dan, and the other in Beershebah, but this is against the Scripture. They dwelt farre from their father, and happily by his appointment, because he continued a Judge still, as was before said, Hee judged Israel all his dayes, and hee made them but his assistants now that hee was old, meaning doubtlesse, that they should go about as hee had done, he in the meane season judging all about Ramah, and rarely elsewhere.

Samuel in setting up his sonnes for Judges, saith Peter Martyr, sinned two wayes: 1 That hee did it contrary to all former presidents, for Gideon having the Kingdome offered to him and his sonnes, refused it; and likewise Moses, when hee saw that hee must depart out of this life, set not up his sonne, but prayed the Lord to provide him a man to goe before the people, and to govern them. 2 In that hee did thus, without asking counsell of the Lord; for if hee had asked, hee should have heard that Judges were not to bee set up by men, but by the Lord immediately. And therefore it succeeded accordingly, both his sonnes proved wicked, and the people shooke off both him and them. The wickednesse of his sonnes was very great: 1 They were covetous. 2 They tooke bribes. 3 Perverted judgement, and so the wicked were justified, and the righteous condemned, then which there cannot bee a greater pest to a Common-wealth. Wherefore Exod. 18. it is a property required in a Judge, that hee should hate covetousnesse; the Ancients pictured Justice without.

out eyes, and without hands, to shew, that a Judge should neither bee a respecter of persons, nor take bribes. The Areopagites judged alwayes in the darke, that both these evils might bee prevented. Cambyses caused an unjust Judge to bee sleaed, and with his skin a cover to bee made for the Judgement-seat, appointing his sonne to sit there and judge Causes. If any shall marvaile, that Eli was judged so severely for his sonnes faults, but Samuel not: Theodoret answereth, that they lived not neare to their father, but as farre off, so as that hee could not provide for a reformation. But whether did the people il hereupon in desiring a King? Ans. Pellican saith, that they sinned by curiosity, in that they desired not a reformation of the abuse, but an innovation of the government. Oflander, that they sinned by distrust in God, for that they thought that a Judge coming sometime of meane parentage, was not so formidable to the enemy, as a King, and therefore that they were not so safe under Judges: when as indeed they were not under the protection of the Judge, but of God, who raised him up immediately. Lastly, Willet saith, they sinned also by ingratitude towards Samuel, in that having received so many benefits from him, yet they rejected his government even whilst he lived. And this is one of P. Martyr's, who also saith, they sinned by desiring a King, after the manner of all other Nations, and not according to the rule of Gods Word, Deut. 17. and in that they desired a King without consulting with the Lord, or having direction and order from him hereabout. For it was not altogether unlawfull for them to desire to have a King, seeing the Lord had before propounded the case, if they would set a King over them, hee should bee one of their brethren, and not bee proud, &c. And to Abraham hee had promised, that Kings should come out of his loynes: and Jacob by the spirit spake in the scepter of Judah. But till God had pleased to give order for the making of a King, they should have rested in the present government by Judges, and desired that the abuses in Samuel's sons, should either have been reformed, or they turned out of their places. And as they sinned greatly in asking a King, so they did foolishly, because they desired to change from a better government by Judges, to a worse. For the Judge ruled them alwayes according to Gods Word, when God set a Judge over them, but there was danger of the contrary, if Kings were set up, as wofull experience afterwards proved, there being amongst twenty Kings, scarce foure godly. Againe, kings lived in greater state, and this must be maintained by the greater charge of the peoples; and themselves, their lands, and children must bee at the Kings service, which were free under Judges; and they were excluded from having a voice in matters of importance under Kings, whereas in the time of Judges, the Elders and people did bear sway. And in asking a King because Samuel's sons were wicked, they did foolishly, for how could they know, but that their King might be wicked also; & if the sons of him so a good father did thus degenerate, how could they but feare the like touching the Kings sonne, who must not now by a new-election, but by inheritance come to the Kingdome after him? yet this their unjust desire was guided by Gods providence, to accomplish Gods Word, That Kings should come of Abraham.

For these reasons before-going, their asking of a King displeased Samuel, but hee went to God by prayer, referring it to his direction. And God bade him hearken unto them, yet hee also sheweth himselfe to bee displeased with them, in that hee saith, They have not rejected thee, but mee, that I should not reigne over them, according to all the workes which they have done since I brought them up out of Egypt, even to this day, wherein they have forsaken mee, and served other Gods, &c. Whereby wee may see that God sometimes granteth men their desires in wrath, as the Quailes in the wilderness; and hee saith elsewhere, I gave them a King in my wrath, that wee may all learne in asking any thing of God, not to bee carried by our owne affections, but to bee regulated by his will. But how doth the Lord say, They have rejected mee: Lyra resolveth it thus, they have rejected mee, in that they have left mee to serve other Gods, and so now they reject thee my Vicegerent. Peter Martyr saith, that God here comforteth Samuel two ways. 1 That the ignominy now offered

Qu.
Pellican.
Oflander.

Willet.

Peter Martyr.

Deut. 17.

Gen. 17. 6.
Gen. 49. 10.

V. 6.

V. 7.

V. 8.

Note.
Numb. 11. 33.
Hos. 13. 11.
Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Prov. 8.

Rom. 13. 1.

V. 9, 10.

V. 11.

V. 12.

V. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Lyra.

D. Kimbi. 22

Peter Martyr.

Osiander.
Pellican.
Borrichius.

to him against himself, for hee was by God made Judge over them, and so hee being rejected for Judge, God himselfe was rejected for King. 2 That this was no new thing, for they had alwayes used the Lord thus, since their coming out of Egypt, casting him off from time to time to serve other Gods, therefore it might well bee patiently borne by Samuel, as not arguing any fault in him causing them thus to doe, but their rebellious disposition; and no greater dishonour was herein done unto him, then unto God himselfe. If a question bee made here, whether to have a King bee a rejecting of God, that hee should not reigne over us? I answer, no, for even Kings reigne by God, and when a good King reigneth, God ruleth by him; yea, a Tyrant is set up by God, and hath his authority from him, and therefore must bee obeyed, but for the abuse of his power hee shall answer to God another day. Now the people of Israel are said to have rejected God from ruling over them, because they desired an alteration of that form of government by him setled amongst them, and did as much as in them lay, reject Gods government. Yet hee condescendeth to their desire, for the hardnesse of their hearts, as Moses yeelded, that a bill of divorcement should be given; lest Samuel being denyed to make them a King, they should have set up one themselves.

Then God bade Samuel tell them the manner of the King, and hee said unto them, Hee will take your sonnes, and appoint them for himselfe for his chariots, and to bee his horsemen, and some shall runne before him, &c. And will set them to care his ground, and to reap his harvest, &c. And he will take your fields, &c. And hee will take the tenth of your seed, &c. This, saith Lyra, is to bee understood in the case of necessity for the common good, for in this case, all things are the Kings, and to bee taken and used by him, as the present need requireth for the defence of the Common-wealth, as for the good of the body, all the members thereof are to bee exposed to danger. But out of this case of necessity there bee many things exprest, whereunto the right of a King extendeth not, as namely all those things that make the subjects condition servile, and respect not the common good, but rather the will of him that reigneth. And these things doth Samuel declare unto them, that they seeing how great a power a King should have, so that hee might easily turne his Kingly authority into tyranny, might hereby be deterred from seeking to have a King, which would be so inexpedient for them. Wherefore to shew what a King might not commonly doe de jure, Deut. 17. it is said, he shall not multiply Horses to himselfe, nor bring the people back into Egypt, that is, into a servile condition. Whereas it is added here, And yee shall bee his servants, the meaning is none other, but if hee shall turne Tyrant, as hee may easily doe, by reason of his great power. R. Kimbi saith, that these things are so of the right of a King, that without them hee is no King, according to some Rabbins, but according to others, that these are commemorated onely by way of communication of that which would follow upon this change of government. Peter Martyr saith, that the true right of a King, is described Deut. 17. here the true right is not propounded, but the usurped, and this the present case required, because they desired to have a King after the manner of the Nations about them, and those Kings did thus tyrannize over their subjects, and pill and poll them unreasonably, and tooke such outward pompe unto them, as that they might thereby most terrifie their subjects. If it be demanded, may not a godly King then take of his subjects, whereby to maintaine himselfe in that port, which belongeth to a King? He answereth, hee may exact tribute according to reason, and maintain a royall pompe, but for the use of the Common-wealth, and not for riot. And that here is not set forth what a King might by right doe, but is prophetically foretold, what hee would doe for their punishment, is held also by Osiander, Pellican, and Borrichius; and Gregory, c. 10. it is not here prescribed, but shewed, what reprobate Kings would do, but the godly avoid, for subjects are to bee defended by Kings, and not spoyled of their goods. But if any shall contend, that not things to bee avoyded, but to bee done, are here mentioned, the right of Tyrants is written for that King, who is asked, the Lord being rejected cted. And Tostatus saith, that all things here set downe, are not put as the rights of Kings, but as the evils, which for the greatnesse of their power they can doe. Amongst whom it is noted, that their King should tyrannize over them three wayes: 1 By taking things violently from them, and not by order of Law. 3 By abusing the goods taken in bestowing them upon his favourites. 3 By basely using their persons, as if they were his slaves or servants.

Ed

And yee shall cry unto mee because of your King in that day, but I will not heare you. Hereby is shewed, that a King being once set up, although the government bee not so good, yet hee can never bee put downe againe; as the horse having once received man on to his back to pursue the stagge, could never shake him off againe. And this prophesie of the miserable case that they should bee in under Kings, tooke manifest effect, in that they had all wicked Kings, except foure, under whom they suffered greatly, and at last for their wickednesse went into captivity; so Peter Martyr. But yet hee disputeth at large, and proveth, that the government of the Church ought not to bee Monarchicall, but alwayes Aristocraticall, because this forme of government was first settled by Christ, when hee gave the keyes of the kingdome of heaven to all the Apostles alike, and the power of forgiving sinnes, and this form may none ever presume to alter without his allowance, to the worlds end.

But the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel, &c. for the words further added, Nay, but wee will have a King over us, that is, saith Lyra, nay, but the Lord will heare us although wee have a King, and therefore wee will have one. But the word [nay] is rather opposed to the dehoration before-going, not to persist to aske a King, and so Peter Martyr understandeth it, saying, that they answered as a people headily carryed to have their owne wills, whatsoever should come of it. For although under Judges God had alwayes wonderfully protected them, when they lived in obedience to his lawes; yet because all generally flocked not to the Judge, whereby they thought that they were the weaker, they would now have a King that might command all, thinking, that thus they should bee the stronger: forgetfully passing over Gods gracious dealing towards them under the Judges, whom hee had raised up from time to time, and the miseries which they had suffered under Abimelech in the short time of his reigne.

Samuel seeing that he nothing prevailed, related their words unto the Lord, who bade him againe make them a King, and so for that time hee dismissed the assembly, hereby shewing, that God would shortly set up one over them, to whom alone this belonged by the law, Deut. 17. and in the meane season they were to waite upon him.

CHAP. IX.

Here is shewed how the Lord satisfied the importunate desire of the people in making Saul King over them. And therefore hee is first described, and then the occasion and meanes of his comming to Samuel to bee anointed King. Hee is described first by his parentage, he was the sonne of Kish, the son of Abiel, the sonne of Zeror, &c. a mighty man of power, 1 Chron. 8. 33. Kish is said to bee the sonne of Ner, but he most probably had two names, as many others, being called by the one here Abiel, and by the other there Ner. 2 Hee is described by his youth, comliness and stature, A choice young man, and a goodly, neither was there amongst all the children of Israel a goodlier person then bee, from his shoulders upward hee was higher then all the people. For these words, A choice young man and a goodly, the Vulg. Latin hath, electus & bonus, choice and good: and for the next words, there was not amongst the children of Israel a better then bee, and this reading is according to the Hebrew; wherefore Lyra and others say, that hee is here commended from the goodnesse of his nature and disposition, as in the words following from his stature. But from

V. 18.

*Peter Martyr.*V. 19.
Lyra.P. Martyr.

V. 20, 21, 22.

V. 1.

V. 2.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

from his goodnesse, saith Peter Martyr, hee afterwards degenerated, as also many more have done, when they have attained to a kingdom, or to any other great dignity, they have been good at the first, but afterwards tyrannicall or epicurish; so that we have need continually to pray that our Kings and Rulers may alwayes persevere in goodnesse. Yet most Interpreters, saith he, expound it goodly, as respecting the forme of his body, which is the more probable, because it is by and by added, From his shoulders upward hee was higher, &c. I see no reason but that it may bee taken both wayes, hee had a good stature, strength, and comlineffe of body, and a good disposition, and so was a man of all others most fit in humane reason to bee made King. Hee is here commended, saith Martyr, from all sorts of causes; the formall, because there was no ambition, deceit, or violence used to get this kingdome, but meerly the will and providence of God effected it: the finall, that the people might bee defended from the incursions and violence of their enemies: the efficient, God, who shewed him to Samuel, and bade him anoint him King: and the materiall, Saul himselfe, who came of a father a mighty man, and therefore was likely to be such himselfe also, seeing mighty men beget mighty men, was now in the prime of his age, and at his greatest strength, of a good condition, and stature, and forme; as it was said of Priamus, fit for an Emperour. Of his City, no mention is made here, for it was Gibeah, which was infamous for the great wickednes committed there upon the Levites concubine, and therefore it is let passe in silence.

V. 3.

And the Asses of Kish, Sauls father, were lost, &c. Hee tooke great delight in Asses, saith Josephus, and therefore kept of the fairest sort; and by sending out his sonne Saul to looke them up, hee shewed, in what manner great men brought up their sonnes in those dayes, not in idlenesse and pleasure, but to looke to their cattell. In prophane Histories we read of Hercules, that he kept an heard of bullocks; and Apollo served King Admetus in the same office; and Paris the son of king Priamus kept sheep.

H. Bunting. Fatriar. travels.
Junius.

H. Bunting.

Junius.

And Saul passed over Mount-Ephraim, which was, saith one, 4 miles from Gibeah, the City from whence he came. Then hee went into the land of Salisab, and to the land of Salim, that is, 12 miles. Salisab was in the tribe of Benjamin, 2 King. 4. 42. Of Salim, see Job. 3. 23. it was not farre from Jordan: then hee went to the land of Jemini, which was also in the tribe of Benjamin, 16 miles from Salim, but Salisab, saith the same Author, was in mount-Ephraim, but Junius in Benjamin, alledging 2 King. 4. 42. but there is no mention made of the tribe wherein this land lay, yet it seems not to have been in mount-Ephraim, because it is spoken of as a distinct place therefrom.

V. 5.

Then they came to the land of Zuph, this is thought by Junius and others to have beene Ramah, where Samuel dwelt, otherwise called Ramathaim Zophim, and the land of Zuph, from Zuph, the first in Samuels pedegree, Ch. 1. 1. and this is not unlikely, because here Samuel dwelt, as appeareth, v. 6. His servant said unto him, Here is a man of God, an honourable man in this City &c. and to this man when hee advised him to goe to aske about the Asses, Saul tooke care for some gift to bring unto him, and so they resolved to give him the fourth part of a shekel of silver, which his servant had about him. Here it may be demanded, whether Samuel being a Prophet of the Lord did use to take gifts for doing any act of his propheticall office, seeing Elisab would not take any thing of Naaman, and Ebezi his servant was punished with the Leprosy for taking? Peter Martyr answereth, it is held by Josephus and by Jerom after him, that it was Sauls error to thinke, that the Prophet would take so mething for his divination, but wee read not, that hee tooke ought of him, but rather gave unto him, for hee made him to dine with him: and in the like error was Jeroboams wife, when shee went with her gifts to the Prophet for her sicke sonne, for neither doe wee read there that any thing was taken. It is a difference betweene a true Prophet and a false, these doe their office gratis, they for rewards, as is complained Mich. 3. and wee may see in Balaam. For gifts doe blinde the eyes, and are of force to make men speake pleasing things,

V. 6.

V. 7.

V. 8.

Qu.

2 Kings 5.
P. Martyr.
Hieronym. in qu.
V. T. et in Mich.

1 Kings 14.

things, although fallily. The reason, why a Prophet should take nothing is given by Christ, freely yee have received freely give, wherefore Simon Magus was rejected by Peter, when he offered him money, and Saul seemeth not to have knowne any difference between a wizzard and a man of God, which made him to thinke of a gift: yet some excuse him, because to come to a Prophet was to come to God, and before God it was provided by the law, that none should appeare empty. But admit, that Samuel received his gift, it was so little, as that it is not worth the speaking of, for it was but the 4 part of a shekel, that is 5. d. or 6. d. at the most, but now the rewards of Priests are the price of great farmes and and fields. Thus hee out of Jerom, but in conclusion he saith, hee spake not this, because it was altogether unlawfull for a Prophet to take any thing, for Jeremiah received bread of the King dayly, Elisab received 20. loaves of those that brought them, and many Prophets were fed by Obadiab, and he that preacheth the Gospel, must live of the Gospel; but to shew that they ought not to take gifts to the enriching of them, but for their necessary maintenance.

Now it was their manner of speach of old, when they went to a Prophet, to say, Let us goe to the Seer, for a Prophet was called a Seer, &c. It is not meant, that a Prophet was thus called of old and not now also, when these things were done, but this name of Seer hee was called by a long time and still, for Saul inquired for Samuel by this name, v. 11. And a Prophet was thus called partly because hee foresaw things to come, and things done secretly, as Elisab; and partly because God revealed himselfe unto him by visions and dreames, as Numb. 12. 6. And lest Gods people should seeme to want the meanes of being satisfied in cases of inquiry, which the heathen had by their wizzards, even particular things and of small moment were revealed by Gods Spirit to his Prophets, so that Saul might well goe to inquire of Samuel about his fathers lost asses, and by him be satisfied. But now wee must be content without such meanes, and not goe to wizzards to know what is become of our lost things, as did the heathen, who knew not God, but in stead of God, served the Devill. It must suffice us, that wee have the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven more plainly revealed unto us by Christ the head of Prophets, although wee have none other revelations touching any thing in this world concerning any of us in particular, and suffer much by losses and crosses here.

And as they went up the hill to the City, they found young Maidens going out to draw water, and asked them, saying, Is the Seer here, &c. The City to which they came, was Ramah, where Samuel dwelt: The Maidens whom they asked for the Seer, did not onely tell them, that hee was there, but also that there was a sacrifice that day in the high place, and that Samuel would bee there to blesse the sacrifice, neither would the people eate thereof, till hee had blessed it. Here the conceit of R. Solomon, cited by Comestor and Lyra, is not worth the relating, That these Maidens being taken with the beauty of Saul, stayed him a while to looke upon him, using more words then needed: for contrarywise it is said, They bade him make haste to speake with Samuel before hee went up to the sacrifice, v. 12. For the sacrifice here spoken of, they say, some hold it to have been onely a feast prepared purposely against Sauls comming, which was the day before revealed to Samuel, v. 15. but some a peace-offering, a great part of which was spent in feasting, and then, saith Lyra, a sacrifice might be offered in any place, and not before the Tabernacle or Arke onely, as was shewed before, 1 Sam. 7. The first, that it was onely a feast, is followed by Junius, who therefore rendreth it, There is this day a feast, &c. because a sacrifice might not bee offered but before the Tabernacle: but this reason, as hath been already shewed, is of no force, for an Altar was by Samuel built in Ramah, 1 Sam. 7. 17. The second, which is better, is followed by Peter Martyr, and Osiander, and this proveth it to have been a sacrifice, because it was in the High-place, unto which they should not have needed to goe, if it had been onely a feast, and in High-places they used to sacrifice, before the Temple was built. If it bee objected,

V. 9.

Bor.haus.

Junius.

2 King. 5. ch. 6.

Pellican.

V. 11.

V. 12.

V. 13.

Schol. Hist.
Lyra.

Junius.

Peter Martyr.
Osiander.

Ob.

Sol.

Willet.

D. Kimbi.

Peter Martyr.

Gen. 3.

1 Tim. 4. 5.

Act. 15. 9.

Tit. 1. 15.

Luke 11.

V. 14, 15, 16,
17, 18, &c.

Lyra.

Hieron. lib.
Hebr. qu.

Junius.

Willet.

objected, v. 24. the shoulder is set before Saul, which was the Priests part, Lev. 7. 32. and therefore it should not have been so done, unless it had been a feast without a sacrifice. Willet answereth well, that the Priests part was the right shoulder, and this might be the left, seeing it is only called the shoulder, but not said which shoulder. For Samuel's blessing of the sacrifice before they ate, that is, those parts thereof, which were to feast withall, that was by thanksgiving, according to the commendable custome in use amongst the Jews: For as David Kimbi hath it, the Master of the house, when they went to meat, took bread and blessed the Creator of the world for it, and then taking the cup hee did likewise: according to which custome our Lord did at his last Supper, at the Paschall feast, even before hee came to the institution thereof. And according to this pious custome doe wee Christians blesse our meats and drinkes, before wee eate, and blesse God for them after; not that they are not all good in themselves without our blessing of them, but because they were cursed to man for sinne, that they may not bee uncleane, but sanctified and made pure unto us, which is by faith and prayer, as the Apostile teacheth, saying, They are sanctified by the Word and prayer, that is, by faith wrought by the Word, which purifieth, and so maketh all things pure unto us, for to the pure, all things are pure; and prayer, whereby their sanctification is in faith craved, and attained, and the sanctifying of our selves also, seeing by prayer we attaine the Spirit of grace and sanctification.

Saul and his servant hearing this, went and met Samuel, who being before advertised by the Lord, that a man should come unto him that day, whom hee should anoint for King, was now told that this was the man. Wherefore so soon as Saul asked him for the Seers house, he invited him to the feast which he had prepared, saying, That hee would tell him all that hee desired to morrow. The phrase used, is, that God told Samuel in his eare, wherein it is spoken after the manner of men, who when they tell any thing to one another secretly, are said to tell it in his eare. V. 19. hee saith, I will tell thee all that is in thine heart, whereby it may be demanded what Samuel meant hereby; for that hee meant not touching the Asses, the next words, v. 20. doe declare, wherein hee for the present resolveth him, that the Asses were found, willing him therefore not to set his heart upon them. Lyra saith, in the Hebr. Questions; there is a tradition, that Saul had a dreame that hee was upon the top of a Palme-tree, which fore-shewed his regall dignity, about which his minde was still troubled, and of this Samuel speaketh. Junius rendreth the words thus, I will dismiss thee in the morning, but whatsoever is in thine heart I doe now shew unto thee, namely, touching the Asses: but how the Hebrew will heare this reading, I cannot see; for both the words in this verse are, וְכָל אֲשֶׁר בְּלִבְךָ לֵךְ And I will shew thee all that is in thine heart; and in the next verse וְלֵאחֻזְנוֹת and for the Asses; so that there was certainly somewhat else that Samuel knew to be in Saul's minde, touching which hee promised to resolve him the next morning. Yet Willet stands for that of Junius, that hee promised to shew him nothing else but touching the Asses, arguing, that hee could not meane any thoughts that hee had touching the kingdome, because Saul made so strange of it when it was mentioned unto him. But although the dreame before spoken of, seemeth to be but a dreame of the Rabbins, yet it may well be held, that the people generally being in expectation who should by Samuel be appointed for King, Saul was in the same expectation also, and comming to Samuel, and seeing him to use him so respectfully, it might then be a question then beginning to arise in his minde, whether hee would lay this honour upon him: not that hee thought himselfe fit for it, or desired it, for the words hereafter used by him shew the contrary, and his hiding of himselfe afterwards, when hee was sought for to be made King, but out of a fear that hee might after hee had feasted him, declare him to be King, the burthen of which high honour in those dangerous times hee would willingly have declined. And to this most aptly agree the words following, v. 20. On whom is all the desire of Israel? is it not on thee, and on all thy fathers house? that is, seeing thou thou must in thy heart now, whether I have any such intent in inviting thee, to make thee King, bee it knowne unto thee, that thou art hee whom all Israel have so earnestly sought unto mee for, although they know not yet thy person; for they desire to have a King, and thou art the man by God appointed, and therefore, I say, their hearts are set upon thee. V. 16. Where the Lord saith, Hee had looked upon the affliction of the people, and heard their cry, and so would bring a man of Benjamin to Samuel, whom hee should anoint over them: it may bee doubted how hee saith thus, seeing they were wicked, and unworthy to have their cry heard, forsomuch as God heareth not sinners, and what their afflictions were, in regard of which they needed one to deliver them? Peter Martyr answereth, that the goodnesse of God appeared in this, that hee would heare the cries of people in affliction, although wicked, for thus hee useth to extend his bounty even to such, to winne them to repentance. Againe, although they were for the most part wicked, yet some doubtlesse amongst them were godly, and of them it may be understood, that hee heard their cries. For the kinde of affliction now urgent upon them, hee saith, that the King of Ammon had gathered a great Army to come against them, of which they were sore affraid, but then it would have been said, that he may save them out of the hands of the Ammonites, whereas it is not said so, but out of the hands of the Philistims: their affliction then was the Philistian oppression, under which they had long lived, and from whom Samuel had once delivered them, and now it seemeth they grew formidable to them againe. For the place where Samuel and Saul met, it is said, v. 18. Saul drew neare to Samuel in the gate; but v. 14. When they were come into the City, Samuel came out against them to go up to the High-place: if they were come into the City, how could they come to Samuel in the gate; or, as it is in the Hebr. in the midst of the gate? The Chaldee Paraphrast to resolve this, readeth it, within the gate, and so Junius; and this must needs bee the meaning, when they were come a little within the gate, they met him; The Septuagint to make these two verses to agree, render v. 18. thus, Then Saul drew neare to Samuel in the midst of the City: but the Hebr. word is שער signifying a gate, and not a city. For Saul's answer to Samuel, Why speakest thou so to mee, seeing I am a Benjaminite, of the least of all the Tribes, &c. some thinke that hee spake thus in hypocrisie; but others simply, as not thinking himselfe fit for this high dignity. For the Tribe of Benjamin had been lately wasted by the warre, Judg. 20. and so was become now the smallest of all the Tribes, but afterwards hee was corrupted with hypocrisie, and other grosse vices. Lyra also saith the same, that Saul spake thus in humility, and so did Gedeon before, Judg. 6. but yet his fathers house was not so small, for hee was a mighty man, so that there was some dissimulation in Saul when hee said so, which was not without fault, although spoken in humility. Hugo reading it as the Vulg. Latine doth, Am not I a son of Jemini, and so it is in the Hebrew, saith, that there are two opinions; 1 That Jemini was of the meanest family in Benjamin. 2 That a sonne of Jemini was the same with a Benjamin, seeing Iamin signifieth, a right hand, and Ben, a sonne; and therefore Saul meant not any particular family, but onely that hee was of Benjamin the least Tribe: And his fathers house, saith Josephus, was of great note in that Tribe, wherefore his family was not so meane, but that he spake thus in humility of it. Touching the words before-going, v. 20. Upon whom is all the desire of Israel, &c. the Vulg. Latine hath it, whose shall the best things of Israel bee, shall they not bee to thee and to thy fathers house? Whereupon Lyra, shall they not bee in thy power to take when thou art King, and thy childrens and kindreds? for this hee had shewed, Chap. 8. should bee the Kings power; and his sonne Isbosheth was King after him seven yeares; and Abner, who was of his kindred, was Captaine of his host. The Hebrew word is, כל-החמה which may bee rendered, all the desire, or every desirable thing, or best thing, and this last way it best agreeth, because Saul was yet unknowne to all Israel, and it implyeth a good reason why hee should take no greater care for the asses, because all should bee at his command, which was best in Israel.

Y

And

V. 16.

*Peter Martyr.Chald. Paraphr.Berthelm.
Junius.
Pellican.Lyra.Hugo Card.Lyra.*

V. 22.

Lyra.

V. 23, 24.

R. Solomon.

Junius.

V. 25.

V. 26.

V. 27.

Peter Martyr.

And Samuel tooke Saul and his servant, and brought them into the Parlour, and made them sit in the chief place amongst them that were bidden. The Vulg. Latine, for Parlour, hath triclinium; which Lyra expoundeth of a room, that had three rankes of beds to sit downe upon to eate meat, for of old they used to sit upon beds of these rowes or rankes: the first was for the chiefe guests; the second for the middle sort; and the third for the meanest; now Saul and his servant was placed in the first, hee being herein honoured as the King that should bee. Saul being thus placed, the Cooke is bidden to bring the portion of meat prepared for him; and being brought, Samuel biddeth him to eate thereof, saying, Vnto this time it hath been kept for thee, since I said I have invited the people; here a question ariseth, how it is said to have been kept or reserved for him, seeing he came up with Samuel to the feast, before whose comming it was said before, that they would not eate; if then he came at the beginning of the feast, how could it bee kept? Answe. Some thinke that Samuel having begun to eate with his guests, when hee heard of Saul's comming, went out to meet him, and then returning againe and bringing him with him, hee spake thus; but this cannot bee, because Samuel knew by revelation the certain time of Saul's comming to him; and therefore this feast being made for his entertainment, hee did doubtlesse stay for his comming, before that hee went up to it, and all the relation before-going, sheweth, that Saul came thither with Samuel at his first going up. R. Solomon therefore resolveth it best, the other guests had their parts set out by themselves, but this part being the best, was set aside from the rest, after that the meat was prepared, being kept hot happily with more care, as being for a more honourable person, and so when the feast was served in, the Cooke was bidden to bring that first, and set it before Saul, and then Samuel used these words to him.

For the next words, since I said I have invited the people; Hebr. is, saying, I have invited, that is, as Junius best hath it, saying to the Cooke, or when I spake unto him, and told him, that I had invited guests, that hee might prepare accordingly, I tooke order that this part should bee kept for thee; the Vulg. Latine leaving out this word [saying] hath it, since I invited the people; the Gen. B. saying to Saul, I have also invited the people, that hereby hee might know, that Samuel knew of his comming before, by the preparation made, and the peoples comming together at that time upon Samuel's invitation.

And when they were come downe from the High-place, Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the house; that was secretly, as is conjectured, about the duty of a King, which was a thing not yet publicquely to bee spoken of in the hearing of others, and therefore the next morning the servant is sent away before, that he might not heare, v. 27. and for this purpose the top of the house, there being a plaine place to walke upon, and a battlement, was the fittest for them two to be upon alone after supper, as the manner then was to goe up at such times, and to walke there.

And Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, the word may as well bee rendred on the top of the house, and so it agreeth best, for most probably Saul was lodged there all night, and so the Vulg. Latine hath it expressely, Saul lay upon the top of the house. Being called up by Samuel, he accompanyeth him to the end of the City, bidding him to send his man away before, whilst he told him the word of the Lord touching the kingdom. But why must this bee spoken so secretly? Peter Martyr saith, that Saul being afterwards chosen by lot, might know all this to have been done by the counsell of God, and so acknowledge his favour, and that he might know lots to be of Gods disposing, considering what followed after this. But this is onely a reason of Samuel's speaking to him now, and afterwards finding him out by lot, the reason of the secrecie was, that it not being known to the people before, what Samuel now did, he might proceed to the casting of lots more kindly to find out, whom God would have to reigne, sith lots are to find out that which was secret before.

CHAP. X.

Here Samuel first anointeth Saul, and then telleth him the signes that should follow for his confirmation; with what oyle hee was anointed, whether with the holy oyle which was appoynted for the anointing of Priests, or other oyle, is uncertaine. Peter Martyr saith, that David Kimbri affirmeth it not to have been of that holy oyle, because none might be anointed therewith but the Priest onely, which hee saith is a weake reason, seeing God at his pleasure could allow a further use thereof to anoint Kings. But of this enough before upon Exod. 30. 23. For the reason why Kings were anointed, as also Priests before, it was to set forth the Spirit, wherewith they should bee indued requisite in men so highly dignified. At this day, saith Peter Martyr, there is some cacozelia in anointing Kings, for being typicall it was done away in Christ, they are anointed now, who are indued with the Spirit, although no ceremony of oyle bee used, as our Lord is said to have been anointed with the oyle of gladnesse, although wee never read of any oyle powred upon his head to anoint him to his office. But although the anointing of Priests ceaseth, as typicall, yet the King being called the Lords anointed, as by a proper name, it seemeth alwayes to bee as necessary at his inauguration, as his Crowne. In that Samuel is said here to have taken a viall of oyle, but when hee anointed David, an horne of oyle, some note the fragility of Sauls kingdome, and the durability of Dauids set forth hereby, because a vial is made of earth or of glasse, which is soon broken; and therefore Jebu, in whose family the kingdome continued but a while, was anointed with a viall of oyle also. And Samuel kissed him; 1 In token of love and good will. 2 Of subjection unto him; as the phrase is used, Psal. 2. 12.

For the signes given; 1 When thou art gone from mee, thou shalt finde two men by Rachels sepulchre in the border of Benjamin, at Zelzah, &c. Here a question ariseth, because Rachel was buryed neare unto Bethlehem, which was in the tribe of Judah, how her sepulchre could bee said to bee in the borders of Benjamin? R. Solomon saith, that it was meant, the two men who should tell him that the Asses were found, were at that time neare Rachels sepulchre, but by that time he came to the borders of Benjamin, they should meet him there: but this device, saith Peter Martyr, is needlesse, because although the place of Rachels sepulchre was neare Bethlehem which was in Judah, yet it followeth not that it was in Judah, but in the borders of Benjamin extending neare unto Bethlehem. Lyr saith, that the borders of both tribes met here.

Then thou shalt come to the plaine of Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up to God to Bethel, one carrying three kids, another three loaves, and the third a bottle of wine, &c. For the plaine of Tabor, the Vulg. Latine hath, the oake of Tabor; and Comestor saith, that Tabor here is the name of a man, and not of any place. One saith, that the name of this place was Zilzababour, some two miles from the sepulchre of Rachel, where hee met the two men. But what is meant by Bethel here? Ans. It is most commonly taken for the Bethel, where Jacob anointed a pillar, Gen. 28. and they say, that till the Arke was fixedly placed in a certaine place, it was lawfull to sacrifice wheresoever there was an Altar, and therefore the Altar of Jacob being at Bethel, they came thither to sacrifice. But Junius will not have Bethel a proper name either here, or 1 Sam. 7. 16. the reason whereof see there; and therefore hee rendreth it in both places the house of God, expounding it of Kiriath-jearim, where the Arke was, and so the house, wherein was the house of God, because they might not sacrifice in any other place, but where the Arke was. But this remaineth to bee proved, till which time I subscribe to the generall Tenet, and the words seem plainly to confirm it, for if the house of God had been meant elsewhere, it would have been said, and might more aptly, to his house in Kiriath-jearim, because it was said before, to God. Moreover, Bethel was a place of note, as Gilgal and Mizpeh, 1 Sam. 16. there being happily in every of them an Altar

V. 1. 2.

Exod. 30. 23.
Peter Martyr.1 Sam. 16.
Pellican.

V. 2.

Gen. 35. 19.

R. Solomon.

Peter Martyr.

Lyr.

V. 3.

Schol. Histor.

H. Bunt. Patri-archs unavailes.

Lyr.

Schol. Histor.

Hugo Cardin.

P. Martyr

Joseph. Chald.

Septuag. Vatab.

Borheus.

Junius.

Qu.

D. Kimbi.

Peter Martyr.

V. 5.

Chald. Pellican.

Borkeau.

R. Solomon.

1 Sam. 7. 1.

Lyra.

Hugo Card.

Iunius.

Iosephus.

Rabanus.

Lyra.

Schol. Hist.

Peter Martyr.

Borkeau.

P. Martyr.

tar in those dayes, as well as in Ramah. The kids, loaves, and wine which they carryed, were doubtlesse for sacrifice, for meat-offerings and drink-offerings. But whereas it is said, they gave Saul two loaves, a question is made how they could thus doe, seeing they carryed them to God, and being for an offering to him, they were by no meanes to bee turned to another use. D. Kimbi saith, that they had more loaves for their owne use, then those that they carryed to offer, and of them they gave Saul two, and not of the offerings: but Peter Martyr better, they meeting Saul hungry, and ready to perish for want, thought it would bee more acceptable to God, to give him of their bread intended for sacrifice, then to keep it for sacrifice in this case of necessity, for God hath said, I will have mercy and not sacrifice. This is true indeed, if Saul were now in such need of food, but how that should be, I cannot see, forso-much as hee had not yet travailed farre, since Samuel left him, viz. not above two miles and an halfe, and hee was also of a strong and able body. There was then doubtlesse some other thing in it, God inclined their hearts to give him these loaves, as it were a sacrament to confirm him touching the kingdom, as Peter Martyr also speaketh, God who had appointed him to bee King, would have them now meeting and saluting him, to offer him a present, as to a King; for so men use to present Kings with gifts where they come, and that of their most precious things, and such were these loaves, seeing they were part of Gods offerings; and if God extraordinarily moved them by his Spirit to give them, who dares question the lawfulness of the fact?

After this, thou shalt come to the hill of God, where is a garrison of the Philistims, &c. This hill of God is understood by some to bee Kiriath-jearim, where the Arke was in Abinadab's house upon the hill. But others will have another place meant, where was a Colledge of Prophets, and this saith Iunius, was in Gibeab, and Chap. 13. 3. agreeth, where Iamthan is said to have smitten the garrison of the Philistims in Geba; and Iosephus, for the hill of God, hath, the towne of Gabbatha. Rabanus saith, it was some hill, where God had bestowed some great benefit, being therefore called Godshill. Tostatus is for Gibeab in Benjamin, because it was in the end of Saul's journey, and where hee was known. That it was not the hill in Kiriath-jearim is plain, because the Arke being brought out of the Philistims Countrey, should not have been placed so neare their forces; and Gibeab, or Geba more probably was the place; and to make it the more evident, Hebr. it is גבעת האלוהים to Gibeab of God. But how could the Prophets bee safe, where a garrison of the Philistims was? Iunius answereth, religious persons were priviledged even amongst their enemies: some thinke that a garison of the Philistims had been there in times past, but not now: but that they were there now appeareth, Chap. 13. 3. Whereas it is said, Chap. 7. that the people of Israel tooke from the Philistims all their Cities which they formerly possessed: It is answered, that they had still some strong holds in their Land, where they kept garrisons, but herewith they onely defended their owne, but invaded not them all the dayes of Samuel, at the least not to prevaile, so Peter Martyr; or else, as hee saith, when the sons of Samuel did wickedly, God stirred up the Philistims for a punishment, to make new incursions into the land. And thou shalt meet a company of prophets comming down from the High-place with a psaltery, a tabret and a pipe before them, &c. These Prophets are thought by some to have bin levites, who were first trained up here in the knowledge of the Law, till they came to serve in the Tabernacle. But this is a meer conjecture without all ground; for they might be a company as wel of other tribes, as of Levi, was brought up in holy studies under men indued with the spirit of prophesie, whose exercise was daily to praise God, which is called prophesying, and out of these God chose some, and indured them with the spirit of prophesie to foretell judgements to come, and to rebuke sin in all estates and degrees, and to call to repentance. Of such a Colledge of Prophets, see again, 2 King. 2. 2. in Beithel; and 2 King. 5. in Jericho. The instruments of musick here said to goe before them, were used in praising God, and to make their mindes the more chearefull herein, and the Spirit of God the more ready to enter enter into them, who as the Rabbins note hence, is delighted with a chearefull spirit, but disliketh the sad and heauey, for which cause Elifsa called for musick when hee would prophesie, that his troubled and exasperated mind, being lenified, hee might bee the more chearefull, and then the Spirit came upon him.

And the Spirit of the Lord shall come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesie with them; that is, partly by praising God, and partly by fore-telling through the Spirit things to come, as Eldad and Medad prophesied in the Campe. The Rabbins, as it is in the Booke de Hebr. Qu. say, that Saul prophesied of warres to come, and of Gog and Magog, of the rewards of the godly, and the punishments of the wicked; but this foundeth as an invention of their owne. And thou shalt bee changed into another man, that is, saith Peter Martyr, not by transubstantiation: but, first, by becomming suddenly a Prophet, to which he had not been trained up, as Pellican: Secondly, by having his minde taken off his cattell, amongst which hee had been brought up, to meditate upon things belonging to a kingdome, as Borrbem; yet here was no inward change by grace and sanctification. Aug. l. 2. ad Simplic. qu. 1. saith, that Saul prophesied, as Balaams asse spake, that is, for the present, because God would have it so, but this gift soone left him againe.

When these things come to passe, see thou do as occasion serveth, for God is with thee; that is, saith Lyra, know assuredly that God hath chosen thee to bee King, and will blesse and prosper thee in thy proceedings, and therefore see that thou administer the kingdome courageously and wisely when thou art come unto it. Thus God would have Saul confirmed touching this new calling by signes, as Gedon had been before touching his office of a Judge. And this was necessary for any extraordinary calling, as the Apostles and first imbracers of the faith of Jesus had many miracles for their confirmation, but now the like cannot be expected or desired without tempting of God. By these words, doe as occasion serveth, saith Peter Martyr, Saul was not permitted to doe whatsoever he pleased; but knowing now that it was Gods will that he should doe as a King, confidently gather souldiers together, and goe forth to fight against the enemy, nothing doubting of Gods help, and so of good successe herein.

And thou shalt goe downe to Gilgal, and I will come to thee to offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, seven dayes shalt thou tarry till I come to thee, &c. In the booke of Hebr. Quest. it is otherwise pointed, thus, That thou mayst offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings seven dayes, and this, saith Hugo, is expounded by the Glosse thus, for thy inauguration to the Kingdom, as the Priests being coniecrated there were offerings made seven dayes, Exod. 26. Levit. 8. But as Lyra well noteth, it is otherwise pointed in the Hebrew, as in our translation, and wee doe no where read of any such ordinance of sacrificing seven dayes at the inauguration of a King; and it is not, that thou mayst offer, but to offer, for Samuel meant to offer for the Kings good successe now at the beginning of his raigne, and that hee might attempt no great matter without the advice of the Prophet, lest he should erre, he would come unto him. But from what time are these seven dayes to be reckoned? The Rabbins say, not from the time of Saul's departing from Samuel, for before his coming to Gilgal, he was chosen King in Mizpeh by lot, then he had an expedition against the Ammonites, and after this hee came to Gilgal, and was made King, and stayed for Samuel, till the seventh day, Chap. 13. 8. as Samuel had appointed; so likewise Junius, who saith, that these words, doe as occasion is offered, are to bee understood of his fighting against the Ammonites, after which hee should come to Gilgal, and bee made King there, and then stay seven dayes after that, about gathering together an Army, and making preparation to goe against the Philistims, for by that time hee would come againe unto him thither to sacrifice for his prosperity. Lyra reciteth another exposition of Andreas upon this, that when Samuel set Saul seven dayes, during which time hee should tarry for him, his meaning was, that if any difficult case happened, so that hee should need Samuel's presence to direct and to pray for him, then hee should goe up to Gilgal, a place fit

2 King. 3.

V. 6.

Numb. 11. 26.
Lib. de Hebr.
Quest.

Pellican.

Bertham.

V. 7.

Peter Martyr.

V. 8.

Hieron. de
Hebr. Quest.
Hugo Cardin.

Lyra.

1 Sam. 10. 17.
Ch. 11.
Junius.

Lyra.

for assemblies and sacrifices, and send for Samuel, after which hee would come to him within seven dayes. But hee excepteth against this, because Samuel seemeth to speake of a determinate time wherein hee should goe to Gilgal, viz. after his election, and there tarry for him seven dayes. But seeing here is nothing spoken of Saul's election, and that immediately after hee went against the Ammonites, and after that to Gilgal, and yet not before Samuel, but with him, as did all the people, to renew the Kingdome there; I cannot subscribe to Lyra; neither can I assent to Junius, and the Rabbins, because if hee had meant his going to Gilgal to bee made King, and after this his tarrying for him seven dayes there, Samuel should not then have gone thither with him, as hee did; and it had been time enough then at his departure from him, to bid him tarry seven dayes till hee returned againe. I rather hold somewhat neare to that of Andreas, that Samuel having directed Saul for his first notable expedition against the Ammonites, v. 7. here prophesieth of a time after that, and after his inauguration to the kingdome, when he should have speciall need of his presence again, for hee should gather souldiers together to Gilgal against the Philistines, who should bee affrighted at the multitude and power of them, and so flee from him, whereupon hee should send for Samuel, but after this hee required him to tarry for him seven dayes, left happily hee should at that time have other necessary employment to hinder him from comming sooner. And here I millike not that of the Rabbins, who say, that this was a condition put, whereupon, if it were kept, Saul's kingdome should bee established, otherwise it should not continue. And I will shew thee what thou shalt do, that is, I will instruct thee more touching the office of a King.

V. 9.
Hugo Card.

Saul going from Samuel, had immediately another heart given him, and all the signes were fulfilled that day: Another heart, saith Hugo, hee had, because his heart was now set upon higher things, and hee was more courageous. Hee had not another heart, as hee that hath his heart of stone taken away, and hath an heart of flesh given him, wherein Gods laws are written; for hee should finally have acquitted himself better then hee did, and the kingdome should have continued to him and his posterity.

V. 10.

Peter Martyr.

In reckoning up the fulfilling of the signes, onely one is mentioned in particular, viz. when they were come to the hill, they met a company of Prophets, &c. which is done, saith Peter Martyr, because hereby it appeared, how hee was turned into another man, as Samuel had chiefly foretold, which was of them all most wonderfull, as appeareth by the admiration, that the people where hereupon stricken into, v. 11. they wondred and said, Is Saul also among the Prophets? but one of that place answered and said, but who is their father? This is expounded by some, saith Peter Martyr, thus, doe yee say, Is Saul amongst the Prophets? nay, who is their father? may not Saul bee counted so for his learned and wise prophesying? But hee rather approveth of another, who is the father of the Prophets, that inspireth and guideth them in prophesying? is it not the Spirit? and why may he not then, if hee pleaseth, inspire Saul also? or, who is their father? what father have they more then Saul, the comming of whom availeth for the gift of prophesying? verily none, for this gift is not derived from the father to the sonne, but is given as God pleaseth, and therefore may as well bee given to Saul, as to any other man. Lyra reciting the last way of expounding it, saying, thus R. Solomon expounds it, yet because in the Vulg. Latin it is, who is his father, he saith, it is meant, who is his father, that he prophesieth? for he is none of the Prophets sons; as Amos saith, I was not a Prophet, nor the sonne of a Prophet. Now this, although it bee upon a translation not exactly according to the Hebrew, where it is not, who is his father, but, who is their father, yet it commeth nearest to the true meaning, as wee may gather upon the words following, Therefore it became a proverbe, Is Saul also amongst the Prophets? which was used, when any was extraordinarily indued with the spirit of prophesie, and that by way of admiration, and this is inferred upon these words, who was their father, which should not have been, if the meaning were, who was the father of the Prophets, it is not by reason of

Lyra.

Amos 7.

of the father of whom he is descended, that hee is a Prophet, but by Gods gift, for thus it was no matter of admiration to say, Is Saul also amongst the Prophets? seeing God at his pleasure might give him the gift, as well as to them. But when it was admired that the sonne of Kish was amongst the Prophets; and some spake further, But who is their father? the admiration is increased, seeing neither hee, nor his father came of such a pedigree as ever yeelded a Prophet; for the Prophets were all hitherto most probably of the Tribe of Levi, and if of any other Tribe, of such as were educated under some old Prophet as a father, as Elijah is called by Elisba.

And when hee had made an end of prophesying, hee came to the high place. And Saul's Uncle said unto him, &c. This high place, was a place in Gibeah, wherein they used to offer sacrifice in those dayes before the setting of the Arke any where, and the Tabernacle, which were yet disjoyned, for so the hill of God hath been expounded, v. 5. Gibeah of God, where this high place was. And to the high place here, saith Peter Martyr, Saul most probably went to pray, and there hee met with his Uncle. Or having done his devotion there, and being returned home, the relation of which is omitted for brevities sake, hee had this communication with his Uncle. If it be understood, that hee met his Uncle at the high place, it is to be thought that hee also dwelling neare, came thither at the same time to worship: this Uncle most probably was Ner, the father of Abner. Whereas it is said, when his Uncle asked him, what Samuel said unto him, hee told him, that he said, the Asses were found, but hee told him nothing of the kingdome; this, saith Josephus, hee wisely concealed, lest his Uncle beleiving it should envy him, or not beleiving it should taxe him as ambitious and vain-glorious. Unto which Lyra addeth, that hee was anointed in secret, and therefore till Samuel publiht it, hee ought to keepe it secret.

And Samuel called the people together to the Lord to Mizpeh, &c. Some time after Saul's anointing to be King, but how long is uncertaine, Samuel called this Assembly, and then upbraided them by their ingratitude in that God having delivered them out of Egypt and from the hands of all their enemies, yet now they rejected him and required to have a King set over them: Of which their rejecting of God, see before Ch. 8. 7. But how is hee said to assemble them to the Lord in Mizpeh? It is likely, that the Lord had directed him to call them to that place, as being before used for such assemblies, Judg. 20. 1. 1 Sam. 7. 6. where see, how they are said to assemble before the Lord there, yet, as Junius noteth, it is likely, that Samuel caused the Arke to be brought hither at this time, and the Priest with the Ephod to consult with the Lord about this election of a King, as v. 22. they are said to have inquired of the Lord.

This being done Samuel caused them to come before the Lord, Tribe by Tribe, and the Tribe of Benjamin was taken; & then family by family of that tribe, and the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the sonne of Kish of that family. A question is commonly made here, how or by what meanes Samuel found out him, whom the Lord had chosen. But in the Vulg. Latin the words of the Text put it out of question, for there it is, the lot fell upon Benjamin, &c. so that it was by casting lots, as Josephus had found out Achaz before, and so Josephus saith plainly, the Tribe of Benjamin was taken by lot, and then the names of the families being put into a pot, the family of Matri was first drawne, and lastly every mans name of that family being put in, Saul was drawne. And hereunto agreeth R. Solomon saying, that the High-Priest drew them, but D. Kimbi saith, it was done by the Urim and Thummim, the pretious stone which was for Benjamin, shining extraordinary brightly. But this could not be, because although the Tribe might thus be noted, yet the family and person could not; and although no mention be here made of lots, yet, as Peter Martyr noteth, both the word לֶכֶךְ taken here used implyeth it, and the common custome maketh it most probable, for to finde out Jonathan and Iona lots were cast, and for Manbui, and in dividing the land of Canaan. Touching Matri, Lyra saith, it signifyeth a marke, and is no one mans

2 Kings 2. 12.
V. 13.

Peter Martyr.

V. 14, 15.

Josephus.

Lyra.

V. 17.

V. 18, 19.

Junius.

V. 20.

Qu.

Iosh. 7.
Josephus. Antiq.
lib 6 cap. 5.

R. Solomon.
D. Kimbi.

Peter Martyr.

mans name, for 1 Chron. 8. 30. this name is not found, wherefore hee concludeth, that the family of Matri was of those, that could shoot at a marke so exactly, Iudg. 20. 16.

V. 21, 22.

Peter Martyr.
1 Sam. 23. 9.

Iosephus.

Peter Martyr.
Luke. 14. 11

When Saul was taken, hee was sought for, but would not be found, then inquiry being made of the Lord, hee answered, that hee had hid himselfe in the stufte. They inquired by the Ephod which was brought thither by the High-Priest at this time, although, as Peter Martyr saith, the Arke remained at Kiriath-jearim, as afterwards David bade Abiathar, bring hither the Ephod, that he might thereby consult with the Lord, when the Arke was not there. Saul hid himselfe, because he knew before, that hee should bee taken, and that out of humility, that hee might seeme to bee farre from ambitiously seeking the Kingdome; and this, saith Iosephus, was in him a point of modesty: others thinke that hee sinned in so doing, but Peter Martyr justifieth him herein, for he that humbleth himselfe shall bee exalted, and hee was afterwards praised for his humility by Samuel: neither did hee so flee the Kingdome to which hee was appointed, but that being brought forth hee presently tooke it upon him, and submitted to the will of God. The like humility was in Augustine, who would not come at those Churches, that wanted Bishops, lest they should choose him, and Gregory fled away to decline being made Bishop of Rome. Maximianus and Dionysius gave over the Empire to live privately, and so did Sylla the Dictatourship. They that so readily take any high dignity upon them and seeke it rather then decline it, respect not the labour and burthen thereof, but the honour, and riches, which worke with their ambitious and covetous mindes.

V. 23.

Saul being brought forth and standing amongst the people was higher then any of them from the shoulders upward: and this was all, that yet hee was commended by, and no marvaile, because the people are most taken with the stature and strength of their King, and according to humane reason such a man was most fit to deliver them from their enemies hands: yet little David who was indued with the vertue of the minde, did farre excell him even in military prowesse and valiant acts, to shew, that power and prevailing in the day of battle cometh of God, and not of humane strength.

V. 25.

Then Samuel told the people the manner of the Kingdome, and wrote it in a booke and laid it up before the Lord. This booke did not containe, as Iosephus thinketh, predictions of those things that should fall out under Sauls government, for this had bene enough to alienate the hearts of the people from him, but rather, as Lyra, Pellican and others say, how the people should carry themselves towards their King, and the King towards the people, according to that of Moses, Deut. 17. and this Booke was laid up in the Arke, but now is lost, as also divers others, which were written by holy men of old, yet they were no part of the Canonickall Scriptures, so as that for want of them these should now be counted unperfect. Some, saith Peter Martyr, thinke, that there was a Chappel in Mizpeb, to which the people used to assemble, and that there this Booke was laid up.

Lyra.
Pellican.
Junius.

V. 16.

V. 27.
P. Martyr.

After this every man went home, and Saul went to Gibeab, and with him a band of men, whose hearts the Lord had touched: but the sonnes of Belial said, How shall this man save us, &c. Saul being thus chosen King, saith Peter Martyr, did not yet take it upon him, but lived still privately, because the wicked people, although they had desired a King, and saw plainly this man to bee chosen of God, yet for the meannesse of his tribe and pedigree they now despised him, making a mocke of his saving them from their enemies hands. To this hee wisely did forbear to speake, waiting for an opportunity to declare himselfe a King, that could save them by deeds rather, then by words. But God now touched the hearts of some so, as that they clave unto him, who were also men of warre; if God had not moved their hearts, they had sinned as much as the rest by murmuring even when the thing which they so greatly desired, was granted unto them, as the people formerly did about the matter of Manna, which they desired, but being given them loathed it, and likewise the Note.

Messiah

Messiah himselfe, whereby wee may see the vilenesse of our nature, and what need we have dayly to pray with David, Lord incline my heart unto thy Law.

Psalm 109.

CHAP. XI.

BEcause Saul was despised by many wicked men, here an opportunity is offered to confirme that by deeds, to which he was chosen by lot: for Nahash the Ammonite came to fight against Jabesh Gilead; the men of that place being unable to resist him desire respite for seven dayes, in which time they send to Gibeab, and so Saul is stirred up to come for their succour, & destroyeth the Ammonites, and then was magnified amongst all the people. In the Vulgar Latin it is said, within one moneth Nahash came, so likewise Josephus, out of whom it seemeth to have crept into the Vulgar Latin; Willet excepteth against this time, saying this was done within the seven dayes set before by Samuel to Saul, and before his election, for the people being terrified with the coming of the Ammonites desired a King. But there is no reason of making this computation of the time, as will appear, if wee looke backe to the place, where the seven dayes are set. And to place this expedition before the election is to crosse both the order of the history here and the sequelle of the election. For if hee did this valiant act before his election, why did many despise him, as unable to save them? It might then be happily a moneth after, but the Scripture saying nothing hereof it is to bee left as uncertaine. But it seemeth by that 1 Sam. 12. 12. that the coming of Nahash was the cause of their asking a King: and if so, hee was elected after his expedition against him. Sol: they heard of his intention and preparation, betwixt which and his besieging of Jabesh might passe many dayes, in which all was done, till after his being elected and hearing of Jabesh when hee prepared to goe to the rescue thereof, see more Ch. 12. 12.

Josephus.
Willet.

Jabesh Gilead, against which the Ammonites came to fight was in the land, that was sometime Sibons, but taken by Moses, and given to Reuben, Gad and halfe Manasseh, for they held the land of Gilead. The cause of this warre may be gathered, Judg. 11. where the Ammonites challenged this land to be theirs, but they were then destroyed by Iephthah, now it seemeth, that being growne strong againe they gathered a new Army upon the same quarrell, and because the City Jabesh Gilead had bene not long since dispeopled, when all the men thereof were slaine by all the Tribes, Judg. 21. they set upon this, as the weakest and for their old fault in not helping Israel against Benjamin most unlikely to have helpe sent to rescue it. And this most probably was the cause, why being besieged now they sent particularly to Gibeab of Benjamin, because by that City all the other Tribes had bene greatly provoked and shewed their wrath before; and they were the rather moved, because here dwelt the man, that was chosen for King. But the men of Jabesh first commit a foule fault, as Peter Martyr noteth, in that they yeeld at Nahash his first coming to be his servants, if hee would make a covenant with them. For God had forbidden them to make any Covenant with the Ammonites, and the Ammonite to enter into the congregation, therefore much lesse to bee received as Lord over them. Nahash being putt up through their timorousnesse refuseth to receive them for his servants, unlesse hee might put out every mans right eye amongst them to the ignominy of Israel. Their right eyes, saith Lyra, he would put out to make them unfit for service of warre, because with the right eye a man aimeth at the marke which hee shooteth at winking with the left, and fighting with the sword they shadowed the left eye with a shield. Some Rabbins say, that by putting out the right eye they meant the raising out of the Law against the Ammonites Deut. 23. but this is absurd. The true reason is, the Ammonites hated the Hebrewes, and therefore they were bent to exercise this cruelty against them.

V. 1.

Peter Martyr.

Deut. 23. 3.
V. 2.

Lyra.

The

V. 3.

P. Martyr.

Josephus.

V. 4.

V. 5.

Qu.

Lyra.

R. Solomon.

D. Kimbi.

Peter Martyr.

Pliny. Terra gaudebat trahari & coli ad
imperatoribus, & magni e aut
proventus illorum temporum, quia eadem manu terra trahbatur qua arma.

V. 6.

V. 7.

I Sam. 7. 17.

The Elders of Jabesh desired 7. dayes respite, within which time, if they could procure no helpe to come and raise the siege, they would yeeld themselves to his mercy. Herein, saith Peter Martyr, they did wickedly, for men ought not to prescribe a time unto God, but to waite his leasure, who hath not one, but divers wayes to helpe those that trust in him. But yet that the King newly appointed by God might have the more honour, the Lord passing over their errors brought helpe unto them, as they expected, within that time, and confounded the Ammonites. Nabash although cruelly bent against Jabesh, yet he granteth their request for the time, hoping, as Josephus saith, that because there was division in their State about the new elected King, some being for him and some against him, no helpe would come unto them. But there was doubtlesse a singular providence of God, that over-ruled herein for the confirmation of Sau in the kingdome.

Then came the messengers to Gibeah, and when the people heard these tidings they wept. But Saul came after the herd out of the field, and said, What aileth this people to wepe, &c. Here is shewed how that, when all others were afraid, and pusht animos like women, Saul onely was courageous, as the high dignity, to which he was chosen, required, and in stead of being fearefull and weeping, hee is full of wrath, which, as Aristotle saith, is the whetstone of valour, and meditateth upon revenge against the insolent Ammonites. And hereby it appeareth againe, how wonderfully hee was changed after his anointing to bee King, although he was not yet generally accepted of. But how is hee said to come after the herd out of the field? did hee still imploy himselfe about so base a worke, as to keepe an herd, when as hee had beene publicly declared King, and had a band of men following him? Lyra saith, that hee followed not the herd, because hee still did as an herdsman, but having beene abroad in the field to exercise himselfe in shooting or otherwise, hee returned now after that the herdsimen had brought home their cattle. The Sept. have it μετὰ τὴν ἡμέραν, after the morning, because the word בקר signifieth the morning as well as an herd, and R. Solomon standeth for the time, but D. Kimbi saith that hee came home with other husbandmen. Peter Martyr saith, there is no need of any of these shifts, for Saul having not yet taken upon him the administration of the Kingdome, hee did nothing absurd or misbecoming him to follow his husbandry still: for from the herd and from the plough have come many valiant Commanders and Emperours amongst the Romans. Whertupon Pliny saith, the earth delighted to bee tilled and handled by Emperours, and great was the increase then, when with the same hand the earth was handled and armes. Therefore many famous families have sprung from such, witnesse the Pisones, Fabii, Portii, Cicerones, Lentuli, from Peason, Beanes, Hogges, Parshieps, and Limels. And to this of Martyr doe I subscribe, because although the words be neare, that signifie morning, and an herd, yet there is some difference, Bekyr is the morning and Baker an herd, which is the word here used; and because it is after the herd, it is plaine that hee kept and drove home his herd, as other husbandmen did, and so did David keepe sheepe a while still, after that he was anointed King. Thus also Tostatus.

And the Spirit of God came upon Saul, and his anger was greatly kindled &c. The Chaldee for more expression hath, the Spirit of fortitude came upon him, for it was not the Spirit of grace and sanctification, but that, whereby he was stirred up to goe to this warre and to deliver the men of Jabesh. Then hee tooke two of his oxen and cut them in pieces, and sent them into all parts, and threatned thus to serve all mens oxen, that came not up after him and Samuel: for Samuel, as appeareth v. 12. was with him in this expedition, and he useth his name as well as his owne, because hee was anointed King by him, and hee had shewed the people their duty towards Saul their King, and his authority over them, so that although they would not beemoved by hearing of Sauls name, because many yet contemned him, yet they would be moved at Samuels so generally knowne to be the Lords Prophet, and having beene Judge so many yeares, and continuing in his office of judging still, for hee judged Israel all the dayes of his life. Saul did not onely send a message to summon the people, but sent oxen hewed to pieces, that by a thing really done they might be the more moved, as the Levite did by his concubine. The people seeing and hearing this, feared, and came out with one consent; but it is said, the feare of the Lord fell upon them, to note, that God wrought this feare in them, to make them obey his anointed, as before it was said, a band of men followed Saul, whose hearts God had touched, for otherwise many would now have contemned his threatenings, as before they contemned his person. And the number said to come to him, was of 300000 men of Israel, and 30000 of Judah. The men of Judah are mentioned apart, saith Peter Martyr, because this was alwayes counted the principall Tribe, and was appointed first to goe against the enemy. But here is a lesse number of them then of one of the other Tribes, the reason whereof might bee, saith Junius, because their borders lay upon the Philistims countrey, so that many of them were continually employed in looking to them. And because Judah was the chiefe and most potent tribe, it is set downe as a thing remarkable by it selfe, in that the men of Judah disdained not to follow Saul of Benjamin, which was now the least tribe. Of Bezek, where they met, see Judg. 1. 4.

all

This great army being assembled together, the messengers of Jabesh are sent back to tel them that they should have help the next day. Then they being glad, told Nabash, to morrow wee will come unto you, and then yee shall doe unto us what seemeth good unto you: And Saul, as hee promised, came the next morning upon the Ammonites in the morning-watch, dividing his host into three companies, and smote them so, as that two of them were not left together. Touching the place Bezek, from whence they marched, one saith, it was a City 16 miles from Jabesh, and from Gibeah, from whence Saul came to this place for the people to gather to him, 40 miles. For the speech of the men of Jabesh to the Ammonites, they dissimbled the helpe promised, as if they had sent about, but could get none, and therefore would the next day yeld themselves to their mercy, that the Ammonites being hereby made the more secure, might bee the more easily oppressed by Saul comming upon them; and this dissimulation they might lawfully use to an enemy, that sought their lives; thus Pellican, Osiander, and Borbeus: But Junius saith, it is not necessary to lay this upon them, they onely promised to come forth next day according to covenant, concealing this, if helpe came not in the meane season, which is the best: but yet it is not ill to use deceit against those whom wee may kill, so that covenants bee not broken. For Sauls dividing of his Army into three companies, hee did herein as Gedeon had done before, that besetting the enemies on every side, he might strike the greater terrour into them, and for this cause he came also upon them in the morning watch, that is, about the break of the day, For the Hebrews divided the night into four parts or watches: 1 The evening. 2 Midnight. 3 The Cock-crowing. 4 The last houres of the night, which ended at the breake of the day. For the journey taken by Saul and his company from Bezek to Jabesh, Josephus saith, it was 10 measures of ground, every measure being 60 furlongs, and 8 furlongs a mile, together 75 miles. But seeing this could not bee in so short a time, this cannot bee received; it might more probably be, as was noted before, 16 miles. And this commendeth Sauls great diligence, in that being so farre off, hee came yet much sooner then hee had promised, and when the Sunne waxed hot, made an end of his victory by what time hee had onely promised to bee there. Whether Nabash were slaine in this battaile, or no, is not said, but Josephus saith, hee was slaine amongst others; but against this maketh 2 Sam. 10. 1, 2. where it seemeth, that hee lived to shew kindeesse to David, out of an hatred of Saul, as is most probable, for this great overthrow. In this victory appeared the great mercy of God, contrary to the peoples desert, for they had rejected him, and would needs have a King; yet forsomuch as one was now appointed by himselfe, he assisted him, and gave him this great victory to confirme his owne election. The men of Jabesh being thus delivered, did not forget it, but when Saul was Judg. 19.

V. 8.
Peter Martyr.
Judg. 1.

Junius.

V. 9.
V. 10.

V. 11.

H Bunting Pa-
triar. navailles.Pellican.
Osiander.
Junius.

Judg. 7. 19.

Junius.

Josephus.

afterwards

1 Sam. 31. 11.

V. 12.

Pellican.

Lyra.

G<sup>o</sup>.

Rom. 13.

V. 14.

1 Sam. 7. 16

Iunius, Borke-us, Hieronym.
Josephus.

Peter Martyr.

afterwards slaine, they shewed all the kindnesse that they could to him and his in fetching their corpses to their City, and burying them.

This great victory being gotten by Saul, the people recounting how some had before despised him, would have them put now to death, but Saul would have no man to dye therefore, because God had wrought salvation for Israel that day; and to have put these, that were men of Israel, to death then, would greatly have obscured the glory of that deliverance, so Pellican. Hee would have no man then to dye, saith Lyra, because he would take no private revenge, but their clemency in the beginning of his reigne, then which nothing, saith Seneca, doth more become a Prince; and having received so great a mercy, it was fit rather to goe to thanksgiving, then to execution. But afterwards his clemency was turned into cruelty, for hee would have put Jonathan to death, by whom a great deliverance was wrought for Israel, and David, and the Priests of God. Ben Gerson saith, that hee onely respited the executing of those wicked men; but seeing wee no where read, that hee put them to death at any other time, it is more probable that hee forgave them. If it bee demanded, whether the King may pardon such, as ought for their offences to die? I answer, forsomuch as humane laws receive their life from the King, he may pardon offences against them; and for such lawes of God, as whereby a sinne is forbidden, but no must propounded, hee may pardon the breach of them also. But the breach of such lawes of God, as whereof the punishment is expressely set downe, hee may not pardon, for hee beareth the sword as Gods minister, for the punishment of those that doe evill. Hee may upon due consideration respit the punishment, as if it bee dangerous to the Common-wealth to doe execution presently, as David for this let Joab goe unpunisht, but finally he took order that his blood should bee shed for his murder. But through partiality or connivence to spare malefactors, as David did Ammon, sinning by incest; and Absalom by murder, is no way tolerable, and therefore God provided that none of them both should escape unpunished.

Then Samuel, and all the people being moved by him, went to Gilgal, and there Saul was made King before the Lord, and peace-offerings were offered. Gilgal was famous for the circumcision there renewed, Josh. 5. and the first encamping of the people there, after that they were come over Jordan; and it was one of the three places to which Samuel went yearly to Judge the people. And here they made him King before the Lord, because it seemeth here was an Altar upon which they sacrificed, and before the Altar, when an assembly is met together for sacrifice, is before the Lord, to whom this Altar is set up. Yet some thinke, that the Arke was now brought hither, as before to Mizpeh. How hee was made King here, Josephus saith, it was by anointing with the holy oyle; but Willet impugneth this, because Samuel surely would not anoint him twice, yet hee saith not how hee was made King otherwise. Wherefore Peter Martyr better, it is not unlikely but that hee was now anointed, because his former anointing was privately, and hee was never yet publicly anointed; and to expresse this, hee saith, that the Latine translation had it, They anointed him; and happily hee was there crowned; howsoever hee was now received for their King by a generall consent, whereas they were before divided.

CHAP. XII.

V. 1.

Here Samuel expostulateth with the people about their rejecting of him, and desiring to have a King; wherein hee saith, hee had yielded unto them, and they now rejoyced in him, as by whom they had gotten a great victory, so that all sense of their sinne was now past. Wherefore, as was needfull, hee taketh this opportunity of having them together, to summon them to repentance: 1 By shewing, that hee had given them no cause to bee weary of the government of Judges, for which they should desire a King. 2 By recounting recounting Gods gracious dealing towards them ever since the time that they were in Egypt; for if they were at any time oppressed by their enemies for their sins, & cryed unto the Lord, he delivered them by Judges even to his time. 3 By denouncing as great judgements against them and their King, as they had formerly suffered, if they did evil; so that the having of a King should no more priviledge them from sufferings, by their enemies then living under Judges, contrary to their foolish surmise, who thought now that they had a King, they should bee safe, whatsoever they did. 4 By calling for raine and thunder to terrifie them, God shewing hereby from heaven, that hee was greatly displeased with them for rejecting his government, and that it was not Samuel's saying onely.

And now behold your King walketh before you, and I am old and gray-headed, and my sonnes are with you, &c. Some of the Rabbins say, that Samuel dyed at 52 yeares of age, 18 of which time hee lived after that Saul was made King; Jos-phus also saith, that at 12 yeares old hee began to bee a Prophet, and to judge the people, and 12 he judged alone, and 18 with Saul. By the first account he could be but 34, by the other but 24, when Saul was made King, both which must needs be most false, for before this he was old, and made his sons Judges, and both his sonnes and his gray head, now argue him to have been neare 60, for in those dayes men were not counted old sooner. 1 Sam. 7. 6. Samuel is said to have judged Israel in Mizpeh, which was 20 yeares after that the Arke came to Kiriath-jearim, and that was almost a yeare after Eli's death, and before his death the word of the Lord came unto him, and hee was known to bee a Prophet. Allow unto him then a competent age for a Prophet in Eli's time, and hee could not be lesse then 20 or 25. whereunto adde 20 more till his being received for Judge, see my notes upon 1 Sam. 7. 6. and then he must bee 40; or thereabout, when hee began to judge, after which hee could not be so old as to need substitutes till 20 yeares more were expired; so that when Saul was made King, hee must needs bee above 60, unto which if 18 in the time of Saul bee added, hee must needs bee about 80 when hee dyed. But for his time of judging alone, and together with Saul, see my notes upon Acts 13. 21.

But why doth hee say, My sonnes are with you? Lyra answereth, he meaneth, that they were as pledges to make satisfaction, wherein hee was not able, if he had done them any wrong. Vatablus and Pellican, that they were amongst them to be consulted with, because Saul had yet no experience of government. Oflander, that they were as private men to bee called to an account, as he would give account for himselfe. Borheus saith, that hee speaketh of his sonnes by way of upbraiding them, in that they refused to have them for their Judges, comming of a father that had so well deserved of them. Of all these, that of Oflander seemeth to mee most genuine. I am old, and so unfit now any longer to beare the great burthen of governing alone, and therefore I have made you a King to governe in my stead; and for my sonnes, whom yee complained of, as unworthy for their corrupt dealing, to Judge, now that I have made you a King, they are with you, they are deposed, and become like your selves, private men and subjects, so as that they can trouble you no more by the abuse of their authority; but if yee will have them further punished for abuses past, yee may, but I have walked before you from my childhoold hitherto. And now in all this time of my being Judge over you, which hee meaneth by walking before them, if yee have any thing to object against me, wherein I have wronged any of you, speake, and I will make satisfaction, and if not, yee did headily and unadvisedly in rejecting mee for a King. Peter Martyr saith the same with Oflander, and addeth, that hee spake of them, because they knew him at home, and more inwardly, and therefore if they would, they might know of them whether he had any way dealt corruptly.

Behold here I am, witnesse against mee before the Lord and his anointed, &c. Here by anointed hee meaneth not Christ, as some thinke, but Saul, as appeareth more plainly, v. 5. before whom hee spake thus, partly, that hee might

V. 2.

Jos-phus.Lyra.Vatablus.
Pellican.
Oflander.

V. 3.

Ofiander.

Borrbaw.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Numb. 16.

V. 5.

Lyra.

V. 6, 7, 8.

V. 9.

V. 10.

V. 11.

Qu.

Junius.

Ofiander.

Borrbaw.
Vatablus.

by his example of just and equall dealing, bee put in minde of his duty, and not take occasion from that which hee had said before of the manner of a King, to play the tyrant; partly, to vindicate his government from all aspersions of injustice that might afterwards be laid upon it; and partly, that the people might see their owne folly, recounting the equity of their Judges, when they should see the unequal proceedings of some of their Kings. Whose oxen have I taken, that is, saith Lyra, to doe my worke, or whose Asses, that is, to ride upon from one place to another. Whom have I defrauded, that is, by unjustly drawing him to judgement; or oppressed, that is, doing him any kinde of injury; Of whose hand have I received any bribe to blinde mine eyes therewith; the Vulg. Latine, & contemniam illud bodie, which Lyra following, saith, hee meaneth, that if hee had taken any thing for judging justly, hee would not hold it still, but restore it, as in the next words, Hebr. it is, That I might blinde mine eyes with it, because it is said, Deut. 16. 19. A reward blindeth the eyes of the wise, that is, that hee seeth not the goodnesse or badnesse of the cause, but is, as it were, blindly led to give sentence on his side that bribeth him. Wherefore without cause are those Expositors divided amongst themselves, who referre these words, with it, some to a bad cause, some to a good, and some to the person judged. Peter Martyr readeth it, Of whom have I received a price, and bid mine eyes from him. He saith also, that Samuel speaketh but of small things, intimating, that much lesse had hee taken any field or possession; so Moses in way of apology for himself, saith of Corah and his company, I have not taken an hoove of them. Hereby it appeareth what a good governour Samuel was, and hereunto the people gave all witnesse, hee sought not the enriching of himselfe and his children, but onely the good of the Common-wealth to his own great charge.

And Samuel said, The Lord is witnesse this day, &c. here, saith Lyra, the Hebrewes have a tradition, that Samuel desiring that God would bee his witnesse, a voice came from God, saying, Witnesse, and indeed so the Hebrew soundeth, where the words are these, God is witnesse against you, and his anointed is witnesse this day, that yee have not found ought in my hand, and hee said, Witnesse; therefore it seemeth, that God himselfe by a lively voice testified his innocency.

Samuels innocency being thus cleared, hee now repeateth Gods gracious dealing towards them ever since their being in Egypt, for neither there did he faile to deliver them, when they cryed unto him, by the hands of Moses and Aaron, and since their coming into Canaan, although for their sinnes hee gave them into the hands of their enemies divers times, yet when they cryed unto him hee raised up deliverers, who saved them from Sijera, the Philistims and Moabites, even Jerubbaal, Bedan, Iephthah and Samuel. In speaking of Moses and Aaron, hee saith, Which brought your fathers out of Egypt and made them dwell in this place. Whereupon a question is made, how Moses and Aaron could bee said to make them dwell in the land of Canaan, seeing they were both dead before their coming into Canaan? Junius answereth, Moses gave them part of their inheritance before their going over Jordan, and in this regard it was thus said. Ofiander, Hee by Josua, whom hee substituted in his owne place, gave them possession. But most improbably of all Borrbaw and Vatablus, they made them dwell here by giving them Lawes, and Ordinances, whereby they attained it. For they were alwayes rebellious and disobedient to these laws. The true answer is, they made them dwell here, because they brought them to the very entrance of the land, and gave it unto them by assigning to the nine tribes and halfe the whole Countrey, and laying out the bounds thereof for them, when they had given to the other two Tribes and halfe actuall possession of their parts. They were so ascertained of the land by them as if they had had it then in possession.

For the enemies, into whose hands they were so sold, Judg. 3. Wee finde, that Cushanrishathaim was the first, and Moab the second, and Judg. 4. Jabin King of Canaan and Sijera his captaine, the third, and Judg. 6. the Midianites the fourth, and Judg. 10. the Philistims and Ammonites, the fifth, & Judg. 13. the the Philistims the sixt. The Judges raised up to deliver them was first Othniel, second Ehud, third Barak and Deborah, fourth Gideon, otherwise called Ierubbaal, fifth Iephthab, sixth Samson, and after him Samuel who delivered them mightily from the same enemies. But here three sorts of enemies are onely mentioned, the Canaanites, Philistims and Moabites, and that not in order neither, for Moab oppressed them before the other two: and of their deliverers foure onely, and of these two saved them out of the other enemies hands, viz. the Midianites and Ammonites, Samuel from the Philistims, Barak being left to bee understood, by the Canaanites and their Captaine Sisera mentioned, seeing it was well knowne, that by Barak they had that deliverance, and Ehud by mentioning the Moabites, yet the Vulgar Latin supplyeth Barak, but I see no reason, but Ehud might as well have had his name put in also. But Samuel thought it enough for brevities sake to give onely a touch of every oppression and deliverance, by mentioning either the one or the other and not both, except in that of the Philistims, because they were their most noted enemies, and had beene longest grievous unto them. But as their first oppression by Cushanrisbathaim is not touched upon, so neither is Othniel, their deliverer from him, but another strange name Bedan, never heard of before, put in: yet in the Sept. Translation omitted, and Ierubbaal, Barak, Iephthab, and Samuel mentioned. It is generally held both by Hebrew and Christian expositors, that Bedan was Samson, so called, because the Spirit of God moved him in the campe of Dan, for Bedan, is in Dan, but some Rabbins will have it Bedan, for Bendan the sonne of Dan: and they say, hee is mentioned before Iephthab, although in time after him, because hee was more famous. Iunius hath a singular opinion by himselfe, whom Willet also followeth, that by Bedan Iair a Judge, a Manassite is meant, because hee was before Iephthab, but Samson after, and to make this the more probable hee alleadgeth 1 Chron. 7. 17. where this name is found amongst the Manassites, and hee might bee called both by it and Jair also. This opinion I confesse, moveth me somewhat, but seeing Iair onely judged Israel, and was not famous for any particular deliverance, as the rest here named were, I cannot subscribe to him: for Samuel naming so few would never have put in one amongst them, that was of no fame for any warlike exploit, leaving out others of note. And why Bedan should bee put for Samson, I cannot see, for if hee were moved in Dan, other Judges were also moved in their Tribes, for which they might as well have beene named thereby. I therefore preferre the Sept. putting Barak for Badan, not through mistaking, as some thinke, or corruption, because in the Hebr. and Chaldee it is Badan or Bedan, but his knowne name is in the Hebr. concealed, because hee went about the worke to which hee was called so cowardly, for hee would not goe, except Deborah went with him, for which shee said, that it should not bee for his honour. Hee is then set forth by the name of Bedan signifying in judgement, to intimate, that although hee was used as an instrument to deliver Israel, yet it was under another that was Judge, viz. Deborah, so as was none of all the other Judges. For the totall omission of the first Judge and deliverance from Cushanrisbathaim, it was of so short a time and so long a time of peace immediately followed, and happily in that short time the oppression was not great, but a tribute onely exacted of them, as that it was not now much talked of. If the time of Barak bee objected, for hee was before Ierubbaal, but here Bedan is named after, Samuel was nothing curious in keeping order, as wee may see in that their oppression by Moab, which was before the other two is named last. Touching Samuel's naming of himselfe, this was not out of vaine-glory, but because by him they had so lately beene delivered from the the Philistims, who were kept under ever since, to aggravate their sinne of ingratitude, in that now they would shake him off and have a King notwithstanding that great blessing enjoyed by his meanes.

Yet when yee saw, that Nahath, the King of the Ammonites came against you, yee said, Nay but a King shall raigne over us, when the Lord your God was your King.

Judg. 13. 25.

Iunius.
Judg. 10. 3.

V. 12.

Hugo Card.
Joseph. lib 6.
Antiq. cap. 5.

V. 14.

Iunius.

Peter Martyr.

V. 15.

V. 16, 17,
18, 20.

Hugo Cardin.

How is it said, that the comming of Nabash against them was a cause of their asking a King, when as Nabash came not against Iabesh, till after Sauls election, and that as some say, a moneth? Hugo answereth according to Josephus, that Nabash came against those, that dwelt beyond Iordan in divers places and vexed them before the election of a King, but now having gathered a farre greater army, he returned againe and besieged Iabesh, and put them to it so, as was said before, Ch. 11.

If yee will feare the Lord and serve and obey him, then shall both yee and your King continue following the Lord your God: the Vulgar Latin, eritis sequentes dominum, and Hebr. yee shall bee after the Lord, so Vatablus, Peter Martyr, Avian, &c. but Iunius, permanebitis sequentes, expounding it, whilst ye follow the Lord, ye remain safe. But rendring it word for word, yee shall bee after the Lord, is best if with Peter Martyr, wee expound it, yee shall be still under him, as your King, and he will protect you and take care for you. But if you will not obey, but rebell against the commandement, Hebr. the mouth of the Lord, then shall his hand bee against you, as it was against your fathers, Hebr. and against your fathers. But hereupon a question is moved, how it could bee threatened to bee against their fathers? Peter Martyr answereth, it is meant either against their Princes, who are parents of the Country, or being against them, it was also against their parents, because they were part of their parents, or else according to our translation, and being taken for, as; Yet some, hee saith, understand it against their parents, in that his promises, made to them should not bee performed. I preferre the first way, as also doth Pellican, Vatablus, and Borrbem; the Sept. to put it out of doubt read it, and upon your Kings, and this is made plaine, v. 25. But the Chaldee, Iunius, and Osiander are for this rendring, as against your fathers. Thus Samuel having put them in hope of having God on their side, if they did well notwithstanding their fore-objected ingratitude, but terrifying them if they did ill; now that they might have some sensible signe of this their sinne, and bee humbled for it, hee calleth to God for raine and thunder in the time of wheat-harvest, which God accordingly sent, and then the people feared greatly, and desired Samuel to pray for them, and confessed their great sinne in asking a King. Samuel prayed once before, 1 Sam. 7. 10. and it thundered upon the Philistims, wherefore now to make them to see into their sinne, hee prayed for thunder againe, and yet for raine withall, because otherwise it might have been more dangerous. And this hee did, because hereby they might bee put in minde of the former thunder, and of Gods power shewed therein, to the destruction of the Philistims, and consider againe in what grace Samuel was with him, so as that when hee would he could procure thunder, that they might both be sorry, & condemn themselves of folly for rejecting such a Judge for a King; and seeing that if hee would, hee could have procured a destroying thunder against them, as well as against the Philistims, they might feare and tremble before God and him, and so the more readily hearken to his instructions. And it is noted to have been in the time of wheat-harvest, because this tended to the magnifying of the miracle the more, seeing that in those hot Countreys it never used to raine at that time of the yeare. For some say, it rained not there from the midst of March to the midst of October, betwene which times they had their early and their latter raine, and all generally, that they seldome had any raine in harvest. Against this, Hugo saith, it may bee objected, that Jordan is said to have overflowed the bankes, Josh. 3. 15. at harvest time, and the same is touched upon, Eccles. 24. and how could this bee, but by the abundant falling of raine? Hee answereth, this might either be caused by the rain falling abundantly before harvest, or by the snow, which melting now came downe and made it to overflow, see Josh. 3. 15. But the overflowing of Jordan in harvest, is to bee understood of the barley harvest, and not of the wheat harvest, of which it is spoken here, and that was long before this, and so nearer to the time of raine. For the peoples fearing, it was because the tempest was so terrible, that it seemed to threaten destruction unto them, of which terrour in the time of thunder and lightening wee have had had often experience, and many have perished thereby. For their sin in asking a King now acknowledged, see before, 1 Sam. 8.

Samuel seeing the people greatly perplexed, comforteth them, by promising that the Lord would not forsake them, because hee had made them his people, having first exhorted them constantly to serve God, and not to goe after vanity, although they had done this great wickednesse to aske a King. V. 22 For the Lord will not forsake his people for his great Names sake, because it hath pleased him to make you his people: the word הווינו rendred, hath pleased, signifieth also, hath sworne, and hath begun; wherefore the Vulg. Latine hath it, begun; Pellican, sworne; Peter Martyr, hee would, rejecting neither of the other, for it may well bee understood any way, but rather the good pleasure of God is here pointed at as the cause of their election to bee his people, so that hee could not for the glory of his Names sake, this being knowne to the Nations round about, but spare them and uphold them from perishing, and defend and make them yet a greater people. For if he should not, other peoples would either have said, that hee was not true of his promise, or that he was not able, which would have been to his great dishonour. And this is the ground of the comfort of all his elect, he will not forsake them because of his owne good will he hath chosen them.

Moreover, God forbid that I should sinne against the Lord, in ceasing to pray for you, &c. that is, although yee have rejected mee, yet I am so farre from any enmity or hatred in my minde against you therefore, as that I will not cease to pray for your good; and hereby it shall appeare that I have not prayed for this thunder out of hatred against you, but to bring you to repentance and better obedience, that yee might escape Gods destroying judgements, and still keep his favour. And hee saith, God forbid that I should sinne, to imply, that a Prophet who neglecteth his duty in praying for the people committed unto him, sinneth against God, and consequently if he should neglect to instruct and teach them: And againe, that the enmity of others against us may not bee requited with enmity, but with love, and praying for them, according to that, Love your enemies, and pray for them that hate you and persecute you, and therefore to cease to pray even for such is a sinne.

Having comforted the people in promising to pray for them, hee concludeth with an exhortation to serve God in truth, and with a threatening if they did otherwise, that both they and their King should perish. In truth, saith Lyra, that is, without dissimulation, and with all your heart, that is, without diminution.

V. 20, 21.

V. 23.

Math. 5.

V. 24, 25.

Lyra.

CHAP. XIII.

SSAUL reigned one yeare; and when hee had reigned two yeares over Israel, hee chose unto him 3000 out of Israel, &c. The Vulg. Latine, Saul was the sonne of one yeare, when hee began to reigne, and hee reigned two yeares, that is, saith Lyra, he was innocent and unblameable as a childe of one yeare old, when hee began to reigne; and in this goodnesse he continued two yeares; but after that hee fell from it, and David was anointed King; so that although he reigned still 18 yeares more, yet that was by usurpation, and therefore hee is said onely to have reigned two yeares. But some, hee saith, read it, Saul's sonne was of one yeare, but this is confuted by 2 Sam. 2. 10. where Ishbosheth his sonne is said to bee 40 yeares old, when hee began to reigne, which was immediately after Saul's death, and therefore hee was now 20. The Chald. saith the same with Lyra, and others, of whom see my Notes upon Acts 13. 21. Theodore saith the same with Lyra, but that the rest of his time was imputed to the administration of Samuel. Junius saith, it is meant onely that hee was in his first yeare, when those things were done, which were before set downe. David Kimhi, and Ben Gerson, whom Varabius followeth, and Peter Martyr say, that it is meant, one yeare was past before his confirmation in Gilgal, after

V. 1.

Lyra.

D. Kimhi, Ben Gerson, Varabius

*Osiander.
Genebrard. in Chronol. Vatablms, Testament.*

his anointing privately by Samuel, and two yeares hee reigned, before that for his sinne hee was rejected, of which it is spoken afterwards in this Chapter. And this is most probable, because his confirmation was spoken of immediately before, Chap. 12. Now then that wee might understand at what time that was done, it is here said, בן שנה שנה the sonne of a yeare was Saul, when hee reigned by a generall consent, for before many were against him, and happily it is meant after this that hee reigned two yeares well, before his rejection, and after that 18 more; although Osiander hereupon gathereth, that hee reigned but two yeares in all, for so many battailes could not bee fought, and David so much pursued in so short a time. Some thinke, that the first and second yeare of his reigne are thus distinguished, to intimate, that he reigned, first, without any royall pompe, and then took a guard of men unto him, being attended like a King; and at this our Translation seemeth to aime, When hee had reigned two yeares, he chose 3000; but the word [when] is not in the Hebrew, but is added for more expression, yet not rightly, for then it must bee granted, that hee took him not this guard till after two yeares of his reigne expired; whereas it appeareth plainly to have been done at the time of this Assembly for his coronation in Gilgal, for that it is said, The rest of the people hee sent every one to his tent; therefore hee chose out the 3000, before that they departed from this Assembly. It is best therefore to render the Hebrew word for word, thus, And hee reigned two yeares over Israel, and chose him 3000 men; that is, after his publike inauguration till this time, he cannot properly bee said to have reigned any more then two yeares, and that hee might henceforth bee attended as a King, he now took from amongst the people this retinue of 3000.

V. 2.

Junius.

Of these 3000 men, 2000 were with Saul in Michmash, and in mount Bethel; and 1000 went with Jonathan to Gibeab, &c. Michmash, saith Junius, was no name of a City, but of a tract of ground extending to mount Bethel: here Saul tooke up his station, and Jonathan was most probably sent by him against the garison of the Philistims in Gibeab with 1000 men, and cut them off happily being but 200, or 500: of Gibeab see before, Chap. 10. 5. Saul divided himself most probably thus from Jonathan keeping at this place, that hee might after that exploit done by Jonathan both send out to call the people together against the Philistims, who hee knew before upon the smiting of their garison, would come against Israel, and that hee might the sooner bee at Gilgal, to which place Samuel had before appointed to come unto him.

1 Sam. 10. 8.

V. 3.

H. Bunting Patriar. narratiles.

Jonathan having smitten the garison of the Philistims, they heare of it, and Saul blew the Trumpet throughout all the land, that they might assemble together, and bee prepared to goe against the Philistims to battail, and they were called together to Gilgal, to which place Saul went. Michmash, from whence hee went to Gilgal, saith one, was a City in the borders of Benjamin and Manasseh 4 miles from Gilgal, see Ezra 2. 27. Esa. 10. and this seemeth not to bee so probable, as that of Junius before-going, because here pitched the huge Army of the Philistims, v. 5.

V. 5.

Josephus. Lyra.

*Iudg. 4. 13.
Exo. 14. 7.*

And the Philistims gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, 30000 chariots, and 6000 horsemen, and people as the sand on the sea shore. Of warre-chariots, see Judg. 4. 13. The people are said to be as the sand, by an Hyperbole, because they were an exceeding great multitude. Iosephus saith, they were 300000 footmen. And for the chariots, Lyra conjectureth that they were not 30000, but all the persons fighting in them were 30000, because Sisera his great Army consisted but of 900 chariots, and Pharaoh's of 600: but Josephus saith the same with the sacred history, neither is it safe so to goe from the expresse words thereof. Here is rather set forth such an Army, as was never heard of in that land before, that the power of God might bee the more magnified for confounding it, as hee did, by such weake meanes, as is shewed, Chap. 24. that none may ever trust to the greatest multitudes and preparations, seeing all are vaine where God will destroy, as also appeared in the great Armies of Darius and Xerxes. The Philistims pitched in Michmash, the place where where they heard Saul was before; and it is said to have been eastward from Bethaven, that is, not from Bethel, as some thinke, holding, that Bethel, whereby Michmas was described before, v. 2. and this Bethaven were all one place. For although the name Bethaven was translated to Bethel by the Prophets, yet it was not so called now, but after that it was made a place of Idolatry by Jeroboam, who set up his Golden Calf here, then it was Bethaven, that is, the house of iniquity, and no longer Bethel, that is, the house of God. But at the first Bethel and Bethaven were two distinct places not farre asunder, as we may read Iosh. 18. 12, 13. Junius.

The People of Israel being terrified by so great a multitude of Enemies, some hide themselves in caves and thickets, and some flee over Jordan to Gilead and Gad: and some remaine with Saul in Gilgal trembling. Touching those that fled over Jordan, it is said, the Hebrewes passed over Jordan, for so it is Hebr: and not, some of the Hebrewes, as in our translation, and hereupon it is scanned by Hugo, who these were, for of the whole body of the people it is said before, when the men of Israel saw themselves in a straight, they hid themselves, and here, the Hebrewes passed over. He resolveth, that they were some of them, who more properly retained the name of Hebrewes, because they used often to passe over Jordan, for the word עבר signifieth to passe, and here it is ועברו ועברו the passengers passed, that is, they that would passe over, they that were right Hebrewes, according to their name. And why fled they that way? because, saith Lyra, it was Eastward, and the Philistines came against them, from the West, where their country lay. Here, as Peter Martyr noteth, appeared presently their vanity in asking of a King, whom if they had once obtained, they thought they should be most safe from their Enemies, but now having one, they feare and are as much perplexed, as ever.

And he tarried 7 dayes according to the time which Samuel had set, but Samuel came not &c. Here is shewed how Saul sinned first, and was therefore rejected, viz. by offering sacrifice which was unlawfull for him to doe, but onely for a Priest or Prophet. For Samuel had promised to come unto him within 7 dayes to sacrifice for his prosperity, which, how it is to be understood, see there. Some thinke, that he sacrificed not, but by the hands of others, as Elkanah is said to have sacrificed, and David and Solomon, but all the Rabbins say, that he himselfe sacrificed, so saith P. Martyr, and that Ben Gerson saith that Saul by sacrificing thought to obtaine the spirit of Prophecy, and so to know the will of God, and to direct himselfe without Samuel's advice; so likewise Sulpitius Severus, Rupert, Lyra, Iosephus. But it was a custome even amongst the Heathen to sacrifice before they went to warre, that they might have the Gods propitious unto them, and this doubtlesse was Saul's end in sacrificing.

Saul having made an end of offering his burnt offering, Samuel came, and he relating what he had done, was by Samuel reprov'd therefore, and threatned that his Kingdome should not continue. But here a question ariseth, how he brake the commandement of God, seeing he stayed 7 dayes; as Samuel had appointed? To this Hugo answereth according to some, that no certaine number of dayes was set by Samuel, to the end whereof he should tarry for him, but that he should tarry till he came and then he would offer for him 7 dayes together, but this hath bene already confuted, Ch. 10. 8. Andreas saith Lyra answereth, that Samuel meant he should tarry 7 dayes after the day, in which Saul sent for him, but he reckoning that day for one, tarried but 6 more, and so transgressed. But he rather approveth of a third answer, viz. that Saul tarried not 7 dayes compleate, but the time of the evening sacrifice approaching and Samuel not coming, he offered the same day, for when he had made an end of one sacrifice, before he had offered the Peace-offerings Samuel came. And to this do I subscribe, and this is spoken of by P. Martyr, as the onely sinne of Saul at this time, and it was sinne enough, for which to be rejected, to doe against Gods command, in the smallest matter, as for our first Parents to eate of the forbidden fruite, so for Saul to anticipate the time set by the Lord, although never so little. But Lyra taxeth him for two other sinnes

Varablus.
Pellican.

Junius.

V. 5, 7.

Hugo Cardin.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

V. 8.

Ch. 10. 8.

Tostatus. Cajetan.
Varablus.

Peter Martyr.

V. 11, 12.

Hugo Card.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

sinnes here. 1 That he presumed to sacrifice, which King Uzziah presuming to do afterwards was smitten with the Leprosie. 2 In that he excused himselfe in stead of confessing his sinne, but his excuse by the great danger that he was in was nothing, for his sacrificing was rather a provoking of God against him then a reconciling of his favour towards him. He should have kept to the time set him by the Lord, and by faith rested upon him, in how great a straight soever he saw himselfe to be: for God had promised to his people keeping his Commandements, One of you shall chase 1000, and 100 of you put 10000 to flight; and it had bene shewed in Gideons expedition, that God can as easily save by few as by many. Whereas Saul in excusing himselfe, saith, I forced my selfe and offered a burnt-offering, the Vulg: Lat: hath it, being compelled by necessity I offered, Vatabl. I was bold, but the word is פָּנַחְתִּי I refrained my selfe, as Joseph is said by the same word to have refrained himselfe from weeping before his Brethren. His meaning is then, that he refrained as long as he could from sacrificing, although in so great straights, but at length seeing not Samuel come within the time limited he offered. And herein Saul thought that he did wisely and providently, not to goe to the battell before that he had made supplication to the Lord, (for sacrificing was joyned with the confession of sinnes, and praising of God) but Samuel telleth him, that he did foolishly, because he transgressed the commandment of God; and so doe all carnall men, when they thinke that they do wisely, they do foolishly, for who so goeth from the commandment under what pretence soever doth foolishly, and shall be rejected therefore, as Saul was. But how is it justifiable, that he should speake so unreverently to the King? Peter Martyr answereth well, that God spake thus by the mouth of Samuel, and Esay, Elisha, and Elisha and other Prophets being carried by the Spirit have spoken to Kings without all respect, because in such cases they were Gods legates, and not meere as their Subjects, in which regard at other times they humbled themselves before them. And as for Samuel in particular, he was more then another Prophet, a Judge, for it was said before, that he judged Israel all the dayes of his life; and he was set not onely to judge the people but even the King himselfe, in that he both made him King and pronounced his doome of rejection, and set up David to be King in his stead.

Note.

P. Martyr.

V. 13.

Qu.

Gen. 49.
Ben Gerson. Va-
lablus. Oflander.
Lunius.

Peter Martyr.
Pellican.

D. Kimbi.

Qu.

James 1. 14.

Qu.
Lyra.

And now would the Lord have established thy Kingdome over Israel for ever, but now it shall not continue, &c. A question ariseth here, how it could be said thus, considering the Prophetic of Jacob, that the Scapier should not depart from Judah, so that the Kingdome was to be established in Judah, not in Benjamin? Some answer, that by these words for ever, a long time only is to be understood, or all the time of Sauls life. Others, the Lord would have established thy Kingdome for ever, if thou hadst persisted in obedience to Gods commandments: for there was no promise made unto him, as afterwards to David, of an everlasting continuance of his Kingdome, but being set up by the Lord, there was a foundation laid, so that he might have continued and his children after him, if he had not transgressed; and here D. Kimbi applyeth that Deut. 17. 20. that the King should read the booke of the Law continually and keepe it, that he might prolong his dayes in his Kingdome, and his Children after him, and saith, that according to this it is here spoken: see the like passage before 1 Sam. 2. 30. If it be said, then if Saul had not disobeyed, how should the prophetic touching Judah have taken effect? Answer. God, to whom all things to come are present, foresaw, that Saul would breake his expresse commandments, that he might justly cast him and his house off againe. If it be objected, then there was a necessity of Sauls sinning and rejection. I answer, it is true, he could not but sinne, yet he was carryed hereunto, not by any necessity of Gods decree, but by the corruption of his owne nature and will, for God tempteth no man to evill, but every man is tempted when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence. But it will be said, Is not the will of God immutable? Lyra answereth well, the will and decree of God, as it is in his divine prescience, is immutable, but as it is in reference to secundary causes, viz. the well or ill doings

ings of men, it is mutable, and so it is to be understood here, If thou hadst persisted in obedience, thy Kingdome should have stood for ever.

Samuel having thus taxed Saul went away to Gibeah, and Saul and Jonathan followed him, having but 600 men with them, and the Philistines were still in Michmasb. From Gilgal to Gibeah was 12 miles, from thence to Michmasb 8 miles. They followed Samuel to Gibeah, saith Lyra, being so few, that they might have the comfort of his presence: and happily he went to Gibeah, or the hill of God, where the company of the Prophets was, that he might there together with them pray to God for the people being in this distresse. Some because there is no preposition before Gibeah, read it, he left Gilgal in Gibeah, but because these two were distinct places and farre asunder, this cannot be. Josephus saith, that Samuel went now to his owne house in Ramab, but it is more probable, that although in his anger he went away from Saul, yet he did not quite leave him in his danger, but let him understand, to what place he went, that he might come to him thither with his men, viz. to Gibeah. For although God by the mouth of Samuel rejected Saul, yet that he meant not that he should presently be cut off, appeareth by the good successe that he had by Jonathan meanes, now that he was come to Gibeah, against the Philistims, and therefore Samuel would not doubtlesse now give him over, but keepe neere unto him, and pray for him, and by his prayers most probably such a wonderfull victory was now immediately obtained. For he directed him after this to goe and fight against Amalek ch. 15. and still mourned for him ch. 16. 1.

The Philistims lying in Michmasb were not idle, but sent out 3 companies to spoile the Country of the Israelites, which, saith Lyra, they were the more bold to doe because they knew them to be unarmed, and so could make little resistance, and if they should set upon their Campe, when these were gone, they made no doubt, but that they should resist them well enough with the company remaining. But God intended otherwise, as appeareth ch. 14. where by Jonathan and his Armour-bearer alone the whole Campe was troubled. One Company went in the way that leadeth to Ophrah in the Land of Sbal. Ophrah, saith Junius, was in Benjamin, Josh. 18. 23. and the region of Sbal was spoken of before ch. 9. 4. but there it is Sbalisha, it is therefore rather to be held, that it should be read in the Land of Saul, as Lyra readeth it, and the Vulg. Latin: for the Countrey of Benjamin might be called well the land of Saul because he was of Benjamin. And to spoile this land they sent out first and chiefly, because Jonathan the sonne of Saul had smitten their garison, whereby they were provoked to this warre. But whereas the Vulg. Latin hath it, by the way of Ephraim to the land of Saul, this Lyra taxeth, as a corruption in the translation, but yet he erreth also in turning it Ephrata, whereas Hebr. it is Ophrah. The other company went the way of Betberon, that is, saith Junius, in the land of Ephraim Josh. 16. 3. the third company towards the valley of Zeboim towards the Wilderness, that is, in the land of Benjamin neare unto Jordan, Nehem. 11. 34.

Now there was no smith in all the land of Israel, for the Philistims said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or speares. It was the policy of the Philistims, when they had the Hebrews under, not to permit them to have any weapons of war, & to this end not a smith, that could make them in all their land, or that could make any iron tooles for any other use, as Mattocks, Spades, Plough-shares, &c. onely they were permitted to have files to sharpen these, and if they would have any made new, they must go to the Philistims for them: which sheweth, in what a miserable case they were in those dayes, seeing this must needs be a wonderfull trouble unto them, and being naked of weapons they were alwayes lyable to the danger of their enemies. Thus the Pope depriveth the people of their spirituall weapons by debarring them from reading the holy Scriptures, and by keeping them in an unknown tongue, and Iulian the Apostata by forbidding the learning of the liberall sciences unto Christians did the like, and thereby did more in danger the Christian religion, then all the persecuters, that were before him. And as Hugo noteth, they that take away faithfull preachers from the people, which should provide and put weapons into their hands to fight against

V. 15, 16.

M. B. Patriarch
travailes.
Lyra.

Genevens:

Josephus.

V. 17.

Lyra.

Junius.

Lyra.

Junius.

V. 19.

1 Sam. 7. 13.

Peter Martyr.

Judg 5 8.

Rabbin.

D. Kimbi

V. 20.

Lyra.

V. 22.

against their spirituall enemies. But how could the Philistims rule now thus over them, when as not long before they were subdued by Samuels prayers, and then it is said, they came no more into the land, and the hand of the Lord was against the Philistims all the dayes of Samuel? Moreover a little before this Ch. 11. they obtained a great victory against the Ammonites, and then there went out to warre 330000. how then could they bee all disarmed againe by this time? To the first Peter Martyr saith, according to the Rabbines, that the Philistims had them in this subjection in the latter dayes of Samuel, when the people fell againe to idolatry. But this is against that 1 Sam. 7. 13. wherefore I rather thinke, that this was a policy used of old by the Philistims before that great overthrow given them by Samuel, when they had subdued the Hebrews at the end of Eli his prefecture, they interdicted them the use of smiths, and although a little before this they were exempt from the jurisdiction of the Philistims, yet through disuse having none expert in making armes amongst them, they remained without smiths to this day contenting themselves with slings, and bowes, and clubs, and pitchforks, and long staves to fight with all, and the rather because without other warlike instruments they had prevailed against the Canaanites in the time of Deborah, who had also taken their weapons from them, when they reigned over them, and Shamgar with a ploughshare, had slaine 600. of the Philistims. And for husbandry buinesse, although it was a great toyle unto them, when they would have any new iron tooles made to goe for them to the Philistine smiths, yet not knowing by this time, how to remedy it, for the present they made this shift. Tostatus thinketh that the men with Saul onely were without sword or speare as being of Gibeab, where a Garrison of the Philistims had lyen to keep them under, if it shall seeme strange, that the armed should hide themselves, and these onely stay, there was a speciall providence herein for Gods greater glory. For the other question an answer to that may bee gathered from this, which hath beene already said, they fought and prevailed against the Ammonites without sword, or speare, with such instruments, as were before spoken of, so David prevailed against Goliath armed with a sword and a speare, having nothing in his hand but a sling onely, and amongst those of Gibeab 700. are said to have beene able to sling a stone at an hairebreadth. And this of their being without sword or speare is premised here to magnifie Gods power the more, in giving them the victory, of which it is spoken Ch. 14. Yet some thinke, that the Israelites onely in the land of Canaan were thus unprovided of weapons, they to whom the power of the Philistims had not extended on the other side of Jordan being sufficiently armed, and so in the expedition against the Ammonites, they had armour and weapons of them, seeing Isabel Gilead, to the rescue whereof they went, lay there: and Kimbi saith, that they had old weapons, a few: but none new. But the text is plaine against smiths throughout al the land of Israel. And all the Israelites went downe to the Philistims to sharpen their sheares and coulters, &c. yet they had a file for the sheares &c. the Vulgar Latin, retusa itaq; erant acies vomerum, &c. the edges of their sheares, &c. were therefore blunt unto the very ox goad, expounded by Lyra, because after that Jonathan had smitten the Garison of the Philistims, they durst no more goe downe to the smiths amongst them to sharpen them. But the Hebr. words are והיתה המצורה פים and there was a file of mouths for the sheares, and by a file both David Kimbi and R. Solomon expound it, and Pagninus saith, it is called a file of mouthes because it hath many mouthes, as it were, and this they used commonly to sharpen their instruments of husbandry withall, but onely when they were so worne, that they needed more to be done unto them, for then they had used to goe downe to the Philistims smiths, although now it is most probable, that they durst not doe so any more, so that there was now not any, that had sword or speare, except Saul and Jonathan, who being Princes, it is no marvaile, though they were better provided then any of rest, so Lyra, who saith, that the Rabbins say, that these weapons were brought unto them miraculously, but he rejecteth it, as a fable, because if it had beene so, it should doubtlesse have been spoken of in the Scripture.

And

And a Garison of the Philistims went out to the passage of Michmash, that is, saith Iunius, that having taken it, the Countrey of Benjamin, which lay before it, might bee open to them, which is spoken in way of preparative to the history following, Ch. 14.

Mytically, saith Hugo, by smithes wanting in Israel, understand faithfull Preachers failing in the Church, at what time they goe downe to Philosophers and Orators, which are set forth by the Philistims smiths to sharpen their instruments, that is, to set a glosse upon their teaching, which tendeth indeed, to the bringing in of worldly gaine, when the people are taken with their eloquence, but for the spirituall warfare they want weapons, all but a Saul and a Jonathan, that is, Christ and a few faithfull teachers.

CHAP. XIII.

Here Jonathan espying, how the Garison of the Philistims was placed moveth his armour bearer to goe with him over unto it, but Saul his Father knew not of his going. This motion in Jonathan came doubtlesse from God, as the sequell sheweth, and therefore that he might not be hindred in this attempt, hee made not his father acquainted with it: a thing, which otherwise hee ought not to have done, to goe against the enemy without order from the Generall of the field, or without his knowledge; for to doe thus commonly tendeth to the confusion of the Army, wherefore Torquatus, as Martyr noteth, put his his owne sonne to death for presuming thus to doe, and Marlius another Roman his, although hee had fought valiantly against the enemy. Hee also arguing the case, whether it were not temerity in Jonathan thus alone to goe against an whole Garison, rather then true valour, defendeth it, because God had promised that one of them should chace a 1000. and two of them put 10000. to flight; this Jonathan recounted and beleived, and so being full of faith proceeded to this incounter; and because by Saul deliverance had bene promised from the Philistims, hee seeing his father now growne timorous, and not daring to oppose himselfe against the Philistims, that waited the Countrey, tooke courage to himselfe and went alone with his armour-bearer, as God moved him.

And Saul tarried in the uttermost part of Gibeab under a Pomgranate tree, which is in Migron &c. that is, saith Iunius, in a field so called neere one part of the straight towards Gibeab, Esa. 10. 28. here he and his men lurked for feare, watching to see, what the Philistims would doe. And with him was Abiah the sonne of Ahitub, Ichabods brother, the sonne of Phinees, the sonne of Eli, the Lords Priest in Shiloh, wearing an Ephod, &c. Abiah is said to have bene there wearing an Ephod, to signifie that he was now High-Priest, for the rich Ephod with the Breastplate, and the Urim and Thummim was for the High-Priest therewithall to consult with the Lord, Exod. 28. In that he is said to be the sonne of Ahitub, the sonne of Phinees, it appeareth that Phinees had two sonnes, Ahitub not hitherto mentioned, and Ichabod his yonger brother who was filius Posthumus, and since the time of Eli's death, and Phinees slaine, when Samuel was young, Ahitub finished his course, and now Abiah his sonne was Priest; but whether Ahitub was ever High-Priest or no, we do not read, it is most likely that he was not, but during the 20 yeares, that the arke abode in Kiriathjearim, before Saul's election, Elazar the sonne of Abinadab being sanctified for the Priest to keepe it, hee lived and dyed privately, Elias posterity being then presently by the just judgement of God for his and his sonnes sinnes thus long stripped of this honour, and although Abiah his sonne now attained to it againe, yet it continued not long in that family, as hath bene before shewed, and will afterwards appeare in the beginning of Solomons raigne. This Abiah is otherwise called Abimelech, Ch. 22. 20. who was slaine at Saul's command: whereas hee is commonly understood to be the nephew of Ichabod, the sonne of Phinees, Iunius will have him to be his brother, but this cannot bee, because so he must have bene the sonne of Phinees and not of Ahitub. The consideration of these

Junius.

The Mystery.
Hugo Cardin.

V. 3.

Peter Martyr.

1 Sam. 9. 16.

V. 2.
Iunius.V. 3.
Peter Martyr.

1 Sam. 7. 1.

Iunius.

these Priests, Eli, Ahitub, Abiath, and Abiathar also his sonne, to whose time Samuel lived, sheweth plainly, that hee was a very old man, when hee died, and not of 52 yeares onely, as the Rabbins would make him, of which see before, Chap. 8. 1. Now as Abiath the Priest was present, wee read the like of the Ark, v. 18.

V. 4. 5.

In describing Jonathan's proceedings, here is shewed how hardly he came to the Philistims garison, hee was faine to creep upon his hands and his feet over a steep sharpe rock to come unto them, and his Armour-bearer after him; and there are said to have been two rocks on either side of them, north and south, so as that both those wayes they thought themselves safe from the enemies attempting any thing against them, as being strongly defended by nature, and other passages they kept by force of armes. Wherefore by this way, whereby they thought themselves most secure, they with great difficulty gat unto them. Jonathan had smitten one garrison of the Philistims before, having with him 1000 men; now hee telleth his Armour-bearer, that there was no restraint unto the Lord, to save by many or by few, exhorting him therefore to goe with him over to these uncircumcised. Whereas hee saith, It may bee the Lord will worke for us; this was not spoken by way of doubting, saith Pellican, but of praying, and to intimate the difficulty of the attempt, that his man might bee excited by faith to rely upon God also for help.

V. 6.

Pellican.

V. 8. 9.

Josephus.

Borrihem,
Pellican.

The man promising not to leave him, they go over the rock, and shew themselves to the Philistims, and Jonathan saith to his Armour-bearer, If they shall say, Wee will come to you, then wee will stand still and goe no further; but if they say, Come to us, we will goe, for the Lord hath delivered them into our hands. Josephus saith, that Jonathan having earnestly prayed unto the Lord, had this signe given unto him, and it was a signe in reason, that if they should say, come to us, they should be confounded, because it argued confidence in their owne strength, that they durst not come neare unto them being so strong. And not much unlike unto this is that of Borrihem, it was a boasting speech like that of Goliath to David, for which it was just with God to pull them downe. Pellican saith, if they said, tarry and wee will come unto you, it was a signe of courage, that they durst goe and set upon their enemies, but if they said, come to us, of pusillanimity, and that they feared to set upon them. For Gods giving Jonathan this signe, it is not to bee doubted, but that he was moved thus to say, by the instinct of his Spirit, as Abrahams servant propounded a signe, when he went to fetch a wife for his masters son Isaac.

V. 11, 12.

V. 24.

Josephus.

Lyra.

The Philistims seeing Jonathan and his Armour-bearer, first deride them, and then bid them, Come hither, and wee will shew you a thing. Jonathan hearing this, was full of courage and confidence, and fell upon them, and his Armour-bearer after him, and they slew at the first onset twenty men within half an acre of ground, which a yoke of oxen might plough. Whereas Jonathan is said to have gone up upon his hands and his feet, Josephus saith, that hee went not on that side where the Philistims saw him, but at another place where they were more secure. And when he came unto them, a cloud suddenly arose, which darkened the aire so, that they knew him not, nor one another, and so every one smote his fellow that was next him; and they that had gone out to spoile the Countrey, returning, fought against their owne men. But others, as Lyra hath it, better, that they were smitten with an acrisis, as the Syrians were, 2 King. 6. when they came to take Elisba, so as that they could not perceive, or see those that smote them, nor know one another, but every one took the next unto him to bee his enemy, and therefore went on beating down one another, as v. 18. And v. 20. it is said, Every ones sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture: yet here is nothing exprest, but that there came upon them a very great trembling, and that the very earth trembled under them, they by a feare, wherewith they were smitten from the Lord, and the earth by an earthquake sent to increase their terrour; but hereby wee may gather, that they were so blinded in their judgement, that they knew not one another, and therefore as any was in anothers way in this their their hasty flight, hee beat him downe and slew him.

For these words, v. 15. there was a very great trembling, Hebr. it is, a trembling of God; and so Varatim and the Chald. render it, noting from these words, that there was trembling or shaking upon the very earth sent from God, and not upon the Philistims army onely; the Vulg. a miracle from God: Junim a very great trembling, because that which is caused by God extraordinarily, is very great. I thinke it best to hold to the originall. For the quantity of ground whereupon these 20 were slaine, it is said to have been halfe an acre, which a yoke of oxen might plough; in the Vulg. Latine; which a yoke might plough in a day; Hebr. it is, as it were in halfe an acre of a paire of land, which must necessarily bee supplied to make it sensible, in halfe an acre of land ploughed by a paire of oxen: the Chaldee, about the space of halfe a journey of a paire of oxen, but hereby must bee understood halfe a dayes worke, because it is but little that a paire of oxen could plough at halfe a journey, and certainly halfe an acre is here meant; Josephus saith, this was done early in the morning, and these twenty men were smitten being yet asleepe. But it seemeth rather that they were placed in ranke, or else one would not have been so farre from another, as to have supplied halfe an acre with twenty men. And this is said to have been the first slaughter, because there was another, that followed, made by the Philistims amongst themselves, and a third by the Israelites after this chasing them.

The watchmen of Saul seeing the trouble of the Philistims host, certifie him thereof, and the people being numbred, hee findeth that Jonathan and his Armour-bearer were absent, then hee bade Abiath to bring the Arke. Hereby Peter Martyr gathereth that Samuel was not now there, or if hee were, hee would no more consult with him, as being too rigid: but that hee was in Gibeah, hath been shewed before. When, or how the Arke was brought hither, is uncertaine; some thinke it was carryed to Gilgal before, where their assemblies met, and from thence now to Gibeah, when the campe removed, but here it stayed not long, for it was still in Kiriath-jearim in the time of David's reigne, so that it was soon carryed back thither againe. For consulting with the Lord in any difficult case by the Arke, it is most probable, that the High-priest, arrayed in his robes and Ephod, with the Urim and Thummim, stood before the Oracle, and from thence craved and expected answer from the Lord. Now Saul taketh this course, that hee might seem to bee religious, and not to attempt any great matter, but God being first consulted with.

Whilst Saul talked with the Priest, the noise increased, then hee said unto him, Withdraw thy hand. Of what hee talked to the Priest, is not said, but by the premisses it appeareth, that hee talked with him about bringing the Arke, and the thing that hee would have him to consult about. But now seeing the Philistims already falling, hee stayeth not, but maketh haste into the battaile, bidding the Priest withdraw his hand, that is, to proceed no further in inquiring. Josephus saith, that the Priest had received answer, that the Philistims should bee overcome, but this agreeth not with the sacred history. Saul, as is generally held by Expositors, herein shewed the ficklenesse of his devotion, and how little trust hee had in God, in that when hee was in a right way, which God himselfe had directed to, Exod. 18. yet perceiving the victory already to bee partly obtained, or, as some say, fearing that the Philistims hastened towards him, hee either would not, because hee thought hee was now sure of the victory, or durst not, because hee feared the enemy comming, stay till hee had received answer from the Lord. Yet Samuel hearing of the enemies approach another time, stayed till hee had done offering sacrifice, and then going out to battaile, God fought for him. Wee contrariwise must seeke to God with perseverance, and in all times of danger when wee are in his service, rely upon his gracious protection.

When Saul and the men with him came to the battaile, they found the Philistims fighting one against another, which Josephus saith, was, because the Army consisting of people of divers Countreys, the souldiers knew not one Varatim.

Chald. Paraphr.

Josephus.

V. 16, 17, 18.

Peter Martyr.

V. 19.

Josephus.

Chap. 7.

Not.

V. 20.

Peter Martyr.

another, and the Hebrewes that were with the Philistims, turned against them; joyning with Saul and Jonathan; and such as had hid themselves in Mount Ephraim, came forth and fought against them also. Peter Martyr thinketh as was said before, that they were held so in their eyes, that they could not discern their friends from their foes and herein the wonderfull mercy of God: appeared towards his people, in that Saul having sinned, and so being worthy to bee forsaken, and Samuel having left him, and the people shewing their distrust in God, in that they fled away and hid themselves, yet he wrought this great miracle for them; But herein he had respect to the great faith of Jonathan, whom he had singularly stirred up, and to his Covenant made of old with their fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The Hebrewes that were with the Philistims were either such, as sojourned amongst them, or dwelt still in the Cities which they had subdued, and served them, and so in time of warre were constrained to goe with them, as David sometime when hee dwelt in Ziklag, had gone with the Philistims to fight against his brethren, but that the Princes would not suffer him; And the battaile passed over to Bethaven, that is, the army went this way in pursuing the Philistims; this Bethaven was neare to Michmas, see before, Chap. 13. 5.

V. 24.

Lyd.

24.

And the people of Israel were distressed, because Saul had adjured them, &c. Saul seeing the Philistims to flee, to the end no delay might bee made in slaying and pursuing them, adjureth all the people to eate nothing till night, in this forme, Cursed be the man that eateth any food untill evening, and to this Lyd. gathereth by the sequell, that the paine of death was annexed. And hereupon hee moveth a question, Whether Saul sinned in thus adjuring the people, or not? And answereth, that it is the common opinion of Doctors, that hee did sin, and that two wayes: First, because it was ill to adjure the people. Secondly, it was worse to seek to fulfill this oath. For although it bee lawfull to give an oath in the case of necessity, and due circumstances being observed, yet if either of these faile, it is a sinne. Now here was no necessity, unlesse God had so directed, thus to pursue the enemies, because God had miraculously confounded them already; and hee failed in the circumstance of excepting, if any through abstinence were ready to faint and dye; whereas in all ordinances about meats, and abstinence herefrom, mens lives and healths are to bee respected, and they are not in the case of necessity bound by any lawes. Wherefore hee sinned yet worse in seeking to slay Jonathan, because hee ate a little honey in his necessity, and because by this his adjuring them, hee hindred them from pursuing and destroying more of their enemies through faintnesse, and was a cause of sinne in the people, in that being kept so long from food, when they came to it, they were so hungry, that they ate flesh with the blood, as is afterwards shewed. Whereas it is objected, Saul's desire was good, viz. to destroy the more of Gods enemies by this meanes; and if he had sinned in adjuring the people thus, then Jonathan had not sinned in eating contrary to this oath; and if so, God would not have directed the lots to the finding of him out. Sol. A good intention doth not justifie a mans action, for then if one should steale with an intent to give to the poore, hee should doe well. Again, although by Gods judgement Jonathan was found out, yet it followeth not, that hee sinned herein, but God discovered him, that by being brought forth, and answering for himselfe, his innocency might appeare, which otherwise might have been questioned amongst the people, because some of them saw him eate honey, but knew not that hee heard not, when his father adjured all to eate nothing till evening. God therefore discovered him to be the man, but by his answer it appeared, that hee was cleare from any fault, because hee had not heard of the adjuration before; neither could it bee a sinne in him howsoever, because hee was inforced by necessity to eate, seeing his spirits began to faile him, which hereby were revived. Iosephus saith, that Saul used this victory too insolently and immodestly, to fill himselfe with the slaughter of his enemies; and some, saith Peter Martyr, hold, that hee would have them fast out of superstition, that by

Iosephus.

Peter Martyr.

by the merit hereof they might obtaine the greater victory; but hee preferreth the former, that hee did it out of insolency, and therefore hee condemneeth him of folly and cruelty towards his subjects, whose health and safety hee ought to have preferred before the destruction of his enemies. And as others have it, hee shewed his hypocrisie and arrogancy, in that hee would by this meanes ascribe to his owne policy the victory, which God had given by Jonathan. Comestor saith, that in warre they used not to eate, till the time of the evening sacrifice, hereupon Saul made this adjuration; sed vix credo.

Then the people came into a wood where the honey dropped, and none durst eate any thereof, because they feared the oath. Bees, saith Lyra, kept in trees, and gathered thither such abundance of honey, as that it dropped from thence downe upon the ground; and because it was so in divers places of the land of Canaan, it was called a land flowing with milke and honey. They feared the oath, because the penalty of breaking it was death.

But Jonathan not knowing of this adjuration, because hee was absent when it was made, tasted a little honey, and his eyes were cleared, which one seeing, told him of the oath. Then Jonathan said, My father hath troubled the land; see now I pray you how mine eyes are enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey: How much more if the people had eaten freely to day of the spoile of the enemy which they found? for had there not now been a much greater slaughter made of the enemies? Through hunger the spirits begin to faile, and then the sight, which is by the spirits comming to the eyes, must needs waxe dimme, but food being received, the spirits are strengthened, and so the sight commeth againe, according to this speech of Jonathan. The words of v. 30. are very obicure, and therefore are rendred diversly from the common reading; by Junius thus, Etiā quia (utinam comedisset populus libere hodie de spoliis inimicorum quod sufficisset) quia inquam jam non inferitur in Philisteos plaga amplior: so also Arian Montanus, and this is word for word according to the Hebrew, and the sense is perfect. I would to God the people had been permitted freely to eate, because by their being restrained no greater destruction hath been made of the Philistims through their fainting for want of food. Whereas in the common reading, the words in the beginning of the verse are altered, how much more, to which the Hebrew גם כִּלּוֹם cannot bee drawne, and that which is indicative in the end, is made interrogative; Saul is here rightly taxed, for, as Theodore and Chrysostome have it, hee did foolishly, so likewise Procopius; but Tostatus defendeth Saul's act, because there was no such necessity of eating till night, when they were in the heate of warre; and Cajetan also, and Tertul. de jejun. and Ambros. Ser. 36. praise him; and Jerome li. 2. contr. Jovin. saying, that herein he followed Moses and Joshua.

And they smote the Philistims that day from Michmas to Aialon, &c. This Aialon was a City in the tribe of Dan, Josh. 19. 42. and it was 12 miles from Michmas. The people having pursued them thus farre, waxed faint, and so could follow them no further, then the evening comming on, they fell to eating of the spoile, and killed and ate sheep, oxen, and calves with the blood; and it is said, they slew them on the ground, which, saith Lyra, is expounded three ways. 1 In every place where they tooke them, not bringing them first to the sanctuary which was then amongst them, that the blood might bee poured out upon the Altar, as the Law required; for although being farre off from the Sanctuary, they were to poure out the blood upon the ground, yet being neare unto it, they were to kill their beasts so, that the blood might be sprinkled upon the Altar. 2 Upon the ground, that is, not laying them upon something, from whence the blood might the better run, and bee all drained out. 3 They did kill and eate of the spoile of the enemy, before that they had brought a sacrifice to the Lord, which they ought to have done first. For the first of these is Jerome, and for the third, and for the second Pellican, and Peter Martyr, and Junius. And this is undoubtedly meant, as the complaint following which was brought to Saul, doth shew. They laid not the beasts up upon some stone or block, as the manner was, that the blood might runne

V. 25.
Lyra.

V. 27.

V. 29.

V. 30.

Junius.

V. 31.

*M. B. Pauriark's
travailes.*V. 32.
Lyra.

Note.
Berrham.

V. 33.
Iunius.

Lyra, Hugo
Card. Pellican, Berrh. P. Mari.
Josephus.

V. 35.
Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Hieronym.

Osiander.

V. 36.

Glossa Ordin.

Hugo Cardin.

all away from the flesh, but for haste they killed any where upon the ground, and the beast being dead, prepared the flesh with much blood still remaining in it, and therefore Saul to remedy this, commanded a great stone to be brought, and that all the people should come thither to kill their beasts, that he might see the Law duely observed in letting out all the blood. But by his ordinance before made against eating ought, till the evening, hee was the occasion of this sinne against Gods ordinance, as one well noteth, and so the Pope is by many of his decrees, as the Pharisees by their traditions, an occasion of overthrowing Gods commandements.

For the great stone which Saul biddeth them rowle unto him, some thinke, that it was not to kill the beasts upon, but that being killed neare unto it, sacrifice might be offered thereupon, and therefore they say it was the Altar, which hee is said to have built, v. 35. but all others understand it as before, and Josephus saith, hee built an Altar besides this stone; and Peter Martyr, that in compelling the people to come to one stone, although hee made a shew of piety, yet hee added still more trouble to the people, they being now 10000, as Josephus hath it, to cause them all to come to one stone to kill before they could eat, which could not be done but in a long time, and to the increase of their misery, being already neare famisht through abstinence.

Touching the Altar which hee built, it is said to be the first that hee built unto the Lord, for as Lyra hath it, although hee offered sacrifice before, when hee was reprov'd by Samuel, yet it was not upon any Altar which hee built, but upon one set up there before; now seeing that sacrifice was not accepted, he made a new Altar to offer a sacrifice of praise for this victory thereupon, but indeed hee was now so farre from the other, which was in Gilgal, and hee at this time in Aidon, that hee could not use it. Hugo saith, that hee built it to sacrifice for the sinne of the people upon it, for that they had eaten flesh with the blood. Jerome following the Hebr. traditions, thinketh, that he had built Altars before, but because hee built now in obedience, then in hypocrisie, this is said to be the first. Osiander saith, that this Altar was not set up for sacrifice, but for a monument of the victory. Josephus, that sacrifices were offered upon it. It seemeth plaine to mee that hee never built any Altar before, which is here taxed as a neglect of piety in him, in that other great persons, who were godly, upon any favour received, have built Altars to God to shew their thankfulness, as Samuel, Jephthah, Gideon, &c. but Saul had obtained a victory before against the Ammonites, and yet built none till now: And for the use of this Altar, I hold with Josephus, and Lyra, and others, that it was for sacrifice, and that of praise, as had been the use of Altars formerly set up by other godly Commanders. When any thing hath been set up for a monument, it hath been a stone or Altar, having a name given it implying so much, as the stone called Eben Ezer, set up by Samuel. Whereas it may seeme unlawfull for Saul to set up an Altar for sacrifice, which might not be done in every place, but onely in the place which the Lord should choose, except it were done by a Prophet, or some man having extraordinary direction from God: It is answered, that it was in the presence of the Ark, which was there at that time, and therefore justifiable.

Saul having refreshed himselfe moveth the people to goe downe the same night against the Philistines, but being advised by the Priest he first enquireth of the Lord, whether he should goe and prevaile, and no answer being made, he calleth them together to enquire out the sinner, for whose sake God denyed to give any answer, vowing, that he should dye for it, if it were his sonne Jonathan: whereby it appeareth, that he thought this to be the sinne in that they had some of them eaten contrary to the oath. In calling the people together it is said, draw yee neere together all the chiefe of the people, Hebr. and Vulg. Lat. all the corners of the people, and thus, saith the ordinary Glosse, are Princes called, because as by the corners the walls are held together, so by Princes the people in Unity, and as Hugo hath it, because the corner stones of a wall are the best, as Princes ought also to be; thus therefore they are called also Zephan. 1. and Esa. 19.

For

For Sauls swearing, that he should dye whosoever had committed this sinne, this was both an unjust oath, because he knew not whether the sinne were of that nature, that it might be punished with death, and a foolish oath, because now every one for feare would conceale himselfe, as P. Martyr noteth. Then he divideth himselfe and Jonathan from the people, and casteth lots to finde out the offender, praying God to give a perfect lot, Hebr: give perfection, the Vulg. Lat. give judgement, Junius and Osand. give him that is innocent, observing that when Jonathan was taken, it fell out according to this his desire, but the Chald. better, a perfect lot, and so our translation. Of lots see Numb. 33. 54. Now for so much as God heard Saul and gave a perfect lot, for first he and Jonathan, then Jonathan was taken, a question ariseth, whether Saul prayed in faith? 2. Whether Jonathan sinned in eating honey, because he was taken? 3. Whether Saul sinned not as much or more then he? To the first Peter Martyr answereth well, God directed the lots aright, not so much because Saul prayed so, but for his owne Glory, seeing he professeth to be the disposer of lots. Wherefore when the Mariners in the Ship with Jonah, who were Heathen, cast lots, the offender was hereby rightly found out. To the second some answer, that Jonathan sinned not in eating, because he knew not of the oath, yet the lots were so directed, that he was found out, that his innocency, when he was heard to speake, might appeare, as I have already shewed upon v. 24. But Willet contrariwise will have Jonathan somewhat faulty for breaking the oath, because ignorance, although it excuseth à tanto, yet it excuseth not à toto. But this is only in case, that a man is bound to take notice of the thing, wherein it is transgressed, as I cannot see, how Jonathan was, except order had beene taken for the notifying of it to every one, as well absent as present. Jonathan therefore was taken, and God denyed to make answer, till this sinne was found out, it hereby appearing that sinne was committed, not that he might be convinced of doing evil, and so suffer for it, for God provided for his deliverance by the people, but that Sauls rashnesse and sinne in adjuring all the Host might thus be checked, as he was well worthy. For although he pretended piety in that adjuration, and then in shewing to be so unpartiall towards the transgressour, how neere unto him soever, yet this was in him nothing but hypocrisie, and tyranny, and folly, to the hindering of the slaughtering of many more of Gods Enemies at that time. And thus it is easily answered to the third, Saul sinned most, yea onely, but was not taken, 1. For his credits sake, he being King, that it might not be impaired, which conduced much to the keeping of the people in obedience. 2. Because if he had beene taken, none could have done execution upon him. 3. That there might thus be a foundation laid of Military discipline in Armies. 4. Because Jonathan was seene by some of them to breake the Oath, who knew not that he did it ignorantly, and so might otherwise have beene scandalized: and although he sinned not in eating, yet his open impugning of the Kings act was worthy of some taxation. Jonathan being taken and confessing what he had done, Saul sweareth againe, that he should surely die, Pharisee-like using more rigour for his owne Ordinance broken, then for Gods, in eating with the bloud, for that he easily passed over, and so doe the Papists count it a greater sinne and more severely punish it, to transgresse one of their Ordinances, then the expresse lawes of God.

But the People take part with Jonathan and save him. For the manner, how, some thinke that they offered prayers and supplications to God for his deliverance, as Josephus, some that they became petitioners to Saul, some that they saved him by force out of his fathers hands: for they opposed an oath against his oath, and so Saul seeing great danger of a mutiny in the Army yeildeth unto them. And this is most probable, because no mention is made of their petitioning for his life. But in thus doing there was a foundation laid of civill Warres and Rebellion against the King, which could not but be a great sin, as Chrysost. noteth although it fell not out so, for it is to be considered what might have happened, and not what happened on this their opposing of the King. And he observeth the artificium of the Devill in drawing the

V. 39.

Peter Martyr
V. 40, 41.

Qu.

P. Martyr.Borham, Junius
Osand.Willet.Peter Martyr.

V. 44.

V. 45.

Josephus.Chrysost.

Peter Martyr.

V. 46.
V. 47.

Junius.

Oflander.

Peter Martyr

V. 48.

Schol. Histor.
V. 49.
P. Martyr

Junius.

V. 50.
Schol. Histor.

the people to sweare thus contrary to their King, for one part now must needs be entangled with an horrible sinne; yea as boyes pulling at a line some against others, doe on both part take a fall, if the Rope breaketh, so here was falling into sinne on both sides. The arguments used by the people, why Jonathan should not dye, faith Peter Martyr, were but weake, 1. he had wrought salvation, 2. God had wrought with him, for a wicked Souldier may sometime doe valiantly and have good successe, and yet afterwards commit somewhat worthy of death. The maine reason then is omitted, he deserved thus well, and for that wherein he faulted, he did it ignorantly, and therefore was not worthy to dye.

So Saul pursued the Philistims no farther at that time, and they went to their place, v. 47. from hence to the end of the chapter, the warres and other memorable things touching Saul are set forth most compendiously, that he might haften to the history of David. Saul tooke the Kingdome of Israel and fought against all his Enemies on every side &c. Junius readeth it, Saul had his Kingdome being received, the Vulg. Lat. he had his Kingdome confirmed. But the Hebrew best, he tooke it, that is, having heard by Samuel, that his Kingdome should not stand ch. 13. 14. he strengthened himselfe by gathering forces unto him, as v. 25. that none might be able to take it from him; to which effect Junius in 1 Sam. 13. 1. Neither did he want successe in all the warres which he made against the Ammonites, Moabites, the King of Zobah and the Philistims, for it is said, that whithersoever he turned, he vexed them. Of the Zobeans see 2 Sam. 8. Although he were wicked and rejected of God, yet for his people Israels sake God prospered him in fighting against their Enemies, for now Samuel yet living, they were kept in obedience to God, wherefore he would not forsake them. The word ירשיע in the Vulg. Lat. is superabat, in Peter Martyr, viriliter egit, in Junius, inquietabat eos, the word doth properly signifie he condemned them for wicked, or he handled them as wicked men, as they were, because they were enemies to Gods People, and greatly infested them. Lyra will have the Hebrew word to signifie he did wickedly, a demonstration whereof is made ch. 15. And he gathered an Host and smote the Amalekites &c. This is spoaken by anticipation, that his valiant gests might all be summed up together, and this in particular is left to be declared more at large ch. 15. yet Comestor faith happily he smote them first, before that he utterly destroyed them at the commandement of the Lord. v. 49. His sonnes and daughters are mentioned, amongst whom Ishboseth is not named, because happily he was yet very young, or of no valour. But because he is said to be 40 yeares old at the death of his father, 2 Sam. 2. 10. he was not omitted for want of age, but for want of worth. That of Junius is not so probable, that Sauls sonnes onely are propounded to be mentioned here, which fell with him in his last fight against the Philistims, for why then is mention made also of his daughters?

His wife is said to have bene Abinoam, Abner the sonne of Ner his Captaine, &c. 1 Chron. 8. 33. Ner is also said to bee father of Kish, Sauls father; but this, faith Comestor, is spoken for his age, and because he brought him up.

CHAP. XV.

V. 1.

Lyra.

Here Saul is sent by Samuel against Amalek, being charged to destroy them all, and all their cattle, sparing none, because they had dealt so wickedly with the Hebrews in the wilderness, Exod. 17. 8. Comestor following R. Solomon faith hereupon, that hee was charged to destroy the Beasts, because many amongst the Amalekites had the faculty of transforming themselves into Beasts by witchcraft, lest in those shapes they should escape. But Lyra well rejecteth this, because this generall destruction of all things tended to shew the greatest indignation against so wicked a nation, that might bee, that the memory thereof might be quite rased out. And Amalek was not served thus alone but others had also the in like detestation, as Numb. 24. the

Lord

Lord saith, I remember what Amalek did, this is spoken, as Peter Martyr hath it, not that God doth properly remember or forget, but according to the manner of men, because by not doing any thing yet against Amalek in 400. yeares, hee might seeme to have forgotten their injuries done to his people, but now taking order for revenge upon them hee seemed to remember them. Whence note, that judgements against the wicked may long bee deferred, but at length they shall come. The particulars to bee destroyed are enumerated, that Saul might be without al colour of excuse, men, women and children, sheep and oxen, &c. If this shall seeme to bee cruelty, for what had the little children or beasts done? I answer, if men of themselves being carried on with a desire of revenge should have done thus, it had bene intolerable cruelty, but authority being given from God thus to doe, it is justice to punish them not onely in themselves, but also in their children and cattle. When Samuel came to fend Saul against Amalek hee said, thus saith the Lord of Hosts, because hee hath all power, and all creatures are used as his Hosts, whensoever hee pleaseth, see Esay 40. 26.

Saul therefore calleth the people together, and numbresth them in Telaim 200000. footmen and 10000. men of Judah. The word Telaim signifying Lambes, is in the Vulgar Latin rendred, as Lambes, and the Hebrews hold, that it being the time of the passeover, every one brought a Lambe, which when they were numbred, the number of the men was knowne, for it was not lawfull to number them by the poll. But to leave this, as a fond conjecture, it is more probable, that Telaim is a proper name here, which Junius conjectureth to be Telem, in the tribe of Judah, spoken of Iosh. 15. 24. as lambes, it cannot bee rendred, because  $\pi$  is prefixed signifying in, and not  $\tau$  signifying as. Josephus saith, that he numbred them in Gilgal, but hee erreth manifestly in the number, for he hath but 40000. of Israel, and 30000. of Judah. Whereas Judah affordeth a lesse number then any other tribe and yet was the greatest, 2 Sam. 24. it was because it lay upon the Philistines cost, and so could spare no more. Having this great Army he sendeth to the Kenites to goe away, or to descend from the Amalekites, that they might bee out of danger; and he biddeth them descend, because they dwelt upon hills and rockes, Numb. 24. 21. These were the people, of whom came Hobab the father in law of Moses, Iudg. 1. 16. and they dwelt now on the south of Judah, neare unto Amalek, and partly amongst them. Now because the people of Israel had received kindenesse from one of them in the wildernesse, this is here long after requited, as the Amalekites are appointed to destruction for their unkindenesse, and cruelty, so the benefits done to Gods people shall not goe unrewarded. But because they are required to depart from amongst the Amalekites, that they might be spared, hereby was shewed, that who so would not partake with the wicked in their judgments, must separate from them, and not bee linked in society with them, as 2 Cor. 6. 17.

And Saul smote Amalek from Havilah to Shur right over against Egypt, that is, a Countrey of Arabia to the uttermost bound of Arabia towards Egypt, whereby saith Junius, is not meant the whole Countrey of the Amalekites, but so many of them, as came into the place here described against Saul: for if all the Amalekites had now bene destroyed, how could they have after this invaded Ziklag, and bene pursued and slaine by David? thus hee, but if Saul had slaine onely those, that came out against him, he should not have fulfilled Gods command, which was not onely to destroy the men, but also the women and children, for which hee must needs enter into their Cities. Wherefore Josephus better, he went from Towne to Towne killing and slaying all that hee could meet withall from Pelusium to the Red-sea. And whereas the Amalekites are againe spoken of after this, Ch. 27. 8. and 30. 1. whereby it should seeme, that they were not all rooted out at this time, it may bee thought, that some fled away into other parts, and some hid themselves and so escaped, or men of other countreys seeing Amalek now to lye waste having some Amalekites amongst them came and inhabited there, being from the place where they lived called Amalekites.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

V. 4.

Junius.
P. Martyr.
Josephus.

V. 6.

Note

V. 7.

Junius.
1 Sam. 27. 8.
Ch. 30. 1.

Josephus.

And

Peter Martyr.

the people to sweare thus contrary to their King, for one part now must needs be entangled with an horrible sinne; yea as boyes pulling at a line some against others, doe on both part take a fall, if the Rope breaketh, so here was falling into sinne on both sides. The arguments used by the people, why Jonathan should not dye, saith Peter Martyr, were but weake, 1. he had wrought salvation, 2. God had wrought with him, for a wicked Souldier may sometime doe valiantly and have good successe, and yet afterwards commit somewhat worthy of death. The maine reason then is omitted, he deserved thus well, and for that wherein he faulted, he did it ignorantly, and therefore was not worthy to dye.

V. 46.

V. 47.

So Saul pursued the Philistims no farther at that time, and they went to their place, v. 47. from hence to the end of the chapter, the warres and other memorable things touching Saul are set forth most compendiously, that he might haften to the history of David. Saul tooke the Kingdome of Israel and fought against all his Enemies on every side &c. Junius readeth it, Saul had his Kingdome being received, the Vulg. Lat. he had his Kingdome confirmed. But the Hebrew best, he tooke it, that is, having heard by Samuel, that his Kingdome should not stand ch. 13. 14. he strengthened himselfe by gathering forces unto him, as v. 25. that none might be able to take it from him; to which effect Junius in 1 Sam. 13. 1. Neither did he want successe in all the warres which he made against the Ammonites, Moabites, the King of Zobah and the Philistims, for it is said, that whithersoever he turned, he vexed them. Of the Zobans see 2 Sam. 8. Although he were wicked and rejected of God, yet for his people Israels sake God prospered him in fighting against their Enemies, for now Samuel yet living, they were kept in obedience to God, wherefore he would not forsake them. The word יָרִיבָהּ in the Vulg. Lat. is superabat, in Peter Martyr, viriliter egit, in Junius, inquietabat eor, the word doth properly signifie he condemned them for wicked, or he handled them as wicked men, as they were, because they were enemies to Gods People, and greatly infested them. Lyra will have the Hebrew word to signifie he did wickedly, a demonstration whereof is made ch. 15. And he gathered an Host and smote the Amalekites &c. This is spoaken by anticipation, that his valiant gests might all be summed up together, and this in particular is left to be declared more at large ch. 15. yet Comestor saith happily he smote them first, before that he utterly destroyed them at the commandement of the Lord. v. 49. His sonnes and daughters are mentioned, amongst whom Ishboseth is not named, because happily he was yet very young, or of no valour. But because he is said to be 40 yeares old at the death of his father, 2 Sam. 2. 10. he was not omitted for want of age, but for want of worth. That of Junius is not so probable, that Sauls sonnes onely are propounded to be mentioned here, which fell with him in his last fight against the Philistims, for why then is mention made also of his daughters?

Schol. Histor.

V. 49.

P. Martyr

Junius.

V. 50.

Schol. Histor.

His wife is said to have bene Abinoam, Abner the sonne of Ner his Captaine, &c. 1 Chron. 8. 33. Ner is also said to bee father of Kish, Sauls father, but this, saith Comestor, is spoken for his age, and because he brought him up.

CHAP. XV.

V. 1.

HERE Saul is sent by Samuel against Amalek, being charged to destroy them all, and all their cattle, sparing none, because they had dealt so wickedly with the Hebrews in the wilderness, Exod. 17. 8. Comestor following R. Solomon saith hereupon, that hee was charged to destroy the Beasts, because many amongst the Amalekites had the faculty of transforming themselves into Beasts by witchcraft, lest in those shapes they should escape. But Lyra well rejecteth this, because this generall destruction of all things tended to shew the greatest indignation against so wicked a nation, that might bee, that the memory thereof might be quite rased out. And Amalek was not served thus alone but others had also the in like detestation, as Numb. 24. the

Lyra.

Lord

Lord saith, I remember what Amalek did, this is spoken, as Peter Martyr hath it, not that God doth properly remember or forget, but according to the manner of men, because by not doing any thing yet against Amalek in 400. yeares, hee might seeme to have forgotten their injuries done to his people, but now taking order for revenge upon them hee seemed to remember them. Whence note, that judgements against the wicked may long bee deferred, but at length they shall come. The particulars to bee destroyed are enumerated, that Saul might be without al colour of excuse, men, women and children, sheep and oxen, &c. If this shall seeme to bee cruelty, for what had the little children or beasts done? I answer, if men of themselves being carryed on with a desire of revenge should have done thus, it had bene intolerable cruelty, but authority being given from God thus to doe, it is justice to punish them not onely in themselves, but also in their children and cattle. When Samuel came to fend Saul against Amalek hee said, thus saith the Lord of Hosts, because hee hath all power, and all creatures are used as his Hosts, whensoever hee pleaseth, see Esay 40. 26.

Saul therefore calleth the people together, and numbretb them in Telaim 200000. footmen and 10000. men of Judah. The word Telaim signifying Lambe, is in the Vulgar Latin rendred, as Lamber, and the Hebrews hold, that it being the time of the paffeover, every one brought a Lambe, which when they were numbred, the number of the men was knowne, for it was not lawfull to number them by the poll. But to leave this, as a fond conjecture, it is more probable, that Telaim is a proper name here, which Junius conjectureth to be Telem, in the tribe of Judah, spoken of Iosh. 15. 24. as lamber, it cannot bee rendred, because  $\pi$  is prefixed signifying in, and not  $\tau$  signifying as. Josephus saith, that he numbred them in Gilgal, but hee erreth manifestly in the number, for he hath but 40000. of Israel, and 30000. of Judah. Whereas Judah affordeth a lesse number then any other tribe and yet was the greatest, 2 Sam. 24. it was because it lay upon the Philistines cost, and so could spare no more. Having this great Army he sendeth to the Kenites to goe away, or to descend from the Amalekites, that they might bee out of danger; and he biddeth them descend, because they dwelt upon hills and rockes, Numb. 24. 21. These were the people, of whom came Hobab the father in law of Moses, Iudg. 1. 16. and they dwelt now on the south of Judah, neare unto Amalek, and partly amongst them. Now because the people of Israel had received kindenesse from one of them in the wildernesse, this is here long after required, as the Amalekites are appointed to destruction for their unkindenesse, and cruelty, so the benefits done to Gods people shall not goe unrewarded. But because they are required to depart from amongst the Amalekites, that they might be spared, hereby was shewed, that who so would not partake with the wicked in their judgments, must separate from them, and not bee linked in society with them, as 2 Cor. 6. 17.

And Saul smote Amalek from Havilah to Shur right over against Egypt, that is, a Countrey of Arabia to the uttermost bound of Arabia towards Egypt, whereby saith Junius, is not meant the whole Countrey of the Amalekites, but so many of them, as came into the place here described against Saul: for if all the Amalekites had now bene destroyed, how could they have after this invaded Ziklag, and bene pursued and slaine by David? thus hee, but if Saul had slaine onely those, that came out against him, he should not have fulfilled Gods command, which was not onely to destroy the men, but also the women and children, for which hee must needs enter into their Cities. Wherefore Josephus better, he went from Towne to Towne killing and slaying all that hee could meet withall from Pelusium to the Red-sea. And whereas the Amalekites are againe spoken of after this, Ch. 27. 8. and 30. 1. whereby it should seeme, that they were not all rooted out at this time, it may bee thought, that some fled away into other parts, and some hid themselves and so escaped, or men of other countreys seeing Amalek now to lye waste having some Amalekites amongst them came and inhabited there, being from the place where they lived called Amalekites.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

V. 4.

Junius.
P. Martyr.
Josephus.

V. 6.

Note

V. 7.

Junius.

1 Sam. 27. 8.
Ch. 30. 1.

Josephus.

And

- V. 8. And he tooke Agag their King alive. This was the common name of the Kings of Amalek, as Pharaoh of the Kings of Egypt. Saul, saith Josephus, was taken with the beauty of Agag, and therefore spared him; but other Hebrewes, that he might shew him his hidden treasure, and it is most probable, that he was led by covetousnesse to do this against Gods command, as to spare the best and fattest of the Cattle, and every good thing, v. 9. This sinne of Saul in sparing Agag, is thus aggravated by Josephus, when God had sent him to destroy the wicked Amalekites and had given him the Victory, he fell into this foule fault to spare the head and chiefe of all that wicked people, who ought chiefly to have bene cut off, and therefore was justly put from his Kingdome. Yet Pellican will not have Saul to have sinned herein, because he is not charged with this, as a sinne, but with sparing the Cattle, and happily he saved Agag alive to do execution upon him before all Israel, thus he: but Saul is plainly noted to have sinned herein, because he did contrary to Gods command, and Samuels slaying of Agag, shewed, that Saul had no meaning to kill him. v. 9. The best of the sheepe, and of the oxen, and the fatlings and lambs, &c. for fatlings and lambs the Vulg. Lat. hath garments and rammes; Junius, the secundaries and leaders of the sheepe, but the word משנים here used signifieth the double, that is, those that were double in fat and flesh to the rest, wherefore this word is well rendred the fat, and happily, as Pagninus hath it, משנים is put for שמונים by a Metathesis, which signifieth fat, and the next word כרים signifieth lambs as well as rammes. v. 11. The wickednesse of Saul is soone revealed by the Lord unto Samuel, who said unto him, it repenteth me that I have made Saul King, &c. In him that repenteth, saith Lyra, there is mutability, but there is none in God, he is therefore said to repent, because he did like man repenting, destroying that which hee had made, in deposing him from the Kingdome, whom he had advanced to it, for v. 29. God is said not to be like unto man, that he should repent. All the mutability then was in Saul; and Gods decree, which was from the beginning, that Saul should be put from his Kingdome, remained immutable, wherefore Saint Augustine saith well, penitudo dei est mutandorum immutabilis ratio.
- V. 12. And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul, it was told him, Saul came to Carmel, and he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on to Gilgal. For these words, he set him up a place, the Vulg. Lat. hath erexit sibi fornicem triumphalem, expounded by Lyra, he set up a triumphal arch of Palmes and Olive branches in token of the Victory, which he did in a boasting manner through vaine-glory, thus aggravating his sinne, in that he did not give all the praise to God. Hierome saith that the Hebrewes, when they had gotten a great Victory, used to set up a triumphant arch of Myrtles, Palmes, and Olives, and this saith Hugo, was called fornix from fornicor to commit fornication, because it was erected upon a Wall arched, under which of old, whores were prostituted. The Hebrew word is ר an hand, he made him an hand, which Junius expoundeth of a station, in which he rested with his Army a while; Kimbi and the Chaldeans understand it of a place, where he divided the spoiles, and some, saith Peter Martyr, of an Altar, which Altar they thinke is againe spoken of, when Elijah is said to have repaired the Altar in Carmel. To me that of Hierom seemeth best, he set up some monument of his Victory, and so putting his men in order, he led them along in a triumphant manner downe to Gilga, to make the greater shew, for by hand power or forces may be understood, Numb. 11.23. One describing the way that Saul went about this expedition, saith, that from Gibeab to the Amalekites Country was 160 miles, from Pelusium to the Red-sea, the whole Country subdued by him 92 miles, and from thence backe to Carmel 140 miles, from Carmel to Gilgal 32 miles.
- V. 13, 14, 15. When Samuel came to Saul, he first said, that he had done Gods commandement, but Samuel disproving him by the bleating of the Sheep, and lowing of the Oxen, which were kept alive, he excuseth it, by saying that the People preserved these for sacrifice. Unto his sinne of doing against the word of God, Saul here addeth divers other sinnes, as 1. boasting of his obedience, 2. laying the fault upon the people, and clearing himselfe, 3. hypocrite, in that when he spared the Amalekites best things out of covetousnesse, he pretended piety, 4. his justifying of himselfe againe v. 20. 5. in that when he confessed his sinne, he did it feignedly, still extenuating it by his fearing of the people, v. 24. 6. by vaine glory, in that he would needes have Samuel to honour him with his presence (when he worshipped,) before the Elders of Israel. When Saul had spoken, Samuel telleth him of his great sinne, and what the Lord had said unto him the night before, first recounting the wonderfull great favour done by God unto him to raise him from so meane an estate to that royall dignity, thus aggravating his sinne, in that being so engaged to the Lord he would be moved by the spoile to doe contrary to the straight charge which he had given him.

Then Saul justified himselfe againe, saying, that he had gone the way which God appointed, and had destroyed the Amalekites, onely he brought Agag alive with him, if it should seeme so good unto him, to be slaine there before all Israel, and for the Sheep and Oxen, and other good things of Amalek, the people spared them for sacrifice, not unto any strange Gods, but to the Lord his God in Gilgal: which he spake to infinuate the more into Samuel, thinking, that this would be pleasing unto him; if after so great a Victory obtained, he provided, as piety required, some Eucharisticall sacrifices to be made unto the Lord.

Samuel replyeth, that obedience is better then sacrifice, and that Rebellion is as the sinne of witchcraft, and as Idolatry, and because he had rejected the word of the Lord, he telleth him, that God had rejected him from being King. Sauls sinne in disobeying the expresse command of God, is likened unto witchcraft and Idolatry, because there is the same fountaine Infidelity, and he that feareth not to transgresse the knowne will of God, doth in effect deny him to be God, as Witches and Idolaters doe, and he maketh himselfe wiser then God, as if he could finde out a better way then God hath prescribed, saith Varablm. wherefore Saul sinning so heinously was well worthy to be put downe from reigning. But seeing Saul reigned still; how was he rejected from being King? Ans. He was put from his Kingdome in his posterity, seeing none of them reigned after him, but a King was set up of another Tribe and Family.

Then Saul said, I have sinned, and transgressed the Commandement of the Lord and thy word, because I feared the people &c. That this penitency of Saul was not true, but feigned, saith Lyra, appeareth by this, that he sought falsely to shadow over his fault by laying it upon the people. The confession of Saul in the first words was the same with that of David, but yet much different from it. 1. For that it was long before this confession could be wrung from him. 2. He confessed not being moved out of conscience of any offence committed against God, but for feare of losing his Kingdome. 3. He extenuated his sinne by making the people most guilty. And such is the repentance of Hypocrites. 1. It is long before they repent. 2. They are not moved in conscience, but by sinister respects. 3. They will maintaine their credit as much, as they can, by laying the least fault upon themselves. But all such penitentiaries shall speed no better then Saul.

Now therefore I pray thee pardon my sinne, and turne againe with me, that I may worship the Lord. The word here rendred, pardon, is NU comming of NUJ to beare, to take away, or to pardon, the Vulg. Lat. therefore rendreth it porta, beare, which is by Hugo expounded, either pacify Gods wrath for my sinnes by praying unto him, for so Levit. 10. the word beare is used, where it is said, that Aarons sonnes should beare the iniquities of the people, or to beare sinne is to beare the punishments due to sinne, as 1 Pet. 2. 24. or to take it away by prayer, as Hof. 4. 8. This last is altogether misfalledged, neither hath the second any place here, but onely the first, for no man can beare the punishments due to the sinne of another, but Christ onely: but by praying for him he may obtaine remission, as James 5. 16. and if the word beare be thus taken, it is all one to expound it, beare or pardon, the meaning being, procure me pardon by turning and praying with me, and for me to the Lord. Samuel being entreated refuseth to returne with

V. 16, 17, 18, 19.

V. 20.

V. 22, 23.

Pellican.

Varablm.

V. 24.

Lyra.

Note.

V. 25.

Hugo Card.

V. 26.

Lyra.
Ofander.

Ofander.

Ioseph. lib. 6.
Antiq. cap. 7.
Pellican.

V. 27.
V. 28.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Peter Martyr.

V. 9.

Peter Martyr.

V. 30.

Lyra.

V. 32.

V. 33.

with him at the first, but afterwards being againe importuned, hee returneth, not hereby falsifying his word, as Lyra noteth, and others; but as Christ sometime said, I will not goe up to this feast, and yet afterwards hee went, for hee meant, hee would not then goe up; so Samuel would not at the first returne, but afterwards being againe urged, he returned, not to pray God to take Saul's sinne so away, as that hee might bee againe established in the Kingdome, but both to doe him honour before the people, that hee might not fall into contempt whilst hee lived, which would have been dangerous to the State; and to assist him in his worshipping, which was his praying, that his sinne might bee so pardoned, that hee might not come into everlasting condemnation therefore. Some thinke that hee returned, that being present whilst Saul worshipped, hee might onely doe him some civill honour in publike, and that hee prayed not with him. But Iosephus is plaine for the contrary, that hee worshipped with Saul; and Pellican thinketh, that hee assisted him according to the will of God, as his prophetical office required. V. 27. Samuel then turning to goe away from Saul, hee tooke hold of his garment to stay him, and it rent; then said Samuel, The Lord hath rent the kingdome from thee this day, &c. Here, saith Lyra, some Hebrews have delivered, that Samuel gave Saul a signe who should reigne after him, viz. hee that should afterwards cut off the lap of his garment; wherefore when David had done this, Saul said, I know surely that thou shalt reigne, Chap. 24. but this is uncertaine. Whereas Samuel said, This day is thy kingdome rent from thee; Hugo moveth a question, how that could bee, seeing Saul was not then put from the kingdome, but reigned divers yeares after, and hee answereth, that now hee deserved to have the kingdome rent from him: but Peter Martyr better, the decree is now made never to bee altered againe, of rending the kingdome from thee, before it was threatened that it should not goe to his posterity, but now that hee should bee turned out of it, by being cut off before his time came to dye naturally.

For the strength of Israel will not lye nor repent, for hee is not man that he should repent. For strength, Hebr. is מְצָח, in the Vulg. Latine rendred triumphator; by Junius, the eternity, because it was more apt to set forth God in this case by his eternity, then by his power, seeing hee now spake of his unalterable decree for ever. But the word most properly signifieth strength, fortitude, or power, and it agreed very well in this case to call God strength, because by his power Saul should now bee put downe, and another set up, although hee should seeke to prevent it with all his power; and his power and strength to hold his resolution against all prayers and entreaties, is hereby also set forth. But of what is it meant that hee would not repent? Kimhi, saith Martyr, understandeth it of David, his purpose of removing the kingdome to him, and establishing it in his seed shall never bee altered; but it is best understood both of the refection of Saul and his seed, and the setting up and establishing of David, because he spake before of both.

Here Saul confesseth his sinne againe, and desireth Samuel to honour him by returning with him, before the Elders of Israel, whereunto hee yeeldeth; seeing hee was yet King, saith Lyra, hee gave him honour accordingly by going with him to pray; but there was also another cause of his returning with him, viz. to slay Agag: as here followeth.

And Agag came forth delicately, and said, Surely the bitterness of death is past. In the Vulg. Latine it is, Most fat Agag came forth trembling, and he said, Doth bitter death thus separate? Peter Martyr, verily the bitterness of death cometh, the Hebr. is, Agag came forth with pleasures or delights, and said, Verily the bitterness of death is removed, so also Junius, hee would seeme to bee so valiant, as to contemne death, or as some thinke, seeing Samuel, hee hoped for mercy, which is the more probable, because the word used is רָצוּנָא, recessus, in gone.

And Samuel said, As thy sword hath made other women childlesse, &c. Hereby it is not meant, say the Hebrews, that Agag whilst hee was King, had slaine many of the Hebrews by invading them, but that the King of Amalek had done so, and and thus made other women childlesse when hee fought against Israel in the wilderness, Exod. 17. so Lyra: but I see no reason why it should not be understood properly of this King, seeing the Amalekites were a warlike Nation, and used to invade other Countreys, as appeareth, 1 Sam. 30. Now his mother, Samuel telleth him, should likewise be made childlesse, because her other children were slaine in this warre, if shee had any more, and hee the onely survivor should now be put to death; And Samuel bewed Agag in pieces, &c. This, Iosaphus saith, hee did by the ministry of others, but if so, it would have been said, that hee commanded him to be hewed in pieces, as before to be brought forth; it is plaine therefore, that hee did this execution with his own hands, as being Judge, to supply the defect that had been in Saul, who ought to have slaine him before, not out of a desire of revenge, but out of zeale to do Justice; so Pellican and Lyra. Whereas his calling might seem to be against it, because hee was a Levite and a Nazarite; it is answered, that hee was extraordinarily stirred up, as Phinees the Priest had been before, and Moses a Levite, and Elijah to slay Baals Prophets. But this is not to be imitated by other Ministers about the holy things of God: for a Bishop, saith Paul, must be no striker; and in ancient Councells they are not onely forbidden doing execution, but coming to the place where malefactors were to be put to death, or standing by the rack wherewith the guilty were tortured, or sitting in judgement where any is delivered to death. And if any Clergy-man by chance sheddeth blood, hee is by the Canons of the Church counted irregular, and incapable of sacred Orders. Wherefore the Pope, that challengeth unto himselfe the right of the sword, is plainly an usurper, and irregular. Samuel did not onely slay Agag, but cut him in pieces, that his destruction deferred contrary to the will of God might be the more notorious; and hee is said to have done it before the Lord in Gilgal, because most probably there was an Altar there, it being anciently the place where the Tabernacle stood.

In this slaying of Agag, Peter Martyr observeth the fulfilling of an old prophetic of Balaam touching Agag 400 yeares before, although some thinke Agag to have been the common name of the Kings of Amalek.

After this, Samuel went to Ramah, and Saul to Gibeah; And Samuel came no more to see Saul till the day of his death. Here a question is made by Expositors, how this can be, seeing Saul prophesied after this before Samuel at Naboth in Ramah, Chap. 19. 24. But this question is needlesse, for there is no contradiction in this, he came no more at him, and this, Saul came and prophesied before Samuel; for there Saul came to Samuel, and not Samuel to him, as hee had used before to doe, to direct him about the affaires of the Kingdome. That is frivolous of some, who say, that these words, hee came not to see Saul till the day of his death, imply his coming to him after his death, being raised by the witch of Endor, for it is plainly meant, that hee never came to see him any more; so Peter Martyr, who also examining the reason of Samuels mourning for Saul, which here next followeth, and praying for him, and how God is said to repent that hee made him King; answereth to the first, that although he knew that the sentence of God against Saul could not be reversed, as the case then stood, Saul being impenitent, yet hee knew not whether God might be entreated to give him an heart to repent, and so it might be reversed; and thus he might in faith both mourne and pray for him; or although the sentence of losing his kingdome here, must needs stand, yet hee might obtaine such grace for him, that hee might not lose the kingdome of heaven; but hee preferreth the former. And for Gods repenting, hee following Tertullian against Marcion, saith, that in thus saying, no error or crime is implied in the Lord, but the fault of Saul is aggravated, as if he had said, it was so hainous, that if it were possible for the Lord to repent, it would have repented him, that hee made him King; for to repent in God, is to change his former sentence without any fault of the changer. But sith it is not said, that Samuel prayed for Saul, but onely mourned for him: I assent rather to Pellican, that hee grieved for the hardnesse of his heart, and the misery and violent death Iosaphus.

Pellican.

Numb. 25.

1 Tim. 3.
Concil. Maiif.
con. 2. c. 19.
Concil. Antist.
der. c. 33. 34.P. Martyr.
Numb. 24. 7.

V. 34. 35.

Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

death that hee foresaw was to come upon him, for he was much affected with his wickednesse, for that neare relation that he had unto him, being his successor, and by him set up.

CHAP. XVI.

V. 1.

P. Martyr.

Rom. 9.
Ezek. 9.

Cyprian de lapsis. Jacula, quibus illi feriuntur, me percuntium, gladii scelerantium transiunt per viscera mea, cum prostratis ego quoque una prosternor.

Psalme 119.

Lyra.

V. 2.

Borrbæus.
Peter Martyr.

Junius.

ANd the Lord said to Samuel, How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him? fill thine horne with oyle, &c. Because Samuel is reproved for mourning for Saul, a question is here moved, whether hee sinned not in thus doing? Peter Martyr answereth well, that he mourned out of love to him, and to the Common-wealth, foreseeing the miseries to come, and therefore hee sinned not, unlesse after the will of God made knowne unto him, that hee should mourne no more, hee had still continued to mourne. For Paul mourned for the Jewes, and the godly in Jerusalem are commended by this, that they mourned for the abominations done in Jerusalem. Cyprian writing of those that fell away in the time of persecution, saith, The darts smite mee, wherewith they are smitten; the swords of those that rage, passe through my bowells; I am overthrowne also, with them that are overthrowne; which hee spake by reason of his great sorrow for them. Fill thine horne with oyle. It may seeme strange, that Saul not being deposed in his person, but in his posterity, another King should now bee anointed before his death. But it is answered, God would have David, whose Kingdome should continue, to come unto it through many afflictions and dangers, both to teach us, that we must through many adversities come to the kingdome of heaven, which endureth for ever; and that David might bee a type of Christ, who lived here also in obscurity, and endured infinite afflictions, and then came to his kingdom, and to be most highly exalted, as Phil. 2. 6. Moreover, David's afflictions in this time prepared him the better to obey constantly the will of God in all things, as Saul did not, because μαθηματα, μαθηματα, sufferings are instructions; It is good therefore, saith hee, that I have been afflicted, for hereby I am taught to keep thy commandments. And lastly, the malice of Saul in persecuting innocent David in this time appeared the more, to his just condemnation. So that when David was anointed, Saul continued lawfull King of Israel still, because although the sentence of rejection was denounced against him, yet it was not executed till his death; so that the people were still bound to obey him, and David himself also to live as a subject unto him, and not to seek his destruction. And God would have him anointed now, saith Peter Martyr, and againe afterwards, that hee might bee equall to Saul in his double anointing. And for the horne of oyle, which Samuel is bidden to take to anoint him with, whereas Saul was anointed with a viall of oyle, which was a brittle vessell, the stability of David's kingdome was set forth hereby, as by that the fragility of Saul's kingdome, as Lyra hath it; for with this oyle, David one of the sons of Issai must be anointed King, as here followeth.

And Samuel said, How can I goe, for if Saul beare it, hee will kill mee, &c. This, saith Lyra, Samuel spake not out of distrust, but as inquiring the manner how hee should goe; so likewise Borrbæus, hee inquired how hee might goe and bee out of this danger; but Peter Martyr holdeth it to have been an infirmity in him, although hee had been at other times so courageous, for even the best of Gods servants have their infirmities, as Abraham also feared killing, and Moses. But seeing Samuel may bee excused in saying thus, as the Virgin Mary afterwards in saying, how can this be, that shee might bee better instructed in the manner; I assent rather to Lyra, for Samuel was now old, and had such experience of Gods singular favour towards him, that he could not be so affraid. Solon opposing himself against Pisistratus the Tyrant, was asked how hee durst doe so, and answered, because he was old, and so could not live long, and therefore he feared not to die, much lesse did Samuel.

The Lord then bade him take a bullock, and say, I am come to offer sacrifice: for these words, to offer a sacrifice, Junius hath it, to celebrate a feast, yeelding hereof hereof these reasons: 1 Because sacrifices might not bee offered but before the Arke, or in some high place. 2 In a publike place, and not in a private house, whereas this was done in the house of Ishai. 3 Because at sacrifices none but Priests and Ministers were present, but hee is bidden to call Ishai to this. Willst answereth to all these: 1 That Samuel was a Prophet, and therefore at Gods appointment might sacrifice in any place. 2 It is not necessary to understand it to have been done at Ishai his house. 3 Of a sacrifice of peace, a great part was to be spent in feasting, and therefore the Lords bidding of him to call Ishai to the sacrifice, is to bee understood of the feast after made of the parts of the bullock remaining, as both the Chaldee expoundeth, and Josephus explaineth it. And Osiander noteth, that the words imply a religious act, and not a feast, because hee saith, to the Lord, and in that hee biddeth them to sanctifie themselves, and carryeth a bullock with him; and because the Prophet used not to goe about any weighty affaire of the kingdome, but first beginning with sacrifice, as also when he first met Saul to anoint him for King, so Pellican. Touching the dissimulation here prescribed, a question is made, how it may bee justified, in that the intent of his going being to anoint a King, hee contrarywise saith, that hee came to sacrifice? It is commonly answered, that to sacrifice was one end of his going, before hee went about the other, wherefore hee might truly say so, and conceale the other end: for there being two ends of his coming, one to bee revealed, the other to bee concealed, as Lyra hath it, hee declared that which was to bee revealed, but concealeth the other, as prudence required, so likewise Pellican: and thus Jeremiah being asked what communication the King had with him, declareth some part, and concealeth the other, Jer. 38. 27. Moreover Gods directing him thus to doe, freeth him from all fault or blame.

Samuel having received instructions from the Lord, cometh to Bethlehem, and the Elders of the City hearing of it, were afraid, and went to meet him, and asked, whether his coming were peaceable. Hee being an old man, saith Peter Martyr, and now not using to travaile about, they feared, that either some great sin had beene committed in the City, which he came to expiate, or that he fled from Saul now enraged against him because he had boldly reprov'd him, and threatened him with the losse of his Kingdom and the translating of it to another man. Lyra addeth, that they feared because he used not in times past to come thither, and because hee came so solitarily. Pellican, that hee came at an extraordinary and unwonted season. Then Samuel said, that hee came to doe sacrifice to the Lord, and bade them sanctifie themselves and come to the sacrifice, and he sanctified Ishai and his sonnes. This sanctifying, saith Lyra, was by the water of expiation, or by abstaining from their wives. Hugo Cardin and Martyr, by washing their clothes and bodies, and abstaining from their wives, as Exod. 19. all were commanded to doe. For to cleanse them from any uncleannesse they were to wash with water in token of repentance and faith in the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sinne, and so they were cleansed and accepted for holy in the sight of God, as wee now being once baptized, without iterating this washing any more. For Samuel's sanctifying of Ishai and his sonnes, Hug. saith, he did it by sprinkling them with the water of expiation, the Ord. Glosse, by causing them to wash themselves: but so he caused the Elders to do, therefore somewhat more is here implied, viz. that he was an Agent in sanctifying them, and that most probably by sprinkling them with holy water. The sacrifice to which he called them, was the feast made out of that part of it, which remained. Josephus maketh mention of none, but Ishai and his sonnes called to the feast; R. David Kimbi saith, that some of the Elders of the City were present also, and this seemeth most probable by the Text, but he saith, that when the sonnes of Ishai came before Samuel, hee whispered secretly in the eares of Ishai that which hee spake, so that none of David's brethren knew what was said.

The seven sonnes of Ishai being caused to come before Samuel, hee first looked upon Eliab, the eldest, supposing him to be the man whom the Lord had chosen to bee King, but hee was bidden not to looke at his beauty or the height of Osiander.

Pellican.

Qu.

Lyra.

V. 4.5.

Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

Ly
Hugo Cardin.
Peter Martyr.

Glosa Ordin.

Josephus.

V. 6.

his stature, &c. Samuel remembring that Saul, whom God had chosen before, was indued with these outward gifts, seeing they also availed much in a Captaine; when hee saw Eliab indued with these, hee thought verily that God would have him anointed. For the phrase which hee used, verily the Lords anointed is before him, this by Kimbi is expounded of his pleasing the Lord, by some, saith Martyr, it is expounded interrogatively, as by the Vulgar Latin, is hee before the Lord? that is, although hee bee not knowne yet unto men: Some referre it to the sacrifice, but Junius best, this man is verily chosen by the Lord to bee anointed, or because when men appeared about sacrificing they were commonly said to bee before the Lord, Samuel spake this of Eliab, who was called to the sacrifice, by the name of the Lords anointed. But God checked this his thought, saying, I have rejected him, for God seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh to the outward appearance, but God seeth into the heart. R. Solomon saith, that Eliab was a proud and angry man, as appeared also afterwards, when hee gave such a checke to David. Into the hidden conditions of this man Samuel could not see, because hee could not see into his heart, but God saw them, wherefore hee refused him, but Samuel led by his externall forme judged him to bee the man, whom hee should anoint. And this is the weakenesse even of the best men, they know not by the outward appearance at the first sight, who is fit to bee a Ruler and who not, and therefore no man ought rashly to passe his sentence upon any, but in every time of want desire of God a Ruler, whose heart he seeth to be upright. Samuel had found before by experience in Saul that there was deceit in the outward appearance, and yet it is strange to see, how ready hee is to erre againe in the same kinde. Wherefore wee had neede to be warned of it, not to respect outward lineaments and parts so much, but inward vertue in the choice of any to any rule or office, as Iethro his counsell was to Moses, Exod. 18. But are not all hearts corrupt and sinfull? how then could the Lord be moved by David's heart more then by Eliab's? Answer. Naturally all are corrupt and abominable, as the Psalmist saith, but God had sanctified the heart of David, and not of Eliab, wherefore hee refuseth the one and chooseth the other, and in so doing hee had not respect unto mans merit, but to his owne gift of grace, for whom hee hath justified hee hath glorified, and hee crowneth his owne gifts in us, as Augustine speaketh. Neither was the good heart in David the cause of his election, but onely hereby hee was made fit for this dignity, the cause of his election was onely Gods good pleasure preordaining him to the Kingdom, so Peter Martyr, who also questioneth why hee refused not Saul then, who had nothing but outward things to commend him no more then Eliab; and answereth, that he would have men to know the difference betweene an evill King and a good. But the true reason is, because God was angry with the people for desiring to have a King, wherefore he gave him unto them in wrath. Hee was then their King, as Samuel called him, saying, behold your King, but the King now to bee made was Gods King, a man after his owne heart, therefore that they might see, what the fruit of mens heady desires is to repent thereof, God chose them not one at the first, whose heart was right, but one, who as farre as they could see, might bee most fit and able to defend them from their enemies, that inducing many miseries under his his government they might learne afterwards to depend upon God, and to bee ordered in all matters of such moment by him onely. Yet for the generall good of the people, because they were his people, hee gave unto him many famous victories, untill that by his disobedience and wickednesse, being greatly provoked hee left both him and them to the will of their enemies, as he had threatned saying, both yee and your King shall perish.

After Eliab Ishai brought forth Abinadab, and Shammab and all his seven sons, that were men growne, but they were all refused. But here a doubt ariseth, how Ishai could be said to have seven sonnes, besides David, when as six onely are reckoned up, these three, and Nathaniel, Radad and Ozem, 1 Chron. 2. 13. yet hee is said expressly, 1 Sam. 17. 12. to have eight sonnes. To reconcile this difference

Junius.

R. Solomon

Note.

Qu.

Rom. 8. 30.
Ang. Denis in nobis sua dona coronat.

Peter Martyr.

Qu.

Hof. 13. 11.

1 Sam. 12. 25.
 V. 8, 9, 10.

ference Iunius saith, that Shammash his sonne Jonadab, mentioned 2 Sam. 13. 3. was probably one of the seven, because in holy Scripture, grandchildren are also called sonnes, so likewise Lyra, Comestor, &c. But I approve rather of the conjecture of R. Solomon, that one of the sonnes of Isbair dyed without issue and so is not numbred, 1 Chron. 2. 13. Samuel then asked Isbair, whether hee had no more sonnes, he answered, there remaineth yet the younger, and hee keepeth sheepe; Samuel said, Send and fetch him, for wee will not sit downe till hee cometh. David the youngest was thought least fit of them all to bee made King, yet God chose him before all the rest, and herein hee was a type of Christ, who was despised of men, but honoured above all by God; and in his elder brethren, who were rejected, the Jewes were figured out, in him the Church of the Gentiles, who were a despised people and thought most unworthy of the Kingdome of heaven. Samuel, saith Lyra, would not sit downe to meate, till David came, because hee was to anoint him with oyle and falling spittle, but it is more likely, that this was done for honours sake unto David. Here Peter Martyr, inquireth how David could come in amongst the rest to this holy assembly, seeing hee was not sanctified as the rest were; and answereth, either that hee was there before and was sanctified, but the sacrifice being ended went out to looketo his sheepe, or that hee was so carefull in his life, that hee had contracted no legall uncleannesse, or that God, who made the law of sanctifying by washing before such meetings, could in a case extraordinary dispense with it; and this last I thinke the best, and yet happily hee might bee instantly sanctified by sprinkling with holy water.

David being come in is said to bee ruddy and of a beautifull countenance, then the Lord bade Samuel anoint him. Iunius and Pellican referre this rednesse to his haire, but Arian, and Osiander, and our translation better to his face, because red haire doth not conduce unto beauty, but a mixture of red and white in the face, see Cant. 5. 11. blacke haire is more commendable, and because the same word is used to set forth the rednesse of the body, Lament. 4. 7. the colour of David shewed him to be a man of spirit and courage.

V. 13. Then Samuel rose up and anointed him in the midst of his brethren. Saul was anointed secretly, saith Peter Martyr, not so much as one man his servant being permitted to behold it, but David before many, because Samuel was to live to confirme him King publikely, but before *David*s inauguration he dyed, therefore that witnesses might not be wanting of his anointing, this was done openly. Yet it is to be held, that none of his brethren, but Isbair and David onely knew, whereunto he was anointed, for that had beene dangerous, whilst there was another King living, and if they had knowne it, Eliab would not have handled him so harshly afterwards. They might conjecture then that he was anointed for some notable end, that he might be indued with the Spirit of prophesie to make Hymnes and Psalmes to the praise of God, and to make musick thereunto, and to prophesie in Samuels stead, but of the Kingdome they could conjecture nothing, onely when they saw it come to passe, they could testifie this his anointing to it by Samuel made long before. Some thinke, that David was anointed in the sight of his brethren, expounding these words in the midst of his brethren amongst them, hee being chosen from amongst them all, as Kimhi: some, the thing being made knowne to them also, but they contempned it, as Osiander, because it is said, 2 Sam. 5. 2. God bath said, &c. but this might bee published afterwards by Samuel or David. And the spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward, Touching the age of David, when hee was anointed, nothing is said in holy Scripture, but Pellican guesseth that hee was 23, and so the time betwixt this anointing and that to be King over Judah, 1 Sam. 2. seven yeares, as the time betwixt that and his being anointed King over all Israel, 1 Sam. 5. 7. was 7 yeares: for when hee was first made King over Judah, he is said to have beene 30, 2 Sam. 5. 6. It seemeth to me that hee was not neare the age of 23. but rather about 16. or 17, because he was thought unfit for his age to come before Samuel amongst his brethren, where-as if hee had beene 23. or 21. hee should surely have beene called amongst them

Lyra.

V. 11.

Peter Martyr.

V. 12.

V. 13.
Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

Peter Martyr.

Chap. 11. 6.

V. 14.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Josephus.

Osiander.

Borrbemus.

Pellican.

V. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Peter Martyr.

Isidor.

Note.

Lyra.

Glossa Ordin.

at the first, because at this age one is no youth, but a man. Moreover Saul told him after this, that he was a youth, but Goliath a man of warre, intimating his young yeares. But although he were so young and by men refused, God chose him and sent his spirit into him: that is, saith R. Levi, the spirit of felicity, but Peter Martyr, the spirit of fortitude, as appeared by his killing of a Beare and a Lion, and fighting against Goliath; the spirit also of Wisedome, to execute the office of a King and Captaine, as was necessary, because he had not beene brought up so, as to be fit by experience; so likewise when Saul was anointed, the spirit of God came upon him; lastly the spirit of Prophecy, for he set forth many Psalmes, that were Prophetically; and the spirit of sanctification, which Saul had not, but with this he was endued before his anointing, for God saw his heart and approved it.

But the spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evill spirit from the Lord troubled him. Saul, although he had sinned greatly, yet the spirit of wisedome and fortitude, to make him fit to rule, was not hitherto taken from him, but it is taken away, and an evill spirit is sent to trouble him. Lyra saith that this evill spirit is said to come from the Lord, because by his permission, but Peter Martyr better, he was not onely permitted, but sent for the punishment of Saul in judgement for his finnes. For the manner, how this evill spirit troubled him, Josephus saith, that it tortured his body at some times, so as that he seemed to be suffocated. Osiander saith, it was a melancholicke fury, wherewith the spirit troubled him at times. Borrbemus referreth it to trouble in regard of his finnes. Pellican to vexation, and envy stirred up in him by the evill spirit for the losse of his Kingdome, making him oft times phrenticke and mad. And it is not unlikely, but that he was troubled all these wayes, and so his case was most miserable, and the more because he was now also destitute of that good spirit of God whereby he might have beene supported in his misery.

Saul being thus vexed, is advised by his servants to send for one that could play upon the harpe, that so the evill spirit might be made to depart from him, and David is commended for this purpose unto him, as being both cunning to play, a valiant and prudent man, and that the Lord was with him. It is noted here, that Saul's servants in speaking to him about this, said, an evill spirit of God troubleth thee, whereupon a question is made, if it were an evill spirit, how it could be said to be of God, for whereas in our translation it is from God the Vulg. Lat. hath it of God, and likewise the Hebr. Lyra answereth, even the evill spirits were made by God, but good at the first, but by their pride they made themselves evill, wherefore they are thus called in respect of their Originall, they are Gods creatures and so spirits of God; and Peter Martyr addeth, that they are also called thus, because they are executioners of Gods will against the wicked. So likewise Isidor saith, and that the threatening made against transgressours Deut. 28: 28. was here fulfilled upon Saul. Gregor. saith, the same spirit is called the spirit of the Lord, and evill; Dei spiritus licentiam iuste potestatis, malum, per desiderium iniuste voluntatis: therefore he is not to be feared, because he can do nothing, but being permitted, for although his malignity be not from the Lord; yet he hath no power, but from the Lord. And whereas his servants say, an evill spirit of God vexeth thee, this was not spoken by way of accusing their Master, but piously according to the manner of Gods people, who in the time of any malady looked not, as the physitian doth, to secundary causes onely, but to God; and so should we doe.

For their advice given unto him to send for David, that could play upon the Harpe; the Hebrewes, saith Lyra, have a tradition, that it was Doeg who counsell'd to send for the sonne of Isai in particular, and that not out of good will unto him, but out of a grudge, which he bare against him even then, that being before Saul, when his phrenticke fit came upon him, he might be endangered; Junius thinketh that it was Jonathan. But to leave both these to the Authors thereof, musick is a great meanes to cheare the minde being oppressed with sorrow; and Poetius saith, that a certaine Philosopher by playing upon the Harpe expelled the Devill out of one, so saith the Ord. Gloss: But Peter Mar- tyr

th<sup>r</sup> derideth this, because the Devill hath no body, and so cannot be affected with bodily things, yet he granteth the minde being pressed with melancholy by reason of the bodies dis temper, that worketh upon it, (for the minde followeth the temper of the body) may be cheared with musicke, and so for the time much eased, and the minde being cheared, the paine of the body may be allayed hereby, because as the body worketh upon the minde, so doth the minde upon the body. And Borhau saith, musicke is of wonderfull force to worke upon the affections to stirre them up, if it be loud and running, as is used in warre, or to allay them, if it be soft and moderate, as appeareth by the example of a phrenticke young man, whom Pythagoras by such musicke restored to his wits, and some barbarous and savage men have beene reduced to a civill lite, by the musicke of Terpander, Arion, and Ismenius. Thebanes, wherefore Saul's dis tempered affections being the instruments of Satans working, and these being cheared, his troubles were mitigated. Josephus saith, that David did not onely play, but sing sacred hymnes before Saul, and the sound of the musicke allayed the passion, the voice of the sacred hymne did cause an intermission of Satans worke. But it is said v. 23. that when David plaid with his hand, the evill spirit departed from Saul, so that musicke is of force to drive out evill spirits from the possessed, not by working immediatly upon them, but active corporeall things mediating, which dispose the matter to receive an afflictive action in the bodies possessed by them, but being by corporeall meanes removed, such a disposition of the body may follow, as that it is not fit to receive any afflictive action of the Devill, as Lyra reasoneth, and he bringeth in Saint Augustine affirming the same. Yet properly he denyeth, that any evill spirit can be driven out by corporeall meanes, unless it be held with the Platonists, that they have aerean bodies, which they have not. To the fume of the filthes liver in Tobit objected, he saith both that it is apocryphall, and not the fume, but Tobits prayers effected that, the fume being but a signe. But whereas Burgensis goeth farther, and saith, that by musicall harmony the evill spirit may be altogether expelled, because such a disposition ceasing, as whereby a man is made fit to be wrought upon by the afflictive actions of the Devill, he cannot thenceforth worke upon him any more, this he saith is false, seeing God can send an evill spirit upon any man in judgement, whatsoever his disposition is, as he did upon Saul, whom we may gather not to be any way so disposed of himselfe, because he is commended, 1 Sam. 9. 2. as being at the first excellently disposed. And whereas Burgensis to prove the force of musicke, alledgeth the example of Elisba, to whom the spirit of prophecy was brought hereby, and therefore an evill spirit may be much more expelled hereby, he answereth, that this was not done by musicke, but by the merit of the praise of God sung by the musician, and because a virtue created cannot extend it selfe to acts supernaturall. But before this he answereth better, by musicke Elisba his minde was more lifted up towards God, and taken off all other things, and so by David's musicke Saul's minde might be taken off from his passions, and he for the time eased. It is then to be held, that although Saul's passions were lenified for the time, when David played upon his harpe, which is called a departing of the evill spirit from him, yet the chiefe meanes of being delivered from this judgement, viz. prayer, and fasting, and true repentance being neglected, there was no perfect cure of this malady made, and therefore, howsoever David was now dismissed, as having wrought the cure perfectly, as may be gathered from the Chapter following, yet the evill spirit vexed Saul againe ch. 18. 10. The counsell of Saul's servants then he being under such a judgement, to send for a musician, but (speaking nothing of repentance and prayer, was carnall and insufficient, and like unto it is the counsell of such friends about the sicke to send to the Physitian, the chiefe meanes, prayer and repentance, being neglected, and sending for the Presbyter to pray for them, and if any being oppressed with melancholy or phrensy, the naturall meanes onely of merry company, or physick be used, and not these spirituall. But much more are they to be condemned, that send in such cases to Wisards. Saul himselfe abhorred from doing thus, yea as bad as he was, he Borhau.

Josephus.

Lyra.

August. confess.
10.

1 King. 3.

Mat. 17. 21.

Note

Junius.

persecuted such evill members to the death, and therefore he shall rise up in judgement against these degenerating Christians and condemne them: but of this enough upon Levit. 20. 6. Whereas David is commended for his valour, some thinke that he had slaine Goliath before this, and that this is set downe here by anticipation, because when he went out against Goliath, Saul knew him not; but there is no neede for this to hold the History to be disordered, seeing he might grow famous for his valour, for killing the Lion and the Beare, which happily was done soone after his anointing, the spirit of God coming upon him, before that he was nominated to Saul; and if his combat with Goliath had gone before this, he should not doubtlesse have beene spoken so slenderly of in this place, by one onely, but all would have beene ready to speake of him by name. For Saul's not knowing him after this, he might happily be somewhat altered in person and habit by that time, and so he might not so well remember him, especially in that place, being so full of trouble: for some haire might now be growne upon his face, which was not before, he having beene from the court, as is supposed 18. months, and coming in such apparell as he used to keepe sheepe in, whereas standing before the King he had used another habit, might easily make him unknowne to Saul.

V. 19.

Peter Martyr.

When Saul sent for David, he is described by this, that he was with the sheep; to intimate, that although he were anointed King, yet he followed his old calling still, leaving it unto God, who had chosen him, to bring it about in his good time, for he knew no meanes, how to attaine unto it. Wherefore now God beginneth to worke by moving one of Saul's servants to speake of him to Saul, and thus he is brought to the court, and liveth there for a time, that he might get some experience of the Kingdome, that he might afterwards be the more fit for it, and that before he came to reigne, he might be exercised in his faith and patience by many dangers.

V. 20.

Then Ishai sent David to Saul with bread, an asse, a bottle of wine, and a kidde &c. thus it is Hebr: in our translation according to the sense, an Asse laden with bread, a bottle of wine, &c. They that came before Kings or other great persons, were not wont to come empty, if they desired to be accepted by them, wherefore Jacob sent a present by his sonnes to Joseph in Egypt, and Ishai here to Saul, which was no great matter, yet it shewed his respect unto him, and so could not but be well taken. For two things, saith Aristotle in Rhetor. make gifts acceptable, ambition and covetousnesse, but to the last small gifts are not acceptable, but to the first they are, because hereby a respect is shewed unto him, wherein the ambitious are delighted.

V. 21.

Note.

David coming to Saul pleased him so well that he loved him greatly, and became his armour-bearer. Here was a good beginning, but this love was turned afterwards into hatred, so that felicity we see, standeth not in the favour of Princes, wherefore let no man trust hereunto, as we are exhorted Psal. 146. but in God onely. This love of Saul to David was but as lightning before a terrible tempest of thunder, when he might seeme to begin to be happy, then a foundation was laid of many miseries.

The Mystery.
Isidor.

Mystically by the harpe, wherewith David played, we may understand Christ crucified, set forth by the preaching of the Gospell, and by preaching him evill spirits are chased away; morally the striking of the harpe with his hand, setteth forth the mortifying of the flesh by fasting, whereunto prayer being added the evill spirit is expelled, according to that, this kinde goeth not out, but by fasting and prayer. Or by David Christ was figured out, who by his word expelled evill spirits, as David by his harpe.

Math. 17. 21.

CHAP. XVII.

V. 1.

Then the Philistines gathered themselves together to battel in Shochoh, which belonged to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah in Ephes-Dammim. Of Shochoh and Azekah, see Josh. 15. 32. and Shochoh is said to have belonged to Judah Judah, to distinguish it from that on the other side of Jordan, spoken of Gen. 34. For these words, in Ephes-Dammim, the Vulg. Latine hath, in sinibus Dammim. And Saul, with the children of Israel, pitched by the valley of Elah, the Vulg. Latine, in valle verebinti, taking the word for an appellative; and Iunius, ad convallē querceti. For the places in particular to inquire into them, is not materiall, but here the battail being set in array on both sides, upon two opposite mountaines, a valley being between, a Champion of the Philistims, Goliath by name, came downe into the valley, and challenged any one of all the men of Israel to fight with him, and he is described by his stature, armour, and weapons, and hee said, I defie the host of Israel this day. For the cause of this warre made by the Philistims, wee read nothing, but it may easily be conjectured, that they hearing Saul the King to bee so distracted and unfit for warre, tooke this opportunity. For these words, [A champion of the Philistims,] Hebr. are these איש הבנאים Ish habenaim, a man between two, whereupon a question is made, why this is said of him? To this Willis answereth, that moit understand it between the two Armies, but this cannot bee, because the word armies is of the feminine gender, but this of the masculine, and because hee is said immediately to have come out of the Philistims campe. Pellican, that hee was as big as two, but this hee also rejecteth, because the description of his bigness followeth in the next words. Iunius, duellator, the Sept. δύνατος a champion, or a mighty man, according to our translation, and this hee approveth. But I rather approve of the common reading, a man between them both, vir intermedius, as Peter Martyr hath it, that is, between the Israelites and the Philistims, into the valley; and in the next words it is shewed, to what side he belonged. The Vulg. Latine rendereth it spurius, but upon what ground I know not, and therefore even Lyra leaving this reading, saith, it is Hebr. vir intermedius, and such an one must needs be fortis & audax, who being confident in his owne strength, goeth out before his Army ready to fight against any man that should come against him from the contrary army. Whose height was six cubits and a span. A cubit is commonly held to bee a foot and halfe, but according to some, saith Lyra, two foot. But taking a cubit for a foot and half, he was higher then any other man by the third part and more, because foure cubits is the stature of a man, but hee was six and a span. Wherefore he was a Giant, many of which were found in the land of Canaan, at the Israelites first comming thither, but they were slaine by Joshua and his men, onely some remained still in Gaza, Gath, and Asdod, and accordingly it is said, that Goliath was of Gath. Giants have always been noted to be most wicked, and contempters of God, wherefore by the Ethnicks they are called δυνάστες and δυνασται, they are described by the Poets by snake-like feet, and distorted thighs, and Josephus thinketh, that they were begotten of incubi devils. They are set forth in holy Scripture by divers names, sometime by this name, Rephaim, taken from death, because men are ready to dye for feare when they see them; sometime by the name Nephalim, from falling down before them; sometime by the name Anakim, signifying chaines, because they went sumptuously adorned; and sometime Emim, from feare and terrour which they struck into the beholders.

Hee had an helmet of brasse upon his head. Iunius, for brasse, hath it, steele, of which helmets used to bee made; and Lyra saith, the word rendred brasse, signifieth any kinde of mettle, and hee thinketh iron to bee meant hereby; but that of Steele is rather to bee preferred. His coat was of Male, of 5000 shekels weight: This is cast up by one, counting a shekel for halfe an ounce, to bee 156 pound weight, and 4 ounces; his speares head weighed 600 shekels of iron, that is, 18 pound and 3 quarters, unto which the other parts of his armour being added, could not amount together to lesse then 200 pound weight, a great burthen for another strong man to beare, yet hee could with all this goe and fight, which shewed his wonderfull great strength, that seeing how easily hee was brought to destruction notwithstanding, all men might learne not to trust to humane strength, how great soever it be.

And hee had greaves of brasse upon his legs, and a target of brasse betwene his shoulders;

V. 4, 5, 6,
7, 8. &c.

Peter Martyr.

Willis.

Pellican.

Iunius.

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Iosh. 11. 21, 22

V. 5.

Iunius.

Lyra.

Willis.

Note.

V. 6.

shoulders: the Vulg. Latine hath, boots of brasfe upon his thighs, and a target of brasfe covered his shoulders. Junius, boots of Steele upon his feet. The word מצח of which מצחה here used commeth, doth signifie a forehead, it signifieth then any thing fastened on before upon his legs for defence. Peter Martyr rendreth it plates of brasfe. Pagnin, either plates or boots; the other word rendred legs, properly signifieth feet: the meaning is, that hee was substantially armed from top to toe. For these words, a target of brasfe betwene his shoulders, which reading most doe follow, it seemeth not so apt, because v. 7. one bearing a target or shield of brasfe is said to goe before him. The Chald. therefore best rendreth it a speare, and likewise Josephus, bearing a speare between his shoulders, for so the word כרן here used, is taken, Isa. 8. 17. Job 41. 19. Jer. 6. 23. Whereas another word חנית is here used for a speare, and both together, v. 45. which sheweth, that not one and the same thing, but divers things are set forth by these two words, It is answered, that by this first was meant a truncheon speare, which hee carryed upon his shoulder, and by the other a javelin, which hee had in his hand, which is the more probable, because v. 45. David speaketh of both these, and a sword, wherewith hee saith Goliath came against him, intimating that they were none of them for defence, but all instruments to fight withall, such as a shield is not. Lyra also saith, that this was no shield, but rather according to the Hebrew, a plate of brasfe on each side of his helmet, hanging over with a sharpe end to defend the junctures of his arms upon his shoulders: the shield carryed by the armour-bearer, was delivered to him when he came to fight.

V. 8, 9.

Vatablus.
Jonathas Syrus.

Qu.

Nicol. 1. Monumachiam sellantes tentant Deum.
Decret. part. 2.
Caus. 2. qu. c. 23.

Stephan. in cap.
Consulisti ii,
qu. 5. Spontanea confessione vel testium approba-tione delicta con-cessa sunt vestro regimini judicari: occulta autem & incognita illis sunt re-linquenda &c.

Goliath thus armed, challengeth the men of Israel, offering this condition, if any one of them were able to overcome him, then the Philistims should become their servants, but contrariwise they should serve the Philistims; and this challenge he came and made forty dayes together, v. 16. In challenging them, he saith, Am not I a Philistim? Vatablus, Am not I that Philistim? that is, who am famous for many exploits done amongst you. Jonathas Syrus thinketh, that it was hee that had killed Elis sonnes, and taken the Arke, but the time doth not agree, for if hee had been a man of warre then, when Samuel was a childe, hee would now in Samuel's old age have been too old to enter into this duell. Upon this duell into which David entred, at the challenge of Goliath, a question is made, whether duells bee lawfull? and it is generally answered, that they are not lawfull: 1 Because the challenge is made out of pride and vain-glory. 2 Because to enter into a duell is to tempt God, and it is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God, as in the Decrees of Nicolas 1. they who follow Monomachies doe tempt God. And in the book of Decrees, it is said, such are lifted up with pride, and boast themselves of their strength. In the Lateran Councell, besides this, three reasons more are yeilded. 1 Champions are sometimes hired to fight, and so men set their lives to sale for money. 2 They fight and die in a rage and malice of one against another. 3 Hee that killeth having no warrant from God so to doe, is a murderer. From this yet it seemeth, that of old a duell hath been held lawfull, and therefore to decide the question arising between two in a matter of moment, the one accusing, the other standing upon his justification, a duell hath often been by Christian Kings and Judges allowed, but by the Doctors of the Church condemned, because the onely lawfull way, as Stephanus hath it, to judge by, is either by a voluntary confession of the offender, or the testimony of witnesses; for things hidden and unknowne, are to bee left unto him, who onely knoweth the hearts of men. To try men then by a duell, is to goe from the ordinary lawfull way, and to take a way unlawfull, and so to doe evill, and wee must not doe evill that good may come of it. Moreover, it may bee very unequall, hee that is worthy to bee condemned, being strongest or most expert in the use of his weapon, and the innocent weakest and most inexpert. This then is no way of tryall to bee tolerated amongst Christians, and therefore it is now well left. And much more intolerable is the practice of those, who upon any offence will challenge others to a duell in fury and malice to bee revenged revenged upon them, for vengeance is mine, saith God, and I will repay it, therefore avenge not your selves. The Devill who delighteth in blood, is the instigator to this duell, and thus at his pleasure taketh two at once in his net, the murderer by his sinne of murder, and the murdered by his sinne of hatred, wherein hee dyed. But for this daell between David and Goliath, it was doubtlesse by a singular instinct from God, to glorifie his power the more, and to make David the more famous, and therefore no example is to bee taken hereby.

Now David was the sonne of that Ephraimite of Bethlehem Judah, whose name was Jesse, who had eight sonnes, and went for an old man in the dayes of Saul. Jesse is called an Ephraimite, because Bethlehem had also the name of Ephraim: Of his eight sonnes, see before, Chap. 16. 10. Hebr. hee was old going amongst men, which is spoken to shew, that he went not now to the warres for his age. But his three eldest sonnes went; as for David the youngest, hee had returned againe before this from Saul, to feed his fathers sheep; which is spoken because the history left David with Saul, as being entertained by him to serve him. Left any man should marvaile then, how hee could now bee at home with his father to bee sent to his brethren by him, as followeth, his dismisle from Saul is here mentioned. And it is most probable, that Saul having now warlike employment to busie his minde about, was not troubled with his former melancholick fits, and therefore hee sent David home to bee a comfort to his aged father, contenting himselfe with his three other sonnes that followed him. This shewed the great humility of David, in that having lived delicately at the Court, hee was content to returne againe to a shepherds life, but thus also did Moses, after 40 yeares spent in Pharaohs Court, hee lived a shepherd in the land of Madian 40 yeares. And David comming thus to fight with, and to overcome Goliath, when he had not been used to feats of armes, the victory was the more admirable.

The challenge of Goliath, and his defying of Gods host, having continued 40 dayes, David is sent to the host to carry some provision to his brethren and their Captaine. Peter Martyr condemneth Saul being of so strong a body, and the men of valour about him, as wanting all love and zeale to God, for that they could endure to heare God blasphemed and railed upon twice a day so long a time, and yet none of them would descend to fight in this quarrell. But thus it is commonly with men, they are hot in their owne causes, but cold in Gods, wherefore God provided himselfe a Champion extraordinary, even David, the most unlikely of them all, and by him chastised the insolency of that proud Philistims.

The provision carryed by David, was an Ephah of parched corne, ten loaves, and ten cheeses sent to the Captain, and Ishai biddeth him see how they did, and take their pledge. For parched corne, Lyra hath, sodden wheat, but the word קליה signifieth tostum, parched, an Ephah was ten homers, and an homer as much as would suffice a man for a day. For these words, see how thy brethren fare and take their pledge, the Vulg. Latine hath it, cum quibus ordinati sunt, but the word is ערבות their pledge, and so the word is used, Gen. 38. 17. Some thinke, that the meaning may bee, if they had laid any thing to pawne having lyen there so long, and their victuals being spent, whereby they might be enforced to pawne some of their apparell for food, hee should redeem it: some, take a token, whereby thou maist safely passe and repasse in the army: some, bring a token from them in signe of their welfare; the Chaldees, bring their welfare. I preferre that of Pellican, that for his more secure passing amongst such a multitude of souldiers with that provision which he carryed, hee should goe first and bring some token from them, before that hee went into the Army with it, that it being brought to him that kept the carriages, when they should at night come to require of him this corne and bread, they might bee delivered to them by that token, and therefore v. 22. it is said, that hee left it with the keeper of the Carriages at the trench, and ran and saluted his brethren. For Ishai might well conceive that his sonnes might bee busie in the warre,

V. 12.

Gen. 48. 7.

V. 13, 14.

V. 15.

Pellican.
Jesephus.

Note.

Note.

V. 17.

P. Martyr.

Note.

V. 17, 18.

Exod. 16.

Septuag.

Pellican.
Junius.
Chald. Paraphr.

warre, and so could not for the present take and bestow the provision sent them in their tent, wherefore he directed David in this course, that hee might returne with the more expedition, and not bee forced to wait their leisure. Comestor saith, that their pledge was a bill of divorce to their wives, for the manner was, when men went to warre, to give their wives bills of divorce, that if they tarried out three yeares they might marry againe to whom they would, because they might happily be taken by their enemies and carryed away.

V. 19.

The place, where David came unto his brethren, is said to be the valley of Elab, where the Army of Israel was fighting with the Philistims: of this valley, see before v. 2. by which they are said to have pitched upon a mountaine, but here they were fighting in this valley, which is not to bee understood, as if the fight were now begun, but that they were descended upon some part of the valley ready to fight, as is shewed more fully, v. 20. 21. Yet Comestor saith that they had some skirmishing together every day.

V. 20, 21.

V. 22, 23.

V. 24, 25.

V. 26, 27.

Vatablus.

Chalde

Arias.

Peter Martyr.

Iunius.

Sepinagint.

Osfander.

Chalde, Iunius.

Chrysost. Hom.

20. ad Rom.

David, as his father commanded him, riseth betimes and cometh to the Army, and leaving his provision with a keeper, goeth to his brethren, and whilst he was talking with them, Goliath came forth againe and spake as at other times, which David hearing, and seeing the feare that all men were in, he desired to know what should be done to him, that could kill him, speaking, as if there were no cause, why they should be so afraid of an uncircumcised railer. They tell him, that Saul would give him great riches, and his daughter to wife, and make his fathers house free in Israel. For the place, to which David came, where hee left his carriage, before that hee went into the Army, it is called המעבלה, by the Vulgar Latin, Magalab, but the same word Ch. 26. 5. is by the same interpreter rendred, a tent. Vatablus and the Chalde render it the place of tents, Arias Montanus, as our Transl. the trench, Iunius, plaustrum ambitum, because hagalab signifieth a cart, the Sept. to the roundnesse or compassse, and Ch. 26. 5. a cart: most aptly hereby may be understood the place of carts, set on the outside of the Army for a defence unto it. For the rewards promised, they served to whet on some to this enterprize, the making of his fathers house free was meant from taxes and impositions, so Osfander, and the advancing of it to the state of the Nobility, as Iunius and the Chalde, the Vulgar Latin, he will make his fathers house without tribute. Now David was not moved, as Chrysost. thinketh, and Peter Martyr, with these rewards, but for the glory of God and the love of his people, whom Goliath had so proudly defied, because when hee came before Saul, hee made no mention or pact about this reward. Whereas then hee demanded what should bee done to the killer of Goliath, it is to bee held, that hee asked this, that hee might take occasion to extenuate the exploit in him, that should doe it, for there should not need to have any such rewards propounded, seeing that Philistims power was not so great, but that a meane man might overcome him, seeing he had railed upon the host of the living God, and so had laid himselfe open to Gods judgments through his blasphemies.

V. 28, 29.

Schol. Histor.

Eliab David's eldest brother hearing him speake so, did sharply reprove him, as being proud and arrogant, but David answered, What have I now done, is there not a cause? Comestor here excuseth Eliab, saying that he spake thus, fearing, lest David adventuring to goe against Goliath should bee slaine. But his words doe plainly shew, that hee spake thus out of envy: for David had once bene at the court already and gotten himselfe great praise of all about the King, which hee being his elder brother doubtlesse greatly envied, for that the youngest was so preferred and hee neglected, and now after that hee had bene sent home to keepe sheep, seeing him to come to the Army, and so busie in inquiring about the Gyant, what should be given to him, that killed him, he feared, that he would adventure to goe against him and so hee might happily come to greater preferment, and far overtop him and all the rest of his brethren, and this made him to speake so bitterly against him. And herein David was a figure of our Lord, who did nothing worthy of reproofe, as David did not,

but but came at his fathers command and in love to his brethren, and yet by his brethren the Jewes was most bitterly spoken against, and envied of them. For these words, is there not a cause? Hebr. is strictly rendred, as by the Vulgar Latin, and Peter Martyr, is it not a word? that is, faith Comestor, there is nothing done, for which thou shouldest be so angry, I have but onely spoken and inquired of the matter, that I might carry my father word; so likewise Lyra. But because דבר signifyeth a matter or businesse, as well as a word, Iunius better expoundeth it, is there not businesse, about which I am come to the campe, and not as thou chargest mee, upon pride?

David notwithstanding *Eliab*s sharpe reproofe inquireth of others touching the same thing, so that it was told Saul what David had said, and hee sent for him, and then David offered to goe and fight with the Philistim, and when Saul said, that hee was not able to goe against him, David replied that in keeping his fathers sheep a Lyon came to the flocke and a Beare, & he killed both the one and the other, wherefore hee doubted not, but this uncircumcised Philistim should be as one of them. Hee had 3. grounds of his confidence. 1. By the Spirit of God comming upon him hee had already done as great exploits. 2. The Philistim was uncircumcised, hee circumcised, and so was within the Covenant of Grace and under Gods protection, but Goliath not. 3. He had railed upon the Armies of the living God, and so had laid himselfe open to Gods judgements, thus Peter Martyr. For it is no good ground for a man to put himselfe upon danger, because he hath beene formerly delivered from as great dangers, except there be somewhat else to trust unto, viz. a speciall assurance from God of escaping in that particular case, and this *David*s words imply, that he had by the Spirit, whereby hee was stirred up: Wee may indeed and ought to bee confident in generall upon former experiments, of future deliverances, as the Apostle was, who saith, hee hath delivered us, and doth deliver, and wee trust, that hee will yet hereafter deliver us, but for any particular wee may not upon any such trust adventure upon it, unlesse besides former experience, wee have 1. a good cause, 2. a calling from God, 3. some word of God to trust unto in that particular, which hee onely hath in whom the Spirit extraordinarily worketh such a faith; and all these David had. His cause was good, hee had a calling, because hee was anointed to bee Captaine over Gods people, and lastly he had the inward motion of the Spirit, and a warrant from experience of the Spirits assistance in the like dangerous interprizes before. The Spirit, which came upon him carryed him to this duel, which might seeme most dangerous, and how could his enterprize then but be lawfull, and his victory certaine? Now because he speaketh of the uncircumcision of Goliath, as a maine ground of his confidence, implying the great advantage of his own circumcision, Note, that the circumcised which are now the baptized, may safely trust in God in all times of perill as being within the Covenant, but not the circumcised in the flesh onely, because then any Israelite might have had the like confidence, but the circumcised in spirit, and the baptized with a conscience purified by faith, for faith is our victory over the world.

Saul hearing David speake thus bade him goe, and said, The Lord be with thee, wherein hee did not rashly or ill, as some charge him, but well and wisely, perceiving by that which David had said, that hee was not without the Spirit of all power, and so not unlikely to prevaile, according to others, and to expresse his great desire, that hee might prevaile for his owne and the peoples deliverance out of this great danger, hee prayeth earnestly for his good successe, although his prayer was of no force, because hee was wicked and wanted Faith.

Then Saul caused David to put on his Armour and an Helmet of Steele, upon his head, &c. The word rendred Armour, Hebr. is גד signifying a garment, wherefore the Vulgar Latin hath it, his owne garments, and likewise Peter Martyr, Arias, &c. and thus the same word is taken, Ch. 18. 4. Jonathan gave David his garments even to his sword and his bow. And therefore this reading is rather to bee followed, he gave him his Souldiers garments, and thereupon put

Peter Martyr.

Schol. Histor.

Lyra.

V. 30, 31.

V. 32, 33.

V. 34, 35.

V. 36.

Peter Martyr.

1 Cor. 1. 10.

Note.

Rom 2. 29.

1 Pet. 3. 21.

1 Joh. 5. 4.

V. 37.

P. Martyr.

Genevum.

V. 38.

a coate of male, &c. for Sauls armour would not have fitted David, because the stature of Saul was so great above all other men. They which are for armour meant here, will either have David's owne armour and not Saul's meant, or some armour out of Sauls armory. But that armour is not meant, appeareth, because he put upon him a coate of male to cover his body, as Goliath had, and that was armour enough for him to beare, neither doe any use to weare other Steele armour under that, but some coate of buffe, which is more light.

V. 39.

Ostander.

Now when David had put these on and tried to goe, he turned againe and put them off, saying that he could not goe with them, because he had not beene accustomed unto them. If it shall seeme strange, that David should speake thus, seeing he was before this made Sauls Armour-bearer; It is answered, that although he had this place assigned to him, yet for so much as Saul had not after that gone out to warre till this time, and David was dismissed againe to a Shepherds life, he never yet executed that office, and so the going forth in armour was a thing unusuall to him, and therefore he put it off, as being rather a hinderance then a furtherance unto him in this his combat. And this was not done without a singular providence of God, that the victory might be ascribed unto God onely, and not unto any warlike preparation made on David's part.

V. 40.

And David tooke his staffe in his hand, and five smooth stones, and put them in a shepherds bagge, &c. These things might seeme to be of little force to enter a Duell withall, against so mighty a Giant, but by things contemptible and vile amongst men, God would hereby shew, that he would confound the mighty. David going but thus meanely appointed, but armed with confidence in God was better armed then Goliath. Thus Moses went armed to subdue Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and prevailed, for he carryed nothing but his rod or staffe in his hand. And yet this kinde of fight was not unusuall amongst the Hebrewes, who being kept from iron weapons by the Philistims, exercised themselves in throwing of stones out of slings, and many amongst them grew so expert herein, that they could throw at an haire breadth and not misse, as it is said of 700 men of the tribe of Benjamin.

Judg. 20. 16.

V. 41.

Josephus.

Peter Martyr.

David drawing neare to the Philistim, he also drew neare to him, but seeing him, he disdained him and cursed and spake vauntingly unto him, that he would give his flesh to be meat to the fowles and beasts: but David nothing terrified telleth him, that he came in the name of the Lord who would deliver Goliath into his hands &c. whereas Goliath seeing David come with a staffe saith unto him, am I a dogge, Josephus saith, that he answered, yea and worse then a dogge, and hereupon Goliath being enraged cursed him &c. But by the sacred hiltory David replied nothing till he had done speaking. For David's foretelling, that Goliath should be delivered into his hands, that he would cut off his head, and give his carcase to the fowles and beasts, and likewise the carcasses of the Philistims, all this he spake not rashly to requite Goliath with such threatenings, as he had used, but by the spirit of Prophecy, whereby he knew it should be so. 1. Because Goliath had railed upon Gods Armies, with whose glory it stood not to suffer such blasphemy to goe unpunished, or not to maintaine the people of Israel to be his peculiar people, amongst whom his Tabernacle and service was. 2. Because Goliath trusted to his owne strength, his sword and his speare, therefore by his confusion God could not but teach, that such are vaine things to save a man, but trusting in God alone of the greatest force and power.

V. 48, 49.

Lyra.

Then the Philistim comming towards David he ran to meete him, and slung a stone out of his sling, which pierced his forehead, so as that he fell downe dead &c. David made haste, saith Lyra, that he might sling at Goliath before he came too neare him, because a distance is necessary in slinging of a stone to make it the more forcible. If it shall seeme incredible that the head of Goliath should be pierced with a stone when as he had on an helmet of Steele covering both head and forehead, I will not answer as Lyra saith some doe, that the Steele gave way miraculously, and therefore as Hugo saith, some fabulously teach, that the sharpe stone for circumcision was after this left, and a sharpe knife used; but that his forehead was bare: but for David with the first stone throwing to hit it, when Goliath was in motion, and with such force, that the stone funke into his head, this was not done without a supernaturall strength, whereby *David*s arme was strengthened, and extraordinary direction of him that never erreth.

Sharpe

Mytically by Goliath understand the Devill; by David, Christ who as David was sent to his brethren the Jews, but envied by them. And as David going against Goliath was contemptible both for the smallnesse of his body in comparison of *Goliath*s, and because he went with a staffe, so unlikely a weapon to pervaile with, so Christ was despised for a Saviour, as beeing poore and abject, and having no secular strength, yet he only with his Crosse represented by *David*s staffe prevailed, and so the faithfull, as the Armies of the living God, are delivered, who before by the Devill Goliath were continually put in great feare. For stretching this allegory further, as it is stretched by some, who by his putting off of *Saul*s Armour understand Christs putting off of the heavy yoke of the law of Ceremonies, and by his taking 5 stones, Christs taking the 5 bookes of Moses, and then one to set forth unity, and his wounding him in the forehead, because it was not fenced with crossing and the like, I leave them to their Authors as meere streinings and unprofitable curiosities. If in the five stones there be any mystrie, we may with Lyra hold the five wounds of Christ to be rather set forth hereby morally, when we are to encounter with Satan we must be armed with faith onely in Christs death, and with the sword of the word, wherewith he seeketh to slay us by wresting it, we must cut off his head, that is, his temptations, as Christ did. Otherwise Hugo saith, by *Goliath*s sword we may understand the enemies of Christ, but now converted, for by such God defendeth his, and confoundeth Satan, as by Paul converted: by the sling and stone the two things, whereby Christ prevailed, preaching and working. Whereas onely one stone was slung, but by one glosse three stones figuring out Christs three times repelling of the Devils temptations by scripture, he saith it may be thought that David did sling three, but one onely hit him in the forehead. We may note in that Goliath was slaine with his owne sword, that the thing whereby the wicked thinke to destroy others is oft times by Gods just judgement turned to their owne destruction, as Hamans wicked plot against the Jews, and the Canaanitish Kings against Gibeon &c.

The Philistims champion being thus slaine, they flee, and the Israelites pursue them, so that many fall before them, after which they returne and spoil their Tents; then David takes the spoile that properly belonged to him, the armour of Goliath, and layeth it up in his Tent, and his head he put in Hierusalem. This last saith Lyra, is not to be understood, as now done, but afterwards when David raigned in Hierusalem, to terrifie the Jebusites, who held the fort of Zion, that they might be moved through feare of being overcome by him, as Goliath was, to leave it, and not trust to the strength thereof, so likewise Hugo and the Ordin. Gloss. and Comestor saith, he put the head and armour first in his owne Tent, and afterwards in Hierusalem, and in the Tabernacle there, and Peter Martyr saith, it is spoken by a Prolepsis, for it was done afterwards, that the people seeing these monuments of *David*s miraculous victory might praise God, and trust in his helpe against their most potent enemies. But because ch. 21. we read of Goliath his sword lying at Nob in the custody of the High-priest, a question ariseth, how he can be said to have put his armour in his Tent? David Kimbi answereth, that his armour was kept by David, but his sword was layed up in the Tabernacle at Nob, but the word לוי signifieth both armour and weapons, wherefore others say, that by his Tabernacle is meant the Tabernacle, which he afterwards made for the Lord, wherein he placed the Arke, which was called his, because he made it, this then is spoken of a thing done afterwards and not presently, all for the present being put in the Tabernacle at Nob: or rather by his tent understand the tent of his brethren, which was his in common with them, whilest he was at the Campe, his armour falling to David, as victor he tooke and bestowed for his owne use; his sword

Cc

The Mystrie.

Hugo Card.
5. lapides signant hoc 5. cognitio-nem sui, dolorem amissi, pudorem commissi, timo-rem supplicii, spem eterni gaudii, his proster-nitur Goliath spiritus.

Mat. 4.

Hugo Cardin.

V. 51. 52.

V. 53. 54.
Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.
Schol. Hister.

Peter Martyr.

Qu.

Iunius. Pellican
2 Sam. 6. 17.
1 Chron. 15. 1.

(sword was put in the Tabernacle, as a monument of this victory. Whereas some will have Jerusi and Nob to be all one, this cannot be, because Esa. 10. 32. they are spoken of, as two distinct places, and Nehem. 11. For that of carrying his head afterwards to Hierusalem, and setting it up there, that the Jebusites seeing it might be terrified, although it be commonly received, I see no ground for it, and therefore doe rather thinke, that it was done immediately, being set up upon some high turret, where all men might see it: but for his armour, he laid it up afterwards in the Tabernacle, which he made, and for the present in the Tabernacle at Nob, which then was, for he came as a stranger into the Army and had no tent there, and if it shall be thought that his tent or habitation at Bethlehem, might be meant, that cannot be, because after this he went no more home to his fathers house, but abroad with Saul. If here shall seeme to be any colour for the laying up of holy reliques in Churches, to see and to do reverence, to which the people should in devotion resort, truly there is none, for, 1. no man will say, that Goliaths armour was an holy relique, but onely a monument of the victory ascribed unto God by laying them up in his house, as being gotten by his power. 2. None came to worship these monuments. 3. They were truly such, as men tooke them to be, but in many reliques there is great delusion, as in pieces of the Crosse, which if they were all brought together, would be as much, as all the Wood and Timber of Noahs Arke, as Peter Martyr conjectureth.

Peter Martyr.

V. 55.

Lyra.

Here is commemorated, how Saul enquired of Abner, when David went out to fight with Goliath, whose sonne he was, Abner answered, As thy soule liveth, I cannot tell, but now he bringeth him to Saul with the head of Goliath in his hand, and so he learneth of David himselfe, whose sonne he was. He made this diligent enquiry, saith Lyra, because he had promised to give him his daughter, that he might understand, whether he came of a stocke to marry her. But how could Saul or Abner be ignorant who David was, seeing he had ministred unto Saul, and served him before at his house? Ans. Of this see somewhat before ch. 16. 16. and as for Abner, he being Captaine of the Host, happily was never at the Court when David was there, and Sauls distractions by the evill Spirit, might easily make him forget a man otherwise well knowne unto him. As for those opinions of some, that he knew him, but not who was his father; or of others, that if he knew who was his father, yet he knew not of what Tribe he was, or whether he had beene a man of warre, that had so valiant a sonne, and therefore the end of his enquiry was to know these things, these I say, are not to the purpose, because if he had remembred David, he might also have remembred his parentage and City, because he was at the first told of all these, ch. 16. For that opinion of Junius that this history is transposed and should come in before that ch. 16, it cannot stand, 1. Because David went no more home from Saul after this, but after his first comming to play unto Saul he returned, ch. 17. 15. 2. After *David*s first playing before Saul he loved him, ch. 16. 21. but now he envied him, ch. 18. 9. 3. ch. 18. 10. David is said to have played upon the harpe as at other times before him, when the evill spirit was upon him, therefore he had beene with Saul before this Duell.

Chap: 18. 2.

CHAP. XVIII.

V. 1.

Lyra.

Then Jonathan began dearly to love David. Here is first set forth the great grace that David was in after this victory: 1 With *Saul*s sonne, then with the rest of the people. 2 The envie of Saul against him. Jonathan *Saul*s son loved him as himselfe, & in token of his great love made a league with him, and gave him his robe and his garments, even to his sword, his bow, and his girdle. This according to some, saith Lyra, is thus expounded, he gave him his robe and garments, but not his sword, &c. because these were of necessary use for himselfe, but according to others, inclusively, hee gave unto him all these in token of perfect amity; which he rather approveth and answereth the reason brought for for the first, by saying, that Jonathan being a Kings sonne, could easily get him another sword and bow. These things, saith Peter Martyr, Jonathan tooke from his owne body, and gave to David, because in making leagites some outward symboles were wont to bee used, and hereby hee shewed, that the friendship unto which hee received David, was such, that all which hee had should bee common to him, as to himselfe, according to that saying; amicorum omnia sunt communia. And Christ hath given to us yet greater pledges of his love, his owne flesh and blood in the sacrament of the Lords Supper, and herein the great provident care of God over David appeared, in that hee stirred him up such a friend in Saul's Court, for his greater safety. For the grace that David was in with the people, Saul tooke him, and would not let him goe home any more to his father, but imployed him about divers things belonging to the State, and David behaved himselfe wisely in all things, and Saul set him over the men of warre, and hee was accepted both of the people, and of the servants of Saul. It may seeme strange, that David being but ere while a shepheard, should know so soone Military policy, wisely to order the men of warre, but the Spirit wherewith hee was extraordinarily indued, taught him wisdom in all things. What men of warre hee was set over, is not here said; but v. 13. when Saul began to bee afraid of him; hee is said to have removed him from him, and to have made him Captaine over a thousand. Some thinke, that the thing generally spoken of here, that hee was set over the men of warre, is there more particularly exprest to bee over 1000. But others, that hee was graced at the first with being set over all, but afterwards, when Saul envyed him, hee was put out of that place, and made onely Captaine of 1000. And this seemeth to mee the more probable, because it is said, that he removed him from him, when hee set him over 1000, and before that hee had sought to slay him, so that this remove was done in displeasure, and therefore cannot bee understood of his first preferring him, but of his putting him downe from a greater dignity to a lesser. Whereas Pellican objecteth, that Abner was Generall over all the forces, it may bee answered, that hee was Generall of them that went out to fight against the enemy, but over those that Saul kept about his person hee might set David, but when hee grew into a feare of him, putting him from this office, hee made him Captaine over 1000 of them that went to warre, when Saul stayed at home, that thus by going oftner against the enemy, hee might bee in the more danger of being slaine.

When they returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, the women came out with musick and singing. Answering one another, Saul hath slaine his 1000, and David his 10000, &c. The women ascribed to Saul more then hee deserved, as Chrysostome noteth, for hee suffered the Philistim to vaunt himselfe forty dayes together, and yet cowardly fate still: but to David they ascribed no more but according to his deserts, for his killing of that Philistim, was as much as the killing of 10000 of them, yet Saul was vexed at it, and envyed, and from thence-forward hated David to the death, for hee began now to suspect that he was the man that should have the Kingdome transferred to him. And therefore when David stood before him playing with the Harpe, the next time that the evill spirit was upon him, when he prophesied, he sought to slay him by casting a speare at him, and in thus doing he wickedly opposed himselfe against the wil of God, who had threatned to take the Kingdome from him and to give it to another, whereas David contrariwise being in danger to lose his Kingdome afterwards submitted himselfe to Gods will, but this his opposition and all his other devillish projects were vaine, as the sequel doth declare, for there is no withstanding of God in his will. But how is Saul said to prophesie in his mad fit? Lyra answereth not properly, but denominatively, because as an arreptitious person he spake that which the evill spirit moved him unto, and not of himselfe, so likewise Junius and Borrbaw, his speech and behaviour was strange, as of the prophets, when they were moved by the spirit of God, so that it was called popheying for the manner onely, and not for the matter also, as when he was said before to prophesie ch. 10. 19. Clarissus Chaldeus exponneth

P. Martyr.

V. 2.

V. 5.

Pellican.

V. 6, 7.

Chrysost. Hom. de Saul &amp; David.

V. 10.

Borrbaw.

Lyra.

Junius. Borrbaw.

Peter Martyr.

prophets are insane, because the gesture of a prophet, when he was moved by the Spirit, was such that he seemed to be mad. Whereas it is said, that Saul said, I will smite David, Peter Martyr thinketh, that he said thus in his heart onely, for although the evill spirit comming upon him he was like a mad man for the time, yet he had the use of his reason to know what he did. For *David*s escaping twice, when his destruction was thus sought, it was not without the hand of God making Saul to misse of his marke, and David to beware of him, wherein he was a type of Christ, whose destruction the Jewes sought, Luk. 4. and Job. 7. but he declined their violence, and went away.

V. 13.

Then Saul feared David and put him from him, and made him Captaine over 1000, in which place he behaved himselfe wisely, and so was beloved of all Israel and Judab. The more Saul sought to prevent David from comming to the Kingdome, the more possibility did he grow unto of attaining it, so all things are turned to good, to those that are chosen of God, but all meanes used by the wicked to free themselves from danger, are frustrated, and their feares by Gods judgements justly against them are increased.

Note.

He set David over 1000 men, that by making excursions against the Philistims, with them he might come into the greater danger of destruction, but it succeeded otherwise, the Lord was with David and he prospered in all things.

Ben Gerson.

But how did Saul know, that the Lord was with David? R. Levi Ben Gerson saith, that he knew it by his prevailing against Goliath, and his escaping the stroake of his speare two times.

V. 17.

David being made such a Captaine, to put him on the more to hazard his person against the enemy, Saul offered him his daughter Merab to wife, so that he would be a valiant sonne in law unto him, and fight manfully against the enemy. But David speaking modestly of himselfe, as unworthy of such a marriage, shee was given to another man. Then Michal his other daughter was offered him, and for his dowry nothing required but 100 foreskinnes of the Philistims, but all this was done in fraud to bring David into danger of his life by the Philistims. By Hypocrites and wicked men one thing is pretended and another intended, when they make the greatest shew of love, they have hatred in their hearts, yea there is no ordinance of God so sacred, but they will abuse it for their owne devillish ends, so Domitian the tyrant would speake him the fairest, to whom he meant the greatest mischief, and a preparative was made by a marriage to the most bloody massacre in France, that ever was in time of peace, ann. 1573.

Note.

V. 21.

For the words of Saul v. 21. in one of the two thou shalt be sonne in law to me to day, Hebr. it is, in two thou shalt be sonne in law, so likewise the Vulg. Lat. expounded by Lyra, in my two daughters, in the first by espousalls, and in the second not onely so, but by marriage, which was a double honour to him, and therefore he meant, that he should be bound the more to behave himselfe valiantly. Junius rendreth it, by the other thou shalt contract affinity with me, taking the cardinall number for the ordinall, as 2 King. 15. 32. in the two yeare, for in the second yeare, and this reading is rather to be preferred, in the second or in the other of my daughters. In some Latine Copies it is, for two things thou shalt be my sonne in law, that is, according to the Ord. Gloss. for killing Goliath, and for 100 foreskinnes of the Philistims, but this last is not mentioned, till afterwards.

Lyra.

Junius.

V. 25.

For the 100 foreskinnes, which Saul required for a dowry, and not any gold or silver, it is to be understood, that the manner of old was for a man to give a dowry to his wife before marriage, but as for portions we read not, that the woman brought any, except they were inheritrices, as the daughters of Zelophehad were. That a dowry was wont to be given, see Exod. 22. 16, 17. and of what quantity, Deut. 22. 29. And accordingly Shechem offereth a dowry, that should be required, to Dinah, and Abrahams steward gave great gifts to Rebecca and her mother and brother, and Jacob gave seven yeares service for Labans daughter nomine dotis. And the dowry was to be at the womans disposing, and for her maintenance, if her husband dyed. This custome, as it seemeth, was continued a long time under the Gospell, for in the Councell of Arles, which was

Numb. 27.

Gen. 34.

Gen. 24.

in in the time of Constantine it was decreed, that no marriage should be made without giving a dowry, as Peter Martyr saith, which decree was made to prevent clandestine marriages, because that unto dowries witnesses must be used, and so there must needs be witnesses of the marriage. And this he well approveth, but not that of dowries, because it is no where expressly required in the word of God: but by dowry he understandeth somewhat given with the wife, wherein he is certainly mistaken, for that which she bringeth, is no dowry, but a portion, and that only is a dowry, which is given to her.

And whereas for the matter of dowry given to the wife or for her, he distinguisheth betwene the times before the law and the time under the law, holding that dowries were given before, but not under the law, because if still that custome had held, it should not have been imposed nomine pene upon him, that had deflowered a Virgin to endow her and to marry her; I thinke this collection is ill made from that ordinance, because there is a clause therein, according to the dowry of Virgins: whereby is intimated that it was a custome to endow Virgins, when they were married. But both are in use at this day, the woman bringeth a portion to the man, and the man endoweth her with all his worldly goods, or whether shee bringeth portion or not, and for earnest giveth her a ring, so that when he dyeth, shee hath right to so much of his whole estate, as may suffice for her maintenance. But to returne to David, he when Sauls daughter was propounded to him, said, that he was poore and of a meane house, and therefore unworthy of such a match, whereby he meant, that he had nothing to endow her withall, as would be expected of him that married a Kings daughter. For he had indeed right unto her from Sauls first pact, for his killing of Goliath, and he was worthy, because he had beene anointed to be King: but he in his humility looked not at these things, but at his owne present condition. Wherefore Saul to put this doubt out of his minde touching a dowry telleth him by his servants, that he looked for no dowry of gold or silver, but of 100 foreskins of the Philistims. And herein he pretended zeale against the uncircumcised, who hated nothing more then to be circumcised, and he knew, that David could not cut off their foreskins, unlesse he first killed them, but his intent was to bring David into the greater hatred of the Philistims, by thus exasperating them against him. Josephus is farre wide here, when he saith, that Saul required 600 foreskins, and that David brought him so many heads, for it is said, that instead of 100 he brought him 200 foreskins, and this might better satisfie Saul, because he was hereby assured, that they were Philistims that he had slaine and not any of them Israelites, because they were all circumcised, so Lyra, who also saith, that it pleased David well upon this condition to be the Kings sonne in law, partly for the great love that Michal bare unto him, and partly because the Philistims were Gods enemies, and so hatefull unto him. If a question be made of the lawfulness of this enterprize, it is answered, that the Kings command was a sufficient warrant unto him to goe against them, and to doe any despight unto them, especially being professed enemies of Gods people, and God had also called him to be a deliverer to his people.

Then the Princes of the Philistims went forth, &c. They understanding, say the Rabbins, that David was married, and that none in Israel went to warre the first yeare after his marriage, tooke their opportunity now to warre against Israel, hoping that in his abience they should prevaile. But Peter Martyr thinketh rather, that being by the despight done unto them immediately before by David exasperated, they now came forth to be revenged, and this hath the better ground. Whereas in our translation it is rendered, David did more wisely, then all the servants of Saul, Junius rendreth it, he was prospered more, and the Hebr. word may be indifferently expounded either way, but I rather thinke with Junius, that his prospering in his warres against them is meant, because it followeth, his name grew famous, which must be for his noble exploits against the enemy, none doing the like. By David so greatly beloved of Jonathan, that he stript himselfe of all for his sake, mystically understand Christ, to follow whom the faithfull at the first forsooke all. By Saul envying him, when all others

Concil. Arelas.
c. 16.
P. Martyr.

Josephus.

Lyra.

Qu.

Peter Martyr.

V. 30.

Junius.

The Mystery.

others praised him, the Devill stirring up the Pharisees to envy Christ, when as his miracles and teaching all admired him. By his cutting off the Philistims foreskin, and then marrying Sauls daughter, Christs removing of the foreskin, as it were, of the Gentiles by circumcising their hearts through faith bestowed upon them, after which he will espouse unto himselfe the Synagogue of the Jewes, for when the fulnesse of the Gentiles is come in, all Israel shall be saved. Lastly by Dauids prospering the more, the more Saul envyed him, Christs prospering and growing famous all over the world against the endeavours of the malicious Jewes.

CHAP. XIX.

V. 1.

Note.

V. 2, 3.

Peter Martyr.

V. 4.

V. 6, 7.

V. 8.

V. 9.

THe better David deserved, the more Saul envyed and hated him, so that now he could not containe himselfe, but brake out, and willed Jonathan and his servants to kill David. This Jonathan disliked for the great love that he bare to David, but all the rest of the Courtiers seemed to be indifferent, for none of them did any thing for him, either in word or deed. There be many feigned friends in the world, but true friends indeed, are very rare, for all Sauls servants seemed before highly to esteeme of, and to love David, but now not one stands for him, but Jonathan onely, who, a man would thinke, had least reason, seeing the Kingdome belonged unto him by succession after Saul, and if David lived, there was little hope of his attaining unto it. But to keepe a good conscience, and to prevent the shedding of innocent blood, was by him more esteemed of, then the kingdome; and so it is by every godly man. Now for *Jonathan*s silence at the first, it was discretion in him at that time before the servants of Saul, that he might not seeme publikely to oppose his father; and if he had spoken then, it was not likely, that he should doe so much good, as afterwards, having his father alone and in a better humour. But he neglecteth not to tell David of his fathers motion, that he might looke to himselfe, and promise him to speake for him to Saul alone, when he was walking in the field, and to certifie him of his answer. For these words, I will stand besides my father in the field where thou art, the Vulg. Lat. hath, in the field wheresoever he shall be, so likewise Peter Martyr, but Hebr. it is where thou art, and it is likely, that they knowing in what field Saul used to walke for his recreation, David was hid there, that upon Sauls answer to Jonathan speaking in his behalfe he might have him at hand to relate the newes unto. If any doubt be made here, whether Jonathan did not an act of treachery towards his father, in discovering to David, what he had spoken against him? Peter Martyr answereth well, that he did a good office towards his father in saving him from shedding innocent blood, and a good office to his freind, that he might looke to himselfe, and as his duty to God bound him, who is to be obeyed in saving life before King or Father unjustly seeking to kill. v. 4. Jonathan then perswadeth his father Saul not to seeke the life of David. 1. Because he had done no evill against him. 2. Because he had deserved very well of him, in adventuring his life for him, against the Philistims. 3. Because the Lord was with David, and by him wrought a great salvation for Israel, the whole common-wealth was bounden unto David. 4. Because the time was when Saul liked David exceedingly well for his valour, and was glad to see it, wherefore he ought not now without cause to be so changed towards him, as to seeke his death. Saul overcome with these persuasions sweareth, that David should not be slaine, and so Jonathan bringeth him to Saul, and he standeth before him for a time securely, as in times past. But ere long, although after this David did valiantly againe in putting the Philistims to flight, v. 8. when the evill spirit came upon Saul, he contrary to his oath raged more against David, then ever he had done before, for he both struck at him with his javelin, and when he escaped, he sent after him to watch his house, that he might be taken and slaine, but Michal let him downe at a window and he escaped, telling Sauls messengers the meane season, who were were sent to slay him, that hee was sick in bed, but shee deluded them by laying an image in the bed, which shee happily shewed them as farre off, that they might goe and tell their master Saul, David having the more time, whilst they went and returned, to flee away. Then Saul bade the messengers to goe and bring him in the bed, that hee might slay him, but when they came into the chamber, they found that Michal had mocked them with an image, which Saul hearing hee reproved his daughter Michal, but shee excused her selfe, saying, that David said, Let me goe, or else I will kill thee. By this inconsistency of Saul wee may see, what little credit is to be given to the most serious promises and oaths of wicked men; and such are they professedly, that be of the Church of Rome, their tenet being, that faith is not to be kept with hereticks, and therefore Ladislaus the Emperor contrary to his faith given to the Turke made Warre upon the Turke, which made Amurath the great Turke cry out upon the perfidiousnesse of Christians, and seeing the Emperours standard, which was a crucifixe, to say, O Christ, if thou beest a God, take revenge upon these thy perfidious servants: and he was heard, and the Imperialists were overthrowne, and many thousands of them slaine to the great losse of Christendome. The word rendred Image, which Michal tooke and laid in the bed, Hebr. is Teraphim, whereby images abused to idolatrie are commonly set forth, as Judg. 17. 5. 1 Sam. 15. 23. Gen. 35. 4. Hence some gather, that Michal kept images in secret, which David knew not of, as Rachel sometime had done, Isaiah being ignorant of it, and that shee tooke one of these being the image of a man and laid it in the bed, and a goates skin under the head, that there might bee a resemblance of haire, and the liver of a goate panting within the bed, as Comestor hath it following Iosephus.

For Michal excusing herself to her father, that David would have killed her if shee had not let him goe, herein shee sinned: saith Martyr, three wayes, 1. in telling an untruth, 2. in raising a slander against David, 3. in being so timorous, as not to dare, to speake in the defence of David being innocent, as her brother Jonathan had done. The siter of Dionysius the tyrant, and wife to Polixenus doth greatly condemne her, in that shee being reproved by Dionysius for not telling him before her husband fled away, who should have beene questioned for treason, answered him, Dost thou thinke mee so degenerate, that if I had knowne of his fleeing, I would not have fled with him? yet Michal did the part of a loving wife in that shee had rather indanger herself of the Kings displeasure, then that her husband should come in any danger.

David then came to Samuel in Ramah, and told him all that was done, and they two went together to Naioth & dwelt there. He would not flee to his own City, because he thought Saul would soon find him out there, but to Samuel, of whose anointing him Saul had not yet heard, supposing that he might keep there concealed, and by Samuel be directed, what to do. Ramah was in Benjamin, and Naioth saith Lyra, a place in Ramah, see v. 22. Here saith Hugo, was a company of Nazarites alwayes attending upon singing Psalmes and praising God. To this place when Saul heard, that David was there, he sent messengers to fetch him, but when they came there, the Spirit of God was upon them and they prophesied, so likewise did the second messengers, and the third, and afterwards Saul himselfe comming thither. For as Rabanus hath it, wicked men and reprobates may prophesie for a time, as Balaam, and those Matth. 7. which say, in thy name wee have prophesied; or by prophesying understand praising of God by singing. Hereby was set forth the power of prophesying, in that such as came to the company of Prophets here with an intent to take David and to slay him, were upon the sudden so changed, that they joyned with them in prophesying: so Latimer going to hear Mr. Stafford, to scoffe at him, was turned, and preached the truth also as hee did: and Augustine by hearing Ambrose, being before a Manichee. Yea such is the force of humane reason being pickily set forth, that it hath had some time the like admirable effects, as in drunken Polemo, who went in his Garlands to deride Xenocrates the Philosopher, but having heard him, he casts of his Garlands and turned one of his Scholars. But such effects are not common, but very

Note.

Minster. cof-magr. de Gracia lib. 4.
Amurath 2.
V. 13.

Schol. Histor.

V. 17.
P. Martyr.

V. 18.

Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.

Rabanus.

Note.

Aug. Confes. l. 6.
c. 3.

very

Ioh. 7.

Qu.

OF Sanctuaries.

Numb. 35.

H. B. Patriarchs
travailes.

V. 22, 23.

2 Sam. 6. 10.

Iunius.

Peter Martyr.
Ofiander.

Peter Martyr.

Iunius.

Vatablus.
Ofiander.

very rare to shew the great power of Gods holy Spirit, so they that came to apprehend Christ, were taken with admiration and returned without doing that for which they were sent.

For Samuel entertaining of David, if it be questioned, how he could doe so, seeing Saul the King held David to bee his enemy? It is easily answered, that althoug such as bee traitors, and so enemies indeed to the King, no good Subject may receive, except as Jael did Sisera, to give them up to the higher power, yet Samuel sinned not in receiving David, whom hee knew to bee innocent, and a meere patient, as Obadiab sinned not against his allegiance to Ahab, when hee hid the Prophets of God from his fury in caves, and fed them there. And hee tooke him to Naioth, where was a Schoole of the Prophets, that he might have the comfort of the godly exercises there performed, and it being a most retired place, the more safely lye hid there and out of danger, especially because such houses of learning and piety have alwayes beene as sanctuaries, and none almost have ever beene so barbarous to offer any violence in such places, see before Ch. 10. 5. But as Samuel received none but the innocent to this place, to protect him hereby, so ought none to bee received to sanctuary, but such, whereas contrariwise amongst the Papals the foulest malefactors and murderers have beene received to sanctuary to the encouraging of many in all manner of lewdnesse. The pretext of these Sanctuaries was the appointing of Cities of refuge for such to flee unto, as had shed blood unawares. But besides that herein was something typicall, and so that law is at an end, Popish sanctuaries differed altogether from them. 1. Because they were but a few, these as many, as there be Monasteries. 2. Into them were received no wilfull murderers, into these all sorts promiscuously. 3. By mens fleeing thither the course of iustice was stayed, but the Magistrate might examine and judge the case, but here the authority of the Magistrate is quite cut off. One saith that Naioth in Ramah was a most pleasant place, and therefore Samuel brought David hither to comfort him, it was from Gibeah of Saul 12. miles. Touching Saul himselfe more is said, then of his messengers. For, 1. he began to Prophecie upon the way to Naioth, but so did not they. 2. Hee cast off his garments and prophesied naked, when hee came before Samuel and David. 3. Hee continued so all that day and all that night. By his garments, which hee cast off Lyra understandeth his Kingly garments, which hee did weare uppermost, and by his being naked his stripping of himself onely of these, and putting upon him such a garment, as other Prophets used in praising God, as David is afterwards said to have made himselfe naked, when hee put on a linen Ephod, having put off his Kingly Robes and danced before the Arke. Iunius saith, he put off his military garments onely, neither doe any understand, that he was altogether naked, but for putting any other thing on Willet denyeth it; Peter Martyr saith, happily hee did so, Ofiander, that undoubtedly hee did so. Of Sauls prophesying before this, see Ch. 10. 10. and Ch. 18. 10. where hee is said to have prophesied, when the evill Spirit came upon him. But this prophesying differed from that, as Peter Martyr noteth, for then hee onely uttered some strange words after a propheticall manner, and used strange gestures, but now hee joyned with other holy Prophets in praising God; and whereas then hee practised mischief against David, now coming to the place where David was, full of mischief in his minde against him, hee is suddenly cicurated, and remaineth near unto him a whole day and night without attempting any thing against him: but some thinke that during the time of this ecstasie of Saul, David fled thence, taking it as a singular providence of God, to give him this opportunity, by holding Saul in this case so long, to escape his hands. For his falling downe all that day and night, the Vulgar Latin, and Martyr have it, cecinit for cecidit, hee sung naked all that day, but the word cecidit signifyeth hee fell. But how this is to bee understood all are not agreed. Iunius saith, excidit, extra se raptus est, hee was rapt by the Spirit and so fell besides himselfe, as Balaam, Numb. 24. 4. and thus continued a day and a night; Vatablus, he lay naked as one bereft of his senses for that time; Ofiander, hee fell downe certaine tainc houres that day and night, as the rest of the Prophets did in praying and praiſing of God, for none ever were able to doe it ſo long a time without intermiſſion. That of Varablm cannot ſtand, becauſe hee did, as the reſt of the Prophets, who lay not in a trance all that time ſaying nothing, but chanted out the praiſes of God. It is rather to bee held according to Iunius, that hee being raviſht by the Spirit fell downe, as the Spirit moved him, forgetting the cauſe of his comming thither, and contrariwiſe lying proſtrate, as the company of Prophets, hee continued in their manner uttering the praiſes of God, yet ſometimes reſting, as Oſiander hath it, and then at the times, that they prophcyed, prophcying againe, with them. For the Proverb ariſing hereupon, ſee before Ch. 10. 11. For the queſt. how Sauls being now before Samuel agreeeth with that, 1 Sam. 15. 34. Samuel came no more to ſee Saul, till the day of his death, ſee the reſolution there: the interlinear Gloſſe ſaith, that Samuel and David were hid from the ſight of Saul, but upon what ground I know not. And Samuel, ſay Lyra and Hugo, ſaw not Saul in his Kingly apparell, but having put this off and now as a private perſon, in which ſenſe it was ſaid before, Ch. 10. that Samuel ſaw him no more.

Myſtically by David watched in his houſe the Ord. Gloſſe underſtandeth Chriſt watched in his ſepulcher, their watching to kill David, the endeavouring of theſe men to deſtroy the memory of Chriſts reſurrexion by reporting, that his diſciples came by night and did ſteale his body away; for this was, as it were, an attempting to kill him in the hearts of men in hindring them from beleiving in his name. But as they could not kill David, ſo theſe could not obliterate the memory of Chriſt. *David*s comming to Naiob, whither Sauls meſſengers follow and prophcy there, the Jewes preaching of Chriſt after this, who before were perſecuters, as Saul, Act. 8. and divers, that were added to the Church and joynd with the Apoſtles, Act. 2. and Act. 4. Saul following alſo and prophcying naked, the Jewes denuded of the faith, Propheſie and Prieſthood, and yet having the Scriptures in their mouths.

Lyra.
Hugo Cardin.

The Myſtery.

CHAP. XX.

DAVID having eſcaped the danger at Naiob, by Gods miraculous changing of Sauls minde for the time, now leſt hee ſhould ſend or come to ſlay him there another time, becauſe hee would not tempt God by looking for ſuch a miraculous deliverance againe, hee fleeth from thence to Jonathan his deare friend to expoſtulate with him about his fathers violence ſo without all cauſe againſt him, ſaying, what have I done, what is mine iniquity, or ſinne againſt thy father that he ſeeketh to ſlay me? Jonathan answereth, that he ſhould not dye, and if his father had any ſuch intent, hee knew, that hee would reveale it to him. It may ſeeme ſtrange, that Jonathan ſhould ſay thus, ſeeing Ch. 19. 1. hee had dealt with Jonathan and all his ſervants about the killing of him. But Lyra answereth well, that Jonathan knew not of his attempts againſt David, ſince that hee had reconciled him, and brought him to Saul againe, Ch. 19. 6, 7. David replyeth, that it was moſt certaine, and bindeth it with an oath, which in matters of great moment, as this was, is not unlawfull, becauſe it tended to the preſervation of life and the glory of God; Jonathan being hereby aſſured, that *David*s life was ſought, that hee might the more ſeriouſly apply himſelfe to uſe the meanes of his preſervation. Hereby Jonathan perceiving, that David would have him doe ſomething for him, promiſeth to doe whatſoever hee ſhould deſire, that is, as Martyr hath it, whatſoever he might lawfully doe, for he preſumed, that David being a godly man would not deſire of him any thing unlawfull. Then David deſired him that the next day being the new Moone, when hee ſhould bee expected to ſit at meate with the King, hee would excuſe his abſence, ſaying, that hee asked leave of him to goe to a feaſt, which at that time was kept at Bethlehem by his Fathers family, and if he were wroth, then it might certainly be gathered, that hee intended miſchiefe againſt him, but if hee

V. 1.
V. 2.

Lyra.

V. 4.
Peter Martyr.

V. 6, 7.

he tooke it well, the contrary. It may seeme strange, that David knowing certainly that Saul sought his life, would trouble Jonathan any more, with observing his father, and certifying him. But as Martyr saith, either he thought, that he did seeke to kill him in his mad and phranticke fits onely, being of another minde at other times, and so if any meanes might be used, as in times past, to drive away the evill spirit from him, he might be safe, or keeping out of his reach at such times. Or else, that if he would live altogether retiredly and privately, and not come at the Court any more, or undertake any publique service against the enemy, whereby he had gotten himselfe so great fame, he would be pacified. For he knew not certainly as yet, that nothing would appease Saul but his avoyding of the Kingdome. If it shall seeme not so well, to agree with David's faith to be so full of feare of the bodily death, the same author answereth, that Elijah also was afraid of Ahab and Iezabel sometimes, and Jacob of Esau, but as they, so neither David feared out of distrust in God, nor were for feare driven to doe any thing against Gods law, or to neglect the doing of any thing that pertained to their duty, as the wicked and unbelievers are.

V. 5.

Numb. 28. 11.

Numb. 29. 7.

Levit. 7. 16, 17.

Whereas it is said, to morrow is the new moone, and I will goe and hide my selfe, till the third day: It is to be understood, that the Israelites kept every new moone as a festivall, with blowing of Trumpets and offering Peace-offerings, with part of which they feasted together all that were cleane, but they were not enjoined to rest from labour then, but onely in the new moone of the seventh moneth, wherefore a feast now was to be kept at the Court by Saul and his company, at which it seemeth that all men of note about him used to be present, and so David being his son in law. But David fearing the fury of Saul desired to be excused from that meeting, and that not onely the first but the second day also, for he would hide himselfe unto the third, which may seeme strange seeing the law appointeth but one day onely, but in Peace-offerings that which was not spent upon the first day might be eaten upon the second, but untill the third nothing might be reserved, but the remainder then must be burnt with fire. We may then gather from hence, that such plentiful provision was made for the sacrifice, that enough remained to feast withall upon the second day also, and so at the Kings Court the company was expected to come together to meat upon both these dayes. Comest. saith, happily it was some more solemne feast at a new moone then ordinary, lasting three dayes. But what sacrifice was it at Bethlehem, by going to which David desired to be excused? Ans. It was a yearely sacrifice offered for some great benefit at that time received by that family, so Peter Martyr. But whether it were so or no, it was no unwonted thing to avoid danger for the servants of God to pretend some honest and allowable action, to hide some other thing intended, whereby they might be endangered, as Samuel being instructed by God himselfe, ch. 10. 132. Of sacrificing in any place besides that where the Arke was, see ch. 16. Whereas David willett Jonathan to say, David asked leave of me to goe, &c. it is to be understood, that Saul was still at Naioth, and Jonathan supplied his place in his absence, as being his eldest sonne. Wherefore it is to be held, that David fled from Naioth to Jonathan even whilest Saul was there prophesying. David having ended his request Jonathan biddeth him to goe with him into the field, because he had asked him, who should tell him what answer his father made: For it seemed hard unto him, that Jonathan should finde out any meanes to let him understand it, if his father determined ill against him, because he being the Kings sonne used not to goe alone, but with attendants, and if he should send unto him by any messenger, he knew not whom to trust in this matter, as Lyra hath it. Wherefore Jonathan leadeth David out into the field to shew him the place, where he should hide himselfe, and by what meanes he would certifie him. And being now in the field, he said. O Lord God of Israel, when I have sounded my father about to morrow any time or the third day, &c. For these words (O Lord God) in the vocative case the Sept. Cbald. and Vatablus have (the Lord God of Israel) in the nominative, all the rest of the words in this 12 verse coming in by a parenthesis, and then those v. 13. the Lord doe so and much more to Jonathan, doe make

V. 11.

Lyra.

V. 12.

make the speech perfect, he imprecateth himselfe, if he declared not unto David the minde of his father towards him, when he had once found it out. And this Willet preferreth, as the best reading, and I see no cause, why the first words should be rendered in the vocative, and being read so, the sense falleth not so well, but in the nominative very well, the Lord God of Israel, when I have sounded my fathers minde, &c. and I send not to thee, &c. the Lord, I say, doe so, &c.

Jonathan having thus secured David by oath, as touching his faithfull dealing with him, before he propoundeth the meanes whereby he would let David understand Sauls minde, he interposeth a Covenant, to which he required David to agree, saying, and thou shalt not onely whilest I live, yet shew me the kindnesse of the Lord that I dye not, but also thou shalt not cut off thy kindnesse from my house for ever. The Vulg. Lat. and Sept. render these words thus. And if I live, thou shalt shew me the mercy of the Lord, but if I dye, thou shalt not take thy mercy away from my house for ever; or if I shall not doe it, when the Lord hath rooted out the enemies of David every one from the earth, let him take Jonathan away out of his house, and the Lord require it at the hand of Davids enemies. Hebr. it is, And thou shalt not whilest I yet live, thou shalt not shew the mercy of the Lord unto me, that I dye not: and thou shalt not cut off thy mercy from my house for ever, no not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David every one from off the face of the earth, whereby it appeareth, that much is added in the Vulg. Lat. for explication. But the sense will better be made up thus, going word for word according to the Hebrew and some more words supplied. I doe not onely pray God to doe so and so unto me if I be not faithfull, but I desire not that thou shouldst shew me any mercy, or spare me from death, but slay me as the sonne of thine enemy. But I being faithfull to thee, thou shalt not cut off thy mercy from my house, when all thine enemies being destroyed thou shalt be advanced to the regall dignity: for to this Jonathan did verily beleve, that David should come.

So Jonathan made a Covenant with the house of David, saying, Let the Lord require it at the hand of Davids enemies, that is, faith Junius, of them that should breake this Covenant made with David. The Sept. render it, as a part of Jonathans oath, and let Jonathan be cut off by the house of David, Vatablus, and let David cut off Jonathan with his house. The Vulg. Lat. hath it both wayes. Let him take away or cut off Jonathan from his house, and the Lord require it at the hands of Davids enemies: Jonathan therefore made a Covenant with Davids house, and the Lord required it at the hands of Davids enemies. But the first of these, saith Lyras, is not in the Hebr. Text, whereby it appeareth that he judged it superfluous, and the second to be the true reading, saying, that the revenge, which God is said here to have taken of Davids enemies, was that of cutting off Saul and others that conspired against David, according to all Christian expositours. But the Hebrewes, he saith, turne it another way, God required it at the hands of Davids enemies, that is, of David, because he brake this Covenant when he divided the land of Saul betweene Mephiboseth and Ziba, for then saith R. Solomon, a voice came from God, saying, Reboam and Jeroboam shall divide thy kingdome. But to passe this over as an imagination; The reason of the difference amongst expositours about the first words is, because the word יכרת here used signifieth either shall cut off, or make a Covenant, in which last sense it is used ch. 22. 8. because it signifieth to strike, and the word Berith being added it is spoken in this sense Gen: 15. 18. serire fedus.

But I assent rather to Vatablus, taking this to be the sense, and if Jonathan be not faithfull, David shall cut him off as an enemy also, with his house, and yet God shall not lay bloud to his charge, but shall herein be accounted to judge Davids enemies, as they are worthy, for their unfaithfulness towards him. And if it be thus understood, both the proper signification of every word shall be retained, and the clause against Davids enemies will follow most aptly. But if it be expounded by making of a Covenant, both the future tense is taken as a preterperfect, and of the latter clause there will be no coherence.

And Jonathan caused David to sweare againe because he loved him, &c. The Vulg.

Lat:

Willet.

V. 14.

V. 15.

V. 16.

Junius.

Lyras.

V. 17.

Ar. Montan.
Peter Martyr.
Junius.

Lat. Aris Mont; Peter Martyr &c. Jonathan sware againe to David, Hebr. it is, Jonathan added to make David to sweare, for the Verbe is in Hiphil, wherefore Junius rendreth it, Jonathan adjured David, and thus the word is used ch. 14. 27. when Saul is said to have adjured the people. And when swearing to one is meant, the proposition h is used, as Gen: 47. 31. but here nn, wherefore I assent to Junius and our translatours, to make a firme League betweene his house and Davids, he having bound himselfe by oath, now causeth David to do likewise, see this farther approved, v: 42. and 2 Sam: 23. 7. If the reason added shall seeme to make against this exposition, for he loved David, it may well be taken as a reason of his making David to sweare also unto him, that the league betwene them might be made most firme forever.

V. 18.

Then Jonathan said, To morrow is the new Moone, when thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty, &c. It may seeme strange, that Saul should expect David so soone after that he sought his life, to come so neare unto him againe. Some thinke that the History is transposed, and that this was before David fleeing to Natioth, but for this there is no colour of reason, some that David was before this againe reconciled to Saul, as Peter Martyr, but for this there wanted time. Others that Saul might forget what he had attempted against David, especially considering the case that he was in, as Claudius the Emperour is said to have beene so forgetfull, that he asked for those at table, whom he had before put to death. But I rather thinke, that he supposed the matter to have beene so covertly carryed, as that David knew not of his evill intent against him, and for his striking at him with a speare, he might impute that to his phranticke fit then upon him, he doing therein he knew not what. Then Jonathan bade him hide himselfe by the stone Ezel, that is, saith Lyra, according to the Hebrewes, by the stone of walking, because that stone served to direct travailers, that walked that way.

P. Martyr.

V. 19.

Lyra.

V. 20.

And I will shoot three arrowes, as though I shot at a marke, and I will say to my Lad, Goe and finde out the arrowes, &c. By shooting and speaking to his boy he would signifie his minde unto David in case that there should be any company in that way, so as that he could not secretly come and speake unto him, for of this he was uncertaine. But it fell out otherwise, for he had the opportunity, after the shooting of his arrowes, to goe and speake privately with him also. Or his device was to goe out with bow and arrowes onely with one lad, to avoid the company of other attendants at that time, so that he being sent away with his bow and arrowes, he might be alone with David.

V. 25.

Junius.

Varatius.

Lyra.

Hugo Card.

The matter being thus ordered, Jonathan commeth the next day to meet with Saul, and when the King sate upon a seat by the wall, Jonathan arose and Abner sate by Sauls side, &c. Touching Jonathans rising divers conjecture diversly. Junius, that Saul was not there, when they began to sit downe, so that Jonathan tooke his place, but his father comming, he rose up to give him the place, but Saul was set first, and therefore this cannot stand. Varatius and Osander, that Jonathan being set before Abner came, arose to give him the place next the King. Lyra, that David used to sit next the King, but now his place being empty, so that Jonathan, who used to sit next unto him sate next the King, he arose, that Abner might come next unto the King, because it was not the custome for the Kings sonne to sit next unto his father. And Hugo saith likewise, or that Saul being set, Jonathan rose up to come to the Table. Pellican, that Jonathan using to sit next his father, now pretending some other reason, arose from that place, and gave it to Abner, because he feared some hurt from his father, if a phrenticke fit should come upon him. It seemeth to me, that nothing is meant here by Jonathans rising up, but that when Saul came to take his place, he being at his before, rose up for reverence to his father, and then sate downe againe to his meate, as others did. For Abner's sitting by the Kings side, Iosephus saith, that he sate on his left hand and Jonathan on his right. To this exception is taken by Willet, because this had beene too great honour for the sonne, but without just reason, seeing amongst Princes the middle place is the most honourable, and it was not unusuall amongst the Jewes for an inferiour to be set on the right.

Iosephus.

right hand, and another on the left, the King sitting upon a chaire of state in the middle, as may be gathered from the request of Zabedees sonnes unto Christ; Grant that we may sit one on thy right hand and the other on thy left in thy kingdome; which if there had beene no such custome, had beene a request too arrogant. v: 26. Saul spake nothing the first day, touching David's absence, because he thought happily, that he might be uncleane, for he thought, something hath befallen him, he is not cleane, surely he is not cleane, the Vulg: Lat: he thought he was not cleane, nor purified; Junius, he is not cleane, and because he is not cleane he cometh not, supplying the last words, he cometh not, to make the sense perfect, and this is the best, being word for word according to the Hebrews. Hereby cleane is meant legally cleane, which he thought David might not be, because either he had touched some dead body, something had come from him in the night, or he had lyen with his wife. For none but the cleane might eate of the sacrifices. And herein the hypocrisie of Saul appeared in that he could thinke upon legall cleanness thus to be prepared, but for being cleane from foule sinne, set forth hereby, and therefore chiefly to be lookt unto, he had no care of that in himselfe, because he was at this time full of deadly malice and hatred against David.

The next day David's place being empty againe, Saul asketh Jonathan for him. Whereas by the law one day onely was appointed to be kept for the new moone, something hath beene already said, why Saul kept two dayes, upon v: 5. Willet addeth two reasons more: First, that such as were not cleane the first day, might keep the second, as they that were uncleane at the time of the Pascheover the first month, were appointed to keepe it the second month, Numb: 9. Secondly, because it did not agree with the magnificence of the King, to keepe the feast no longer then the common People, whereas then they kept it one day, he would keepe it two. And upon the second day he thought David might be cleane, although not upon the first, because the uncleane by washing at even were made cleane.

Jonathan answereth for David, that he asked leave of him to goe to Bethlehem to a feast, as he had directed him v: 6. but he addeth of his owne, that his brother sent for him, and he was gone, wherein he shewed his infirmity by lying for his sake; Josephus also addeth, that Jonathan said, he was also invited.

Then Saul said, Thou sonne of a perverse and rebellious woman, doe not I know, that thou hast chosen the sonne of Jesse to thy confusion, and to the confusion of thy mothers nakednesse? The Vulg: Lat: respecting rather the sense then the words, hath it, fili mulieris virum ultro rapientis, that is, of an impudent whore, who sought another man to lye with her, and Saul saith Lyra, spake thus, to intimate that Jonathan proved himselfe a bastard, and none of his sonne, because he was so contrary to him, in loving David and taking his part, whom he so greatly hated. Some thinke, that he taxed his mother onely, for her crossenesse unto him, and him for being like unto her. But because he speaketh of the confusion of her nakednesse, I rather assent unto the first. Junius rendreth the words thus, thou most contumacious sonne of a most perverse woman, disjoining the two ignominious words, and referring the one to Jonathan, and the other to his mother, as the Soph pasuch comming betweene sheweth, that they are to be distinguished.

Then Jonathan replyeth, but what evill hath he done? Saul then waxed more mad and cast a javelin at him to strike him, that is, at his owne sonne Jonathan for pleading David's cause. Wherefore he avoided the roome, and next morning betimes dealt with David as he had promised him.

Then David rose out of his place and bowed himselfe three times to the ground, and they kissed each other and wept, till David exceeded; Junius, till he had lifted up David, both against the current of all other expositours, and the proper meaning and placing of the words, which are עַד דָּוִד הִגְדִּיל till David made more teares to come out. And there was most reason, as Peter Martyr hath it, that he should exceed, because he was now not onely to part from his deare friend, but also from his wife, and the people and Tabernacle of the Lord.

V. 26.

Junius.

Note.

V. 27.

Willet.

V. 28, 29.

Josephus.
V. 30.Lyra.
Peter Martyr.Borlams.
Genevens.

Junius.

V. 32.

V. 35, 36,
37, 38. &c.
V. 41.

Junius.

P. Martyr.

The Mystery.
Giossa Ordin.

Myſtically by the arrowes ſhot by Ionath. when David was hid thereby, we may underſtand the holy Scriptures, ſhewing ſomething concerning Chriſt, when he was in the world, as it were hidden, for he came into the world and the world knew him not, for as the lad gathered up the arrowes, and bare them away, but knew nothing, ſo the Jews, who had the holy ſcriptures knew not Jeſus, of whom they ſpoke, and therefore, as Saul at his feaſt gave the ſentence of death againſt David, ſo Pilat when the preparation was to the feaſt of the paſſeover againſt Chriſt.

CHAP. XXI.

V. 1.

1 Sam. 14. 8.

Beza in Marc.

H. B. Patriarks
travailes.

D. Kimbi.

2 Sam. 6. 1, 2.

Lyra.

P. Martyr.

Iosephus.

V. 2.

Lyra.
Hugo Card.

Peter Martyr.

V. 4.

Hugo Cardin.

David having taken his leave of Jonathan fled to Nob to Abimelech, the High-Priest, his was the ſame, ſaith Lyra, which is before called Abiath, ſe 1 Sam. 14. 3. whereas Mark. 2. 26. David is ſaid to have come hither in the dayes of Abiathar the High-Priest, but Abiathar was not yet High-Priest, but the ſonne of Abimelech, the High-Priest, Ch. 22. 20. It is answered, that the father was called both Abimelech and Abiathar, and ſo was the ſonne by both theſe names: for Abimelech the ſonne of Abiathar is ſaid to bee High-Priest, when David was King, 2 Sam. 8. 17. and Ch. 25. 35. Abiathar is ſaid to bee Priest, and hither David came and not to Samuel againe, to avoid danger both to himſelfe and Samuel, for hee might more eaſily have bene purſued, and it would have bene taken more hainouſly at Samuels hands by Saul, ſeeing hee had bene once with him before. Touching Nob, where the High-Priest now was, it was a City of Priests about 12, miles from Gibeah, from whence David fled, and 16. from Ieruſalem, and it ſtood in the Tribe of Benjamin not farre from Anathoth, wherefore they are named together, Nebem. 11. 32. Kimbi therefore was wide, who ſaith, that he learned of his father, that Nob was the ſame with Ieruſalem. Here it ſeemeth, was the Tabernacle at this time, and the Altar and Table of ſhewbread, for theſe were not diſjoynd at any time, but the Ark remained at Kireath-jearim, ever ſince the bringing of it backe from the Philiftines countrey, til the time of *David*s reigne. Whereas David is ſaid to be alone, when he came to Abimelech, but v. 4 other young men with him are ſpoken of, and Mar. 2. 26. Lyra ſaith, it is to be underſtood, that he was not ſo alone, but that he had two or three ſervants with him, but becauſe he uſed to goe forth attended with many men, hee is ſaid, when hee had no more with him, to be alone. Peter Martyr ſaith, that hee was alone without one ſervant, for hee had appointed to them ſuch and ſuch places, but he asked bread for himſelfe and them, when he ſhould come unto them who were not farre off: ſo likewiſe Iosephus, nec ſamilio ſcipius, nec ſeruis comitatus. But by that Mark. 2. 26. it is plaine that ſome were with him. Anſw. They were with him in the journey, as hee pretended, awaiting his comming againe to the place where he had ſet them not farre off, or now ready to come thither unto him hungry, and in want. To this effect alſo Abulenſ. ſaith, that he came alone to Abimelech, his ſervants being left elſewhere and appointed a place wherein to meeete him again. David to excuſe himſelf for being thus alone, ſained, that the King had ſent him about a very ſecret buſines. Herein David cannot be excuſed, ſaith Lyra, from telling an officious lye, ſo likewiſe Hugo, but yet he excuſeth him, becauſe in thus ſaying he intended no hurt to any man, but onely to get bread for his owne neceſſity. P. Martyr ſaith, that neither he nor Abimelech did any thing unlawful, and that the fault was only *Saul*s, and ſome, ſaith Willel, that hee lyed not, becauſe the King of Kings had appointed him to a ſecret buſineſſe, viz. to bee King. But wee need not thus to ſeek to juſtify the beſt in all their actions, for there are none but have failed in ſuch caſes, and it cannot but be acknowledged a great fault in David thus to bring Gods Priests into danger, as he confeſſeth he feared, Ch. 22. 22.

Abimelech ſaid, that hee had no common bread, but hallowed, if the young men had kept themſelves from women. David asked 5. loaves, happily, ſaith Hugo, according to the number of men, that hee had with him. And ſeeing hee asked onely bread, hee ſheweth, that Prelates, when they came to Priests houſes, ſhould not looke for dainty fare, but be content with any thing for their neceſſity. The hallowed bread, which as our Lord ſaith, the Priests onely might ate, was the shew-bread, of which see Levit. 24. 7, 8, 9. there was also other holy bread, which was offered in peace-offerings, which was the Priests, Levit. 7. 9, 10. 14. Of which both they and their families might eat, or any person being cleane. And touching the shewbread, any of the people might eat of it in case of necessity, that is, being hungry and having no common bread to feed upon, and therefore this fact of Abimelech is justified by our Lord. For to feed the hungry is a morall duty, it being a point of love, to which ceremonies must give place, as is shewed by that saying, I will have mercy and not sacrifice. And of this kinde was healing the sicke upon the Sabbath day, the ceremony of resting gave place to this worke of charity. But whereas some make eating swines flesh under the Law to bee a like lawfull for a Jew in case of necessity, if he hath nothing else to eat, I cannot subscribe to this, because to do thus were to commit an abomination with the heathen Canaanites, & the 7. brethren in the Booke of Maccabees, are commended for that they would rather dye, then eat swines flesh. Yet Peter Martyr saith, that they were required to eat in testimony of their forsaking of Gods Lawes, and not as being put to it through necessity, in which case it is not unlawfull. For the condition put by the Priest, if the young men have kept themselves from women, that is, from their wives. For of the bread or meat consecrated unto God none might eat, but the cleane, and who so lay with his owne wife by the Law of Moses was uncleane all the day after, untill Even, wherefore when the people were prepared to receive the Law, they were forbidden to come at their wives. Peter Martyr contendeth, that that Law should bee understood of such, as had a fluxe, or issue, but it is plainly meant of any companying of man and woman together for generation, compare Levit. 18. 20. Yet this proveth not, that now there is any uncleanness in the Matrimoniall Act, for the bed of the married is said to bee undefiled, but there was onely a Legall uncleanness, as by an issue or fluxe, or touching any dead th ng, &c. which, as all other ceremonies, ceased long agoe. Wherefore the Popish are in an error, who teach that the Matrimoniall Act doth so defile, that it is unlawfull the day following to partake of the holy Communion, or to pray, and that by reason of this defilement it is unlawfull for Priests under the New Testament to marry, because they daily celebrate the Communion. For touching the first, although the Apostle saith, Desfrand not one another, except it be by consent for a season, that you may give your selves to fasting and prayer, yet it followeth not hereupon, that in the companying together of man and wife there is uncleanness, hindering, and making unfit for those duties, but because of the pleasure that is herein, which agreeth not with the sorrow, that should be at such extraordinary times, the Apostle spake so. For if prayer could not stand with matrimoniall duties, then matrimony were altogether unlawfull, seeing wee must pray continually. And for eating the holy bread of the Communion, the Aaronicall Priests themselves were not made unfit by companying with their wives, for they were married men, and attended daily upon the Altar, before that their number being much increased they were in Dauids time distinguished into courses, and ate of the holy bread and offerings. And if not immediately after such matrimoniall acts, but they refrained because of the law in force then, yet now there is no such uncleanness herein to hinder the people from receiving, or the Priest from administering. Yet for better preparation, and that the minde may not bee drawn away from divine meditations, all are to be advised, rather to refraine against the times of communicating, then to take their liberty herein. Yet Gergory saith, no necessity is to bee imposed upon any man herein, but hee is to bee left to his owne discretion, and not for this to bee kept from the Communion by us, that knoweth not to burn, when he is put in the fire. St. Augustine speaketh of some, that received the Communion every day, which hee doth neither praise nor dispraise, but to receive every Lords Day he perswadeth

Willer.

Levit. 7. 19.
Levit. 15. 19.
Exod. 19. 15.

Heb. 12. 4.

Caus. 33. qu. 4.
c. Sciatis (fratres) quod quicumque uxorem d. b. n. reddidit non potest accipere uxorem nec de carnibus agni comedere.

1 Cor. 7. 5.

Thes. 5. 17.

Gregor. Si quis sua conjugem non voluptate cupidinis, sed procreationis causa amittit, de sumendo corporis et sanguinis Domini mysterio suo relinquendus est arbitrio, quia a nobis prohiberi non debet, qui in igne positi nesciunt ardere.

swadeth. De Dogmat. eccles. c. 53. but from hence we may gather, that in the matrimonial duty it was then held, that there was no uncleanness, for if so, what Christian could have married? and if there were no uncleanness to hinder receiving, there is none to hinder the administering of the holy Communion. To come now to the condition required by the Priest, If the young men have kept themselves from women: Herein Ierom saith, Abimelech spake foolishly, for although they had not kept themselves from women, he must not rather have suffered them to starve, then to have given them holy bread. But happily he thought them not to be in so great necessity, and therefore he spake accordingly, that hee might not give them of this bread, except they were cleane, unlesse in the case of extreame want to save their lives, in which case a ceremony must give place to charity. Moreover Iunius saith, he consulted with God about giving him victuals, and by him was directed to question this, see Ch. 23. 10. Wherefore the Popish in forbidding a Caribisian to eate flesh in what necessity soever, and a sonne to come out of his monastery to labour for the reliefe of his aged Parents, although ready to perish through want, doe grossely erre, as the Pharisees overthrowing Gods Commandement by their traditions.

And the vessels of the young men are holy, and the bread is in a manner common; yea though it were sanctified this day in the vessell, the Vulgar Latin, moreover it is way is polluted, but it shall bee sanctified to day in the vessell, Iunius, it is in a manner common with the Priests, especially seeing other bread is sanctified this day in the vessell. The Vulgar Latin agreeth best with the Hebrew, וְהוּא דָּרַךְ חוּל which is word for word, and the way it selfe is common or uncleane, &c. but because דָּרַךְ signifieth also modum, manner, it is so rendred by some: the next words, penes sacerdotes, with or in the power of the Priests, is added by Iunius, for further expression; and in the next, other bread, is added, and of the whole sentence hee giveth this exposition, the vessels of the young men, that is, their bagges or sakes, as the word is taken, Ch. 9. 7. and in the end of this verse, the word vessel is put for that, wherein the bread was put: David meaneth then, that the vessels wherein they would carry the bread, were fit to put holy bread into, because they were not uncleane: so likewise Hugo having expounded it another way, of their bodies, mentioneth this of vessels or baskets to carry victuals in, saying, either it may so be understood. And Willet reasoneth against that of bodies understood by vessels, because enough had been spoken of the cleanness of their bodies before, in that they had not come at women in three dayes before, wherefore it is not likely, that David being in haste would stand to iterate the same againe in other words more obscure. And of the next words Iunius giveth this sense; the time being now come to put other shewbread before the Lord, this is not now so holy, because the Priests did eate commonly of it, but hee saith, these words are added by the author from Levit. 24. 9. And for expounding דָּרַךְ in a manner, Willet argueth both from other places, where it is used in this sense, as Esa. 10. 26. and to prove, that it cannot be taken here for a way, he saith, that it is of the feminine gender and the word חוּל of the masculine. But Comestor, Lyra, Peter Martyr, Borrbau, Pellican, by vessels understand bodies, as the word is taken, 1 Thes. 4. 4. 2 Cor. 4. 7. and women are called the weaker vessels, 1. Pet. 3. 7. and so the meaning is, wee are not onely free from uncleanness in respect of women, but in respect of any thing else, that might make us uncleane: and being thus expounded here is no repetition of the same thing, as was before objected, but a securing of the Priest touching any manner of uncleanness, about which hee might make scruple. As for vessels to put the bread in, I cannot see, how they should bee meant here, because it is not likely, that *David*s comming away being in haste, he would goe or send home for bagges or baskets to put victuals in, but rather, that he was furnished with such things where he had this bread. I assent, therefore to the most for this first clause. For the next, Lyra expoundeth it thus, in coming by the way, indeed happily wee may by some occurrence have contracted uncleanness, but forso much as the vessels of our bodies are cleane from women, wee shall

Iunius.

Hugo Cardin.

Willet.

Schol Hist. Lyra. Pellican. &c.

shall have a sanctified use of this bread: or thus, this way or proceeding, to give to lay-persons holy bread is uncleane, or unlawfull indeed, but our necessity, we being now ready to starve, if we have it not, maketh it lawfull. Comestor, thy question is prophane, for although we were cleane, we might not being no Priests eate of this bread, but necessity hath no law, and therefore we eating it in our necessity, it shall not be polluted, or any thing unlawfull be done, but this eating, and feeding the vessels of our bodies with it, shall before God be counted an holy and lawfull using of it. Hugo followeth Comestor, but onely that he hath these words more. David by saying it is sanctified in the vessels, meant that he was sanctified in his minde, for that with an holy minde and not willing to offend the law of God, he would use this bread being urged by necessity, otherwise he would not presume to eate of it. Peter Martyr, I am in the manner of a prophane man, for whom it is not lawfull to eate it, but taking it for my necessity, and using it holily, it shall not be polluted. Osiander, by prophane way understandeth their businesse, which was not religious, but worldly and common. Genevens: it shall be sanctified in the vessels, that is, having taken this bread, we will be more carefull to keepe our bodies holy. Vatablus, we will keepe it holily in the vessels, wherein we carry it. To me the meaning seemeth to be plainly this, the vessels or bodies of the young men are cleane, and so holy, and thus fit to receive this bread, because the Priest had spoken of his holy bread, although the way, which they have come, be common or uncleane, because many in travell doe sinne, being carryed by fleshly lusts, nevertheless it shall be sanctified, that is, holily used, being received into their vessels or bodies, because they are none of that sort of young men, but chaste and fearing God, so קודש answereth to קודש holy bread mentioned by the Priest before, and חול common or prophane to חיל common bread likewise before mentioned by him.

So the Priest gave him hallowed bread, for there was no bread there, but the shewbread, which was taken from before the Lord, to put hot bread in the day that it was taken away. Of this shewbread there were 12 cakes, two tenth deales to a cake, and they were changed every Sabbath day, the old being taken off, and new being set on the Table of shewbread, as is shewed, Lev: 24. 8. Hence it is gathered, that it was the Sabbath day, when David came to Abimelech, but this doth not necessarily follow, forasmuch as it is not said, it was that day taken from before the Lord, but in the day that it was taken, hot bread was set there, so that it might be taken before the time of David's coming, but not yet spent. And although the bread set on upon the Sabbath was hot, yet as Martyr saith, it was not baked that day, but the day before, and left in the Oven all night. Of the mystery of this bread, see Lev: 24. and Exod: 25. 30. Martyr will have not onely the spirituall food of the word and sacraments set forth hereby, and the number of 12. to set forth the 12 Apostles, but also how that we have all our corporall food from God, by the meanes of the heavenly planets, whose influences make the earth fruitfull.

Now there was a certaine man of the servants of Saul, there detained that day before the Lord, and his name was Doeg an Edomite. This of Doeg is here inserted, because of the history following ch: 22. of his accusing Abimelech unto Saul. This Doeg, saith Lyra, was not in the Tabernacle, but in the Court, for into the Tabernacle none but the Priests might enter, and he was detained by reason of some offerings and prayers that he came to make upon a vow, which could not be finished, but in more dayes then one, and he saith, he is held by the Hebrewes to have bene a judge, and the chiefe of Saul's judges, for judges are shepherds of the people, and he saith, it is not likely, that he was a keeper of Cattell, because he is said ch: 22. 9. to be the chiefe of Saul's servants. Hugo saith according to Josephus, that he kept the Mules of Saul, and likewise the inter-linear glosse, and that he was detained here by some vow, which he had made to continue at the Tabernacle in prayer certaine dayes; and that he was not a judge but a shepherd, or heard-man, (for רועה signifieth either) doe I thinke, for he was a servant of Saul, as judges be not called. Doeg is said to be an Edomite, as Osiander.

Genevens.
Vatablus.

V. 6.

Peter Martyr.

V. 7.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Iunius.

The Mystery.

V. 8, 9.

Lyra.

Iunius.

Vatabl. P. Martyr, Ofhand.

P. Martyr.

V. 10.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Sulitiam fmulare loco prudencia summa est.

some thinke, because descended of an Edomite, but by religion an Israelite; but Hebr: it is Adomite, and Iunius thinketh, that he might be so called from the City Adamah in the Tribe of Nephthali, Iosb: 19. 36. or the prickles being changed, Adomite might be put for Edomite. In him was figured Judas, that betrayed our Saviour, and all such, as pretend piety, but are full of malice and wickednesse in their hearts, such are damnable hypocrites.

Then David desired of Abimelech a speare or sword, and he told him that he had none there but the sword of Goliath, which lay wrapt in a cloth behinde the Ephod: How the head and armour of Goliath was disposed of, see cb: 17. 54. where it was shewed, that this sword was placed in the Tabernacle for a monument of that victory, and not dedicated to God, as Lyra saith some doe hold, for if so, then it had bene unlawfull for David to take it, and to put it to any common use againe. Yet Peter Martyr saith, that it was dedicated, and therefore not to be taken, but in the case of necessity, wherein David now was. Whereas it is said to have lyen behinde the Ephod; Iunius rendreth the words thus, after that he had applyed the Ephod, he said, behold the sword of Goliath &c. lyeth wrapped up in a linnen cloth, approving this reading both from Jonathan the Chald: paraphrast and Jeshaiah an Hebr: interpreter, and from that which followeth, cb: 22. 10, 11. where Doeg saith, that the Priest asked counsell of God for him, of which no mention is made here, unlesse it be meant by these words after the Ephod, as it is in Hebrew, that is, after the Ephod applyed for consultation. And it is not likely, saith Willet, that the rich Ephod, which was for the High-priest, did lye open for any man to come to it, so as that if Goliath's sword lay behinde that, David could not have come to take it, as the Priest bade him, because none but the Priests come into the Tabernacle, but onely to the doore thereof, and he referreth for the like use of the word וְהָיָה to Deut: 24. 21. But although he bade David take it, it followeth not, that he meant he should goe to the place, where it lay, to take it, for David by and by saith, Give it me, and cb: 21. 10. he gave it unto him. In bidding him take it then, he onely made him the offer of it, so that this is no argument against the laying of it behinde the Ephod. Wherefore I subscribe rather to the first and most received translation, and for omitting his consulting with God for David in this place, it is not a thing unusuall in other places, for every thing done is not alwayes related at the first, but afterwards. When David heard of the sword of Goliath, he said, there was none to it, because as Martyr hath it, he counted it, as it were a sacrament, whereby Gods benefits past were brought to his minde, and his hope was further confirmed. Pellican thinketh, that David sinned in taking this sword, because dedicated to God, and that he did unwisely, being to goe amongst the Philistims, who could not but know it.

Then David fled to Achish, the King of Gath, but when he heard it spoken amongst his servants, that he was David King of the Land, he was afraid, and fained himselfe mad, &c. They called him King, saith Lyra, because they had heard that he was anointed by Samuel, but that being so secretly done, saith Martyr, could not be knowne amongst the Philistims, and therefore they called him so from the superlative praise given unto him, when he returned in triumph from the slaughter of Goliath. Now David hearing this beginneth to see that he had done unwisely in fleeing into the Philistims country, and to escape this danger, because the report of his wisdom and valour brought him into danger, he fained himselfe mad, and let the spittle fall upon his beard, and scribbled upon the dores of the Gate: thus some have acted the greatest part of wisdom, as Brutus, who likewise fained himselfe mad, when he set himselfe most seriously to meditate upon the good of the common wealth, and Ulysses, when he would not goe forth to Warre with the Grecians, like a mad man sowing his ground, that was tilled, with salt. For these words, he scribbled, Martyr hath he described upon the doores; that is, saith he, some ridiculous and foolish things, and so the word וְהָיָה signifieth, he scribbled or made markes, for thus lunatickes and mad men used to doe. And this is said to have come from a great feare, that was in David, and yet it is by many justified in him. For in dissimulation lation it is to be considered; 1. with what minde it is done; 2. about what subject or matter; 3. for what end. For if it be not from a distrustfull minde, but used as a meane to save a mans selfe, a confidence being still in God to make this meanes effectually, it is no sinne; 2. if the matter about which, be not religious, but civill; 3. if the end be not uncharitable, but to doe good to himselfe or others without hurt to any. And these three were in David at this time, for 1. although he feared, yet he cast not away his confidence in God, see Pf. 34. 6. 2. it was in a civill matter; 3. his end was to save himselfe without hurt to any. But contrariwise he that dissimbleth, not having any confidence in God, in the time of danger, or in matter of religion for gaine or honour, as Simon Magus and other hypocrites, or lastly with a malicious minde, the more closely to doe hurt unto his brother, as Cain to Abel, he sinneth greatly against God, and therefore such dissimulation is by all men to be abhorred. Thus Willer, who also maketh a difference between dissimulation in the carriage and gesture and lying, which is alwayes with a minde to deceive: for a man may tell an untruth and yet not lie, if he himselfe thought it to be true, and in spaking the truth be a lyer, if he thought it false, as Augustine saith. Hee that telleth a thing false thinking it true, doth not deceive, but is deceived, and therefore is not to be reprov'd for lying, but for rashnesse. And againe, he that unwittingly speaketh the truth with his mouth, but wittingly lyeth in his will, is not free from lying. Now although some dissimulation be lawfull, yet no lying is lawfull, no not so much as the jealting or officious lye. For although there be no great fault herein, as August. noteth, yet they are not without fault. The first of these is not pernicious, because it deceiveth not, and the second lesse, because it retaineth some good will, but if any man thinketh, that there is any kinde of lye that is nor a sinne, he deceiveth himselfe. Reasons against the most tolerable kinde of lying, is 1. because the truth is hereby corrupted, 2. to lye is simply evill, as being contrary to God, and evill may not be done, that good may come of it, &c. so Peter Martyr: yet it is not lying to conceale part of the truth, as Sammuel did, 1 Sam. 16. when he came to Bethlehem, nor alwayes when a man doth not, what he saith he will doe, as if a man taking a sword of a man promising to give it him againe, if he proveth mad, although he now giveth him it not, doth not lye, as August. saith, and other like cases may be put of parents, saying they will beate their children to terrifie them for their amendment, as God said he would doe by Nineveh, but yet they doe it not.

Some to excuse *David*s fast here, say that he was taken with a fit of madnesse, and some that he did it by a divine instinct; but what neede such devices? Hee did thus to save himselfe, and as some thinke, not without a mytery, the account that Christ was had in being figured out hereby, for he was counted mad, and to Paul it was said, Much learning hath made thee mad. Lyra saith, that Christ, according to this type, changed his countenance and gesture, when he taught the contempt of worldly things, which in the Law were promised as blessings, for which they counted him mad. Now this policy of David tooke so, as that Achish put him away, as a mad man, and he escaped.

CHAP. XXII.

THEN David fled from Gath to the Cave of Odullam, which as Lyra and others say, was in the Tribe of Judah, of which Tribe David was, and therefore for his greater safety he fled thither amongst his friends. It was a place full of Caves and Rockes, and therefore fit for fugitives to flee unto. It had the name from a little Towne called Odulla, of which, see Gen. 38. 2. where Judah is said to have marryed the daughter of an Odullamite; it was from Jerusalem 8 miles southwest, and from Gath 24, being derived from Ed, a testimony, and Dalim the poore. Here it is held by some, that David compiled Pf. 57. and Pf. 142. but it seemeth rather by the contents of those Psalmes, that he made them in the Cave in the Wildernesse of Engedi, the one, viz. Pf. 142. when Willer.

August. Eschir
22. Qui dicit
se scire quod pu-tat verum, non fallit, sed falli-tur: non itaque mendacii sed temeritatis ar-
guendus est.
Nec ullo modo liber est a men-dacio, qui ore nesciens verum loquitur, sciens autem voluntate mentitur.

Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

Lyra.

V. 14, 15.

V. 1.

Lyra.
Joel. 15. 35.

H.B. Patriarch
travailes.

I Sam. 24.
when

Junius.

Lyra.

Eccles Historia.

Hugo Card.

Junius.

Lyra.

Josephus.

V. 2.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

when he lay hid there, as the title also sheweth, for he prayed for deliverance from his enemies, as being in great danger, and the other, viz. ps. 57. after that Saul had come into his danger there, because he speaketh of a pit made by his enemies, into which they themselves fell, and the title of the psalme is, when he fled from Saul into the cave, so Junius, or he compiled Psalm 14. 12. in this cave and Ps. 57. in the other. Now whereas Odullam may seeme not to be in Judah, because v. 5. the Prophet Gad biddeth David to goe from the hold into the land of Judah. Junius also resolveth this, by expounding the hold, wherein David was, when Gad came to him, of an hold in Mizpah in Moab, but Lyra saith, that his father and mother carryed with the King of Moab all the time that he was in predicto fortaliis, and yet upon the next words v. 5. he saith, that Gad bade him goe from them lest his company should be corrupted with Idolatry, if they made an y long stay in Moab. Comestor by these words, all the time that David was in the hold, understandeth al the time that he was in his expedition, seeking strong holds to lurke in. Hugo saith that David, when hee was in a polluted land, was bidden to goe into the land of Judah, that hee might suffer persecution, so that hee also is for some hold in Moab. I subscribe to Comestor, that by hold not any particular hold is meant, but in generall, that hee should no longer hide himselfe in strong places and caves, but goe, where he might bee in action and doe some good to his countrey, as the following history doth declare, that hee did. And why David should keepe in a cave in Moab, I can see no reason, forsomuch as in that Countrey hee was out of Sauls reach, and so had no neede to hide himselfe. Wherefore it is not said, that God came to him to a cave, but onely, that he came and bade him not abide in a cave or hold, that is, when hee was in Moab, but had a purpose to goe againe and lurke in some part of the land of Israel in a cave, whilst his friends, that were not able to follow, stayed in Moab, by cave not meaning the cave of Odullam, or one in Moab, but caves in generall, by inallage numeri, abide not in a cave, that is, not in caves, & yet it is not to be understood, that he was by the Prophet forbidden to keep at any time in a cave, for then hee had afterwards sinned against this charge, but that hee should not so hide himselfe for fear of Saul, as to refrain from going out to exercise his military prowesse upon the enemies of Gods people, as his calling to be their King and Captaine required. Some tax David of weaknesse in that he sought to be hid in caves and rockes, saying, that Gad was therefore sent to reprove him: but I hold rather with them, that say, that Gad was sent to comfort him, for of reproof we read nothing here, neither did he any thing worthy of reproof to hide himselfe, when he was in danger.

To the cave of Odullam repaired to him his brethren and all his fathers house, because, as Lyra and others have it, most probably they were persecuted, and hardly used by Saul for Davids sake. Josephus saith, that David sent to his brethren to let them understand, where he was, or else they could not have known, whither to resort unto him. And together with his kindred, or after them came unto him all that were indebted, distressed, or discontented, to the number of 400. men, and he was their Captaine. By such as were indebted, wee must understand such, as had nothing to pay, or else it is likely, that David would not have received them, and for others in distresse, and discontent, it is likely, that many of them were in the same case with Davids fathers house, discontented at the tyranny practised by Saul upon such, as would not shew themselves enemies to David, and further his unjust designs against him. Now David received all these, not to attempt any thing with them against the King or his countrey, but for his owne comfort and theirs, and that their forces being united together they might the better defend themselves against their enemies, and doe something against the enemies of their countrey, as the following history sheweth, that they did. Wherefore, as Lyra saith, hee did nothing unlawfull herein, especially being already anointed to bee King over Israel. And Peter Martyr noteth it to have beene a singular providence of God towards him thusto aggregate forces unto him in Sauls lifetime, that hee might make some beginning of executing his Kingly office for the defence of the the distressed, and the repressing of insolent enemies, that Saul who unjustly persecuted him, might be the more vexed at it, and pine away through envy of his prosperous proceedings. And herein David was a type of Christ, as expositors generally note, in that such as be indebted by sinne and distressed and troubled through Satans temptations, doe by faith and repentance come to him, and are protected against their spirituall enemies. If it be said, David did like unto wicked Abimelech in receiving such. It is answered, there was great difference, for Abimelech gathered unto him for hire, vaine and wicked men, unjustly to obtaine the Kingdome, and to make way thereunto by the bloody and unnaturall murdering of his brethren: but David hired none, but they came voluntarily unto him, and if any of them were wicked and came to him in an ill minde, the fault cannot be laid upon him, for hee expostulated with them about this, 1 Chron. 12. 17. and Christ himselfe had one follower of the 12. that was a Devill, and at this day hath many more, that gather to him, who be unsound, yea preachers that preach not in sincerity. Neither did David ambitiously seeke the Kingdome with these forces, or oppresse any of the people of God, but destroyed their enemies. Yet from this meane beginning he grew up into a great Kingdome, as Moses, and Cyrus, and Julius Cesar.

And David went from thence to Mizpeh in Moab, and hee said, Let my father and mother I pray thee remaine with you, till I know, what God will doe with mee. And hee brought them before the King of Moab, and they abode with him all the time, that David was in that fort. Mizpeh of Moab this is called, because there was a City of the same name in Judah, 1 Sam. 7. Iunius for further explication saith, that is, to a denne or cave called also Malle, 1 Maccab. 5. 26. which signifieth ammunition. But enough hath bene said already against *David*s abiding in a cave in Moab. Hee came thither with his troupe to bring his father and mother, who were aged and so unfit to travaile, that with the King of Moab they might be safe from *Saul*s tyranny, till that hee had a more settled estate, and by him, saith Iosephus, they were honourably entertained, although some of the Hebrews say that hee afterwards put them to death, after that upon *Gad*s warning of him, hee removed from Moab into Judah againe. Touching the reason why David fled into Moab, as some thinke, was because hee was allyed to the Moabites by his great Grand-Mother Ruth: others, because Saul made warre against the Ammonites, 1 Sam. 14. 4.

But the Prophet Gad said unto David, Stay not in this hold, but returne into the land of Judah, and hee came to the forest of Hareth. This was doubtlesse a great comfort to David to have the counsell and direction of a Prophet in the midde of so great dangers, and he used the Prophet Gad divers times after, when he was King. 2 Sam. 23. 1 Chron. 21. 2 Chron. 29. Whereas there were Prophets in the Church in those dayes extraordinarily indued with the Spirit, but now wee have none, there was great reason for it. 1. Because the Church had need then to be nourished in the hope and expectation of the Messiah, by the reviving of Prophecies. 2. Because the Church was but in one Nation, which was hated and envied of all others, they needed Prophets to encourage them. 3. To stay them from going to wizzards, which was commonly practised by others round about them in those dayes. 4. Because they had not the Scriptures compleate, but onely the five Bookes of Moses a long time, therefore for a supply of that defect God sent them Prophets: so Peter Martyr.

Then Saul bearing that David was discovered, and the men with him, hee remaining still in Gibeah under a tree in Ramah, &c. and his servants about him, said, Heare, yee sonnet of Iemini, &c. Gibeah was the City of Saul in the Tribe of Benjamin, but Ramah was the place, where Samuel dwelt, farre from it, and therefore Ramah here must not be taken for a proper name, but appellatively for an high place, as Iunius expoundeth it, and hee sat here under a tree or wood, as the Vulgar Latin, for it may be taken either way. For the speech made here by Saul unto his servants, hee asketh them, whether David would give to every one of them fields and vineyards &c. thus deriding *David*s inability, for hee knew Iulij 9.

Phil. 1. 16, 17.

Peter Martyr.

V. 3.

V. 4.

Iunius.

Iosephus.

V. 5.

Peter Martyr.

V. 6.

P. Martyr.

knew, that hee himselve being King had these to give, and that David had none: then hee chargeth them fallly to have conspired with David against him, and likewise his sonne Jonathan, when as David attempted nothing against him, but hee sought David's life unjustly. And herein he figured out the Antichrist of Rome, who calleth his Councell about him, and thus upbraided the Protestants for ambitiously seeking after Bishopricks and Arch-Bishopricks, &c. when as they seeke for no such thing: thus Peter Martyr.

V. 9.

Junius.

Lyra.

Then Doeg told, what hee saw touching David's comming to Nob to Abimelech, and his relieving of him with bread &c. but how Abimelech was deceived by David's dissimulation he told him not, which shewed his malicious desire to provoke Saul against him, with whom hee had beene in pretence of great piety, not long before. For these words, Doeg, who was set over the servants of Saul, Junius and Vatablus have it, who stood amongst or with the servants of Saul, and this seemeth to be the best reading, because Doeg was not set over all the rest of Saul's servants, but over this cattell, as Ch. 21. 7. wherefore the Sept. Transl. hath it, set over the asses of Saul. Whereas hee saith, that the Priest asked counsell for David of the Lord, some saith Lyra, thinke that he lyed, but because Abimelech himselve confelleth it, v. 15. it is plaine, that hee lyed not, but his liane was great in that hee maliciously reported that which Abimelech did innocently, as done by way of conspiracy with David against Saul. And therefore Psal. 32. David inveiyeth bitterly against him, and prophelieth his destruction. Hee was a true Edomite, hating David, and Gods Priest, as Esau did Jacob, and such are all that to curry favour with Princes do accuse unto them his faithfull servants and stirre them up against them.

V. 11.

Peter Martyr.

Borreau.

.17.

Saul then sent for Abimelech and all his fathers house, and when they were come unto him, hee charged Abimelech with that which hee had done for David, as done against him. Abimelech pleadeth his innocency and David's, but the tyrant fully bent to destroy him and all his fathers house, how just a defence soever hee made for himselve, denounceth the sentence of death against them all. Abimelech pleadeth 3. things, as Peter Martyr noteth, in his owne defence: 1. David's faithfulness to Saul in times past, neither did hee at his comming to him know any thing to the contrary. 2. That hee was the Kings sonne in law, and so what hee did for him a man would thinke should have beene kindly taken by the King. 3. This was not the first time, that hee asked counsell of God for him, but hee had used so to doe in times past, and it was accepted by Saul, and therefore hee thought, that hee would not bee offended now at it. And this is implied in the interrogative; Did I then begin to inquire of God for him? Yet David Kimbi readeth it affirmatively, as if hee had pleaded, that this was the first time. Whereas hee saith nothing of David's dissembling, that hee came about the Kings businesse, which might probably have excused him most, Iosephus saith, that hee spake of that also, and therefore some thinke that all is not set downe, which Abimelech spake: but others, that hee concealed it purposely, lest if David should happily be reconciled unto Saul againe, he should fare the worse for revealing it at David's hands. Saul who breathe out nothing but death and destruction for consulting with God, aptly figureth out the Antichrist of Rome, who objecteth heresie & rebellion to those, that seek to Gods Oracles, that is, his word, for their direction. So Borreau.

Then Saul bade the footemen about him to slay the Priests, but they would not, then hee bade Doeg, who forthwith slew them to the number of 85. Persons, and after this hee destroyed their City Nob, both men, women, and children, and sucklings, oxen, asses, & sheepe. But Comestor referreth these words hee rased Nob and slew, &c. Saul who by his men did this after the slaughter made by Doeg. Abimelech having made his defence no better, but having said something, whereby God might be offended with him, in that hee pleadeth that he knew not David to have been proscribed by Saul, as if he would not have received him in his necessity, had it been known unto him, and something, whereby Saul might bee more offended, in that hee so praised David for faithfull and honourable when he saw Saul to be so set against him, and omitting altogether all prayer for pardon. Saul presently commandeth execution to be done, and it is done by Doeg and his servants, for it cannot be conceived, that hee could doe it alone, to kill so many and to destroy all the people, and cattle in an whole City. Other servants of Saul refused to doe this bloody act, but this Doeg partly out of malice, which the wicked commonly beare against the godly, and partly to curry favour with Saul for his owne benefit, doth it without delay, as is intimated in Pf. 52. which was made purposely against him. Now although this was a most unjust fact in Saul to murder the Priests of the Lord, yet it was a judgement justly brought upon the house of Eli, according to that which was threatened, 1 Sam. 2. 31. And it is not to be doubted, but that there were other sinnes in these Priests, although unknowne to us, for which they were thus cut off, howbeit that against Saul they had done nothing worthy of death: for Gods judgements are often secret, but alwayes just. By this example, as Martyr noteth, we may see that the High-priest of old was not above, but under the King, to be summoned and judged by him: so Solomon afterwards cast out Abiathar from being Priest, and before Constantine the Emperour the Bishops accused one another, and Justinian deposed Sylvester, and Vigilius, Bishops of Rome. Yet now he that taketh upon him, to be the High-priest of all the Church, usurpeth authority over Kings and Emperours, affirming, that he may not be judged by any man, as Pope Nicholas, and the Decretals, that no man may say to the Pope, why dost thou so? yea, he exempteth all his Clergy from the secular jurisdiction, contrary to Rom. 13.

Besides the cruelty here expressed, Josephus saith, that Saul caused the City of the Priests to be razed to the ground, thus leaving the very Tabernacle of God, that was there, in desolation, without any minister to serve about it. Whereby we may see how he increased in wickednesse drawing nearer to the time of his cutting off by Gods just judgement. When he went against Amalek, he spared some things contrary to the expresse word of God, but now, it being the will of God, that he should have spared, he destroyeth all, neither was he touched with any remorse, as then we read upon Samuels admonition, that he was. So that in him, saith Josephus, we may see the condition of wicked men, when they have no power, they seeme to be good and kinde, and humble, but comming to have power, they shew their nature, which was before cunningly hidden, to be most wicked, cruell and bloody.

Some question here, whether Sauls servants did well in refusing to slay the Priests, when Saul commanded them? but this is easily resolved, we must rather obey God then man. Whereas Doeg is said to have slaine 85 persons that did weare a linnen Ephod; Lyra saith, that they came to Saul in their Ephods, thinking hereby to move him the more for reverence to God, whose Ministers they were, to spare them from destruction: thus also Ostander. But Vatablus, Martyr, and Junius, that they were not now clad with Ephods, because they were to be worne onely in Ministring before the Lord: but they are said to have worne them, because there were so many slaine, that were come to full age actually to serve about the Tabernacle in Ephods. I preferre the first, holding, that this clause is added to aggravate Doegs sinne, in that they having on the holy vestiments, which should have stricken a reverence into him, he yet presumed so atheistically to slay them, as it were, in despite of God, in whose liveries they were. And it is said a linnen Ephod, to difference it from that which the high-priest did weare, which was much more rich and precious. In that sucking children were also slaine, herein David was againe a type of Christ, because at his fleeing into Egypt, the infants in Bethleem were slaine also by the command of cruell Herod.

But one of the sonnes of Abimelech, Abiathar, escaped and fled after David, &c. Saul thought to have rooted out all the posterity of Abimelech, but God preserved one still from his rage, yet it was but to endure more misery, and to be grieved at his future depoling, 1 Kings 2. 26. according to the prophecy against *Eli*s family, 1 Sam. 2. 32. He brought the newes to David, at which he was greatly grieved, and comforted Abiathar by promising to be his protector.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 King 2. 26.

Joseph. Antiq.
lib. 6. c. 14.

Lyra.

Ostander.
Vatabl. P. Martyr.

Ostander.

V. 20.

CHAP. XXIII.

V. 1.

HER E it is shewed, how David was certified, that the Philistims invaded Keilah, and spoiled the threshing floores thereof, that is, by carrying away their corne, and it is likely, as Lyra hath it, that the men of Keilah sought to David for succour in this their distresse, wherein he was also ready both for his love to the children of Israel, and because he being anointed King, it was his part to defend them, as his Subjects. But because he would goe upon good ground, he first asketh counsell of the Lord, and is bidden by him to goe against the Philistims and promised he should prevaile, and when his men fore-calling the danger of Saul, that they might thus come into, he consulted againe, not that he doubted, but to satisfie them, and for their confirmation, and then he was assured againe of the victory.

Lyra.

V. 2.

V. 3.

V. 5.

Peter Martyr.
Lyra. Hugo.
Card. Borlhaus.
Osiander.

Junius.

Joseph. l. 6. c. 14.

Then David went with his men, and having smitten the Philistims tooke their Cattle, that is, the beasts, which they brought with them to carry away the corne and provision of the men of Keilah. Touching *David*s asking counsell of God, before he would goe to battell, herein he did as the children of Israel had done before, Judg. 1. 1. & 20. 18. and it is the onely sure way, when at any time a people goe forth to warre, to seeke first unto God to have him propitious; to doe otherwise, is temerity and rashnesse, as Peter Martyr noteth. For the manner of *David*s consulting with God, Lyra, Hugo, Martyr and others, for the most part hold, that it was done by the Priest Abiathar having the Ephod, which he brought with him, when he fled unto David, v. 6. But Junius and Willet following him will have it by a Prophet, and most properly by Gad, because it is said, that Abiathar came to David to Keilah, but this consultation was before his coming to Keilah, and Josephus saith, that he consulted with God by a Prophet. And this is the rather to be followed, because when he consulted by the Ephod, v. 9. it is mentioned, for he said to Abiathar, Bring hither the Ephod, whereas nothing is spoken of it in this place, but v. 6. it is recorded, that Abiathar brought it with him, as a preparative to the consulting hereby spoken of, v. 9. that we may understand, how it happened, that they had then the Ephod to aske counsell by. Of consulting by the Ephod see before, ch. 14. 18. and Numb. 27. 21.

V. 7.

Then it was told Saul, that David was come to Keilah, and he said, God hath shut him up in my hand, &c. Herby the blindenesse of Saul appeared; he for his wickednesse was hatefull to God, and yet he speaketh as if he thought God to be on his side and against David, and so doe others, who be enemies to Gods servants and to his truth, as the Papists in their warres against the Protestants, who give for their posie, Adjutorium nostrum in nomine Domini, and in their persecuting proceedings begin with these words, In nomine Domini, as Peter Martyr noteth, and so did Sennacherib, comming against Jerusalem, Am I now come up without the Lord, said he, by his Generall Rabshakeb? so do the wicked flatter themselves with an opinion of Gods being with them, when he doth utterly abhorre both them, and their wayes.

Note.

Peter Martyr.

2 King 18.

V. 9, 10, 11.
12.

Then David understanding of *Saul*s purposing to come against him, consulted with the Lord by the Ephod, and first receiveth answer, that Saul would come to Keilah, as he had heard, and 2<sup>ly</sup>. that the men of Keilah would deliver him and his men into *Saul*s hands. He enquireth of both together, but hath an answer given onely to one at the first, and then asking againe touching the other, answer is made to that also. The Rabbins hereupon, saith Martyr, saigne, that the divine oracle never gave answer to any more, then one demand at one time, but there is no ground for this, it is rather to be held with Lyra, that although two questions be here propounded together, yet but one was asked first, and that being answered, the other: or God would have him seeke againe unto him, before hee would answer all, to teach us that he loveth to be importuned by us in prayer, and to be often sought unto, as also is taught Luk. 18. For touching a double enquiry made of the Lord, and all answered at once, we read 1 Chr. 14. 10. Whereas

Lyra.

Whereas the Lord answered, Saul will come downe, and the men of Keilah will deliver thee up to him, and yet neither of both was done, it is to be understood for the justifying hereof, that Saul would have come, if David had staid there, and if he had come, they would have delivered him up, but not otherwise. Wherefore David with his men departing thence, Saul hearing of it went not forth, for both Saul had his spies to watch David, and David his to watch Saul, whereby it came to passe, that either soe heard of the proceedings of the other, and did accordingly. The men that went with David now, were 600, but before 400, so that his company was not watted by warring with the Philistims, but increased, none fell from him for feare of Sauls comming, but more were added, even as in the time of persecution, the Church was increased, when many were killed, as Martyr noteth, who also saith, that God could as well have given David victory against Saul, as against the Philistims, if he had staid his comming to Keilah, but forsomuch as Saul was his anointed, the Lord would not have David to fight against him, and he being destroyed, to come to the Kingdome, because that would have beene a blemish to him, and it might afterwards have been objected to him that he sought and came to it by ambition. Yet Jehu by going against King Joash and slaying him, attained his Kingdome, and was approved therein: but Joash was not anointed, as Saul was, that we read of, but came to the Kingdome by succession, and both he and all Ahabs posterity were adjudged before to destruction by the Lord, for Ahabs wickednesse, and Jehu was stirred up by the Lord to doe the execution, a Prophet being sent unto him, 2 King. 9. 7.

Then David aboad in a mountaine, in the wildernesse of Ziph, and sometimes he was in a wood there, for Saul sought after him continually. Ziph was a City in the Tribe of Judah, Josh. 15. from whence this wildernesse had the name, Zepheeth signifieth pitch, wherefore it is likely, that pitch abounded here, and so this City tooke the name therefrom, it was 22 miles from Jerusalem North-east, so H. Bunting. Here Jonathan came to David into the wood, and renewed his League with him, and comforted him, by saying, that his father should not finde him out, and that he should be King, and he next unto him in the kingdome. The renewing of their Covenant before the Lord, saith Cromistor, was before Gad the Prophet and Abiathar the Priest. Jonathan, saith Lyra, knew, where David was, to goe unto him, although Saul knew not, because there were messengers secretly passing betweene them, as betweene most entire friends. And this was the third time of their swearing either to other, 1. in the house, 1 Sam. 18. 3. 2. in the field, ch. 20. and 3. in this wood; which he morrally applyeth thus, so the faithfull soule entereth into Covenant with God, 1. in the house of the heart, 2. in the field of the worke, 3. in the desert of contemplation. From Keilah to this Ziph, are reckoned 4 miles. Touching *Jonathan*s saying that he knew David should be King and he next unto him, in the first hee spake upon sure ground, because he was by Samuel anointed, and because Samuel had told Saul that God had rejected him and chosen his neighbour, and for the grace wherein David was with all the people. But for the second, presuming only upon that great league of friendship, which was betwixt him and David, but as the history afterwards sheweth, he was herein deceived, for he dyed before that David attained to the Kingdome, so that as Martyr noteth, the servants of God may be deceived in their confidence touching temporall things, whereof they have no certaine promise, but so farre forth, as they make for Gods glory and for their good. Others to justifie his saying, expound it as a request made by him unto David, and some of the heavenly Kingdome.

Then came the Ziphims to Saul, saying, Dost not David hide himselfe with us in strong holds and woods? These Ziphims were of the Tribe of Judah and came of Caleb, 1 Chron. 2. 42. In complaining of them David called them strangers, Ps. 54. 3. because in their affection they were estranged from him, although of his owne Tribe. That which moved them to this treachery against David was doubtlesse the great feare, wherein they stood of Saul, if they should have

Ee

forborne

V. 11, 12.

V. 13.

Peter Martyr.

2 King 19.

V. 14.

H. B. Patriarchs
travailes.V. 16, 17,
18.Schol. Hist. of Lyra.H. Bunting Patriarchs travailes.Note.
P. Martyr.Pellican, Ofander.

V. 19.

P. Martyr.

forborne to certifie him of David's lurking, being warned by the example of the City of Nob. The place, wherein he was, they say, was Hachilah, on the south of Ieshimon, the Vulg. Lat. on the right hand of the desert, so likewise Iunim. Hebr. it is on the right hand of Ieshimon, and Ieshimon signifieth a wilderness, but most take it for a proper name, and this is to be preferred, because the word צִיפִים is commonly used for a wilderness, and David is said now to have been in a wilderness, and if by Ieshimon a place known particularly by that name had not been meant, how should Saul by this description have known the better, where David was, when they certified him, that he was in the wilderness near to them, on the south of the wilderness, for there being many wildernesses, it would have been uncertaine, which they meant. If it be said, hee could not but understand it of the wilderness of Ziph, the south or right side of it I say, why then did they vary the word; and not say Midbar, but Ieshimon? Peter Martyr saith, that David upon this occasion compiled not onely Psal. 54. but also 99. Psal. 116. and 31. And it was a most inhumane part in them to deale thus with one of their owne Tribe, who fled to them, thinking, that for their nearnesse to him in blood they would have been a succour to him against Saul. In these men therefore the Jewes were figured out, of whom it is said, when they rejected Christ and delivered him to death, Hee came amongst his owne but his owne received him not. Saul is glad of this treachery of the Ziphims and bleſseth them therefore, who were indeede accursed for this wickednesse by David led by a better Spirit. Pyrrhus an heathen King met with better measure at the Romans, his enemies hands, for they let him understand of the treachery of his Phytician who offered them to poison him; and the Falisci, to whom they sent their Schoolemaſter home bound, that went about to betray their City to them by bringing the children of noble men into their power, which had bene to him committed for their education.

Peter Martyr.

Joh. 1. 11.
V. 21.

V. 22.

Peter Martyr.
Iunim.

Saul finding, that the Ziphims were for him, biddeth them diligently to note all his lurking places, for said he, it is told mee, that hee dealeth very subtilly. the Vulg. Latin for hee thinketh of mee, that I lay wait subtilly for him. Peter Martyr, he said unto mee, that he was most crafty. Iunim, he himself told me, that hee was wont to use subtilty. The Sept. for Saul said, lest he use craft, the Hebr. is, for he told me, or one told mee, that he is very subtle, and this is the same in effect with our translation, neither is any thing supplied, but the Nominative to the verb צִיפִים, which is left to bee understood, and that is, some one, whom Saul had employed to observe David. That of Iunim, that David in times past when he did so prosperously, being asked by Saul, how he handled the matter so to prevaile at all times answered, that hee used policy, is not so probable; because he then went armed with a strong band, neither needed hee, as now, to shift from place to place for his owne safety, which is the Subtilty here meant. All other expositions goe from the originall, and so may easily bee rejected.

V. 24.

H. Bunting Pa-
riar, travails.
Iunim.

And they arose and went to Ziph before Saul, but David and his men were in the Wilderness of Maon, on the south of Ieshimon. Iunim the Ziphims went before Saul, when hee and his men were in the Wilderness of Maon, on the south of the Wilderness, Hebr. and David and his men were, &c. The Ziphims going before Saul to search out David found him in the Wilderness of Maon, which Maon was also a City in the Tribe of Judah, not farre from Ziph, Iosh. 15. about 4 miles, as one saith, and this was also on the south of the same Wilderness called Ieshimon. Then Saul followed with his Army, and David hearing of it, went downe to a rock there. Iunim saith, hee went downe from the rocke, that was in the Mountaine. Hachilah before spoken of v. 19. the Hebr. is, hee descended the rocke, most probably, as Iunim hath it, it being meant, that hee went downe from the hold or rocke in the Mountaine, that Saul coming might not finde him there, and therefore it is immediately said, that Saul and his men went on the one side of the Mountaine and David and his men on the other side. Yet I doe not thinke with Iunim, that the aforeſaid Hachilah is here meant, for that was in the Wilderness of Ziph, this of Maon, for David layed not long in any place, but was before the the returnes of the Ziphims to seeke him, gone to another rock. Yet generally it is rendred, hee descended to a rocke, and Willet who in all other things almost followeth Iunius, herein leaveth him, and defendeth the most received reading, but upon weake reason. The ordinary Glosse saith, that hee went to the rocke, to leave this carriage there in some cave, that hee might with the more expedition passe on, but this is very improbable.

Saul being come to the Wildernesse of Moria pursueth David so hard, that hee was in danger of being even now taken by him, wherefore he made haite to get away for feare of Saul. But God by his singular providence saved David, by calling Saul off from this pursuite, for a messenger came to him to tell him that the Philistims invaded the land, and so hee left pursuing David for that time to goe and fight against them. The Vulgar Latin hath it, he despaired of escaping from Saul: Peter Martyr, David haltened to goe away from the face of Saul. And thus it is Hebr. there being no word to set forth his feare or despaire, except the word פחד be taken for to bee terrified, as it also signifieth, but then it must bee rendred, David was terrified at the presence of Saul. But that hee despaired not, appeareth by Psal. 116. which Martyr thinketh, that hee made upon this occasion. Hee was tossed betweene feare and hope, for hee saith, that the snares of death did beset him round, but hee also saith, that then hee called upon God for deliverance, which sheweth his faith. Whereas v. 11. hee confesseth, I said in my haste, that all men are lyers, which some understand, as spoken of Samuel, and that David began now to doubt of the truth of that, which Samuel had told him touching the Kingdome: this is rather to be understood of the Ziphims and the men of Keilah, who dealt so fallly with David. But R. Kimbi maketh a diverse construction thus, although I doubt, yet God is true, for all men are lyers, and therefore I. Thus P. Martyr. But I rather hold with Iunius, that he spake so having respect unto Samuel, for he said so in his passion through the greatnesse of trouble, for hee professed still, that he believed. Thus God sometimes suffereth his to fall into the greatest straights where by they are much terrified, but let us take heed, that our faith be not overwhelmed with feare, for when all things may seeme to be most desperate, then God is nearest at hand to deliver us, as he did David. Some say, that David feared not so much for himself, but for his company, or because he would by no meanes fight against Saul being the Lords anointed. Glosse Ord. that although he doubted not, but hee should bee preserved to enjoy the Kingdome promised; yet hee feared both for his men, lest many of them should perish; and for many, that involuntarily followed Saul, lest they should perish. For Saul ceasing to pursue David, that hee might goe against the Philistims, Josephus and after him Pellican thinke, that hee did it out of the love of his Countrey, which did beare more sway with him to preserve it, then his private spleene against David to make him still to pursue him, the weale publike being neglected. But Peter Martyr saith, that it is not to bee imputed to any goodnesse in Saul, for hee had done the office of a good Prince, if hee had so loved his Countrey, but to Gods providence over-ruling him at this time, as afterwards Sennacherib to make him leave the besieging of Jerusalem, when hee heard, that Tirbakh, the King of Ethiopia had invaded his land. But for so much as even in naturall men there may bee an earnest love to their Countrey, and an hatred of some enemies more then of others, and a greater desire to resist them, specially for their owne greater good, I see not, why this should bee denyed to have beene in Saul or Sennacherib, nay God hereupon, that hee might give Saul an occasion to cease from pursuing David, when hee was even ready to take him, stirred up both the Philistims to invade his Countrey, and some man speedily to certifie him thereof. For hee saw, that by David there was not likely to be any present danger, because yet hee attempted nothing against him, but by the Philistims there was danger of subduing his Kingdome to them, and then it would have beene too late to goe against them, but for David, hee thought that hee might returne and take him as well another time. Saul being thus called away and David by this meanes escaping, in remembrance of this deliverance he called Willet.

V. 26.

V. 27.

Peter Martyr.

Iunius.

Note.

Josephus.

2 King. 19.

V. 28.

Junius.
V. 29.

H.B. Patriarch
travailes.

The Mystery.

led the place, where Sela-Hammalekoth, that is, the rocke of diremptions, because the forces of Saul were here broken off from David.

And David went from thence and dwelt in strong holds in Engedi. This is also in the Hebrew added to this Chapter, the Vulgar Latin, and Junius referre it to the next, herein following the Sept. so likewise Peter Martyr. But I, as our translation, follow the originall. En-gedi was a strong Castle situated in a Mountaine neare to the dead Sea, the Mountaines here were of a wonderfull height, in some places high ragged rockes appearing, which were fearfull to behold, and in others places plaine and fruitfull valleys, it was from Maon 36. miles, yet in the Tribe of Judah also, Job. 15. Here grew in the fruitfull places, Vines, and other fruits and a Balsam, wherefore Solomon in his Song speaketh of the Vineyards of En-gedi. It signifieth the Fountaine of a Kid or Lambe. To this place being in the extremity of the land, and strong by nature, David came, thinking that Saul would not follow him hither, where an Army could so hardly passe, but he so greatly thirsted after his blood that as nothing could stay him from pursuing after him, as the next Chapter sheweth.

For the Mystery in this Chapter, The men of Keilah who received so great a benefit of David, but yet ungratefully would have delivered him to Saul, doe figuer out the Jewes, amongst whom Christ delivered and cured many, but they delivered him into the hands of the secular powers to bee crucified, wherefore hee leit them. And the like is to be said of the Ziphims.

CHAP. XXIV.

V. 2.

Lyra.

Then Saul hearing, that David was at En-gedi went out with 3000. men to seeke him upon the rockes of the wilde Goates, Junius, rupicaprum, the Vulgar Latin, que solibicibus pervia sunt, which are passable onely to the Ibices, that is, saith Lyra, a wilde Goate, which casting himselfe downe from the toppe of a rocke, pitcheth upon his hornes without hurt; so that the place was difficult and dangerous to travaile in. Ibices, saith Comestor, are either those wilde Goates, or fowles so called, being somewhat like a stork.

V. 3.

P. Martyr.

And they came to the sheepsfolds by the way, wherein was a cave, and Saul went in to cover his feet. This cave, it seemeth, was very large, for it received David and all his men, so that it seemeth to have beene a place, into which the shepherds brought their sheepe in the night season for their safeguard. Osfander saith, in Germany there be caves so large, that in one, an whole band of men may be hidden. Now the nature of a cave, saith Martyr, is such, that they within may see him that entrench, but hee cannot see them, wherefore David with his men being there saw Saul, but he could not see them. Then David's men said unto him, The day is come, whereof the Lord hath said, I will deliver thine enemy into thy hand, and thou shalt doe unto him what seemeth good unto thee, wee do no where read of any such promise made, to David, yet happily it was made when David was with Samuel amongst the Prophets, but it is not recorded before this, as neither be many other things that were spoken or done, so Mar. and Lyra saith. Doctores do commonly hold, that this was spoken to David, when hee fled to Samuel; Junius hath it, this is the day, in which the Lord saith, behold I deliver thine enemy into thy hand. How-

Lyra.

V. 4.

Lyra.

Pellican.

V. 5.

soever, it seemed not good to David now to slay Saul, but to cut off the lap of his garment onely; for hee said, that his hand should not bee upon the Lords appointed. This garment, saith Lyra, was a military garment called Chlamys, or Pyramica, because it was sharp on both sides, and it reached downe to his ankles; One of these laps David came softly and cut off. If it be doubted, how hee could doe it, and not bee perceived, Peter Martyr saith, that happily he lay his upper garment aside, whilst he did his easment, but Pell. better, that the Jewes were wont for decency, when they sat downe to do their easment with their upper garment to cover themselves all over, and therefore it is called covering their feet, & so it hanging upon the ground in part, David might easily cut one lap off without being perceived, especially by reason of the noise made by the Army without in the meane season. But when David had done this, it is said, that his heart heart smote him, whereupon the Rabbins say, that hee went with a purpose to kill Saul, but repented in going, and so did no more, but cut off a skirt of his garment, but for this God punished him in his kiade, in that when hee was old, he was cold and could not get any heate: but this foundeth like a frigid and cold invention of theirs, for David alwayes abhorred from having a thought in his minde to kill the King, how injurious soever to him, because hee was, as hee saith in the next verse, the Lords anointed. But wherein was his fault, that his heart smote him, seeing hee did no more, but cut off the skirt of his garment, for this seemeth to have bene a very small injury? Ans<sup>r</sup>. Peter Martyr saith, that his heart smote him because at the first his fact seemed to bee injurious; but afterwards considering, that hee did not this to offer any injury to Saul, but hereby to manifest his humanity towards him, his deadly enemy, in sparing his life, when hee could as easily have taken it away, as cut off the lap of his garment, hee doubted not, but that it was warrantable both before God and men. And God would have him thus to obtaine testimony of his innocency from Saul, his utter enemy, which as Aristotle saith, is the greatest testimony of all others. Lyra saith, this cutting off some part of Sauls garment could not be without some injury to Saul, and therefore well might Davids heart smite him, seeing Saul was still his King, and therefore no injury ought by any of his Subjects to be done unto him, no not with the best intention; and amongst the Jewes wee may note it to have bene counted an ignominy to have part of the long upper garment cut off, from the example of Davids men, who were so served by the King of Ammon, when they were sent to congratulate his comming to the Crowne after his fathers death, 2 Sam. 10. From this tenderesse in David wee may learne, how every Subject should abhorre from killing his King, or doing him the least injury in word or deed for reverence to God, whose Vicegerent hee is, although hee bee a tyrant, and therefore as David, hee must with patience beare his tyranny, waiting the time that God hath appointed to take him away, from being any more a burthen to the Common-wealth, as David said, Ch. 26. 10.

David being blamed, as it is likely, by his men for sparing Saul, said unto them, the Lord forbid that I should doe this thing to my master, the Lords anointed, &c. and with these words stayed his men from rising against Saul. The Vulg. Latin, here hath these words further inserted, as the Lord liveth, the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come, &c. as Ch. 26. 10. But this Lyra judgeth well to have crept out of the margin into the Text through the ignorance of the scribe.

Saul thus escaping and going safe out of the cave, David followed him and cryed unto him, (My Lord the King) wherefore bearest thou mens words, saying, behold David seeketh thy hurt &c. David imboldened by his good conscience, dareth now to shew himselfe to Saul, but hee neglecteth no meanes, whereby hee might pacify his anger. For 1. hee boweth low unto him. 2. He acknowledged him to be his Lord and King, and father, and himselfe his humble Subject and Servant. 3. Hee proveth his innocency towards Saul against all traducers, because God having delivered him into his hand, hee spared his life. 4. Hee vilifyeth himselfe in comparison of Saul, as a dead dogge, or a flea, after whom therefore it was a most unfit thing, that the King of Israel should come out, and take this travaile upon him to pursue him. Now whereas he saith, that God had delivered Saul into his hands, hee meaneth not, that hee might lawfully have slaine him, although some thinke so, and the same phrase is afterwards used to Abab, and hee is threatened, because the Lord having delivered Benbadab into his hand, hee let him goe: and hee that is slaine casually by another man, is said to have been by God delivered into his hands, Exod. 22. 13. But here Saul is said to have bene delivered into Davids hands, because hee had an opportunity given him to slay him for the tryall of his patience and charity towards his enemy. For it was not lawfull for him to kill him, as Martyr reasoneth. 1. Because so, he should have taken vengeance into his owne hands. 2. It might have bene an occasion of great dissention in the Common-

1 King. 1. 1.

Qu.
Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

Note.

V. 6.
V. 7.

V. 8, 9.

V. 10.

1 Kings 20.

P. Martyr

wealth. 3. it would have beene scandalous to David thus to attaine the kingdome. 4. It would have beene an evill president to others to rise against their Kings, and to murder them, yea to his owne Subjects to have taught them afterwards to offer violence to him, upon their grievances. It may seeme indeed to have beene lawfull, as the case stood, because David was anointed King, Saul grew intolerably outrageous and had killed the Priests of God, and came thither with a minde to kill David and his men, and it is not unlawfull to kill another in defending a man selfe; which last is true, if there be none other way to escape, but God shewed David a way to escape without killing Saul, as wee see in this place; and although David were anointed, and so appointed King after Saul, yet he must waite, till God, who had set him up, would pull him downe againe; and untill his actuall possessing of the kingdome, it belonged not unto him to punish the outrages done upon any, except common enemies of the people of Israel. Lyra also saith that David was to honour Saul, as long as God tolerated him in his kingdome, and that he ought not to take revenge upon Saul in his owne case, especially he having no office to execute judgement, and that this opportunity was offered him that his humanity might be manifested to his enemy.

Lyra.

V. 13.

1 Sam. 31.

As saith the proverb of the ancients, Wickednesse proceedeth from the wicked, &c. Hereby saith Lyra, he meant, that he went not about to kill Saul, neither would he, but that he being wicked, he would leave him to be slaine by the more wicked, as it fell out, for he was slaine in a manner by the Philistims, when, to avoid that ignominy, he slew himselfe. The Hebrewes, saith he, thinke, that by the ancients, the ancient of dayes is meant, as God is called, Dan. 7. 9. and that this proverb was grounded upon that law, Exod. 21. 13. If a man smite his neighbour, not having layed waite for him, God hath delivered him into his hand, and I will appoint a City of refuge for him to flee unto: for this, they say, is either for some secret wickednesse in the slaine, thus judged by God, or in the slayer bringing that evill upon him, that he must live in exile from his owne house. But this is farre fetcht and little to the purpose; and for the former, that he would leave the wicked to be slaine by the wicked, it is not probable that he spake in such a sense, for hereby Saul might have beene more exasperated against him, and as improbable is it, that he is meant that he would leave him to fall by his owne wickednesse, as Vatablus hath it, as also that of Borrichius, that although Sauls wickednesse were such that he sought to kill David, yet David would not attempt the like against him, for thus he should have accused Saul, whereas he endeavoured not to accuse him, but onely to excuse himselfe. The best then is that of Pellican, that he meant Sauls parasites by the wicked, such as Doeg and the Ziphims, as if he had said, this wickednesse of killing any man unjustly commeth from the wicked, who stirre thee up against mee to take away my life, but I am none of that sort, for I feare God, and therefore my hand shall not be upon thee, I abhorre from such a sinne.

Vatablus.
Borrichius.

Pellican.

V. 15.

V. 16.

17.

V. 19.

Peter Martyr.

The Lord therefore judge betwene me and thee, and plead my cause and deliver me out of thy hand. Having briefly said what he could to Saul, he lastly fleeth to prayer, having little hope to prevaile with him being so inveterated in malice. But his humanity and oration so full of weighty reason, and pathetically, did so worke with Saul, that he wept, and was overcome, and acknowledged David to be more righteous then he, in that he being his enemy he yet spared his life, and so prayeth God to reward good unto him therefore. Some saith Martyr, thinke that Saul spake thus to David in hypocrisie, because of those that were about him, and saw how well David had deserved of him, who could not but have condemned him, as a raging beast, and no man, if he had not shewed to relent, upon so extraordinary kindnesse shewed unto him, and he thought happily by this meanes to draw him to the Court againe, and there with lesse scandall cut him off. But he thinketh rather, that he was seriously touched with remorse for the present, because he dealt with him, as one that he verily beleevved should be King, and have his children in his power, in that he urged him him to sweare, that he would deale mercifully by them: thus also Pellican, and this is most probable, because even in the wicked there is a conscience accusing them for their horrible wickednesses, as in Judas, who also confessed his sinne in betraying the Lord, and in Cain &c. but here was no true repentance, because no reformation followed, but after a while he persecuted David againe. But here was a wonderfull change for the present in Saul from that which he was before, when he challenged Jonathan for taking part with David, and David for conspiring against him, for now he justifieth him and condemneth himselfe. A great encouragement to David in his affliction, and to all the godly, for that their wicked enemies cannot but in their consciences acknowledge their innocency, although out of an inbred malice against goodnesse they persecute them, and speake evill of them: which should make such as feare God to continue constant in their upright dealing, notwithstanding their suffering, because one day their righteousness shall breake out as as the sunne, and their wicked enemies shall be ashamed.

Here Saul further saith, that he knew certainly that David should be King, and that the kingdome should be established unto him, because he was so good and vertuous, God was so manifestly with him to preserve him and bring him into his hands, who before had said, when he was at Keilah, that God had delivered David into his hands, and because God did prosper him so in all his undertakings, and he was so gracious in the eyes of all the people. For his wickednesse had made, that God had left him and threatened, that his kingdome should not stand, and the hearts of the people were averse from him, wherefore from the contrary in David, he gathered, that David was the man whom Samuel meant, when he told him, that God would take his kingdome from him and give it to his neighbour, that was better then he: for I doe not thinke with Martyr, that the anointing of David by Samuel was yet come to Sauls eare, for then he would also have sought Samuels life, so that he knew not thereby, that David should be King, but by the signes beforealleged.

Then Saul required David to sweare unto him, that he would not cut off his seed, but leave him a name in Israel, whereunto David yeilded and sware unto him, wherein saith Lyra, it may seeme that David sinned, 1. Because Saul was reprobated of God, and so no oath ought to have beene made unto him for the preserving of his name in Israel. 2. Because David did afterwards contrary to this oath deliver 7 of the children of Saul to the Gibeonites to be cut off. But he answereth to the first, that he knew not Saul to be any further reprobated of God, but onely in respect of his temporall kingdome: and to the second, the will of God is alwayes to be understood to be excepted, so that when a man hath sworne to spare any, if God biddeth him kill, he may doe it without perjury, and this was the case of those 7 children of Saul, God bade him satisfie the Gibeonites, whose demand was to have so many delivered unto them to be hanged up in revenge of Sauls cruelty formerly against them. Yet neither was the seed of Saul quite cut off, for Mephibosheth the son of Jonathan, the sonne of Saul was preserved, yea David was so farre from sinning, when he made this oath to Saul, that he fulfilled a precept of greatest perfection. Love your enemies, and doe good to those that hate you, &c. Moreover God in his law provideth, that the sonne shall not dye for the offence of the father, so that David sweare to nothing, but what was just, and if he should have refused to sweare thus, there might have beene some colour for Saul to persecute him againe. And as he sweare, he did his endeavour to keepe his oath, for he did both slay him that said he killed Saul, and both those conspiratours that slew Ishbosheth, the sonne of Saul. Onely in the matter of the Gibeonites, wherein he had no power, he suffered that to be done, which he could not hinder, it being understood when he tooke this oath, unlesse God should command to the contrary.

Mystically by David hidden in a Cave, understand Christ, by Saul comming into his power to kill him, the Jewes comming to take him, whom he shewed

Pellican.

Note.

V. 20.

1 Sam. 15.

V. 21.

Lyra.

2 Sam. 21.

Mat. 5. 44.

2 Sam. 1.

2 Sam. 4.

The Mystery.

Joh. 18. 6.

1 Sam. 15. 28.

2 Cor. 3.

Zechar. 12. 10.

shewed, that he could have destroyed, when he made them fall backward by the breath of his mouth; the Cave, wherein Christ was hidden in respect of his divinity, was his flesh, so that the Jewes could not see it; the lappe of Sauls garment, which David cut off, was the kingdome in a figure, whereof the Lord deprived the Jewes; and as at the last, when David shewed himselfe to Saul, there was compunction in him and he acknowledged his owne wickednesse and Davids righteousnesse and fought his favour, so the Jewes shall one day, when their eyes shall be opened to see whom they have pierced, be compunct and sorrow therefore and seeke his favour.

CHAP. XXV.

V. 1.

1 Sam. 27. 6.

Lyra.

Prov. 10. 17.

Osiander.

Junius.

V. 2.

1 Kings 18. 19.

V. 5, 6.

Junius.

Lyra.

V. 7, 8.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

HERE first is the death of Samuel recorded, and how he was buried and lamented by all Israel. God let him live faith Pellican, till that Saul himselfe was brought to acknowledge, that David should be King, as he had foretold, and after this he tooke him out of this life, and Saul lived not long after, some Hebrewes say but 7 months, but this cannot be, because David sojourned after this a yeare and 4 months in the Philistines country, before the death of Saul. That of Josephus therefore is more probable, that Samuel died in 18 yeare of Sauls raigne, and Saul 2 yeares after, when he had finished 20. For the age of Samuel see before ch. 12. 22. Lyra noteth that Samuels death and buriall is first set downe in this chapter and then Nabals death, the one a good man buried with honour, the other wicked and buried without all honour that we read of, that we may see, how the godly do excell the wicked even after death, according to that, The memoriall of the just shall be blessed, but the memory of the wicked shall rot. For the place of Samuels buriall, it was in his house at Ramah, that is, faith Osiander, amongst his kindred and others of his family. Of mourning for the dead and burials, see Gen. 50. And David went to the wildernesse of Paran, that is, leaving the strong hold in Engedi, he tooke this opportunity, faith Junius, to remove to the uttermost parts of the land, whilst all were busie in burying Samuel, that he might be further out of Sauls danger. Of the wildernesse of Paran, see Numb. 10. 12. it was so large, that it extended from mount Sinai to the south border of the land of Canaan.

And there was a man of Maon, whose possessions were in Carmel, he had 3000 sheepe and 1000 goats, and he was shearing his sheepe in Carmel, &c. Maon was a City in Judah, of which see before ch. 23. 24. Carmel signifieth a place tilled or planted, there were two thus called, as by their proper name, one in Issachar, where Baals Priests were slaine, the other in Judah, Jos. 15. 53. not farre from Maon, and of this it is here spoken. David taketh this opportunity to send for some refreshing for himselfe and his men to Nabal, to Carmel, where he now made a feast, saying to the young men that went, then shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity, peace be to thee, &c. the Vulg. Lat. peace be to my brethren and to thee, &c. Junius, ye shall say, if he be safe, enjoy thou peace, &c. Peter Martyr, say to him living so, peace to thee, &c. the Hebrew is וַיֹּאמְרוּ viventis, and so the meaning is good, say to him, whilst he liveth, peace enjoy both thou and thy house &c. that is, as Junius expoundeth it, as long as thou livest; for the conditionall particle if it is not in the Hebrew, neither doth it agree with the present case, because David doubted not, but that Nabal was then in health, because he feasted. It was the manner of the Jewes, faith Lyra, at times of sheep-shearing, to make great feasts in remembrance of their fore-fathers, that were shepherds. For the reading of the Vulg. Lat. it was by a mistaking וַיֹּאמְרוּ being taken for וַיֹּאמְרוּ which signifieth to my brethren. Thus David sought to insinuate into Nabals favour by good words, and commemorating his benefites towards him, in that his shepherds were safe by his Army, in the Wildernesse, as it followeth v. 7. 8. they had no hurt neither lost any thing all the time that they were in Carmel neare unto him. Here we may see that sometimes fooles, and men of no desert are rich, when as the best deserving are in want, as David, and constrained to sue to such for reliefe, thus I have seene, saith the Preacher, servants on horsebacke and Princes walking on foot, that no man of desert be lesse esteemed for his want, or wicked worldlings esteemed the more for his wealth.

ing

David's servants having done their message, as they were commanded, Nabal made them a churlish answer, saying, Who is David, or who is the son of Jesse? there be many servants now a dayes, that breake away every one from his master, &c. He spake thus disdainfully of David, saith Lyra, as of a stranger, because hee was descended of Rub the Moabitisse, and he did not onely calumniate and vilifie him, but also his men, as perfidious. When as, as Peter Martyr hath it, he could not be ignorant that David had wrought a great deliverance for Israel, when he slew Goliath, and it was generally expected, as we may see by Saul's owne acknowledgement, that David should raigne after Saul, and he was of his owne Tribe, but David was now poore and he rich, and this made him so to insult over him, and to wrong him, for fooles use to be puffed up by their riches, and to despise all that be poorer.

David hearing of Nabal's churlish answer, breaketh into a rage, and biddeth his men presently to gird on their swords, which they did, and followed him to the number of 400, and he vowed for this indignity to destroy Nabal and all his, v. 21. 22. He bare patiently, saith Martyr, Saul's rage against him, and the contumelies of Simei, but towards Nabal he could have no patience, because, as is afterwards said, he had done much good unto him, v. 16. 21. but he requited him with so great evill. For contumelious and vilifying speeches to a generous minde, are more provoking, then outward violence, as Chrysost. noteth, because the one hurteth the body onely, but the hurt is divided, as it were, betweene the body and the minde, the other woundeth the minde onely, the wounding whereof is most intolerable: and there was not onely the rendering of evill for good, that vexed David's minde, but for that the man that did it, was so base in comparifon of him, and did not onely dismishe his men, without reliefe, but for their praying for all good unto him, ladeth them with all contumelies. We may see here, that the Saints of God are sometimes subject to violent passions, whereby they are carryed to sinne against God. For in this David sinned divers wayes, 1. By resolving upon revenge so soone as he heard of the wrong done, whereas it is forbid to avenge our selves. 2. By taking an oath to doe it. 3. For that he vowed to slay all that belonged to Nabal, that pissed against a wall, which had bene great injustice, when as he onely had abused him. Thus the best have bene suffered to fall, that we may see what wee are, if we be left a little to our selves, to praise God for his grace, when we are kept from falling so foully, and ascribe nothing to our selves or our owne strength.

The one of the young men (that is, one of Nabal's servants) told Abigail Nabal's wife, saying, David sent messengers to salute our master, and he railed on them, &c. This man knowing well the strength and animosity of David and his men, thought it time to speake without delay unto his mistresse, who was not present, when David's men were so reproachfully used. For he weighing the good usage, that he and his fellowes had at David's hands, of which he speaketh, v. 15. 16. did certainly feare, that David would come and destroy them all, except some course were speedily taken to prevent it, for he thought that no man of courage would doe lesse, if so great injury were offered unto him, especially being in his case, who upon such disparagement might feare, that his men would forsake him, being spoken of, as no better, then a fugitive servant from his master Saul, if he did not speedily revenge it.

Now he yeildeth a reason in the end, why he spake not to his master, but to her, because he is such a sonne of Belial, that a man cannot speake to him, meaning, that he had no hope to do any good by speaking to him, but that he would be more enraged. And herein this servant shewed himselfe to be wise and carefull both of his masters good, and of all the family, in which other servants should learne of him; but because one onely is spoken of that shewed this care and not more

V. 10, 11.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

V. 13.

Chrysost.

Note.

V. 14.

3 Lyra.

V. 17.

Note.

Peter Martyr.

more, it seemeth that discreet and carefull servants are rare. Peter Martyr hereupon gathereth, in that this servant spake to his Mistrisse, the inferiour ruler of the family, when hee despaired of doing any good with the superiour: that when the chiefe Magistrate cannot bee prevailed with for the averting of danger from the Church or Commonwealth, which is, as it were, his family, the inferiour Magistrates are to bee sought unto, who have power under him, and are set to provide for the common good.

V. 18.

Then Abigail made haste and took 200. Loaves and two bottles of Wine, and five sheepe ready dressed, five measures of parched corne, 100. clusters of Raysons, and 200. Cakes of Figs, &c. Of the wisdom and beautie of Abigail it was spoken before, Verf. 3. and of the churlishnesse and evill condition of her husband Naball;

V. 19.

now her wisdom beginneth to appeare, in that shee so wisely sought to prevent the danger that was comming upon her family, and herein shee had not the counsell of her husband, neither did shee tell him of it, as is said, Verf. 69. because if hee had knowne, shee feared hee would have hindred her in this her journey. Shee made haste, because delaying might have been dangerous: and whereas two great wrongs had been done by her husband Naball unto David;

V. 20.

P. Martyr.

1. In denying him reliefe in his necessities, which hee had so well deserved. 2. In using contumelious speeches against him, she prepared for both these to satisfie him as well as she could, and so to appease his anger: for, 1. She carried him victuals for which he had sent. 2. She used good words unto him to insinuate into his favour, and humble gestures, Verf. 24, 25, &c. And the provision which shee prepared was a bountifull gift, both for necessary food, for which the Loaves, the Muttons and the parched corne served, and for daintier Cates of Figges and Raysons. Hereby it appeareth, what abundance of provision was made for this sheephearing feast, in that there was so much bread and flesh ready, that might bee spared, a measure called satum here, was modium & semis, parched Corne, most accurate meale, Cakes of Figges, bunches tyed together: So Lyra. And in going to meete David, shee is said to have gone [by the covert of the hill] that is, saith Martyr, a secret way, and not the common road, lest shee should meete any of her friends by the way, and bee interrupted by them. But whereas it is said, Verf. 19. Shee told not her husband, a question ariseth,

Qu.

Whether a wife may give so much, or how much she may give without the consent of her husband? P. Martyr thinketh that the wife hath no power to give, but of those goods which are properly her owne, and to give of the goods that are common between them in way of Almes, were to violate the Law of Matrimony. But when the case so standeth, that the husband is foolish and churlish, and so neither doth nor will provide for the good of the family, and to prevent danger, then it is her part to provide. But this as Willet noteth, were too much to abridge the wives libertie of giving, and amongst us, where the wife hath nothing properly her owne, shee should have no power to give any thing, whereas by vertue of marriage the goods which the married have, are common between them. It is to bee held then, that although the wife may not alwayes give away what shee listeth, for shee must bee subject to her husband, yet shee may in an extraordinary case, as this was, for the good of her husband give liberally, and ordinarily give to the poore with discretion, as wee reade of the wife of Cbuzas, Herods steward, and other godly women, that they ministred to Christ of their substance. But this is not to bee done without the husbands consent, if hee bee one that feareth God, as the Shunammite woman, who desired to prepare for the entertainment of the Prophet, that passed by her house divers times, yet did it not, but first acquainting her husband with the motion and having his consent. But if hee bee an enemy to goodnesse and charity, shee may give, as shee seeth occasion, so that it bee done moderately, and not to the waisting of her husbands estate, according to the example of the women before named, whose husbands happily did beare no good will to Christ, whom they followed.

Willet.

Luk. 8. 1.

1 King. 4.

Ofande.

Abigail with her Servants and Asses laden going on in a secret way, the divine providence so ordered it, that shee met David and his men, whereas if hee hee had gone the common way, hee might have destroyed all, as he intended, before that shee had knowne of it, as Osiander noteth.

Now David had said, In vaine have I kept all that this fellow had in the wilderness, &c. This saith Lyra, being spoken before, but not recorded, cometh in here by way of capitulation, for when hee girt on his sword, and bade his men follow him, hee going before them, and impatient of the contumely offered unto him uttered these words, and sware to slay all that belonged to Nabal, that pissed against the wall, and not now, as it may seeme in the hearing of Abigail: Yet if it bee taken as spoken in his chafe upon the way, when Abigail was come neere him, but not yet observed, the Hebrew will beare it, and her alighting and humbling her selfe to David, and her speech unto him doe most aptly agree, if it bee thus understood; for as if shee heard his threatnings, shee fell at his feet and said, Upon me, upon me bee this iniquitie, Verf. 22. So doe God to Davids enemies and more also, &c. Because men are not willing to pray for any evill against themselves, saith Kimbi; David prayeth for it against his enemies. Martyr will have the meaning to bee, so let God destroy the enemies of David, as hee would certainly destroy Nabal and all his; but the note of similitude doth not here follow, but a conditionall, if I shall leave of all, that hee hath one to pisse against a wall. Wherefore Hugo better, sometime in swearing a man calleth for evill upon himselfe, as Ruth 1. 17. and sometimes for good to his deadly enemies for his greater punishment, as in this place, God doe so, that is, God give such successe to Davids enemies in their plotting against him as they desire, if I leave ought to Nabal, &c. All that pisses against a wall, saith Martyr, are not onely men and dogges, but women also, as may bee gathered from Verf. 34. who kept mee, that I might not doe evill to thee. But how women can bee brought within the compasse of this speech, I see not, as for the place alledged, it cannot thence bee gathered, that David meant to have killed Abigail, but it would have beene a great hurt unto her to have had her husband and family destroyed.

When Abigail saw David, shee hasted to meet him, and bowed herselfe unto him, and fell at his feet, and said, Upon me my Lord, upon mee bee the iniquitie, &c. These words may bee diversly taken, saith Hugo, either pardon mee this iniquitie, or take that revenge upon mee, which thou wouldst take upon my husband, or if thou thinkest, that it will bee sinne in thee, if thou dost not, as thou hast sworne, let this sinne bee imputed to me. Lyra and P. Martyr take it the second way, as if shee laid all the fault upon herselfe, being therefore cast downe at his feet to suffer the punishment, and this is the most probable: for her husband was, shee confesseth, as his name Nabal signifieth, a foole, and therefore hee was not to bee regarded. Her meaning then when shee said, upon me bee the iniquitie, was, if shee had spoken or done any thing to offend him, hee should now punish her for it, for whatsoever her husband said or did, a wise man would not bee much offended at it, seeing hee did according to his wit, and men commonly will beare with fooles. And as for her part, shee did not so much as see or know, when the young men came from David to her husband. Shee did then so expose herselfe to Davids rage to bee by him punished if hee would punish any body, as that shee did most effectually plead to have the offence passed over, as unworthy of any revenge. But what is to bee thought of her calling her husband a foole and sonne of Belial? Answe. Herein shee did no more then shee might, because both it was a thing commonly knowne, for from folly hee had his name, and shee did it to save his life and all that hee had, and therefore did herein the part of a loving wife, as a Chirurgeon launcheth the body to save it. But he was a wicked foole, as Rom. 1. 22. not a naturall, as may bee gathered from his speeches to Davids messengers.

Having sought to pacifie him by pleading Nabals folly, and her owne absences, shee here proceedeth to another argument, in that God had by his singular providence kept him hitherto from comming to shed blood, that hee might not avenge his owne cause, which is unlawfull to doe, shee hoped, that hee

V. 21, 22.
Lyra.

Kimbi
Peter Martyr.

Hugo Cardin.

V. 23.

Hugo Card.

V. 25.

24.

Osiander.
P. Martyr

V. 26.

Lyra.
R. Solomon
Borrkens.
Peter Martyr.

hee should by the same providence bee kept so still. And whilst hee staid his hand and sought not to avenge himselfe, shee prayed, that all his enemies might be a Nabal, that is, saith Lyra, foolish and improvident in their doings, but R. Solomon saith, shee spake herein Prophetically of Nabals sudden death, that followed immediately. Borrkens, and Martyr, as unable to hurt him, as Nabal. Junius, in *David*s power to bee forthwith destroyed, as Nabal was, if David would have proceeded against him. Of all these that of R. Solomon is most improbable, seeing shee had no spirit of prophesie, although the event made her words Prophetically, any way else of the three other it may bee understood indifferently.

V. 27.

V. 28.

V. 29.

Junius.

Lyra.

Borrkens.
Vatablus.

Hugo Card.
V. 30, 31.

Note.

To these arguments shee here addeth another reall argument, she offereth the present that shee had brought unto him, humbling herselfe as his handmaid, and calling him her Lord. Fourthly, shee falleth to entreating for pardon, speaking of the trespasse, as if it had been her owne, and promiseth all good unto David from the Lord, who fought the Lords battells, neither was there ever any evill yet found in him: and for Saul, that without cause pursued him and sought to take away his life, shee saith, that hee should not bee able to doe it, because *David*s life was bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord, and the soules of his enemies hee should sling out, as out of the middle of a Sling; where by binding up his life in the bundle of life understand the preservation thereof against the attempts of all his wicked enemies, who should bee no more able to take it away, then to pluck any thing, which the Lord by his Almighty power hath bound up in a bundle, out of it, for this the strength of no creature can doe; to this effect Junius, saying that shee spake this by a Metaphor; and for the casting out of the soules of his enemies, as out of a Sling, hereby shee meant, that they should bee destroyed by a violent death, and that suddenly to their greater confusion. Lyra more fully, even as Cions cut of trees to bee transplanted are fast bound together, and kept in water from withering, and then are planted in another place, to grow and beare fruit: so the life of David should be safely preserved together with the lives of others, that feared God, being kept moyst alwayes with the water of grace here, and finally bee transplanted into the land of the living, where together with such hee should live forever: but the lives of his wicked enemies should bee wheeled about as it were, in the wheele and circle of a Sling, which is the reading of the vulgar Latine, meaning that they should turne round from one vice to another, till they were cast out into Hell fire for ever. Borrkens and Martyr understand it onely of the life to come: Vatablus of David and his children, who shee meant should have a sure house for ever, as a bundle bound by the Lord, that cannot bee broken, but his enemies should bee cast out of their limits. Lastly, Abigail argueth from this, that it should bee no trouble to *David*s minde, that hee had not avenged himselfe, or shed innocent blood, at such time as it should bee made good unto him, which the Lord had promised, viz. to make him Ruler over Israel; whereby wee may see, that it was now come abroad, that David should bee King, although Samuel had anointed him so secretly, and Nabal blinded with covetousnesse and envie would take no notice of it, but spake of David, as a fugitive servant of *Saul*s. Shee speaketh of trouble to his conscience because it was a great sinne, that hee was going about, and if hee had committed it, his conscience could not but be troubled afterwards for it. Saul indeed committed a most horrible sinne in murdering the Lords Priests, and was never troubled in his mind therefore, so many wicked men more have no trouble, but are quiet within, because their conscience is seared, as it were, with an hot Iron, and without sense, yet some are troubled, as Judas; but every godly man is troubled in his mind after sinne committed, as David; Psal. 51. and Peter. And this should bee an argument unto us, to take heed of sinning, because inward trouble in the mind, which is most intolerable, will follow hereupon, the conscience will accuse, Rom. 2. 15. When the Lord shall have dealt well with thee, then remember thine handmaid. She did not here desire to be bee remembred according to ſome, that David would take her to wife, or if ſhee ſhould bee a Widow, to ſhew mercy to her, as Widowes have need: for Nabal was likely enough yet to live. But that hee would afterwards thinke upon her counſell, whereby hee had bene ſtayed from ſinning, and thinke well of her, and that ſhee was no enemy but a friend of his, and ſhew kindneſſe to her accordingly, which when hee ſhould come to bee King, might ſtand her and her family in great ſtead, which to expreſſe the Vulgar Latin addeth, and thou ſhalt doe good unto her.

David having heard Abigails ſpeech, bleſſeth God, firſt, for ſending her to ſtay him from ſhedding blood, &c. then hee bleſſeth her and her counſell as very good, repeating, what hee had otherwiſe ſworne to doe, and ſo hee tooke her preſent and diſmiſſed her in peace.

According to David's example wee ought to bee moved by good counſell to repent and to turne from our evill courſes. 2. To looke up to God firſt and chiefly, by whoſe providence ſuch counſell is given us, to give him the praiſe. 3. To bleſſe even the inſtrument alſo, which hee uſeth to doe us this good. Whereas David may ſeeme yet to have ſinned in breaking his vow and ſparing Nabal, it is to bee underſtood, that he did not, but ſhould rather have ſinned in keeping it, and ſo have added ſinne to ſinne, to the ſinne of vowing unlawfully the ſinne of doing unlawfully. For the end of an oath or vow is to glorifie God in doing ſomething, wherewith hee is well pleaſed, the which that wee may the more carefully doe, wee bind our ſelves by vow. 2. Then is the breach of an oath ſinfull, when it is done with contempt of God, whoſe name hath been called upon. But to vow any unlawfull thing, is to the diſhonour of God, and the breaking hereof is for the feare and reverence of God; wherefore it is not unlawfull, but juſt, neceſſary and commendable, and it had been better for Jepthah and Herod to have broken their vowes, then kept them: Thus Peter Martyr and Willet. Yet hee that maketh a raſh vow and doth not keepe it, is not without ſinne, but onely his ſinne is the leſſer, and leſſe pricking the conſcience. Abigail departing from David and coming home againe found Nabal teaſting and drunken, wherefore ſhee ſaid nothing unto him that day, but the next morning ſhee told him all, upon the hearing whereof his heart died within him, and hee became as a ſtone, and within ten dayes after the Lord ſmote him, that hee died. For Abigails refraining to ſpeake to Nabal in his drunkenneſſe, it was a point of wiſedome, for ſhee ſhould have done no good by ſpeaking at that time, wherefore it is ſaid, Eccleſ. Chap. 31. Verſ. 31. Rebuke not thy neighbour at the wine, give him no reprochfull words, &c. Nabals heart died within him for feare, and when hee had languiſhed ten dayes, ſaith R. Solomon, according to the number of the young men, which David had ſent unto him, God ſmote him that hee died, ſo that hee died not, ſaith Lyra, a naturall death, but God, to whom vengeance belongeth, when David refrained from avenging himſelfe, revenged his wrongs by ſlaying Nabal. And Nabals heart is ſaid to have bene like a ſtone, his drunkenneſſe, and other wickedneſſe, wherein hee had lived, were now puniſhed with a ſtony and hard heart, that could not repent, and ſo hee died miſerably: which may bee a warning to drunkards, and coole the rage of men, when they are wronged, and ſtay them from avenging themſelves, leaving their malicious adverſaries to God.

David hearing of Nabals death bleſſeth God for this revenge taking, and ſendeth to commune with Abigail to take her to wife. In this his rejoycing for revenge taken upon Nabal his enemy it may ſeeme, that

Ff

David

Junius.

V. 32.
33, 34, 35.

Note.

P. Martyr.
Willet.

V. 36.
37.
38.

Lyra.
Hugo Card.

R. Solomon

Note.

V. 19.

Hugo Card.
Iob 31.

P. Martyr.

Willet.

V. 43.

V. 44.

Deut. 17. 17.
Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

Borrbæus.

2 Sam. 3. 16.

Note.

The Mystery.

David did not well; for Prov. 24. 18. it is said, Bee not thou glad, when thine enemy falleth, lest the Lord see it, &c. And Job professeth, that hee rejoyced not at the fall of him that hated him. But Ps. 58. 10. it is said, the righteous shall rejoyce, when he seeth the vengeance. David then rejoyced not, because his enemy was false, as being glad to heare of Nabals punishment, but to see, how the righteous Judge did revenge his wrongs, and that hee proceeded not, when he was comming to revenge his owne cause: thus Hugo and Peter Martyr. And thus the elect shall rejoyce at the punishment of the reprobate, not because they delight in their punishment, but in the execution of justice. For Davids sending to have Abigail to wife, it is not to be thought that hee did it immediately after Nabals death, saith Willet, but after a convenient time, because amongst the Romans a woman was infamous, that married within lesse then a yeare after her husbands death. Hee thought her to bee a fit wife for him, because shee was beautifull, and wife, and being Widow to one so rich, shee could not want wealth; but true wisdom and vertue ought to bee the Loadstone of our affection in choosing a Wife. Abigail, because David, as shee believed, should bee King, humbled her selfe, as unworthy, but made haste and went with his servants unto him. And it seemed good unto David to send and not to goe in person unto her, that hee might not seeme to compell her, but that her consent might bee the more free.

After that David had taken Abigail to Wife, hee marryeth Abinoam of Jezreel also, but his former Wife Michal, the daughter of Saul was first given to another man to Phalti of Gallim. It may seeme here, saith Lyra, and Peter Martyr and others, that David sinned against that charge, that the King should not multiply Wives. Lyra answereth, it is meant of Wives, who were Idolatresses, by whom his heart might bee drawne away after false Gods: Peter Martyr, that he should have no excessive number, but two or three hee might take; but because David tooke more afterwards, and ten Concubines, it is to be held, that not onely two or three were permitted, but more for the procreation of more children, and so the meaning of that Law must bee, that to satisfie his fleshly lust, the King must not multiply Wives, as hee must needs bee judged to doe, if hee tooke very many, as did Solomon: So Borrbæus. For it was then tolerated in other men to have more Wives. Touching Michal, his first Wife, the Rabbins say, that Phalti was a good man, and learned in the Law, and therefore lay not with her, although being by Saul compelled hee tooke her, for if he had, it is not likely, that David would have taken her againe, as hee did afterwards; but the contrary appeareth to be true, because when David tooke her from him againe, hee followed her weeping for the great love which hee bare unto her: but Lyra saith, hee wept for joy that hee had not touched her. Here wee may see, that Saul was now growne to be voyd of all conscience of right and wrong, in that he would take another mans Wife from him, without any bill of divorce given her by him, and thus cause her and that other man to live in adultery: So wicked men doe commonly grow worse and worse, from one sinne to another, till they meet with the just punishment of all their sinnes.

By Nabal mystically wee may understand the Jewes, who because they understand not the end of their Lawes, may well bee termed fooles, to them Christ typified by David sendeth by his Apostles to bee refreshed with their faith and repentance, but they scorne him as base, and raile upon him, but Abigail, that is, the common people amongst them are wiser, and humble themselves unto him, yeilding him that which which their great ones denied, so the Jew is smitten and dyeth through want of faith, but those few that beleaved, were espoused to Christ, and saved.

The beleivers were called out of Jerusalem to Pella before the destruction thereof.

CHAP. XXVI.

Here the History returneth againe to Sauls pursuing after David, and it is shewed, first, how he was instigated by the Ziphims, of whom see before, chap: 23. vers. 19. and they describe the place, as then they did, where David was, in the hill Hachilab over against Jeshimon. Now the Ziphims were thus forward in stirring up Saul, because they had betrayed David once before, and now seeing him to live still and to bee quiet (for hee would not have set his minde upon marrying, but that hee now was free from persecution) they feared, lest if hee should come to the crowne, hee would bee avenged upon them, wherefore they seeke to have him cut off: so Lyra and Martyr, who addeth, that David might seeme not to have done wisely to goe againe into the confines of Ziph, where hee had bene in danger once before: but hee saith, that necessitie inforced him to abide thereabouts, because Abigails cattell, whom hee had married, were in those parts. And I doubt not, but there was a singular providence in it, that Saul might once more give prooffe of his inveterate malice against David continuing, even after so great a benefit received from David, and his oath to him, and yeelding in a manner to him the Kingdome after his decease, that David might never by trusting to his faire speeches come within his danger; and also that Saul might againe come into *David*s power to manifest his goodnesse the more and *Saul*s naughtinesse, and that David might hereby bee more comforted in respect of Gods providence over him, and confirmed in his faith in him, to bee preserved to the Kingdome, which he had promised him.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Saul being stirred up by the Ziphims commeth out againe to seek David, having with him 3000. men, and when hee was in Hachilab, and David in the wildernesse, David knowing by his spies the place where his campe lay, went by night with Abishai, when hee and all his men were sleeping, so that hee might have killed him, and was perswaded by Abishai to let him doe it, but hee then also spared him, and taking his speare that stuck at his head, and a cruse of water for a signe, hee went away, no man perceiving it, for a dead sleepe was sent from the Lord upon them all. This may seeme to bee a desperate adventure of David, but it seemeth, that God by the instinct of his spirit stirred him up unto it, because hee sent a dead sleep upon Saul and all his men, as when Gideon went to the hoast of the Midianites, and Jonathan and his armour-bearer to the Philistims Campe, were moved by God so to doe.

V. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

But before *David*s going with Abishai in the night, hee had been there disguised in his habit, saith Lyra, upon Vers. 5. to see where Saul lay. For it is said, David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: In the vulgar Latine, David surrexit clam, hee went privily, that is, saith hee, disguising himselfe, that he might not bee knowne, as Alexander sometime being disguised in his habit went into the midst of the campe of Porus, the King of the Persians.

V. 5. Lyra.

Then having marked the place where Saul lay in the trench and his men round about him, hee said to Abimelech and Abishai the sonne of Zerviah, brother to Joab, Who will goe with mee, &c. This Zerviah, saith Lyra, was one of *David*s sisters, whose sonnes were Joab and Abishai, and besides her

V. 6.

P. Martyr.

Note.

V. 13, 14.

V. 15, 16.

V. 17.

V. 18.

V. 19.

Pellican.
Olander.P. Martyr.
Borrichius.
Lyra.
Junius.
Hugo Card.

hee had another sifter called Abigail of whom came Amasa, 2 Sam. 17. Martyr saith, that some thinke, that David went not into Sauls campe till that Abishai went with him, but others that hee went first alone, and this agreeth best with the Text, and with reason for how should David know, where Saul lay, except hee had first seene the place by day light? Wee may see here, of what little force a strong guard is about a King, if God will have him ly open to danger, that none may trust to men, and munition, but to God alone. For the cruse of water at Sauls head, either, saith Lyra, it was rose-water to refresh him against the heate, or other common water for him to wash his hands, when hee arose. Howsoever, that and the speare taken away were an evident token that he who took them, could as easily have killed Saul, if he had born him any malice.

Then David went to the other side and stood on the top of an hill a farre off, a great space being betweene them, and cryed unto the people and to Abner, the son of Ner, &c. David went a farre off from Sauls campe, before hee uttered his voyce, that hee might bee out of danger, and then he cryeth not to the King, but to Abner, his Captaine, who should have provided better by a watch in the night for the Kings safety. But Abner answered, who art thou, that cryest to the King, the Vulgar Latin, that disquietest the King, respecting rather the sense, then the proper signification of the words. David replyeth, that Abner had committed a great fault, in that hee kept the King no better, saying, that hee was therefore worthy to dye. When Saul heard *David*s voyce, hee spake and said, Is this thy voyce, (my sonne David?) Saul was againe now touched in conscience for his bloody intention against David, seeing him to have had more care of his preservation, then they, to whom the custody of his body was committed, wherefore he now beginneth to speake kindly againe unto him. Then David in all submisnesse expostulated with him, asking him, why hee did thus pursue his servant, and what evill he had done; and if it came from the Lord, meaning by the evill spirit in judgement sent upon Saul, hee desired him to offer a sacrifice, but if men had stirred him up, then hee wished, that they might bee cursed, because they had by this meanes caused, that he could no longer abide in the inheritance of the Lord, that is, in the land of Israel, which hee should bee compelled againe to forsake, as hee had formerly done, to flee Sauls fury and to goe for safegard into the land of the uncircumcised, who served other Gods, whereby he might bee indangered living amongst them to be likewise corrupted by idolatry. Touching these words, If the Lord hath stirred thee up against mee, let him accept an offering, the Vulgar Latin, odoretur sacrificium, and the Hebr. rendred word for word, let him smell a sacrifice, whereby his accepting of it is meant, because when Noah sacrificed, Gods acceptance of his sacrifice was by this phrase set forth, the Lord smelled a savour of rest. But amongst expositors all doe not referre this sacrificing to Saul, as I have done in the Paraphrase before going, but Pellican and Olander, who expound the whole passage, as I have done. Martyr and Borrichius understand of *David*s offering sacrifice, as if hee had said, I will offer him a sacrifice. Lyra, let my patience bee accepted of, as a sacrifice offered upon his Altar. Junius, let mee bee slaine, and so made, as it were a sacrifice. Others, as Hugo hath it, let us prove by sacrificing whether it cometh of him, for hee will give some signe, I doubt not, for my justification. I rest in the first referring it to Saul, because sacrificing was a meanes of atonement with the Lord, and for a man to have his sinnes mercifully pardoned, and so the judgement therefore sent removed, if then Saul by his sinnes had provoked God to send an evill spirit upon him, which made him to rage against men, and to seeke their destruction without cause, and in particular against David, as hee knew well by former experience that he did, 1 Sam. 18. 10, 11. he advised him to flee to this meanes of pacifying God, that the evill spirit being taken away, and he restored to a good temper againe, might cease from this outrageous proceeding. For to referre the sacrificing to David seemeth to mee to bee unreasonable, both because hee could not come to the place, where hee might offer, and if hee thought, that the Lord in wrath against him had stirred up Saul to this persecution, secution, hee would doubtlesse have sought long before by offering to pacify him, when he was at the Tabernacle with Abimelech or with Samuel. Moreover David had done nothing to provoke God against him, but had many experiments of his favour towards him, and lately in the matter of Nabal, and now in bringing Saul into his power, hee did but goe on in the course, where in God had set him as a poore patient, but Saul was manifestly extravagant, and therefore hee properly had neede to repent and seeke to God by prayer and sacrifice, as the interlinear Glosses hath it, and not David. Now the Lord may bee said to stirre up a man to evill, either by sending into him an evill spirit for his sinnes, as hee did to Saul, or by doing good to another, for which hee envyeth him and seeketh to doe him mischief, which was Sauls case also, for God is said to have hardened Pharaohs heart, when hee did that whereby hee was hardened: and for sacrificing to make a sweet savour, it was by reason of the relation which sacrificing had to Christs passion, which had a sweet smell before him, although the smell comming from the sacrifice it self, was offensive. Whereas in speaking of the sonnes of men, if they had stirred him up, hee saith, that they were cursed, because by their meane hee was driven from the inheritance of the Lord, and they said unto him, that is, facto, saith Lyra, Goe and serve other Gods, not onely in respect of the danger, that is of being drawne to idolatry by living amongst idolaters, but also because they might use violence to compell him, such were indeed accursed because they were an occasion of drawing others into the wickednes of idolatry. Here Martyr noteth, what a grievous thing it was to David to live amongst idolaters, and how greatly hee preferred to live amongst the people of God, where he was rightly worshipped; and the same minde ought to bee in every faithfull person, it should not trouble him so much to goe from house and land, as from the place where the true religion is maintained to live elsewhere, and therefore they that for worldly gaine are content to live amongst idolaters, and to settle there, seeme not to be led with the spirit of David, but with the spirit of the world.

And now let not my blood fall to the ground before the Lord &c. that is, slay mee not unjustly, for this cannot bee done, but God will see it and take vengeance upon thee therefore, so Varabius. But Martyr and Borrbheus, my blood shall not fall to the ground before the Lord, that is, the Lord will not suffer it, doe what thou canst, and therefore thou dost pursue after me in vaine. Yet Martyr hath the former exposition also, thou must not thinke, if thou slayest mee, that my blood shall be as water spilt upon the ground, that none regardeth, for God hath set mee in his sight, and I am alwayes under his protection: Hee also mentioneth a third, as if this were a prayer to God, that he would not suffer his blood to be spilt, and a fourth, that he spake thus, because he meant to flee out of the land, so that Saul should not bee able to come neare him to hurt him. Junius differing from all others hath it, let not my blood fall as farre off from the sight of the Lord, that is, before my cause cometh to bee heard before the Judge by a Legall proceeding. I subscribe to the first, that it is a request to Saul, not to seeke thus any more unjustly to take away his life, the Lord being mentioned, who heard and saw all things, that Saul might be the more moved by his speech to cease from persecuting him. And hee concludeth with comparing himselfe to a flea and to a Partridge in the wilderness, whom being so mean, it was not for the honour of a King thus to pursue, see Ch. 24. 14.

Saul being overcome with Dauids carriage towards him condemneth himselfe againe, as Ch. 24. 17. hee confesseth, that he had erred exceedingly and promised no more to seeke to hurt David: where by error understand, not error arising out of ignorance, but out of malice and envy, because hee knew David should have the Kingdom, and therefore although that he knew hee did evill in persecuting David, he refrained not from this great wickednesse, and thus his fault was no whit the more extenuated as in other cases of erring.

The Lord render to every man his righteousness &c. These are the words of David to Saul, and hee approves his owne righteousness, because Saul, hee saith, being delivered into his hands, hee yet spared his life, desiring Saul that

*Lyra.Deut. 13.
Peter Martyr.
Note.V. 20.Varabius.
Peter Martyr.
Borrbheus.Junius.V. 11.V. 23.V. 24.*

he would likewise spare his life. In desiring God to render every one his righteousness he implieth not any merit in the righteousness of man, but prayeth, that God would accept of it and reward it out of his mercy. For the righteousness of man, is no way meritorious, but the way to attaine unto the good which God hath promised.

V. 25.

Saul replyeth, that David should doe great things, and also prevaile, meaning, that he should live to come to the kingdom, and raigne prosperously, to which effect almost he had spoken before, ch. 24. 20.

CHAP. XXVII.

V. 1, 2.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.
Junius.
Osiander.

2 Sam. 29.

DAVID having had such experience of Sauls irreconcilable hatred against him, so that he thought he could no where be safe in the land of Israel, fleeth againe into the Philistims country, and to the same Achish King of Gath, to whom he fled once before ch. 21. 10. This flight of David is justified by Lyra, because he might use any meanes by fleeing into any place to preserve himselfe, and his company: for if he had stayed still in the land of Israel, they must have bene beholding to some of Sauls subjects for reliefe, and hereby those subjects might have bene endangered, as Abimelech was. And he did not flee out of feare to be destroyed by Saul, but that he might not be forced to fight against him, whereby many of his men might perish, and others that were with Saul compelled to this warfare, whom David was unwilling to slay. But Martyr, Junius, and Osiander hold, that David shewed great weakenesse in thus fleeing, for his owne words doe shew, that he feared to perish by the hands of Saul; and the unlawfulness of the fact appeareth, 1. Because he fled to the enemies of the true religion, as if a Captaine with a band of men being Christians, should flee to the Turke, to fight for him. 2. He went from his calling, which was to be King over Israel and to defend them, but he went to joyne with their enemies. 3. Many inconveniences followed hereupon, as 1. he was driven to dissemble a going to warre against Judah, and other parts of Israel, v. 10. 2. Ziklag was burned, 3. he was in danger indeed of going to fight against his owne people &c. I doe with Lyra rather thinke that David may be justified in his fleeing into the Philistims country to be out of Sauls danger, for it doth not argue, that he fled thither out of distrust in God, because he said, I shall one day perish by the hands of Saul, for hee meant, if he did not seeke to preserve himselfe by fleeing, he should be in danger, that is, if he did not use the best meanes that he could devise, for his owne preservation, but meanes he meant to use, as is the part of every one, that trusteth in God and hath the greatest promises, and thus he trusted to be preserved by God to the Kingdom, whereunto he had bene anointed.

For his fleeing to the enemies of the true religion, it may be excused, because they being great enemies to Saul he was likely to be most safe amongst them, but with what griefe he fled thither in regard that they were Idolaters, his former speech did declare ch. 26. 19. where he curseth those that were the cause of it. Indeed if there had bene any other country neare in hostility with Saul, that had not bene Idolatrous, he had bene worthy to be blamed for making this his refuge. Moreover he had fled before into Moab, although he stayed not, for he was bidden to returne againe into the parts of Judah, wherein he obeyed and did some good service to his country, and being so ill requited, both by the men of Keilah whom he had rescued, and the Ziphims, and having thrice narrowly escaped Sauls hands, he thought it not fit to tarry amongst men so false hearted any more, and therefore fleeth for his safeguard into Palestina, as Christ fled afterwards into the parts of Tyrus and Sidon, when the Jewes persecuted him, and Ioseph with him into Aegypt in his infancy upon good warrant, even the warning of God himselfe. For his being necessitated thus to fight against his owne country, or to faine so to doe, this and other inconveniences were accidentall, he knew not when he went downe to Gath, that ever any such trust should by that King be reposed in him, to be required to goe against his brethren, but that he might be employed onely against other enemies of that State. Some thinke that this Achish was not the same, to whom he fled before, but another, that reigned in his stead, described therefore by his mother Maach for distinction. And the Rabbins say, that he had sent to Achish to treat with him about his coming before he went, which is not improbable, because he with his men might be fit to doe him good service, for which cause he thought that he might be willing to entertaine him, for so did Xerxes receive Themistocles, the Lacedemonians Alcibiades, and the Volses Coriolanus, as Maryr hath it. Lastly, whereas it is objected, that he forsooke his calling, he did not, but reserved himselfe till God would call him backe againe, and make way for him by cutting off Saul, that he might come and be a Captaine to his people, which he could not yet doe by reason of Sauls malice and envy against him.

goe

Saul hearing, that David was in Gath, ceaseth to seeke after him any more, because he could not there come unto him, and happily he thought that he should never come safely from thence againe, because he was knowne to be the man, that killed Goliath, and slew after that 200 Philistims, and cut off their foreskinnes, to their greater ignominy.

Then David having dwelt a while in Gath with Achish, desired of him some other place to dwell in, because Gath was the chiefe City, where Achish himselfe dwelt, and therefore unfit for him and his men, being so meane in comparison of the King, to dwell in together with him. Wherefore Achish gave him Ziklag, where he dwelt one yeare foure months, and by reason of this gift of Achish, it was ever after a Towne pertaining to David and to his posterity, the Kings of Judah. Touching David's desire to remove from Gath, he did it in modesty, because it was not fit for him being a stranger, to dwell in so eminent a place, for one farre meaner would agree better to his condition; but as Lyra hath it, he had another end herein, viz. that he might the more freely goe forth with his men to prey upon the bordering Nations, and thus, get a living for them, whom he could not otherwise maintaine being so many, without putting the King to great charge. Moreover he did thus, saith Borrbem, to avoid the envy of the Philistims, and because he could not away with their vices and Idolatry. And Ziklag was assigned unto him, not without a singular providence, for Josh. 15. 31. it was assigned to the Tribe of Judah, but hitherto unjustly detained by the Philistims, but now it was restored to the right owners, and so continued. And forsomuch as David had now a place of his owne, many were hereby moved to come unto him, 1 Chron. 12. 12, 22, till his Army was growne very great. For the time of David's aboad here Hebr: it is said ימים dayes and foure months, the Vulg. Lat. making nothing of the dayes, leaveth that out, and hath it onely foure monthz, and R. Solomon by dayes understandeth two dayes, as Lyra sheweth, but he saith, that by the word ימים are understood either naturall dayes, or a yeare or yeares, and thus rather he thinketh it is to be understood a yeare or two yeares and foure months, because ch. 29. Achish said to the other Princes of the Philistims, that David had bene with him many dayes, that is, a long time, wherein he had experience of his fidelity, and to expresse certainly a longer time, then foure months, he saith, these dayes or these yeares, so that the time of his aboad there, must needs be more then one yeare, that is, a yeare at the least and foure months of another yeare, and this may be further confirmed from ch. 1. 21. where the yearly sacrifice is called the sacrifice of dayes, and because it is put before the months here, as the greater number, whereas a lesser number is never wont to be put before a greater, as dayes before months, but contrariwise yeares and months before dayes, therefore Josephus erred, saying, he was there foure months and twenty dayes, and Vatablus foure months and certaine daies, and Kimbi seven months in the whole, which was the time betwixt the death of Samuel and of Saul, and the Sept. only foure months.

Then David went and invaded the Geshurites, Gezrites, and Amalekites, &c. Of the Geshurites weread Josh. 12. 5. that they dwelt at the first in Geshur in the land

R. Kimbi

Peter Martyr.

V. 4.

P. Martyr.

V. 5.

V. 6, 7.

Lyra.
Osiander.

Borrbem.

Junius.

Lyra.

V. 8.

V. 9.
V. 11.
V. 10.

Lyra.
P. Martyr.

Junius.

Josephus.

The Mystery.
Lyra.

Ag. 10.

land of Gilead, and of the Gezrites, Josh. 16. 3. that they dwelt in Gezer, belonging to Ephraim, but for feare of the people of Israel they removed and dwelt amongst the Amalekites, and when they now thought themselves safe from all enemies, David came upon them and destroyed them, and tooke their spoile, as he might well doe, because they were Canaanites adjudged long agoe to destruction. And in destroying these peoples, David went so far, that he spared neither man nor woman, the reason whereof is rendered v. 11. lest they should tell, what he did, whereas he dissembled to Achish v. 10. that his going was against the south of Judah, the Jerahmeelites and the Kenites, but if any of them had beene left alive, they would have discovered the contrary, and then happily Achish would have beene offended with him, because although they were none of the Philistims, yet it may be that they were in league with them, or under their tribute, as Lyra saith. For his dissimulation to the King, he cannot plainly be charged with lying, as Peter Martyr chargeth him, for those people dwelt on the south of Judah, and in places of right belonging to them, so that his answer was ambiguous, he might be understood either to have fought against Judah, or those peoples inhabiting upon the south of that Tribe, and Achish being willing, that he should fight against Judah, was easily brought to understand his speech accordingly, as Josephus saith, yet as Junius hath it, he declined some what from that simplicity, that ought to be in a good man through weaknesse, but he thought thus to give the better content to Achish, as indeed he did. Of the Jerahmeelites read 1 Chron. 2. 9, 25. they came of Jerahmeel, the first borne of Hezron, of the Tribe of Judah: of the Kenites, Judg. 1. 16.

Mystically by David leaving Judea and fleeing into the Philistims country, Christ was figured out, who fled or went by his ministers from the Jewes to the Gentiles, and the rooting out of errours in those places, where they came, by David's destroying of all, not suffering one to live, for by killing the subduing of the Gentiles to the faith by Peter was set forth.

CHAP. XXVIII.

V. 1, 2.

THE Philistims preparing to goe to battle against Israel, Achish telleth David that he should goe with him, and David doth not deny it, whereupon Achish said, that he would make him the keeper of his head for ever. Here David seemeth to have run into an unexcusable errour, because if he meant to fight against Israel, as he pretended, he should have holpen Infidels against beleivers, if not, he should have dealt falsely and fraudulently with his friend, that had received him into his protection. Lyra answereth, that David meant, as he said, to fight in the defence of Achish, and that herein he may be justified, either because Saul had broken some league entred into with the Philistims, for which it was just for them to fight against him, or because he had right unto the kingdom of Israel, and now that the Philistims were going to warre against Saul, if they prevailed, he might be in hope that Achish would be ready to helpe him to the foresaid kingdome, or lastly, because David meant onely to defend the person of the King. But the contrary to this last appeareth to be true, ch. 9. 8. that he meant to goe and fight against the enemies of Achish, that is, the Israelites; and for the second although the kingdome was promised him, yet he was not to seeke it by helping to destroy Saul and his men, but patiently to waite the Lords leisure, till that he should bring him to it. And for the first, although the Philistims might have a just quarrel against Saul, yet David ought not to have helped them, he being one of his Subjects. Wherefore the best solution is, that David meant not to fight against his brethren, nor yet to be false to Achish, but to depend upon Gods direction, who he hoped, would provide by some meanes, that he should not come to this battle, as indeed he did provide ch. 29. and therefore he made no promise to Achish, but answered him ambiguously, thou shalt see, what thy servant can doe, thus Martyr, Pellican.

Now Samuel was dead &c. as ch. 25. 1. and Saul had put all that had familiar spirits,

Peter Martyr.
Pellican.
Oslander.

Spirits, and the wizzards out of the land. This commemoration of Samuel's death is made againe here, because Saul sought to have Samuel brought againe unto him, Verſ. 11. that wee might know that hee, who there appeared was not the true Samuel, ſo Ofander, and his putting off the Wizzards out of the land in zeale of the Law, that his inconstancy and hypocriſie might appeare, in that hee being in diſtreſſe ſought to ſuch againe, as Junius: Lyra ſaith, that Saul pretended zeale of the Law, but was moved to put theſe to death becauſe they foretold that David ſhould bee King: And hee ſaith that Witches were ſuch as uſed mans blood and the touching of the dead, Wizzards only certaine words and charmes.

And the Philiftins gathered themſelves together, and pitched in Shunem, &c. and when Saul ſaw them, hee feared greatly and ſought to the Lord, but the Lord answered him not, neither by dreames, Urim, nor Prophet, the vulgar Latine neither by Priests, dreames nor Prophets, not by Priests, ſaith Lyra, for Saul had ſlaine them all, except Abiathar, that was with David; and by Prophets hee underſtandeth the Diſciples of Samuel, amongst whom Saul had ſometime prophesied. Whereas, 1 Chron. 10. 14. may ſeeme to bee contradictory to this, where it is ſaid, Saul died for his tranſgreſſion, and becauſe hee ſought unto Wizzards and enquired not of the Lord: Martyr answereth well, that hee ſought unto God for formalities ſake and in hypocriſie, not in truth being compunct for his finnes, for hee was not moved with any repentance for them, and this was accounted by God as no ſeeking to him, and therefore hee refuſed to answer him. For how little Religion was in Saul appeared in that hee tooke no care of the Arke to remove it from a private houſe in Kireath-jearim to ſome better place, hee ſlew the Priests, and perſecuted righteous David, and by and by ſought unto a Witch. Wherefore, when he enquired, hee was neglected, as unworthy of any answer from the Lord. Note, that they, who beare no reverence to the Priests of God, but exerciſe their malice againſt them, ſhall not in the day of their diſtreſſe have any comfort by them, nor by any other meanes, that they can uſe, that all may feare to touch Gods anointed or to doe his Prophets any harme, ſeeing if they doe, the greateſt hurt will redound to themſelves in the end. To answer by Urim was by the high Priett, who did weare the coſtly Ephod with the Vrim and Thummim in it, but now the Priests being all ſlaine, except one, that was fled to David, and the Ephod with him, how could Saul enquire hereby? Some ſay, that hee made another Ephod, which was applyed by ſome other inferiour Priett, ſome that hee ſent to Abiathar, that was with David, to enquire for him. But it is not neceſſary to underſtand, that he enquired by the Vrim, but wanting this hee could have no answer thereby, hee enquired then of ſuch Priests as hee had, but God made him no answer: So Martyr and Junius, ſee Verſ. 15. Touching the answers made by the Vrim, I have already ſpoken upon Exod. 28. 30. and have there alſo ſhewed what was meant by the Vrim put upon the Breſtplate, viz. a writing prepared by the Lord of theſe two words, and given to Moſes and by him ſattned to the Breſtplate. But ſome thinke, that nothing elſe was meant hereby, but the pretious ſtones upon the Breſtplate there mentioned, which were of extraordinary brightneſſe, as being prepared by God, becauſe it is called ſometime the pectorall of judgement, Exod. 28. 29. and ſometime the Vrim of judgement, Numb. 27. 21. and to conſult by Vrim, and to apply the Ephod, was all one, 1 Sam. 23. 9. ch. 30. 7. But I have ſhewed ſome reaſon againſt this, Exod. 28. 30. and whereas ſome thinke, that the Priett having the Breſtplate on was inſpired to give answers, that is not probable, becauſe ſo the answering by Vrim ſhould not have differed from the answers made by Prophets, but this was plainly a way of answering diſtinct from that, as here appeareth.

Then Saul enquired for a woman, who had a familiar ſpirit, that hee might goe to her, and hearing by his ſervants of one at Endor, hee diſguiſed himſelfe and went with two men unto her by night. Here two queſtions in generall offer themſelves. 1. What it was to have a familiar ſpirit, and what

V. 4. 56.

Peter Martyr.

Not.

Peter Martyr.
Junius.

Ofander.
P. Martyr.

V. 7.

Q<sup>n</sup>. 1.

Peter Martyr.

Ephes. 2.

Aug. in Ps. 77.

Q<sup>n</sup>. 2.August. Epist.
ad Pelicianum.

what power such had. 2. Whether Samuel indeed were made to appeare, or an evill spirit in his likenesse? For the first, this woman is called Babalath-Obb, the mistresse or dame of a familiar, because the witch is by the devill called dame, and Obb seemeth to set forth such a spirit, as they thought had power to raise the dead. Obob, by which name familiar spirits are called Levit. 19. 31. signifieth bottles, because they spake by them, as out of a bottle from their nether parts being filled with wind, see Levit. 19. 31. The Greeks call this woman Pythiassa, by a name derived from Apollo Pythius, who was so called from the Serpent Pythion, which hee killed. Some thinke, that there are no devils, as the Sadduces and Peripateticks, and that the strange things, which seeme to bee done by them are done by the secret and strange operation of nature, or by the phantasie of man, or by the constitution and temperature of the body. But some things have beene done, which exceed all such power, as to goe invisibly, for a dead image to speake in divers languages without learning them; and the Scriptures doe plainly testifie that there are spirits both good and bad. Now for the power and knowledge of evill spirits, whom Witches use, they can doe many strange things, when God permitteth them; for the Devils who were in the man possessed, that kept amongst the graves, gave him such strength, that hee could not bee bound with chaines of Iron, and of such force they were, that they carried an heard of Swine of 2000. suddenly into the Sea. And the Devill being permitted, raised a tempest, whereby the house was blowne downe, wherein Jobs children were, and hee made lightning come downe upon his cattell to consume them. Peter Martyr saith, that there are certaine men in Norway called Lapones, who have three knots in their beards, of which one being loosed a great tempest followeth in the Sea, the second being loosed, it increaseth, and upon loosing the third it rageth so, as if heaven and earth would goe together: and because of his working thus strangely in the ayre, the devill is called the Prince of the aire. For hee worketh in the wicked, saith Augustine, tanquam in propriis mancipiis, but to the godly hee can do nothing, except he be by God permitted, as a man may use his owne beast as hee will, but not another mans, unlesse hee giveth him leave. Tueria a vestall Virgin by the helpe of the devill carried water in a Sive, and Clandia drew a ship to shoare that stuck in the sand, which no humane force can doe; hee carried the body of Christ and set him upon a Pinnacle of the Temple; hee can use creatures as his instruments to speake as the Serpent to Evah, and the Image of fortune spake amongst the Romans. Moreover hee hath power to assume a body and therein to appeare, and to delude the senses, and so to doe many strange feats. For their knowledge, they are so subtle and acute, and of such long experience and agilitie in moving to places farre remote, and then instantly to returne againe, as that they can foretell many things to come, as being by them scene before, or gathered by observation, and long experience, or seeing into the causes of things. 2. God doth many things by the ministry of evill Angels for the punishment of the wicked, which they knew before by reason of this Commission given unto them, as the plagues of Egypt. 3. Hee knoweth some things by the propheties of Scripture, as Trismegistus is thought by St. Augustine to have foretold hereby unto Asclepius the ruine of Idols, learning it from the prophesie of Jeremiah; yet Satan is ignorant of things to come, so as that hee can speake hereof onely by conjecture. 1. Because there may sometimes bee the same signes, and yet not the same effects follow. 2. Because God sometimes altereth the course of nature, or worketh supernaturally. Moreover he is ignorant of the thoughts of mens hearts, 1 King. 8. 39. these are knowne onely to God.

Touching the second question; Some hold that it was not Samuel, that appeared, but the devill in his likenesse, and some that it was Samuel. But the first is generally followed by Christian Doctors, the other by the Rabbins of the Jewes. Saint Augustine is sometime for the one opinion, and sometime for the other. For the first, that it was an evill spirit appearing in the likenesse of Samuel, he saith, that God would not answer Saul by any Prophet living, and and therefore not by one dead, wherefore it was not the Prophet Samuel that here appeared and gave him answer, but a spectrun caused to appeare by the Devill. 2. This Samuel told Saul, that to morrow hee should bee with him, whereas he most probably dying desperately went to hell, and not to the place where true Samuel was. 3. Hee suffered himselfe to bee worshipped, which true Samuel would not have done. 4. If it were true Samuel, then hee must come forth either voluntarily, which it were inconvenient to affirme, because this would imply his consenting with the Witch, or against his will by magical power, but this cannot bee, because the devill hath no power over the Saints of God being dead. For the second, that it was the soule of Samuel indeed, hee saith, it might be so, either being brought by the devill, God permitting it for some hidden reason, as being permitted hee transported Christ to the pinnacle of the Temple; or being brought by God, the devill not being suffered at this time to worke, that he might foretell unto Saul his destruction at hand to his greater terrour now that he was dead, as hee had foretold his rejection from the Kingdome when hee was alive. And this is the more probable, because when Balaam went for an answer, God would not suffer the evill spirit to answer him, as Lyra saith: All Catholick Doctors hold, but a good Angell contrary to his and the will of Balaam, and yet nothing was herein done to credit the art magick, but to hinder the course thereof; so likewise, as the glosse hath it upon; Esay 29. Samuel was called forth by a divine power to give answer to Saul contrary to his will; and for proove of this, that it was Samuel, it is first said, that the sacred history calleth him Samuel divers times, which it would not have done, if it had beene an evill spirit in his likenesse, for great irreverence should thus have beene done to Samuel, so worthy a Prophet. 2. Ecclesiast. 46. 20. after his death Samuel prophesied and shewed the King his end, and lifted up his voyce in Prophesie. 3. He prophesied truly of the overthrow of Sauls Army the day following, and of his death and his sonnes, which the devill could not doe, for hee is a lyer and the father of lies. And to this doth Lyra most incline, answering the reasons brought against it, the first by saying, that although God would not answer Saul by any Prophet living, yet there was great reason of answering by Samuel who was dead, because Samuel was the onely Prophet, whom God had sent unto Saul both to make him King to direct him and to threaten him, so that having answer from him at this time, hee could not but bee out of all hope of escaping Gods judgements any longer, that if there were any grace in him, hee might prepare to die, and so not dye eternally, 2. Samuel did not meane, that Saul and his sonnes should bee in the same place where he was, the next day, by saying, to morrow thou and thy sonnes shall bee with mee, but onely that they should bee in the state of the dead: for although some went into the place of torment, yet Jonathan being a good man was undoubtedly saved, and therefore the place to which they all went, could not be meant. 3. Samuel did not suffer himselfe to bee otherwise worshipped, then the Prophet Nathan afterwards worshipped David when hee went in unto him. 4. It may bee gathered from that which hath been already said, that not the Witch, but God caused Samuel to come forth, when as the Witch called forth an evill spirit, whom God at this time prohibited to appeare. He answereth also to the argument brought to prove him to bee true Samuel: to the first and second, that an evill spirit in appearance like Samuel might be called Samuel, without doing him any wrong, as an Image is called by the name of him, whom it representeth. To the third, that the Devill can sometimes foretell things truly, viz. being revealed from God unto him, as this of Sauls death might bee. But that in Ecclesiastes true Samuel is meant is plain, and how Satan should come to have the death not onely of Saul, but of his sonnes also revealed unto him, I cannot see, and therefore I leave it still to be considered by the judicious, whether it was not true Samuel, not called forth by the Witch, but sent of God.

For this woman, to whom Saul sought, the Rabbins hold that shee was Abners mother, and therefore spared by Saul, when all other Witches were cut off, but

Lyra.

Iohn. 38.

Peter Martyr.

Iosh. 17. 11.
H B Patriark
travails.

Lyra.

V. 9, 10.

V. 12.

Pellican.

P. Martyr.

Lyra.

V. 13, 14.

P. Martyr.

Vatablus.

Josephus.

Lyra.

V. 15.

V. 16, 17.

but the contrary appeareth because she feared to be made knowne for the danger of being put to death, v. 9, 10. so that it was not through any partiality in Saul to wards her, that she escaped, but through the negligence of officers used to the rooting out of all such. Endor, where this Witch lived, was a City of the Manassites, on the other side of Jordan, foure miles from mount Gelboas. Hither Saul came disguised with two men onely, that is, say the Hebrewes, Abner, and Amasa, and he disguised himselfe, because otherwise the woman would have feared to exercise her diabolicall art, and because he would not have it knowne, that he went to such a woman. When he was come, shee recounted to him, how Saul had cut off all Witches and Wizzards, and therefore would doe nothing, till that he had sworne unto her to conceale her. But then having conjured, she saw Samuel and cryed out, that he had deceived her, for now shee knew him to be Saul. Whereas Saul desired her to bring Samuel to him, some thinke, that he did not beleve it to be in her power to raise up Samuel, but some likenesse of him, but I rather hold with those, that thinke Saul to have beene so blinded with error, that he beleved that shee could raise him up, for otherwise he would never have mentioned him; but some spirit, with whom he might have consulted, according to that, scilicet cum superos nequeo, Acherontem movebo. But how did the woman know him to be Saul now, which shee knew not before? The Rabbins generally say, that when any came up before others, they came with their feet forward, but when before a King, with their head first appearing for reverence, but Lyra and others thinke rather, that the party appearing told her that it was Saul. Then Saul asked her what shee saw, and shee said Gods ascending out of the earth, then he asking the forme, shee said, he was an old man covered with a mantle, whereby Saul knew that it was Samuel, and bowed before him to the ground. Hereby it seemeth that the woman onely did see the apparition, but Saul saw nothing; but this faith Martyr, was onely at the first, the Witch being above in a private chamber, for such will be alone, when they doe their feates, but by and by, Saul was admitted in, to conferre with Samuel and shee went out, as may be gathered v. 21. I thinke rather with Vatablus, that Saul onely heard Samuels words, but saw not, the Witch did see, but heard not, and Sauls servants neither saw nor heard, for if they had heard that which was said, they would have perswaded him to absent himselfe from that warre, and so to keepe out of the danger; he did reverence upon her relation, conceiving that Samuel was there, and if he had seene him afterwards being brought in, shee should not have needed to describe him unto Saul, but to bid him come in and see, neither can it be gathered from the words, v. 21. that he was in a chamber alone, when Samuel spake unto him, but somewhat remote in the same roome from the woman, that shee might not heare, shee was in secretario faith the Glosse, in a close place in the roome busie about her conjuration. Whereas shee said, shee saw Gods, the Rabbins saigne that Samuel and Moses also appeared, but this is contrary to the Text, of what forme is he? as speaking of one; the word Elohim in the plurall, then is used signifying Gods, to denote one excellent person. He was covered with a mantle, for this was proper to judges and prophets, although Josephus saith, it was a priestly garment, but without reason, seeing Samuel was no Priest. Hereby Saul conceived him to be Samuel, faith Lyra, because Religious men use to be buried in their habit, which they used living, and so it is likely was Samuel.

He comming forth first reproveth Saul for disquieting him, who excuseth it by the great straights, wherein he was, and because he could have no answer either by Prophets or dreames, for the Lord had forsaken him; where it is to be noted, that he speaketh not of the Urin, whereby is implied, that he inquired not by it, although it was before mentioned as one of the three wayes of Gods answering.

Then Samuel replied, why dost thou aske of me, seeing God hath forsaken thee, and v. 17. and the Lord hath done to him, as he speake by me, &c. Here because the person is changed, hath done to him, not to thee, a question may be made, whom Sa*muel* meaneth? Junius saith, he hath done to himselfe, that is, disposed of his counsell, as he spake by me. Borrbem, he hath done to him, that is to Saul, but the Chalde be it, he hath done to David, of the translating of the kingdome to whom he speaketh for further explanation in the next words, so likewise Josephus, the Vulg. Lat. going from the Hebr. hath it, hath done to thee.

mmel

Then he telleth him, that the Lord would deliver Israel into the hands of the Philistims, and that to morrow, he and his sonnes should be with him. Whereupon Kimbi gathereth, that Saul was saved because he could not otherwise be with Samuel, and Josephus praiseth him, as fighting for his country, when certaine death was before his face. But this was onely a civill vertue such as hath beene found in some heathens, as the Decii and Curii amongst the Romans. And touching the saving of his soule, as was said before, there can be little hope, considering the fearefull end that he came unto. For his being with Samuel, who was dead, and sleeping in the grave, nothing else was meant hereby, but that they should be dead, as he was. For it is nothing likely, that Samuel sent to fill Saul altogether with terrour for his wickednesse, should comfort him with so great a consolation, of being in heaven with him. For Gods delivering of Israel into the hands of the Philistims for Sauls wickednesse, it was just with God so to doe; because they did helpe him on in his wicked courses, as wee may see in Doeg and the Ziphims, Nabal, &c.

Saul hearing this, fell downe all along through feare and astonishment, and it is shewed, that he was the more faint, and so lesse able to beare this evill tidings, because he was fasting, he had eaten nothing all that day, and all that night; happily, saith Martyr, because such as came to enquire of witches were to come fasting, as God will be sought to by fasting and prayer. But feare chiefly tooke away his strength, the spirits and bloud returning to the heart, and so the Members of the body left destitute of all strength. And this is all the comfort, that they are like to have, that seeke to witches and wizzards in the time of their distresse.

The woman seeing him thus feeble offereth him food, but he refused to eate, yet upon the importunity of his servants joyning with her, after that a calfe was killed and made ready and bread, both he and they did eate. Josephus for this her humanity towards Saul, the utter enemy of all that were of her profession, doth greatly commend her: but she might be thus carefull about him, lest if he should have dyed there, shee should have been called in question for his death: So Martyr.

Morally we may note here, how Saul was punished in his kinde, he had often put David in feare by going out unjustly against him, therefore now the Philistims are brought against him, and put him in great feare, in what kinde a man sinneth, in the same let him expect to be punished. Againe Saul had men and munition to resist the Philistims, as at other times, when he did manfully against them, but now his courage faileth him, whence came this, but from his sinnes, and because he could by no meanes have any comfort from God? Men and munition then are nothing in the day of battle, if our sinnes rise up against us, and so the light of Gods countenance be turned away from us.

CHAP. XXIX.

NOW the Philistims gathered all their Armies together to Aphek, and the Israelites pitched by a fountaine in Jezreel. Before in ch. 28. 5. it is said, that the Philistims, pitched in Shunem and Israel in mount Gilboa. Now Shunem was in the borders of Issachar, Iosb. 19. 18. and Aphek of Asher, Iosb. 19. 30. But these two Tribes lay the one next unto the other, and so these places were neare together, and neare to Shunem was Jezreel, being therefore named together Iosb. 19. 18. and neare to the valley of Jezreel, where this fountaine was, were the mountaines of Gelboab, Junius. Although then new places be named, yet there was no remove of the Armies, but because these places were contiguous, the Armies of the Philistims overspreading Shunem, and Aphek, and

Junius.
Borrbem.

Chald. Paraphr.

V. 19.

D. Kimbi.
Josephus.

1 Sam. 31.

Lyra.

V. 20.

Peter Martyr.

V. 21. 22. 23.
24.
Josephus.

Peter Martyr.
Note.

V. 1.

Junius.

and the Israelites Gelboab to the valley of Jezreel, sometime one is named and sometime another.

V. 2, 3.

V. 4, 5.

Lysa.

David coming with his men with Achish in the rereward, the Lords of the Philistims were offended, and would not suffer the Hebrewes to goe with them to battle, although Achish pleaded for David and justified him against their jealousies, saying, that he had bene with him many dayes, &c. whereupon they that hold David to have bene onely foure months in the Philistims country, say that Achish spake of a longer time, then he had bene there, to pacifie the other Princes the more. It was not without a singular providence, that the Princes had David and his men in such suspition, for by this meanes, he was kept both from fighting against his country, and returned opportunely to rescue Ziklag in his absence invaded by the Amalekites, and got much prey, wherewith he made him many friends for the better obtaining of the kingdom of Israel after Sauls death. And thus also he destroyed the rest of the Amalekites, who had before escaped Sauls hands.

V. 6.

P. Martyr.

Achish being overcome by the importunity of the other Princes, saith unto David, as the Lord liveth thou hast bene upright, &c. He being sorry, that they had David in suspition, which he thought would be grievous to him to heare of, lenified the matter as well as he could, by professing that he thought exceedingly well of him, but the Princes favoured him not, and therefore he willed him to returne to his place. Thus saith Martyr, even Kings are forced oft times to doe otherwise then they would by their Subjects, as David afterwards to tolerate Joab, Darius to deliver Daniel to be cast into the Lions den, Zedechiab touching Jeremiah said to his Princes, that he could deny nothing unto them; and Sylla, Cesar, and Marinus, yeilded to many things against their wills at the importunity of their Souldiers: whereby he seemeth to have taken Achish to be King over all the other Princes, but they were indeed all reguli, or petty Kings, being sometime therefore called Lords, 1 Sam. 6. 4. 17. and Gath, of which Achish is said here to be King, is not named first, as the principall, but in the fourth place. But whereas Achish saith, as the Lord liveth, it may be demanded, how he being an Idolater, knew the Lord to swear by him, and specially to speake of him by the name Jebovab? Ans. This was no singular thing in him, for ch. 6. 2. the Philistims doe generally thus speak of God, and Peter Martyr thinketh, that they had the knowledge of this name ever since the time of Abraham, Isaack, and Jacob, who lived in that country, of whom they could not but heare him often spoken of. But although they had not the knowledge of this name so long agoe, they might learne it of the Israelites, and take up this phrase, when they would speake seriously of God after their manner, seeing they lived so neare unto them. Whereas Achish is said here to have remitted David to Ziklag, Josephus saith, that he sent him to defend his borders from the incursions of enemies in the time of his absence. But herein he was mistaken, for he went but to his place, v. 4. that is, Ziklag, the place by King Achish assigned unto him.

V. 8.

Borrbans.

Osiander.

P. Martyr.

David hearing this seemed to take it heavily that hee might not be trusted to goe with the King to fight against his enemies, wherein some justifie him, as if he spake as he thought, having it still in his minde, that he would doe, when hee came to the battaile, as God should direct him, either by not fighting or fighting: some, that he spake thus out of flattery to hold Achish his favour still, but justifying him, because he was now in such a case, that he was necessarily enforced to dissemble: Lastly some hold, that he sinned in thus dissembling for a worldly advantage. For my part, I dare not hold with them, that tax David as sinning in this, but rather with those that justifie him, for he submitted himself wholly to Gods guidance and direction, as before when they first set out, ch. 28. It was not necessary for him to discover the inward thoughts of his heart to Achish, that he had some hope all this while, that if it were displeasing to God, that he should goe to fight against his brethren, he would provide by some meanes to hinder his progresse, this he might without sinning keepe to himselfe, and now that he was hindered, how glad he was of this this accident, and yet expostulate with Achish for not suffering him to goe forward, as if he suspected his fidelity, for if he had gone on, he meant not to be unfaithfull to him. Therefore when he saith, that I may not goe to fight against the enemies of the Lord my King, it was, as if he had further added, which I would have beene ready to doe, if it had beene Gods will that I should, which now I finde it is not, by reason of this obstacle, which could not have happened but by his speciall providence.

Achish replied, that David was in his sight as an angell of God, &c. so that we see, the heathen were not without all knowledge of God and of his messengers the holy Angels, whom they held to be excellent creatures, as we may gather from this that he likened David to an Angell, when he would most highly commend him, which sheweth them to be the more unexcusable in their Idolatry, as Saint Paul reasoneth Rom. 1. 19. He spake thus to comfort David, whatsoever the other Princes thought of him, and had him in suspicion, yet he did highly esteeme of him, as a man sent unto him by God, lest being discouraged he should thinke of leaving his country againe and going to some other place. But because the Princes favoured him not he bade him to depart with his Masters servants earely in the morning, lest happily they seeing him not gone should in wrath oppresse him with their forces, or lay any ambush for him in the way, so Peter Martyr. And he calleth them his Masters men because they were Sau's his Masters subjects.

Then David with his men departed into the Philistims country, and the Philistims went up to Jezreel, that is, to the place where the Campe of the Israelites lay, to fight with them, and by this meanes David was not amongst them when Saul was slaine, but retired to a more fit place for the Israelites to repaire unto him to make him King, as is shewed 1 Chron. 12. 19, 20, 21.

CHAP. XXX.

DAVID comming backe to Ziklag upon the third day found it spoiled and burnt with fire, and their Wives and Children carryed all away, but not one killed. Here David might plainly see the hand of God chastising him, saith Martyr, for offering to goe with Achish against Israel, but rather he might see the singular providence of God, in that he was caused so speedily to returne from an unjust warre that he was towards, to a just warre for the rooting out of the rest of the Amalekites, whom Saul had formerly not slaine, when he was sent against them. These Amalekites did beare a deadly hatred against the Israelites even from their first comming out of Egypt, for which cause Saul was sent against them to destroy them all, and slew all that he could come by, except Agag the King, and David, ch. 27. 8. made another destruction of them more lately, wherefore their malice being now much increased, they tooke this opportunity, when all the men were gone out of Ziklag, to come and doe these Israelites all the despight that they could. But whereas David had slaine of their people in those parts that he invaded every living soule, both of man, woman, and childe, they contrariwise slew none, a divine power certainly overruling them herein, in favour to David, that he might recover them all againe alive. But with them doubtlesse covetousnesse wrought herein, they preserved all with an intent to sell them.

When David and the men with him saw, what had beene done, they first wept exceedingly, and then the people were ready to stone him, because he had beene no more provident to leave some behinde to defend the City, but he comforted himselfe in his God. David was now in a great straight, by reason of his many enemies, Saul, the Philistims, Amalekites, and his owne men, but even now he shewed great strength of faith, he comforted himselfe in God, who he knew, would assuredly preserve him to raigne over Israel, as he had promised. And he called God his God, for the great experience that he in particular

V. 9, 10.

Peter Martyr.

V. 11.

V. 1.

Exod. 17.

1 Sam. 15.

V. 4.

Peter Martyr.

ticular had of his goodnesse, so Paul Rom. 1. 8. I thanke my God, Gal. 2. 20. and whereas the faithfull soule calleth Christ, my well beloved, in the Canticles, Bernard, uniuersis fratribus dominum quodan sibi proprietate vendicat in dilectionem. Mirum hoc videtur sed verum, animam Deum videntem, haud secus videre, quam si sola videatur a Deo.

Bernard noteth, that she challenged the Lord of the universe by a certaine kinde of propriety for her beloved, which is wonderfull, but it is true, the soule seeth the seeing God no otherwise, then as if shee alone were seene of God. So particular is the faith of a true beleever against the doctrine of the Romanists, who take it for presumption to have a particular assurance of Gods grace and favour. In that David wept, note against the Stoicks, that passion is incident to wise men, and that such doe not upon any accident refraine from changing so much as their countenance, as they hold, for this 'twere to be a stocke without life, and sense, and not a man.

V. 7.

V. 8.

David being in this straight, consulteth with God by the Ephod and high-priest Abiathar; how this was done see Exod 28. 30. then the Lord answered, that he should pursue after the enemies and recover all, whereby it seemeth, that he answered by voice.

V. 9. 10. &c.

Then David hastened after them with his 600 men and came to the brooke Besor, where 200 that were faint, were left behinde, and he with 400 went on, and finding a young man an Egyptian almost dead with hunger, when by giving him to eate, he was revived, they were by him brought to the Amalekites, who were making merry with their great prey, and so suddenly destroyed by David and his men, coming unexpectedly upon them, all but 400, that escaped by fleeing away upon Camels, and all the prey was recovered, which they had taken both out of Judah, and from Ziklag, and they missed nothing of all that they had lost. v. 17. it is said, that David smote them from the twilight till the evening of the next day, he spent so long a time, saith Lyra, in slaying them, because many ranne away and some were hidden, so that they could no sooner finde them out. Whereas David is now said to have consulted with the Lord, but not before, when he came first to Achish, when he went out to Warre upon the Amalekites and Gezites, nor when he went with Achish to battle, Martyr noteth that till he was in great affliction he neglected his duty, and proceeded onely upon his owne head, but now in his distresse he was humbled and sought to God, and he answered him, when as he had refused to answer Saul, of which see the cause, cb. 28. 6. And in that being encouraged by the Divine Oracle he pursued after the Amalekites, and although in the way 200 of his men were spent so, as that they could goe no further, yet he proceeded thence onely with 400. that his faith was strong. For he doubted not even with these, seeing he had Gods promise to get the victory.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Touching the servant, an Egyptian found in the way, it is said that his master left him, because hee was sicke, there to perish with famin; this was a cruell part in his matter, and contrary to that which in common humanity hee ought to have done. The Centurion having a servant sicke sought with all diligence to have him healed, and so ought this mans master to have provided better for him, and to have put him into some Waggon, wherein other things were carried, or upon some Beast, especially having time and leysure so to doe, seeing no enemy yet pursued after them. But for this his inhumanity hee went not unpunished, the servant thus cruelly dealt withall, and left not like a man, but a beast, became the overthrow of the whole Army: and let all masters, that deale cruelly with their poore Servants, not looke to escape Gods revenging hand, who is the Patron of the distressed, and hath shewed his care, that Servants should not be cruelly used by divers Laws made in their behalfe, Exod. 22. Levit. 25. 39. see also Ier. 34. Also the Roman Laws did much favour servants, as in Digest. leg. 2. let the servant, that is left of his master in his sicknesse goe out free, because hee is then forsaken, when hee ought specially to be helped, againe lege ultima pro derelicto, if any master denyeth food unto his servant and another supplyeth him with food, hee shall thence

Mat. 8. 5.

Note.

Servus in gravi morbo dimissus a domino liber esto.

Si herus negaverit servo suo alimentum & alius suppeditet, sit occupatus.

thence forth bee his servant. But it may bee doubted here, whether David did well in seeking to make a servant to become an instrument to betray his Master. Sol. He was now no longer the Amalekites servant, but David, who had taken him and saved his life, and by his old master hee was quite put off, wherefore hee might well use his helpe to effect that the more speedily, which God had promised him, as taking him to bee an instrument prepared of God in the way to direct him, who otherwise might have wandred with his men about uncertainly. For *David*s killing of all the Amalekites, and sparing none, he may seeme herein to have dealt too cruelly, especially seeing they had bene more favourable to their wives and children, and killed none of them. But forso much as the Amalekites were a people adjudged to destruction, he may well be justified in thus doing, and for their sparing of the Israelites wives and children, it was not done, as was shewed before, out of mercy, but covetousnesse to make money of them.

For the time, that David was killing and slaying, the Vulgar Latin hath it, from the evening to the evening of the next day, the Sept. from the morning to the evening and so untill the next day. Hebr. from the twilight and unto the evening of their morrow, that is, as Pagninus explaineth it, untill the evening of the day after these two twilights. Iosephus saith, it was but from dinner time, till the night of the same day, but that cannot bee, seeing it is said, from the twilight, &c. and I am sure they could not be said to bee at dinner so soone in the morning. Iunius most probably, from the twilight of their morrow, that is, the twilight of the day after that, wherein David and his men set forth to pursue them, till the evening, so that it was not two dayes together that they were making this slaughter (for neither could their strength have held out so to doe, neither would the darke of the night have permitted them) but one whole day. Whereas they are said to have bene found eating and drinking, it is to bee thought that this being so early in the morning was done riotously, they having continued banquetting and playing all the night, had not yet broken off, even when the day began to dawne the next day.

David did not onely recover all that was lost, as God had promised him, but tooke also the Amalekites flockes and herds and drove them, as it were, in triumph before their owne cattle, saying, this is *David*s prey, thus ascribing the victory to him to his greater honour, as before they had laid all the fault upon him, and were ready to stone him. If it bee doubted, whether *David*s fact in carrying the cattle of the Amalekites were justifiable or not, because Saul was reprov'd for sparing any thing alive of theirs; It is answered, that David had no charge to the contrary, but Saul had, which made it a sinne in him, but none in David. Moreover, these cattle had bene formerly taken by the Amalekites out of Judab, and therefore were stolne goods, wherefore David might well take them from the robbers, so Pellican: but if so, hee ought rather to have restored them, as Abraham did the goods recovered to the Sodomites. See here the difference betwixt the godly and the wicked, these begin in sorrow, as David and his men, but end in joy, and the greater his extremity was, for that even his owne men were against him, the more is the honour now done unto him by them to make him amends by intituling him to all the prey, that was gotten, but the wicked have joyfull beginnings, and end miserably, as the Amalekites, when they looked for nothing lesse.

David after this approaching towards the place, where he left the foresaid 200. men, they came out to meete him and to congratulate this great victory, and hee courteously saluted them, but some conspired not to let them have any part of the prey, yet the goodnesse of David was such, as that hee would have it divided amongst them also, because they stayed and kept the stuffe, and he made it a law in Israel, that it should alwayes after be done so, such as stayed by the stuffe, and carriages to keepe them, should have part of the spoiles taken, as well as they that went to warre. Which law although it was now first made, yet the foundation of it was laid long before in *Abraham*s time, who would have his confederates, Eshol, and Mamre, and Aner to take their parts, although

V. 17.

Pagninus.Iosephus.
Iunius.

V. 19, 20.

1 Sam. 15.

*P. Martyr.Pellican.*Gen. 14.
Note.

V. 21.

Lyra.

as it is thought, they were not in the battaile, but stayed to keepe his goods at home, and the like was done touching the spoile taken from the Midianites, Numb. 31. by Moses, and afterwards, 2 Maccab. 8. 28. And equity required, that it should bee so, because they kept what they had before from enemies, that might otherwise have come and taken it away, whilst their brethren went to recover more, and they stayed not behinde, because unwilling to goe, but because they were faint and weary, yet it is not to be thought, but that they who went to the warre, had most as their paines were greatest, as was done, Numb. 31.

V. 26.

Peter Martyr.

Bortheus.

Pellican,

Junius.

Willet.

Then David sent a present of the spoiles, which he had taken, to all his friends in Judah, even to 13. severall places, where he and his men were used to haunt, Josephus saith, to all parts of Judah, but that agreeth not with this. To some parts he was much beholding for relieving him and harbouring him when hee lurked amongst them for feare of Saul, and therefore having now wherewithall to shew his thankfulness hee doth it by sending presents unto them; and by this meanes also their affections might bee so stirred up towards him, as that, when Saul should dye, they would be the more ready to bring him in to bee King, as indeed they did. And unto these Pellican addeth another reason, viz. because a great part of this booty was taken from the men of Judah, wherefore equity required, that some restitution should be made unto them againe. The places, to which, were 1. Bethel, Junius, the house of God, that is, to the Tabernacle in Kireath-jearim, which is called Bethel or the house of God, all others take Bethel for the proper name of a City here. Willet reasoneth for that of Junim, 1. Because it is not unlikely, that David would bee unthankfull to God. But first and chiefly send a present unto him, by whom hee had obtained this victory. 2. Because the word Bethel is thus used 1 Sam. 7. 16. ch. 10. 3. Lastly, the City Bethel was not in Judah, but in Ephraim, Josh. 16. 2. and David sent onely to Judah, and Kireath-jearim, otherwise called Kireath-baal, belonged to Judah, Josh. 15. 60. For the City Corbashaan, v. 30. which, Junius thinketh, was Hushan mentioned, Josh. 19. 7. although it belonged to Simcon, yet it was a City of the Tribe of Judah. All the rest belonged to Judah, Ramoth, Josh. 19. 8. Jattir, Josh. 15. 47. Haror, Josh. 13. 16. Siphmuth, Numb. 34. Eshtemo, Josh. 15. 49. of the Jerameelites, see before Ch. 27. 10. of the Kenites, Judg. 1. 16. Hormah, Judg. 1. 17.

CHAP. XXXI.

V. I.

Iosephus.

Nep.

Peter Martyr.

Romi 5.

1 Cor. 11. 32.

Lyra.

THE Philistims fight against the Israelites, and they flee before them and are slaine, the three sons of Saul, and all his servants, v. 6. and Saul being wounded and in danger killed himselfe, and after him his Armour-bearer. Iosephus noteth that this was done the same day, that David triumphed for his victory over the Amalekites, so that the godly persecuted was comforted & the wicked persecuter at length destroyed for his wickednes: which may serve to arme al the godly with patience, in their greatest sufferings, and to terrifie their wicked enemies. Touching the slaughter of Jonathan, who was a good man, happily saith Martyr, if he had lived, God saw that his heart might afterwards have bene turned from David, and therefore he suffered him to be cut off to prevent it, yet he being good, could not dye evill, and it is not to be doubted, but that although he lost this life, yet he was received to everlasting life. The sonnes of Saul are first slaine to aggravate his sorrow, and by this example wicked parents may see how they bring Gods judgements not onely upon themselves, but upon their posterity also, upon the best of whom God may justly bring his judgements, because all are sinners and so subject to death, but the godly being thus judged in this world are saved in the world to come. Touching Saul and his armour-bearer killing themselves, Lyra saith, it is commonly held, that his armour-bearer was Doig, whom all the Hebrewes judge to have dyed in hune, and so to have perished everlastingly, because he slew himselfe

selfe, lest surviving he should come into Dauids hands, and so be put to a more ignominious death: but that Saul was saved, although he dyed corporally for his sinnes and lost his kingdome here, because although selfe-murther be damnable, when it is done out of a respect to a mans selfe to avoid a more ignominious or painefull death, or to be rid out of the miseries of this world, or inward troubles oppressing, yet if respect be herein had to Gods honour to prevent greater dishonour doing to him by the abuse of his servant living, it is no sinne, and so doth not indanger the soule everlastingly, for thus Sampson slew himselfe, and Rafius 2 Maccab. 14. and certaine godly women, of whom Saint Augustine speaketh, lest comming into the power of the barbarous they should be defiled to Gods greater dishonour, yet he justifieth them not from all fault herein, unlesse they did it by any instinct from God: and because Saul repented him of his sinnes, and patiently submitted himselfe to beare his punishment, they conclude that he was moved by an instinct in this killing of himselfe, and because he repented and patiently submitted to beare his punishment, he was saved. And as an argument of his patience they alledged his feeding to strengthen himselfe to goe to this battle and hastening thither, although he knew certainly that he should dye there, neither did he admonish any of his sonnes to withdraw themselves out of the danger, which argueth that he submitted not onely to beare Gods judgements in himselfe, but also in his children, and he had in killing himselfe respect to Gods honour, for he said, lest these uncircumcised come and thrust me through, and abuse me, which abuse he thought being done to him, who was by God made Captaine over his people, would have redounded more to Gods dishonour. Moreover they argue from the saying of Samuel, to morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me, therefore in a blessed condition: and lastly because at the first Saul was commended to be good and elect, & that there was none better then he amongst all the people: thus the Hebrewes, but the common opinion of Christian Doctors, saith Lyra, is, that Saul was damned, because 1 Chr. 10. 13. it is said that he slew him for his transgression, and because he enquired of a Witch, and not of the Lord, whence it may be gathered, that all which hath been said to prove Saul repentant at the last is vaine. For if he sought not to the Lord, but to the Devil, he feared not, nor trusted in the Lord, and so could not by true repentance turne unto him to be saved. And whereas his patient submitting of himselfe to beare the judgement, which was denounced, is alledged, this was so farre from justifying him, as it concludeth him the more in fault, because it is forbidden not only to seeke to such as have familiar spirits but to beleieve them, and if Saul beleaved that which he heard by meanes of such a one, he did hereby increase his sin, and whatsoever he did hereupon could not be good, as coming from an evill cause, for that which is alledged of Samue's speech unto him, it hath been already answered, and whereas before he was commended for good, see what hath bin said upon that passage, 1 Sam. 9. 2. For the examples brought of Sampson and Rafius, &c. who killed themselves, it is answered, that they did it by an instinct from Gods spirit, as may be gathered, because Sampson was often stirred up by the Spirit, and if at that time when he pulled downe the house he had not, it had beene impossible for him to doe it; and for Rafius and the godly women, that killed themselves, they were alwayes of a virtuous life, but Saul of a wicked, as cb. 14. whithersoever he went, he did wickedly, and in the law it is a maxim, qui semel bonus, semper presumitur esse bonus, and contrariwise, qui semel malus, semper presumitur esse malus, and therefore whatsoever may be said in the defence of them, the like cannot be said of Saul, he had long traded in abominable wickednesses, and therefore most probably the evill spirit, whereby he was carried at other times, wrought with him now also to make him commit this his last sinne of selfe-murther, thus Borrbauus, Osiander, and Mar-tyr. The Devil to whom he sought, through Gods just judgement, stirred him up to dye thus desperately, so Mar. Antonius, amongst the Romans, when he had first required his armour-bearer Eras to kill him, fell upon his owne sword. Saul had put the priests of God to the sword most unjustly and the

Aug. de Civit. l. 1. cap. 17.

1 Sam. 9. 2.

Borrbauus, Osi-
ander, Marayr.

Pellican.
P. Martyr.

Qu.

Willet.

Non recipio tales animas quæ me nolente exierunt e corpore

th e Gibeonites, and he sought by all meanes to kill David, therefore God left him and would not vouchsafe to direct him any more, and left him to Satan, by whose instigation he sought to a Witch, and so was driven by the same sword miserably to end his owne life. Wherefore it is strange that Pellican should speake of him, as offering himselfe up in sacrifice to God, Martyr much better, seeing his reprobation is not plainly determined in holy Scripture, leaveth it to his judgement, who alone shall judge us all. If it be demanded, whether there be any hope of their salvation, that in any case kill themselves: It is answered, that it is a fact altogether unlawfull in any case, except, as hath bene already said, a man be moved hereunto by the instinct of the Spirit, as Sampson. 1. Because it is expressly forbidden, Com. 6. for if the killing of another man be here forbidden, much more of a mans selfe, because this is more unnaturall. 2. A man by killing himselfe goeth out of his station without command from God, that set him here, and so committeth a capitall offence, as a Souldier that goeth out of his station, without order from his General, so Plato. Therefore Hierome well speaketh hereupon in the person of God, I receive not such soules, as against my will went out of their bodies. 3. Neither did our Lord bid his disciples to use any such meanes to ridde themselves out of their troubles, but when they were persecuted in one City to flee into another, neither did any holy man, that we read of in Scripture, ever use this meanes, as Josiph, Moses, David, Job, or Josiah. 4. The heathen Athenians did so abhorre from this sinne, that they made a Law, that such should lose all their goods and not be buried in the fields of Athens. And indeed it sheweth a great deale of pusillanimity and basenesse of minde, and not any valour, in that such have not the courage to endure the misery, or shame happening unto them; and the judgement of our Church touching them, may easily appeare in that they are not admitted to Christian buriall, nor in any private place, but in high-ways, the common receptacle of dead dogs, and other carrion. If it be demanded, whether those vertuous women, who killed themselves to prevent sinne, are not to bee thought to bee in any better case, as the Virgine Pellagia, so much commended by Saint Ambrose, and that godly Matron, who being in the hands of Maxentius, desired leave to goe aside and tire herselfe, but went and killed her selfe. It is answered, that through the grace of God working in them, they might repent after the deadly blow given, and so be saved. As for others who being wearied with the tediousnesse of temptation kill themselves, their case seemeth to be more desperate and dangerous, because through the instigation of the evill spirit they doe this last tragicall unnaturall act towards themselves.

V. 8, 9.

1 Sam. 54. 17.

Note.

Saul being dead and his body found by the Philistims, they cut off his head and sent to publish it in the house of their Idols, amongst the people, and they put his Armour in the house of Asheroth, and fastened his body to the wall of Bethshan. His head was not onely carryed about, but put in the Temple of Dagon, 1 Chron. 10. 10. as his armour in the house of Asheroth; there it is, in the house of their Gods, but the word Asheroth is plurall, and therefore may so be rendred, see Judg. 2. 13. This was done partly to be revenged for the cutting off of Goliath's head by David, and partly in way of ascribing this victory to their Idols, as David set up Goliath's head in Jerusalem, thus ascribing his victory to God, and his armour it seemeth was put in the Tabernacle of the Lord, ch. 21. 9. Thus an Idolatrous people triumpheth now over God, as it were, and his chosen one, as if their Idols had bene more potent, and God suffered this dishonour for a time, that he might punish Saul's horrible sinnes: where-by wee may see, how he is set upon the punishment of sinne, that wee all may bee deterred from sinne hereby.

For these words, and fastened his body to the wall of Bethshan, the Vulg. Lat. hath it, hanged his body on the wall of Bethshan, 2 Sam. 21. 12. He and his sons are said to have bene in the street of Bethshan, and howsoever his body onely is here spoken of, yet it is to be understood, that his sonnes bodies were so served also, because in this ch. 2. 12. the men of Jabesh are said to have taken away not onely his body but also the bodies of his sonnes from the wall of Bethshan. Some thinke that they were hanged in the street neare the wall, but it is more probable upon the wall, because in the street it could not so conveniently have beene done for troubling the passage, and yet it might well afterwards be said that they were taken from the street of Bethshan, because the wall was an appurtenance of the street. Thus the greatest ignominy was done to Saul and his sonnes that might be, deservedly indeed on Sauls part, but spightfully, and blasphemously, even towards God, on the Philistims part, which was not suffered long to goe unrevenge, as we shall afterwards see in Dauids raigne. This Bethshan was a City in the lot of Manasseh, Judg. 1. 17. but not yet gotten out of the Philistims hands. Touching that which was said v. 7. that the Philistims went and dwelt in the Cities, out of which the Israelites fled for feare, it is to be understood, saith Lyra, that they dwelt no otherwise in them, but by garrisons in their strong holds to keepe the Israelites still under.

away

When the Inhabitants of Jabesh Gilead heard what the Philistims had done to Saul, all the valiant men of the m came by night to Bethshan and tooke his body and the bodies of his sonnes and burnt them, and put their bones under a tree at Jabesh, and fasted seven dayes. The men of Jabesh had beene delivered by Saul from Nabash the King of the Ammonites, and therefore they above all others sorrowed for his death, and bestowed this honourable buriall upon him. They burnt their bodies with sweet aromaticall stuffe, as the manner then was to doe to the dead bodies of Kings, whom they honoured, for thus it was done unto Aza 2 Chr. 16. By their fasting seven dayes they shewed the greatnesse of their sorrow for him, so Lyra. But whether did the men of Jabesh well in honouring him thus, whom God would have dishonoured for his wickednesse? Peter Martyr answereth, they did thus not to crosse God in his judgements, but to shew a gratefull minde for their past deliverance, and to performe a duty of piety towards their King, by vindicating him from that great ignominy, to which he was put amongst the uncircumcised, and therefore David hearing of it, approved and applauded it, and seconded it, 2 Sam. 21. 12. and he was a man guided by the spirit of God. The wickednesse of a King then freeth not their Subjects from duty, as the Pope excommunicating a King absolveth his Subjects from their obedience, for Ambrose excommunicating Theodosius did not thus, and the son of a wicked father is still bound to a filiall duty towards him, as Jonathan obeyed his father and followed him to the warre, notwithstanding his great wickednesse. Touching their burning of these dead bodies, it may be thought to have beene done partly because the flesh was corrupted, and therefore they burnt that from the bones with a fire made of sweet things, and partly lest the Philistims should come to fetch away their bodies againe and abuse them anew. For it was no generall custome to burne the dead amongst the Jewes. For their bones, which are said here to be put under a tree, 1 Chron. 10. 12. they are said to have beene buried under an Oake, or a tree called Terebinthus, for they had not then any publicke burying places. For their fasting seven dayes, so did Jobs friends, when they came and saw him in so great misery, as pierced their hearts with sorrow; these men of Jabesh were so full of griefe not onely for the death of Saul, but for the generall calamity of the commonwealth; and it is not to be doubted, but that unto their fasting they joyned prayers, yet not for the reliefe of the dead, as is used in the Church of Rome, for they goe immediately to their place, neither can they be removed any more to a better, as appeareth in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, but to pacifie Gods wrath, which then was great against Israel. Some thinke that in their seven dayes fast they had respect unto the seven dayes given them by the King of Ammon, ch: 11. within the compasse of which time Saul came and rescued them.

Willr.

V. 7.

V. 11, 12, 13.

1 Sam: 11.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.2 Sam: 2. 5.
Note.

Job, 2. 13.

Bottham.

A

A COMMENTARY
UPON THE SECOND BOOKE OF SAMUEL.

CHAP. I.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4

Glossa Ordin.

Gen: 36.

P. Martyr.

After David's returne from the slaughter of the Amalekites to Ziklag, a man came unto him and brought him tidings of Saul's death, saying, that at his owne request hee had slaine him, when his case grew desperate, but herein hee lyed unto him, as may appeare by that which was said before of the manner of Saul's death. Hee did that thinking to winne David's favour, but hee rewarded him as a wicked lier deserved with present death. The Hebrewes think that this was Doeg's sonne, and whereas it may seeme to make against it, that Doeg is said to have bene an Edomite, this man an Amalekite, it is answered, the sonne of Eliphaz, the sonne of Esau or Edom was called Amalek, and the race comming from him Amalekites, although they were Edomites also, all the Amalekites then saith Martyr were Edomites, but not contrariwise all the Edomites Amalekites. And whereas, vers. 10. hee brought with him Saul's Crowne and Bracelets, they say that his father tooke them from Saul after hee was dead, before that hee slew himselfe, willing him therewith to repaire to David thus to winne his favour. But Martyr thinketh rather, that hee was some Amalekite, whom Saul had formerly spared, and if so, it was by a just judgement of God if hee had slaine Saul, that hee preserved him to his owne destruction. But this conjecture is without ground, seeing none were saved alive but Agag, and if hee had slaine him being in that extremity, it had bene to his benefit. This man came with his cloaths rent and earth upon his head, that is, dust, to shew exceeding great sorrow, see the like done by Jobs friends, Job 2:12. they rent every one his mantle, and sprinkled dust upon their heads, and 1 Sam. 4:12. the renting of garments used in those parts served to shew the inward passion of the heart to the rending thereof, and dust or ashes upon the head and body, making them to looke squalidous, to shew their extreame sorrow and misery, causing them to neglect themselves, as being in no better case, then the dead now ready to bee laid into the ground, and to have earth put upon them, that the Lord seeing such spectacles of misery might bee moved to shew mercy. For the Crowne which hee brought with him, and the Bracelets ved to shew mercy. For the Crowne which he brought with him, and the Bracelets, saying, that he tooke it off his head: Hugo saith well, it is not probable that Saul did then weare his Crowne, but as the Ensigne of his kingly dignity it might by his Armour-bearer be carried with him into the field, or upon his Helmet there might be some costly worke representing the Kings Crowne, and so called by that name. But he saith, I took the Crown that was upon his head; but this he saith, is to be understood, which used to be upon his head, although he had it not on then.

David having heard his tale, rent his clothes, both he and all the men with him, and mourned and fasted till even for Saul and Jonathan and for all Israel. There was great reason of sorrowing for his deare friend Jonathan, and for the people of God, but how he could truly sorrow for Saul, doth not so easily appeare. For much good came of his destruction. 1. An end was put to tyranny, under which the commonwealth could not but groane. 2. David was ridde of his deadly enemy who alwayes sought his life. 3. The expected time now came of fullfilling the promise made to David, and the prophecy of taking the kingdom from Saul: yet it is not to be thought that David dissembled this great sorrow even for Saul, because although Saul hated him, yet he loved Saul, as we are bidden, love your enemies, especially being his King and father in law, and therefore it could not but greatly grieve him to heare of his ruine so lamentable, and to thinke how the Philistims would hereupon triumph and blaspheme the God of Israel, as unable to save him, whom he had chosen. These things therefore comming first to his thoughts he sorrowed truly, and not onely hee, but all his company, we read of none, that rejoiced to heare of the taking away of this tyrant amongst them all. For the good that followed hereupon, that, as Martyr saith, proceeded from the goodnesse of God, who can turne evill into good, but in themselves these things related were evill, and so able to make a stony heart to relent in every one that was a member of the same Commonwealth, now so much weakened and brought under.

Then David said unto him, Whence art thou, &c. It may seeme strange, that David hearing him say before that hee was an Amalekite, Vers. 8. should now aske this question. But it is answered, the present astonishment at the newes which hee brought, made David, that hee tooke no heed at the first unto it. And they that thinke hee was *Doeg*s son to this objection, then Saul should not have needed to ask him who he was: Answer, that either *Saul*s fight began to faile him through the losse of much blood, or although his father followed Saul, yet he being young had not yet come at the Court to be known unto Saul, and to the campe it seemeth by his speech, Vers. 6. that he came but accidentally, and was not there as a Souldier, for he saith, As I came by chance.

David said unto him, How wast thou not affraid to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the Lords anointed? then he bade one of his young men to slay him. David feared to slay Saul when hee was in his power for this reason, because hee was the Lords anointed; for hee that killeth a King, is guilty of a double sin, as the King beareth a double Image of God, one as hee is a man, and another, as his Vicegerent upon earth for his supreme power. Wherefore having found a man, that had committed so horrible a sin, hee presently caused him to bee put to death. But it will bee said, How can this bee justified in David to doe execution so suddenly, when as indeed the man was not guilty? Ans. Hee tooke his owne confession as a sufficient testimony, as it is indeed when it commeth voluntarily, and is not any way extorted, the signes also being shewed, that made it the more probable, *Saul*s Crowne and Bracelets, which hee brought with him. And therefore although there is a Law, that the Judge shall not condemne a man meerey upon his owne confession, yet when it commeth voluntarily without compulsion, the Law provideth, that it shall bee counted a sufficient testimony to condemne. Againe, hee that giveth false testimony in the case of bloodshed, must die for it.

In ff. de questionibus lege. 1. para. confessio reorum non habenda est pro explorato crimine, nisi approbatio alia iustitiae religionem cognoscentis.

Ob. But David was no Judge

V 10.

Hugo Card.

V. 11, 12.

Peter Martyr.

V. 13.

V. 14.

V. 15.

Qu.

Peter Martyr.

Judge as yet, and therefore hee ought not to have given sentence. Sol. he was long agoe anointed King, and although hee was not yet in actuall possession, hee was a Judge in Ziklag; and lastly this man being an Amalekite, and so by the Lord adjudged to death, hee might justly kill him: Thus Martyr, who also addeth, that in case a confession bee drawne from one by torments against himselfe, it is unlawfull hereupon to put him to death, except there bee some other evidencce. And whereas the Law requireth, that there should bee two witnesses at the least to take away any mans life, hee saith, that it is not meant there should bee another besides a mans selfe, for a mans own testimony against himselfe is more then two witnesses. Here was a just reward for a fawning and flattering Hypocrite, that whereby hee thought to curry favour with David was turned to his ruine. Againe note, that it is murther to kill another, or to helpe him out of the world, when hee is neare death, although it bee desired, for this is a thing to bee left unto God onely, who gave life.

Note.

V. 16.
Hugo Card.

And Dauid said, thy blood be upon thine head, that is, saith Hugo, thy damnation to die commeth worthily upon thee, and thou art the cause of thy owne blood-shed, so that none shall bee guiltie of blood by putting thee to death: or the punishment of the blood which thou hast shed bee upon thee. He sinned three wayes. 1. Because hee was a traytour to kill the King. 2. Hee lyed unto David. 3. Hee came flatteringlly unto him.

V. 17, 18.

Then David lamented over Saul and Jonathan with this Lamentation. Also hee bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow, behold it is written in the booke of Jasher: the vulg. Latine, in the booke of the just: this of bidding them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow is interlaced before the lamentation to shew, that hee made this use of this great overthrow given to the people of Israel by the Philistims, hereupon hee commandeth the Art of shooting to be taught and practised, because Saul was said to be wounded by the Archers that they might hereafter be the better able to fight against their enemies. For the booke of Jasher or the Just, some thinke it to bee none other, but these booke of the Kings, so called, because many just persons are herein written of, as Samuel, David, Nathan, Elijah, &c. Some as R. Solomon, the booke of Genesis for the same reason, and because therein mention is made by Jacob of his Sword and his Bow, whereby hee got one parcell of ground from the Amorite, which hee gave to Joseph, and Genesis, Chap. 49. Vers. 8. it is said of Judah, Thy hand shall bee in the neck of thine enemies, which was not till Dauids time, when Judah having learned the use of the Bow grew renowned for divers victories. Some by the Booke of Jasher rendering it justorum, as in the Vulgar Latine, understand judgements, and so will have the booke of Exodus meant hereby, as wherein the judgements of God are most set forth, and his Lawes called his judgements, shewing what is just and right to bee done, and it was just and stood with good reason, that they should learne the use of the Bow, it being of so great force in battell. Comeffor saith, that the meaning is according to some, that the art of shooting should bee preserved as that which is written in the booke of judgements. Lastly, some thinke, that it is a booke not extrant, but burnt long agoe by the Babylonians, as also all other sacred books, but some being againe repaired by Esdras, this was not, neither the booke of the warres of the Lord, nor the Songs of Solomon said to bee 5000. nor all his parables being 3000. nor his Booke of the nature of things, Trees, Hearbs and Plants, also of Nathan, Abiah, and Ido: so Hugo and Lyra. But of this booke see before upon Job. 10. 13. Peter Martyr maketh these words part of the lamentation, saying, that David was not then so oppressed with sorrow, but hee considered what was needfull for the Commonwealth, and to animate them, to whom this funerall Song should come, who might bee ready to despair, that State now being brought to such misery, he cited the booke of Jasher, that is, of Genesis, wherein it was prophesied of Judah, that their heads of that Tribe should bee upon the necks of their enemies. Junius rendreth it, whereby hee taught the children of Judah the Bow, that is, by the words of this lamentation, and I

I Sam 31. 3.

Hieron. de
Hebr. quæst.
R. Solomon.
Gen. 48. 22.Hugo Cardin.
Lyra.

Numb: 21.

I King: 4.
2 Chron: 9.
Peter Martyr.

Junius.

see

see not, but that it may well bee rendred, and hee spake it to teach, &c. being in Hebrew וַיִּאֲמַר לְלִמְדוֹ for the very words of these Verses tend to the putting of them on to exercise themselves in shooting, because Jonathan had so greatly prevailed hereby, Vers. 22. so that if the whole Tribe of Judah consisting of so many valiant men would practise it, as hee did, they might bee in hope to gaine to prevaile against their enemies. I do not hold then, that these words are any part of the lamentation, but set before it by the writer of this booke, as a Preface to it, and the next words, Behold it is written in the booke of Jasher serve onely to shew, where else these funerall Verses might bee found, viz. in some compend, which was then in every mans hands, wherein were briefly comprised things most memorable touching the children of Israel, happily being called the booke of Jasher, in allusion to the name of Ieshurun, by which is meant Israel, Gen. 32. 15. Chap. 33. 5.

The beautie of Israel is slaine upon thy high hills, how are the mightie salne? Comestor saith that this Lamentation was made at the first in meeter: Peter Martyr, that it was written in Elegiack Verse in way of an Epitaph, which Josephus also saith that hee had read: and Jerome exercised himselfe much in this kind, and the Prophet Jeremy upon the death of Iosiah. Funerall orations also have beene anciently used to bee made in praise of the dead amongst the Romans and Grecians, which may well bee done, so that it bee not in flattery. 1. To stirre up people to sorrow for so great a losse. 2. By setting forth their vertues, and giving them their due praise to draw others to an imitation of their vertues; but the maine end of all must bee the praise of God. The scope of David here was as hee was moved by the spirit of God, to bring the people to a consideration of Gods anger against them, because it was not wont to bee so with them, for Saul and Jonathan used alwayes in times past to prevaile against the Philistims, but now they were overthrowne before them, and that in their owne countrey, and in a place of greatest advantage, an high mountaine, and so most inaccessible, that they might bee moved with repentance and turne from their evill wayes. And hee composed it rather then any other, because hee was nearest to Saul, being his sonne in law, and Jonathan was most deare unto him, and hee to bee successour to Saul in the Kingdome. The vulgar Latine rendreth these words. Consider (O Israel) of these, that are dead being wounded upon thy high places, the most renowned of Israel are slaine upon thy mountaines, Peter Martyr, O beautie of Israel hee was slaine in thy high places, how are the mightie, &c. and Junius, O the beautie of Israel, how are the mightie ones slaine being wounded in thy high places? and by beautie hee understandeth God, who was the beautie or glory of Israel. But Hebrew the word rendred slaine is of the singular number, according to Martyrs translation, and therefore I rather with him understand Saul as the chiefe that was slaine, and by the beautie of Israel, the land of Israel spoken unto by a Prosopopeia, and so called because so greatly adorned and renowned above all other lands: and from the singular hee proceedeth to the plurall, how are the mightie salne, meaning Jonathan and all the rest of the valiant men slaine together. And hee speaketh to the land that he might be the more pathetically, and so it is as if hee had said, O Land, why are they slaine in thee, whom thou shouldest rather have preserved?

Tell it not in Gath, nor publish it in Askelon: These were chiefe places of concourse in the Philistims countrey, to which a rumour comming might easily be spread all over the Land. But it was already divulged, and therefore it seemeth unreasonable now to forbid it. David herein spake as one full of griefe, shewing that the desire of his heart was, if it had beene possible, that it might not have beene published there, because by the Philistims triumphing in the Israelites misery, it was much more encreased. But why doth hee adde, Let the daughters of the Philistims rejoyce? Answ. Because victory being obtained the women were wont in songs to extoll it, as wee read before of the women of Israel, chap. 17. Thus Lyra, but Hugo following him in other things differeth in this, that hee saith, David knew, that this great victory so publicly gotten

H h

V 19.
Schol. Historia.
Peter Martyr.

Junius.

Peter Martyr.

V. 20.

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

F. Martyr.

gotten could not bee concealed, but happily they knew not in the Philistines countrey the manner how Saul fell, and this is that, which hee would have concealed from them. Peter Martyr followeth Lyra, saying, that hee did rather by these words shew, how hee detested that, which was done, then forbid the doing of it.

V. 21.

The mountaines of Gelboa, let there bee no dew nor raine upon you, nor fields of offerings, &c. hee wisheth the place accursed, where Saul and Ionathan fell, and so a perpetuall monument of this misery, and of this sad and heaveie time, for as mourners are clad in black, so the ground wanting raine in stead of greene, which sheweth a comfortable state, is covered with a withered and darke mantle, shewing a dolefull condition, and where it is thus nothing groweth, of which the first fruits may bee brought as an offering to the Lord, and therefore hee addeth, nor fields of offerings: the Vulgar Latine with more expreffion, nor fields of first fruits. Some, saith Hugo, affirme that the toppes of these mountaines were alwayes barren, and that it never rained upon them, some that they were fruitfull before, but by this cursing of David made barren, and some, that this cursing was propheticall and tooke effect in the time of Elias, when there fell neither dew nor raine in three yeares and six moneths, but that was generall to all the Land, and followed upon the prophesying of Elias for the wickednesse of those times: and that of barrennesse following upon this cursing is but conjecturall, neither did David himselfe, as is probable, then thinke of any such effect to follow, but onely hee spake thus pathetically to shew his indignation at every thing about this disastrous accident. Unlesse wee shall with Rabanus hold a myssicall meaning by these mountaines, the pride of the Jewes hearts being set forth, amongst whom because the Lords anointed, his Christ was slaine, they have ever since bene dry of all dew of grace, and their Land stricken with barrennesse. By first fruits understand not onely those of corne, but also of cattell feeding in the fields: for there the shield of the mighty was cast away, that is, was as a thing good for nothing but to bee cast away, or was indeed cast away, that they who were overcome might make more hast in fleeing away: so Lyra.

Hugo Card.

Rabanus.

Lyra.

V. 22.

From the blood of the slaine, from the fat of the mighty the Bow of Ionathan returned not, &c. The vulgar Latine joyning the first words here to the former verse, thus, there the shield of the mightie was cast away, the shield of Saul, as if hee were not anointed with oyle, from the blood of the slaine, from the fat of the mighty, that is saith Hugo, for the blood of the Priests slaine by Saul in Nob, who used to offer blood and fat to the Lord: or by men of no base condition were they slaine, but by the most valiant, yet hee confesseth, as it is indeed, that Hebrew hath it joyned with the words following, as in our translation, and so the meaning is plaine that they were wont to kill and destroy the greatest of their enemies, and to pierce them to their inward parts.

Hugo Card.

23.

Saul and Ionathan were lovely, &c. For Saul had bene such when hee was chosen King, for it is said, that amongst all the people there was none better then hee, and hee was a godly man of stature; and for Ionathans goodnesse David could speake experimentally of it, and it is most probable that he was for personableness not much unlike his father: touching that, which is added, they were swifter then Eagles, and stronger then Lions, it is hyperbolically, serving to set forth their wonderfull great strength and celeritie, and that these two being both so valiant and so good should fall together at one time, as they had lived and gone out to warre together sundry times, was most lamentable: so Lyra. And this of their not being divided in their life, Peter Martyr saith, was spoken to purge Ionathan from the suspicion of being against his father.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

V. 24.

The daughters of Israel weepe over Saul who clothed you with Skerlet, &c. The women are called upon to act their part in making lamentation, as they had bene the instruments to celebrate his victories with songs of praise, his cloathing them so richly was by distributing the spoyles taken from the enemy amongst his souldiers, who carried them home, and gave such as served for ornament to their wives and daughters, and these use not to bee a little esteemed esteemed of by women, for which cause hee speaketh of these especially, that they might bee the more affected with sorrow at this losse.

For the rest of his lamentation, it is made for Jonathan in particular, whose love hee saith towards him passed the love of women, that is, either understanding it passively, the love wherewith women are beloved of men which is most fervent, or actively, the love wherewith women love such men as they are affected to, which is oft times exceeding great. Vers. 27. How are the mightie falne, and the weapons of warre perished? not onely the Captaines were slaine, but the people were disarmed, the Philistims taking their armes away, as is the manner of victors, for so David had served Goliath before, and this made the case the more lamentable.

CHAP. II.

Here David first asketh counsell of the Lord, whether hee should not goe up to Judah, and being directed to go to Hebron in Judah he went up, and thither came to him the Elders of Judah and anointed him King over Judah. In this relation is omitted the flocking of many to him to Ziklag before this, of which wee read, 1 Chron. 12. as first some valiant and mightie men of Benjamin Sauls owne Tribe, as Abiezer, Joash, the sonnes of Shemaah, &c. to Vers. 7. which is commemorated to the praise of David, and the justifying of him and the condemning of Sauls tyranny, in that so many of his owne kindred forsooke him, and fled unto David to helpe him. Secondly, some mighty men of Gad, who came unto him before, when hee kept himselfe in holds, that is, in the Wildernesse of Maon, where hee hid himselfe from Saul; they were eleven, and were swift as Roes, and had faces like Lions, the least of them being over 100. and the greatest over 1000. that is, afterwards, for as yet David had onely 600. men, Vers. 8, 9, &c. to Vers. 15. as Lyra noteth. Thirdly, some men of Judah, to whom others of Benjamin joyned themselves, that David might the rather receive them, and not have them in suspicion, when hee was secured touching their true heartednesse towards him by those of his owne Tribe and kindred. Wherefore hee first required some assurance, that they came peaceably to helpe him indeed and not to betray him, and the spirit came upon Amasai, the chiefe of the Captaines, who was also called Amasa, *David*s sisters sonne, the spirit comming upon him was not to prophesie, but of boldnesse and courage to speake, so Lyra: yet happily the spirit certified him of the true meaning of all these men, that hee might speake confidently thereof to David, Vers. 16, 17, 18. Fourthly, many of Manasseh, of whom seven Captaines of thousands are reckoned up, and these came unto him at his returne to Ziklag from the Philistims army, and helped him against the rovers, that is, the Amalekites, who roved about to divers places and tooke great booties, and specially to Ziklag in *David*s absence, as is shewed, 1 Sam. 30. Vers. 19, 20, 21. Fifthly, many others came day by day unto him, untill that hee had a very great host, like the host of God, Vers. 22. For speaking of God, Job 25. 3. it is said, is there any number of his armies, so that hereby is noted an innumerable company. Whereas in speaking of those of the Tribe of Gad, Vers. 15. hee saith, these are they, that went over Jordan, when in the first moneth it overflowed all her banks, this shewed their courage and magnanimitie that would adventure in so dangerous a time to passe over Jordan, and they put to flight all them of the valleys towards the East and West; that is, people of those nations appointed to bee driven out, who still inhabited in the Land of Canaan given to the children of Israel, so that hereby their great strength and valour might bee gathered. Now David by this great concourse of forces being strengthened, and Saul being dead, so that the Kingdom by Gods donation belonged unto him, hee would not yet attempt the taking of it, but referred himselfe wholly to Gods good will and pleasure, seeking by him to bee directed. How hee asked counsell is not said, but it is most probable by the Ephod, as at other times. The divine Oracle directed him to goe to Hebron, because, saith Lyra, the foure principall patriarchs were buried

Hh 2

V. 25.

V. 27.

V. 1, 2, 3, 4.

1 Chron. 12: 1, 2, 3, 4.1 Chron. 12: 8, 9, 10, 11, &c.Lyra.1 Chron. 12. 16, 17, 18.1 Chron. 12. 19, 20, 21. V. 22.1 Chron. 12. 15.

Peter Martyr.

H.B. Patriark
travailes.
V. 2, 3.

2 Sam. 5.

Lya.

Peter Martyr.
The Myſtery.V. 4, 5.
6, 7.

V. 8.

Note.

Peter Martyr.
Note.

buried there, as was ſhewed, Gen. 23. and for this cauſe Caleb went thither before to pray unto God, Numb. 13. Joſh. 14. and God would have the kingdome of David therefore to begin here, ſo likewiſe Martyr, here were Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob buryed, to whom that land was promiſed, and that Kings ſhould come of them, wherefore David muſt begin his kingdome in this City. Caleb was a moſt ancient City built before Zaan in Egypt, and it was given to Caleb and to his poſterity, it was one of the Cities of refuge and of the Levites, being diſtant from Hieruſalem as Hiero ſaith 20 miles, and as H. B. 16 miles from Ziklag, it was a Metropolitan City in Judab.

David according to the direction given him, goeth to Hebron with his Wives, and his men and their families, and dwell there and in the townes belonging to it. Then the men of Judab came and anointed him King over Judab. This was done, ſaith the ſame authour, 10 yeares after his anointing by Samuel, he being now 30 yeares old. He was anointed once more after this to bee King over all Israel, from which Lya draweth this allegory, hereby was ſignified, that every good Chriſtian hath three anointings, firſt, internally by the Spirit in his heart to beleefe; ſecondly, externally with his tongue to confeſſe; thirdly, in his workes to adorne his Chriſtian profeſſion. The tribe of Judab in anointing David King without the conſent of the other Tribes, did but follow the revealed will of God, who long agoe by the mouth of Jacob had aliigned the Scepter to Judab, and more lately anointed David by Samuel; and the other Tribes, who conſented not with them herein, ſinned againſt the ordinance of God. David in his three anointings, ſaith Martyr, was a type of Chriſt, who was anointed, 1. By the Spirit comming upon him in his baptiſme. 2. By the power of miracles. 3. When he roſe againe from the dead. And his being held under perſecution ſo long, before he could attaine to the kingdome, and then he attained not to the whole neither, till ſeven yeares after, ſerved to figure out the adverſities to be endured by ſuch as are appointed to the kingdome of heaven, under which wee muſt therefore bee patient, being aſſured, that at length wee alſo ſhall attaine to our kingdome.

Then it was told David that the men of Jabeſh had buried Saul, and hee ſent to commend them for ſo doing, and to promiſe them favour; with what mind this was told unto David is uncertaine, either it might be to exasperate David againſt the men of Jabeſh, or that he might beware of them, as open favourers of Saul and of his houſe. But hee like a moſt virtuous King commendeth that, which was well done even towards his enemy, contrary to the manner of other Princes, Sylla, Marinus, Antony, Octavius, who proſcribed all ſuch, as had ſhewed any favour towards their enemies. Where Jabeſh was ſee before 1 Sam. 11. namely on the other ſide of Jordan in the land of Gilead.

When David was anointed King over Judab, Abner the Captaine of Saul's hoſt tooke Iſhbobaſeth the ſonne of Saul, who yet ſurvived, when three other of his ſonnes, who followed him to the warres, were ſlaine, and made him King over Israel. It ſeemeth by his not going to warre with the reſt, that either hee was not ſo able or fit for the warre, or that he was left at home to governe in his fathers abſence, and by this meanes eſcaped, when his brethren were ſlaine. How ſoever he remained to be ſet up againſt David, and to breed him more trouble, before that he could come to the full poſſeſſion of the whole kingdom. Yet Abners ſetting of him up, being againſt Gods Ordinance, was ſoone turned into his ruine, and his owne alſo; ſo vaine is it for any to ſtrive againſt God. But his dividing of the kingdom into two for a time, upon the next occaſion offered, tooke effect againe to divide it betweene Reboam the ſonne of Solomon and Jeroboam for the finnes of Solomon, ſo that they were never more reunited in the houſe of David. Thus God turned Abners wicked reſuſting againſt his decree, into an occaſion or preparative to the puniſhing of ſinne in David's poſterity, for the glorifying of his juſtice, ſo he makes all things to worke for his glory. As Judab, by whose making of David King ſaith Martyr, this ſchiſme came, yet was herein without fault, ſo they that abhorring the ſuperſtitious and idolatries of the Church of Rome, doe ſeparate themſelves, cannot be blamed for this this schisme, because they follow the revealed will of God, but such as see and cannot but acknowledge these corruptions, and yet will not separate, are greatly to be blamed. And as David's cause might seeme not to bee good, because he met with such opposition, yet it was certainly iust and good, and after a few yeares it was approved by the successe, which he had in comming to raigne over all Israel: so we must not thinke the proceedings of those, who stand for the truth & against Popish superstitions, to be the more disallowable for the ill successe at the first, but comfortably expect a good issue, when all opposition shall cease, and men shall joyne in one to promote the same truth. So Martyr, who also noteth the place, to which he caused Ishbosheth to go to be made King, viz. Mahanaim, which was on the other side of Jordan according to Junius, in the Tribe of Gad; the inhabitants of which parts, he was specially carefull to bring to acknowledge him for their King, because David had sent messengers to the men of Jabesh Gilead, as he thought, to insinuate unto them, and others of the land of Gilead, which might make it suspicious if he sought not to prevent it, that they would be drawne after David. Wherefore to make them sure, hee brought Ishbosheth thither, and so hee was received for King over all Gilead, and Assuri, and Isreel, and Benjamin, and all Israel. The Vulg: Lat: he carried him about the tents, for Mahanaim signifieth tents, but it is the proper name of a place, which was most strong, so called, because there the Angels of God appeared to Jacob, pitching their tents about him, and here Ishbosheth remained in greatest safety, whilst Abner and the host went out to fight against David's Army. Assuri, by the Vulg: Lat: rendred Gessuri, is held by Lyra, and Hugo, to be Asber, and Junius rendereth it accordingly, super Asbercos, and Isreel or Jazree, he saith was the middle region of Zebulun, Issachar, and Nephthali, and in naming these the whole latitude of the country from the sea to Jordan is described, then to shew the full extent of his kingdom it is said over all Israel.

Ishbosheth was 40 yeares old, when he began to raigne, and hee reigned 2 yeares. He was unjustly set up thorough the ambition of his cosen Abner, and therefore not like to continue long, for not only David had the right by Gods speciall appointmeat, but if they would make one King by succession, Mephibosheth the sonne of Jonathan, had most right of all Saul's posterity, but Abner surely thought Ishbosheth, a man of no worth, fittest for his owne turne to be advanced to the royall dignity, that he might rule all, as he pleased. For the time of his reigning, viz: two yeares, it may bee doubted, how David was kept reigning over all 7 yeares and 6 months, as is said v: 11. if the time of his raigne were so short. Some saith Martyr, hold that 5 yeares passed after Saul's death, before that Ishbosheth was made King, because some were for Mephibosheth, but at length Abner seeing, that they would not come to any agreement about one of them, hee taketh Ishbosheth and maketh him King. Some againe thinke that after Ishbosheth's death, there was an interregnum of 5 yeares before that the Princes of Israel resolved upon David. Lastly some, that much time passed after Saul's death, before that Ishbosheth was made King, and much time after his death before David was accepted of, R: Levi saith, that by these two yeares all the time of Ishbosheth's raigne is not set forth, but the time that passed before the battle, that was fought betweene his men and David's men, v: 12, 13. &c. and this Martyr thinketh the most probable, and I thinke without doubt it is so meant, because the like phrase is used touching Saul, 1 Sam: 13. he reigned 2 yeares, that is, to that time, for he reigned indeed many more, as there hath beene shewed: and after this it is said, there was warre a long time betweene the house of Saul and David's house, ch: 3. 1. And I will not here omit the conceit of R: Solomon related by Lyra, that God in his providence directed it thus, that Ishbosheth, the sonne of Saul of the Tribe of Benjamin should be made King, that the prophesie made unto Jacob Gen: 35. might be fulfilled, Kings shall come out of thee, when as all his sonnes were already borne except Benjamin, and now Ishbosheth being made King also, as his father Saul had beene, it was verified, for thus two Kings came of Benjamin,

Hh 3

thus

Note.

V 10.

Junius.

V. 10.

Qu.

R. Levi.

P. Martyr.

R. Solomon.

thus hee, but although there had not beene two Kings of Benjamin, that promise had beene abundantly fulfilled, seeing the Lord said not, there shall yet one come of thee, from whom Kings shall spring, but Kings shall come of thee, which was fulfilled, when they came of some of his posterity, whether borne after or before this oracle.

V. 12.

And Abner and Ishboseths servants went out of Mahanaim to Gibeon, and Joab and the servants of David met them &c. Ishboseth being set up against David, now at length Abner thought to try by warre, to subdue Davids part and to bring all the kingdome to Ishboseth, but it fell out contrary, as here appeareth. Josephus saith, that Abner being angry with the men of Judah for anointing David King, went to fight against Judah. David would not in all this time by force of arms seeke to obtaine all the kingdom, but expected till God who had promised it, should bring him to it, and herein he was a type of Christ, the subjects of whose kingdome are onely volunteers, for so many Nations are not subdued to him by force, but willingly yeilding themselves to his obedience. Moreover he had sworne unto Saul not to destroy his seed, and therefore he would not attempt it, but onely sought to defend himselfe. Gibeon, the place to which they came together, was a Metropolitan City in the Tribe of Benjamin, and it was all one with Gibeon of Saul often spoken of before. In the place where the armies met was a fish-pond, on the one side of which, one army pitched, and the other on the other side; then Abner said to Joab, let the young men rise and play before us, and then 12 of Benjamin, and 12 of Davids servants went forth and slew each other, till they all dyed. But Josephus saith, that the 12 men of Benjamin onely were slaine, how truly, let the Reader judge. The word translated play, saith Lyra, signifieth also to kill, and so it is here to be understood, that they should rise and shew their valour in fighting hand to hand and killing one another. But I cannot finde, that the word

Peter Martyr.

1 Sam. 24. 23.

V. 14.

Lyra.

קח here used, hath any other signification, but to play, or to mocke. Although then he meant they should kill one another in tryall of their fortitude, yet this not being intended to be done, as the duel of Goliath and David, to spare the armies from fighting, that side which was overcome, yeilding to the victor, it is rather to be thought, that Abner would have them to combat together to make their spectators sport, as oft times hath beene done amongst the heathen Romans, as Florus saith, that Brutus at the funerall of his father put together 22 paire of sword-players to fight and kill one another; and Theodosius being requested to shew the people the like sport, he answered, it becometh a godly Prince not onely to raigne, but to use clemency; and in Athens the like being desired by the people, Demouras answered, that first the altar of Mercy must be demolished, before that any such cruelty were publicly admitted. It was a barbarous and wicked thing then in Abner to propound this, and in Joab to consent unto it. So Martyr, and from hence the place, where these fell together, was called Helcatb Hassurim, that is, the field of the strong or valiant, but this was madnesse rather then true valour.

P. Martyr.

V. 17.

After this followed a great battle, and Abner and the men of Israel fled before Joab. Now there were three sonnes of Zeruiah, Joab, Abishai, and Asahel, and Asahel was most swift of foot, it is said that he could out-run horses, and therefore pursued hard after Abner to take him prisoner, because he being the chiefe Captaine, he thought it would bee a great glory and benefit to him, if he could take him, but Abner forbade him to pursue after him, willing him to turne rather after one of the young men and to take his spoiles, that is, when he had overcome him, for such an one was fitter for him to contend with; whereby is intimated that Asahel was very young, so Hugo; and when he would not, he willed him againe, saying, that otherwise he would smite him, but if he did, he knew not how to lift up his face to his brother Joab: which he spake, because he thought, that David at length would prevaile, and then it would make much against him to have Joabs displeasure, who was Davids chiefe Captaine. Asahel notwithstanding this warning pursued him still, till that hee turning strooke him through with his speare and hee dyed. For he was of Lyra.

farre

farre more valour then Asahel, although Asahel be reckoned for one of David's worthies, 1 Chr. 11. 26. because Asahel was young and not yet come to his full strength, nor of that experience, but Abner was both valiant, and Miles veteranus. That, wherewith Abner smote him, is said to be the hinder part of his speare, the Vulg. Lat. hath it aversa hasta, his speare being turned away, whereupon saith Lyra, some gather, that hee slew him with the wooden end of his speare, but that cannot bee, because the speare went through his body, and therefore hee saith, it is to be understood, his speare being turned against him. The Hebr. may indifferently be rendred, he smote him with the hinder part of his speare under the fifth ribbe, or he smote him behinde with his speare under the fifth ribbe, for the words are ויכהו באחרי החנית Veiaacchehu Beachbari bacanith ell hocomeffo. Asahel being very swift in running went before his brethren in pursuing Abner, till that he came so neare unto him, that Abner saw himselfe to be in danger of being slaine by him, as he fled with his backe towards him, wherefore when he could by no meanes perswade him to diuert and pursue after some other, he turned and slew him. But hereunto he was unwilling, because hee knew that Joab his brother would seek to revenge it, and happily hee hoped after this some peace might have been concluded, which by the killing of Asahel would be hindered; so Martyr: who also saith, when Abner bade him pursue after some young man, and take his spoiles, that hee meant, hee should seek to get him glory by taking the spoiles of one like unto himselfe, and not attempt this against him, lest that hee too late repented it. In Asahel's fall wee may see, that sometimes excellency in some thing, is turned to a mans owne overthrow, as Asahel's swiftnesse of foot was to him; and Milo's his strength to him, when hee having cleaved a tree by his great strength, was held in it closing together againe, till hee became a prey to the wilde beasts, that the strong may not glory in his strength, nor the swift in his swiftnesse, but give all glory to God alone. Again note, that enemies fleeing are not too hard to bee pursued, but with great care, that no advantage bee given them, lest their case seeming desperate, their feare bee turned into rage and resolution, to the destruction of their pursuers. For the onely health of those that are overcome, saith one, is to hope for no health, that is, desperately to recoyle upon their enemies; and Lucanus saith, vincitur haud gratis iugulo qui provocat hostem, Hee is overcome to his cost, who provoketh his enemy by his throat.

But Joab and Abishai, Asahel's brethren, pursued after Abner still, untill that the men of Benjamin gathering themselves together upon an heape unto Abner, made a stand upon the top of an hill, intending doubtlesse to fight with them, if they ceased not from pursuing them. Then Abner called unto Joab, saying, shall the sword alwayes devour, knowest thou not, that it will be bitternesse in the end? He used three arguments, saith Martyr, to breake off this warre, 1. Because the sword had devoured enough people already, warre is not good in it selfe, but that enemies being suppressed we may live in peace, and therefore it ought not when it is begunne to proceed without end: bellum warre hath the name from bellua, a beast, because it is the manner of beasts to goare and to teare one another, wherefore men are to proceed no further in warre, then needes must. 2. Because it would turne to bitternesse in the end, that is, for the slaughter, that would bee made on both sides, if by Joab's pressing still upon them, they were provoked to renew the warre, for thus many valiant mens lives would be endangered and so advantage given to the common enemy against them all. 3. Because they were all brethren, and therefore should be loath to destroy one another, and if they did, even the victors might have bitter sorrow for it in the end, as when all the other Tribes fighting against Benjamin had almost quite rooted that Tribe out, they lamented it. In a battle fought by Pompey against Cinna, and Marius, it is reported that one by chance killing his owne brother, and when he came to striphim to take his spoiles, seeing that it was his brother, he slew himselfe for sorrow.

Then Joab answered, As the Lord liveth, if thou hadst not spoken, the people had returned Peter Martyr.

Note.

*Vna salus viliis nullam sperare salutem.
Lucanus.*

V. 24.

25.

26.

Peter Martyr.

*Judg. 10.
Aug. de Civit.
l. 2. c. 25.*

V. 27.

Lyra.

Junim.
P. Martyr.

V. 28.

Note.

V. 30, 31.

Iosephus.

Lyra.
P. Martyr.The mystery.
Rabanus.

turned in the morning each one from pursuing his brother, the Vulgar Latin, if thou hadst spoken in the morning, the people had returned, &c. that is, saith Lyra, if thou hadst spoken thus sooner, even when the fight began in the morning, after that 12 and 12 had slaine one another in proote of their valour, there had beene no more blood shed, the Hebr. Unlesse thou hadst spoken, even from the morning, the people had returned, &c. that is, unlesse by bidding, that the young men should rise and play before us, thou hadst given occasion to this fight, we had returned againe without battle, so Junim and Martyr, and the Hebrew expositors. Now Iosephus saith, that Abner did not onely speake so unto Joab, as was before said, but also excused to him the killing of Asabel, his brother, then Joab caused a retreat to bee sounded, and their men being multered on both sides, it was found, that onely 20 of Davids men were loit, but of Ishbosheths 360. Thus he that bearing himselfe upon his great numbers, provoked first unto the fight, was humbled, and forced to seeke for peace, and to yeild the victory to Joab, and so often times have others done through the iust judgement of God, as Joash 2 Chr. 25. 17. and Josiah 2 Chr. 35. 22. Wherefore let none be so forward to warre, but decline it, and seeke peace, wherewith God is best pleased, unlesse when he calleth to warre, as the Israelites against the Amorites and Amalekites. What warres be lawfull, see upon Deut. 20.

This warre being ended, Abner hasteth to his King Ishbosheth at Mahanaim, beyond Jordan, and Joab having buried his dead brother Asabel in Bethlehem, to his King David in Hebron, going all night, till he came thither with his men, which is not to be understood of the same night, that Abner fled to Mahanaim, for Iosephus saith, that Joab kept his station that night, where the battle was ended, and next day having buried Asabel, ceased not to travaile all the night following, till he came to David to Hebron. Yet Lyra and Martyr also thinke, that Asabels buriall was deferred, till they had returned to Hebron, although it be mentioned before, but of this their opinion, I see no reason, but of the contrary, because both the buriall precedeth in order, and it is not probable that they would carry a dead body about to Hebron, and then to Bethlehem, to be buried, and it agreeth not with the victor to flee from the field in the night, but to the vanquished, the victor staying to view the number of those that were slaine. But Hebron, saith Martyr, was now in the possession of the Philistims and therefore it may seeme strange, that they should permit them to come and bury Asabel there, or that they tooke not the opportunity of this division to prosecute their victory against Israel, but in this the singular providence of God over his people is to be admired, who, when wicked Saul was punished by them, overruled them so, that they stirred no more, till that David had obtained the whole kingdome, and so was of greater strength to deale with them.

Mystically by Davids going to Hebron, which signifieth marriage with his two wives, may be understood Christs entring into marriage with two sorts of peoples, Jewes and Gentiles. The men of Judah signifying praise, that came hither to anoint him King, set forth the elect, that ascribe unto Christ the kingdome and glory, when as the reprobate and proud contemne him. Ishbosheth signifying the sonne of confusion, that reigned over the other Tribes, setteth forth the error of confusion, that reigneth in all others except those that by faith cleave unto Christ.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

HAVING hitherto set forth one battle betweene Davids men and Ishbosheth, now it is shewed, that there was long warre betwixt them, that is, most probably all the time that Ishbosheth lived, except some few dayes, wherein Abner, his Captaine fell from him and inclined to Davids part, and in the time of these warres, Sauls house waxed weaker and weaker, and Davids stronger and stronger, which is further here declared, 1. Because he had many children children, Verf. 2, 3, 4, 5. 2. Because Abner fell from Ishbosheth unto him, Verf. 6, 7. &c. His eldest sonne was Amon, the second Cheliab, signifying like the father, happily so called, as Martyr hath it, because hee came of Abigail, the wife of Nabal, lest hee might bee thought to have been his sonne, hee is also called Daniel, 1 Chron. 3. 1. and this saith R. Solomon was his name at the first, but then there being some scoffers, that sayd hee was Nabals sonne, his face was changed so as that. hee looked most like unto David, whereupon hee was called Cheliab, but this smelleth of the Rabbinical forge: the third Absolom, who is said to have come of Maacah, the daughter of Talmzi, the King of Geshur; shee is thought by Martyr to have beene one taken captive by David, when dwelling in Ziklag hee roved into divers parts about and tooke the spoyles of the enemy, for then it is said, that hee invaded the Geshurites, 1 Sam. 27. 8. but then hee saved neither man nor woman alive, Verf. 11. wherefore it must bee at some other time, that hee either tooke her and so made her his wife, or after that invasion the King of Geshur might give him to her to wife, that hee might not warre upon his countrey any more. If it bee doubted how hee could marry with a woman of another Nation, seeing marriages were forbidden with the Canaanites for their idolatry? it is answered, although the people of other nations were Idolatrous also, yet marrying with such was not altogether forbidden, for in case of taking a faire woman of theirs captive, after shee had shaved her head, pared her nailes and changed her garments, and bewayled her father a moneth, he that had taken her, might marry her. But if David took Maacah to wife, whilst hee dwelt in Ziklag, hee carried not two wives onely with him, as was said before, when hee went to Hebron, but three. Answe. Although hee had her in his possession, yet it is most probable, that hee married her not, till a moneth after, following the order of the foresaid Law, and so not till his comming to Hebron. Howsoever, hee had cause afterwards to repent him of this marriage, when the sonne of this woman, Absolom usurped his kingdome, and by his other children, Amon and Adonijah hee had much affliction, to shew that when a man abounds with children, it is no happinesse, unlesse they bee sanctified, that all parents may alwayes pray instantly for this. The fourth son was Adonijah, the fifth Shephatiah, the sixth Ibream by Eglah David's wife. Here because this woman onely is called David's wife, a question ariseth, why it is so said of her singularly? Lyra answereth, that shee was his first wife, the daughter of Saul, otherwife called Michal, and therefore dearest unto him, and shee was called Eglah, an heifer, according to the phrase used by Samson, if yee had not ploughed with my beifer; all the rest were his wives also, but the first specially. Peter Martyr saith, that some by Eglah understand one of meane parentage, who having no alliance to grace her was hereby graced, by being called David's wife: others, that shee was more excellent then any of the other, and so preferred, as if shee had beene his onely wife, to bee materfamilias: others againe, that shee had beene Saul's wife, seeking to approve this by the saying of Nathan, 2 Sam. 12. God gave thee thy masters wives, but that this cannot bee understood that they were given to bee his wives, appeareth because he was Saul's sonne in law, and so it was unlawfull for him to marry his mother in law: it is onely meant then in that place, that they were given into his power. And that Eglah cannot bee Michal, hee proveth, because shee was barren to the day of her death, unlesse it shall bee thought there to have been spoken of the time to come, that shee had no child after that time, but there is another thing that maketh against her being Michal, viz. that shee was not restored to David after that Saul had given her to another, till after this, Verf. 14. and therefore hee could have no child by her in Hebron borne there as all these are said to have been. Ibream the sixth sonne of David is by Iosephus called Nathan, but hee is spoken of, as borne afterwards, Chap. 5. 14. For Eglah I thinke, that shee was one most beloved of David of all his wives, and therefore singularly so called, and Rachel sometime is by Jacob singularly called his wife.

Hitherto the strengthening of David by having many children borne unto him

V. 3, 4

Peter Martyr.

R. Solomons

Deut 21. 11,
12, 13.

Note.

Lyra.

Iudg. 14.
Peter Martyr.

2 Sam. 6. 23:

him hath been spoken of, now followeth that of Abners revolt unto him, Verſ. 6, 7, 8, &c.

V. 6, 7.
Lysa.

There was a concubine of Sauls nation Rizpah, for going in unto whom hee was reproved to make David King of all Israel. Some, ſaith Lysa, think that Abner went into Rizpah, as having taken her to wife, that thus he might withall take the Kingdom, as Adonijah asking Abishag Davids Concubine to wife is censured by Solomon as in effect ambitiously seeking the kingdome: some that he onely committed fornication with her, and this is most agreeable to the text. And therefore hee was worthy to bee reproved, although God secretly wrought by his providence to turne this into an occasion of fulfilling his promise to David touching the kingdome of Israel, when Abner being exasperated by this reproofe revolted unto David, so doth God make all things to serve for the effecting of his will for the good of his faithfull servants. Abner is enraged at Ishbosheths reproofe, and ſaith, am I a dogs head, &c. that is, either vile and abominable as a dog in the account of Judah, or for barking as it were, against David and Judah, and opposing them to keepe the kingdome to thee; or as Comeſtor, am I the head and Prince of dogs, as it were to lead them in barking against the Lords anointed? Thus they fall out, who a little before joyned together to stop the proceedings of the Lord; and so shall all they doe, that combine in wickednesse, the league betwixt them shall not last alwayes.

Note.

Abner ſaith, that hee would doe to David, as the Lord had promised him, whereby is discovered, that hee was not ignorant of Davids right all this time, and so did against his conscience in all that hee did for Ishbosheth hitherto, and thus doe many more, impugning the truth, which their conscience telleth them, that they should receive, but let them beware of Gods judgements at the last to cut them off by this example. This great boldnesse in Abner thus to threaten the King to his face, shewed, that hee was pusillanimous and slothfull, and so unworthy to reigne, and to this inconvenience doe slothfull Princes bring themselves often-times, that they are awed by their servants. And it is to bee noted, that Abner would fulfill the promise of God to David in spleene against Ishbosheth, and so some doe good with an evil mind, for which they shall have no thanke at Gods hand, for respect unto whom they are not moved unto it, but for their owne ends.

Note.

Note.

Then Abner sent messengers to David, saying, Whose is the Land, &c. that is, hath not God promised thee that thou shouldst bee King thereof, so that of right it belongeth to thee, and hee spake thus by messengers, that having Davids answer a way might bee made for him, before that hee went to David himſelfe, make covenant with me, the Covenant which hee would have him to make is not here expreſſed, but Josephus ſaith, that it was that Abner should bee in the ſame place of honour with David, that hee had been in with Saul, v. 13. David agreed to this motion, but firſt hee would have Michal his wife reſtored, when Abner came unto him, and for this cauſe ſending messengers to Ishbosheth, because Abner could not reſtore her without him, hee by the perſwaſion of Abner took her from her husband Phaltiel, and ſent her away, her husband following her weeping, but this ſay the Rabbins, was for joy, that hee had kept her as a ſiſter, and not lien with her being another mans wife, or for ſorrow, as R. Solomon hath it, that ſhee was taken from him, who was the exerciſe of perfection to him, in that hee having ſo faire a Lady in his power, yet refrained from touching her. But it is ealie to feigne any thing, it is moſt probable, that because ſhee was nobly deſcended and faire, it grieved him much to part with her.

Note.

V. 12.

Josephus.

V. 13.

V. 14, 15, 16

The place to which hee followed her weeping was Baburim, and then Abner ſent him back, this was in the Tribe of Benjamin, Chap. 19. 16. And yet wee read not, that Abner went himſelfe with her to David, but firſt going amongſt the Elders of the people hee dealt with them to make David King of all Israel, and afterwards hee went in perſon unto David. In dealing with them hee ſaith, that in times paſt they deſired to have David for their King, which moſt probably was when Saul was dead, for they were generally well affected

V. 17, 18.

Peter Martyr.

The place to which hee followed her weeping was Baburim, and then Abner ſent him back, this was in the Tribe of Benjamin, Chap. 19. 16. And yet wee read not, that Abner went himſelfe with her to David, but firſt going amongſt the Elders of the people hee dealt with them to make David King of all Israel, and afterwards hee went in perſon unto David. In dealing with them hee ſaith, that in times paſt they deſired to have David for their King, which moſt probably was when Saul was dead, for they were generally well affected affected to David long before, and many men of valour of divers Tribes being David's subjects at the first did doubtlesse sollicite those of their owne Tribes for David, whereby hee had many friends and well-willers, but hitherto Abner had resisted them by preferring Ishboseth, now hee professeth not to hinder them any longer from David, but to joyne with them in setting him up. And hee addeth, that the Lord had said, by David I will deliver Israel from the Philistines, &c. This wee no where read of, but Josephus saith, that Samuel spake thus of David, and now it was commonly knowne, and by these words it seemeth, that they were easily perswaded, but because it seemed more hard to bring Saul's owne Tribe to David, viz. Benjamin, hee further dealeth with the men of that Tribe in particular, and then going to David relateth to him, how forward they all were to make him King. David having received him and his good newes made him a feast, which used commonly to bee done of old in making of leagues, and so Abner departeth to gather all Israel unto David, so powerfull was hee by reason that hee was Generall of the Army, that hee could easily incline the people to what side hee pleased. But when hee was thus sent away by David in peace, Joab and his men comming home with great booties heard of it, and hee first exulted with David for letting Abner so to goe away, and then immediatly sent after him, and when hee was returned back, hee spake peaceably to him, but by and by hee slew him unawares for the blood of Asabel his brother. The place from whence Abner was brought back was the well Syria, so called saith Lyr, because it was in the way, that leadeth to Syria; Junius rendreth it the Cisterne of Sisira, the Vulgar Latine, the Cisterne Syra. It is likely that Joab sent in the Kings name, as if hee had something more to say to Abner, for otherwise hee would have been suspicious. Josephus saith, that Joab spake so to David against Abner to make him to change his mind, and to send to have him brought back againe, that hee might kill him, and when hee could not prevaile, hee sent messengers, as from David after him. And indeed Abner having a covenant from David, how could he now be suspicious that hee or any about him would attempt to doe him mischief? But Joab called him to speake with him in secret, as about the Kings businesse, and then hee suspecting nothing was slaine. And whereas hee gave it out, that hee did it for the blood of his brother Asabel, that could bee no reason, seeing Asabel was slaine altogether through his owne default, but the true reason, as most conjecture, was for feare lest Abner should by David bee promoted above him to bee next unto the King. For this was plainly the reason why hee afterwards killed Amasa, Chap. 20. David had promised to make him Capitaine in Joab's stead. From this wicked and treacherous fact of Joab, saith Martyr came three good things. 1. Hee was deservedly punished for his wickednesse, although Joab did it altogether out of envie. 2. David came a fairer way to the Kingdome then hee should have done, if Abner had lived still. 3. The danger that might have been in Abners too much greatnesse was prevented, whereby David might otherwise have been put to further trouble, hee being so gracious and bearing so much sway with the people: yet hee saith, that Joab who slew Abner, was as bad or worse then hee, and therefore was at the last by Solomon cut off also: for hee both dealt treacherously with Abner, as Abner with Ishboseth, conspired with Adonijah, as Abner with Ishboseth, and consented to the murder of Vriah and others unjustly to please David, as Abner had unjustly persecuted David. And he might have added further, that he brought discredit upon the King by his treachery, and shed the blood of Amasa in the time of peace.

Wee may by this example see, saith Josephus, what great danger there is in envie, when one great person cannot endure another to bee preferred before him, great trouble and danger commeth to the State hereby.

And when David heard it, hee said, I and my Kingdome are cleare from the blood of Abner, let it rest on the head of Joab, and of all his fathers house, and let there not faile a man that hath an issue in the house of Joab, or that is a Leaper, or that leaveth on a staffe, or that falleth on the Sword, or that wanteth bread; Josephus saith, that David stretching out his hands to heaven professed thus his owne innocency,

V. 19.

V. 20, 21.

V. 22, 23,

24, 25,

26, 27.

Lyr.

2 Sam. 19. 13.
Peter Martyr.

Note.

V. 28.

Josephus.

Hugo Cardin.

Lyra.
Schol. Hifter.

P. Martyr.

Note.

V. 31.

cency, that all men might know him to bee guiltlesse of this blood, and it concerned him much to cleare himselfe, lest the people of Israel hearing of it should have their hearts alienated from him, and thinke him for so foule a treachery unworthy to reigne over them, wherefore hee imprecateth him, that committed this murther, and his posteritie, which imprecation saith Hugo was made by way of prophesying. Now amongst the evils foretold to come upon his family, that which in our translation is rendred, leaning upon a staffe, is by the vulgar Latine, sum tenens, and this Lyra and Comestor expound holding a spindle, as a woman that is effeminate, Hugo either so, or holding a white stick, as the leprous were appointed to doe, to shew, that they were uncleane by Leprosie, that others might take heed of them. And if it bee thus understood, here are but foure things, wherein the curse of Joabs house stood, whereas Lyra and the ordinary glosse, and our translation make them five. But as Martyr noteth the word 77 here used signifieth both a staffe and a spindle, for so it is used, Prov. 31. 19. and if wee take it for a staffe, which is the most proper signification of the word, then the meaning is, that there should be some gouty, or paralyticall, or otherwise infirme and not able to goe without the helpe of a staffe. And touching every of these particulars he sheweth them all to be most grievous judgements, for the issue made the body to pine away, and the Leprosie loathsome, and both uncleane, so as that hee might not come into the Congregation, the Gout or Palsie made a living man as if hee were dead, to fall by the sword of the enemy is a lamentable judgement, and to bee sterved to death through want of food much more. The Rabbins say that David was too much carried by passion in thus imprecating not onely Joab, but all his fathers house, and therefore all these evils fell upon some of his owne posteritie. Rehoboam had an issue, Uzziah was a Leper, Asa was pained in his feet, Joash fell by the sword, and Joachim wanted bread. But because the same David in divers of the Psalmes doth likewise imprecate the wicked, wherein hee was certainly moved by the Spirit of God, it is not to bee thought, that hee was moved by humane passion at this time, but by the same spirit of prophesie. And touching Joabs fathers whole house here imprecated, it is so spoken, because not onely hee, but Abishai his brother also had an hand in Abners murther, as is intimated, Verf. 30. where it is said, so Joab and Abishai his brother slew Abner, which Josephus saith was done thus, whilst Abner was held in talke by Joab, Abishai slew him, but I rather thinke that Abishai did helpe in this murther by going with some of Joabs men for Abner to fetch him back, that Joab might slay him, which hee knew well that hee would doe. Now because in these two was the whole family of their father for ought wee read, seeing Asahel was dead before, and there were no more, but these three, David imprecateth all Joabs fathers house, meaning these two onely and their posteritie, as the issue of shamefull murderers. That which is recorded here, or elsewhere touching *David*s cursing, is not to bee imitated by us, who are commanded to blesse and not to curse, but onely in case that God directeth so to doe.

Then David said to Joab and to all the people, Rent your clothes and mourn for Abner, and gird you with sackcloth, &c. It is strange, saith Martyr, that hee should bid Joab also to doe thus, would hee have him dissemble sorrow for that which hee was glad of? hee answereth, the cause why David bade Joab to come and mourne also was to honour the funerall of Abner, not onely with the presence of other Captaines and Tribunes, but also of Joab, who was the chiefe of all, and if Joab had any grace in him, hee might by this meanes have been brought to repentance, which no doubt was the meaning of David, because hee being compelled to bee amongst so many mourners that wept and sorrowed, hee might hereby bee affected with sorrow and shame, who was the actour of so great a mischief bewailed by so many, and by the King himselfe. And King David followed the Beer to honour Abner the more, a thing never used by Kings, for whosoever is carried forth to the buriall, the King never goeth after him in any Country; this then shewed, how it, but the sonnes of Zeruiab be too hard for me. To the 4, Christ used gentleness in administring his spirituall kingdome, but this was noe warrant to him, that administers a politicke kingdome. To the 3 and 1, it was too long a delay to put it off to his death; and to the 2, he had God with him, whose power was above all, therefore he should not have feared the weakening of his kingdome, yea the doing of execution upon Iaob would have given content to more in Israel, with whom Abner was gracious, then the sparing of him. Besides this lenity, what encouragement might it give to other men of might, to commit the like horrible murders, seeing the law was likely now to lay hold onely upon the inferiour sort? yea wee see two wicked men, Rechab and Baanab presently animated hereby to goe and kill Ishbosheth, and Iaob afterwards to kill Amasa. A judge must be a man of courage, not respecting the persons of the rich or poore.

CHAP. IV.

V. 1.

2.

3.

V. 5, 6.

V. 4.

R. Solomon.

ISHBOSHETH hearing of the death of Abner was troubled, and so was all Israel. But there were two Captaines of Bands Rechab and Baanab belonging to Ishbosheth, who were of Beroth in Benjamin, but lived hitherto, as Exiles in Gittim, to which place they had fled. They now came into Ishbosheth house when he was sleeping in the heate of the day, and slew him, and cutting off his head carryed it to David. And by the way here is inserted something touching Mephibosheth, how he being 5 yeares old, when Saul and Jonathan his father were slaine, his nurse fled with him, and in fleeing fell with him, whereby he became lame. What the cause of Rechabs and Baanabs fleeing to Gittim was, or when they fled, is not said, but R. Solomon saith, that they tooke part with Mephibosheth, the sonne of Jonathan, as being the sonne of the elder brother, and so one, that had more right to the kingdome, then Ishbosheth Sauls yongest sonne, and when they saw that Ishbosheth was set up by Abner to be King, they fled, wherefore mention is made together of Mephibosheth, with whom they had taken part. But this seemeth not to be so, because they are said to bee Ishbosheths men, which they were not, seeing according to this relation they never came in unto him, but rather were Mephibosheths men. Others therefore hold, that they were Captaines of Theeves and Robbers, and when Ishbosheth would have punished them therefore, they fled, and continued in Gittim untill this time, and this seemeth most probable, and the Hebr. will beare this reading, Captaines of Robbers, as the Vulgar Latin hath it, seeing the word גִּדּוּדִים Gedudim here used signifyeth both Armies and Robbers. But why is mention made with all of Mephibosheth, if they were no partakers with him? Some say, that now Abner being dead they came and solicited Mephibosheth to take the kingdome upon him, but he being a good man refused it, and signified it to Ishbosheth, whereupon they fled for the present, but ere long returned and slew Ishbosheth being asleepe. But this agreeth not with the Text, which saith, that they were sojourners in Gittim, till this day, that is, till the newes came of Abners death, so that they did not after this flee thither, but had continued there sometime before, and Mephibosheth was but yet a childe of 12 yeares old. Lyra therefore better saith, that mention is made of Mephibosheth in this place, he being about to tell of the death of Ishbosheth, to shew that now there was none of Sauls house left to be made King against David, seeing Mephibosheth alone was left alive, and he was lame of both his feet, and so unfit for that high dignity. Gittim, to which Baanab and Rechab fled, was a City of their owne Tribe, Benjamin, Nehem: 11. 33. where they lurked, till this time. But now it is said, that they came to Ishbosheths house as if they would fetch wheat, that is, disguising themselves, as if they had beene Merchants, and came to buy wheat, that they might not bee suspected, for the King happily had a great revenue of wheat, which he sold unto Merchants. The Vulgar Latin hath it, bringingeares of wheat, that is, say Lyra, Comestor, and Hugo, as if they brought some first fruites unto the King to honour him, but Lyra confesseth, that Hebr. it is, they came as though they would fetch or buy wheat.

Lyra.

Schol. Histor.
Hugo Cardin.

wheat, which is the best, because first fruits were not brought unto the King, but to the Priests. Comming thus into the house they found Ishbosheth asleepe, and slew him, and then the manner how he lay more particularly being described, v. 7. he lay in the bed-chamber, for in hot countries, when the sun is at the highest, men commonly went into their chambers after dinner to sleepe a while: and having slain him they cut off his head, and tooke it away with them in token of the murther committed. Ishbosheth, saith Martyr, was worthy thus to be cut off, and by a more grievous death, because he fought as it were against God, after the manner of the Titans, in seeking to hinder David from the kingdome, which God had assigned unto him. And well he was slaine in his sleepe, who had bene sluggish, and done nothing like a King all his time, but all by Abner: and by his death in his sleepe in his owne house, wee may see, to what dangers we are subject, when wee may seeme to be most safe, that we bee never secure, and lying downe to sleepe, remember, that we know not, whether ever wee shall rise up againe or no. Plutarch in the life of Lucullus saith, that hee was saved by sleeping in the heat of the day: for Ortacus sent by Mithridates treacherously to kill him under a pretence of friendship, when hee could not bee admitted to speake with him, because hee was asleepe, fearing lest by delaying his treason should bee discovered, he returned againe without slaying to doe that bloody act. Now although Ishbosheth was worthy to dye and God secretly wrought by his providence to take him out of the way, that David might no longer be hindered from the kingdome, yet this excuseth not the wickednesse of these two men who slew him treacherously, partly to bee revenged upon him, whom they feared and hated, and partly hoping to receive a great reward at the hands of David. And therefore he dealt with them according to their deserts, when he put them to death therefore. Yet they come unto David with a most plausible oration, the Lord hath avenged my Lord the King this day of Saul and of his seed, thus making God a party in their murther, when as this was not the end that they aimed at, to fulfill Gods will herein, or to doe any good to David, but at other ends of their owne, as was said before. In the like case such as have bene led onely by the light of nature, have delivered the treacherous to be put to death, although they pretended their good in thus conspiring against the life of their owne Lords, as Fabritius, who signified to Pyrrhus the treachery of his Physitian, who would have poisoned him being his King to gratifie Fabritius, and the Romans sent the schoolemaster of the Faliscii, that would have betrayed their City unto them, backe to be punished, and Cesar lamented the death of Pompey his enemy, and put to death the murtherer.

David cleane contrary to the expectation of these two men, told them most seriously, how he had put to death one, that brought tidings to him to Ziklag of Sauls death, thinking to be well rewarded for his labour, and therefore giveth sentence against them, that they were much more worthy to dye, and so he commanded them to be slaine. But whereas in speaking of their fault he saith, they had slaine a righteous man in his owne house, it is to be understood, that he doth not meane one simply righteous, for so Ishbosheth was not, but comparatively, for he was more righteous then they, and so Judas is said to have justified Samaris in her wickednesse, because shee was more wicked. By this severity towards these men, *David*s innocency was manifested to the winning of mens hearts unto him. And as they had cut off the head of Ishbosheth, so he caused their hands, which committed that murther, to be cut off, and their feet, that carryed them to it, and hanged them up over the poole in Hebron, to be a spectacle to all men, that others might feare to commit the like wickednesse. If it shall seeme not justifiable to adde this to their punishment, it is answered, the Magistrate, as he seeth cause, may adde to the punishments prescribed in the law of God, but diminish them he may not, so the Rabbins, and thus David afterwards, when Nathan had told how a rich man tooke the Lambe of a poore man, vowed, that he should dye and restore it fourfold, whereas by the law restitution only was appointed. And the head of Ishbosheth

V. 7.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

Plutarch.

V. 8.

V. 9. 10.

2 Sam. 12. 5.

Hugo Card.
The Morall.

hee caused to be buried in Abners Sepulcher, so in all things he sought still to honour the house of Saul, and to shew his affection towards him, who was his utter enemy, that we might learne to doe likewise.

Morally Hugo saith, by these two, that slew Ishbosheth, wounding him under the fifth ribbe, wee may understand gluttony and drunkenesse slaying the soule by destroying all grace in the heart, whilst a man sleepeeth surely herein.

CHAP. V.

V. 1, 2, 3.

1 Chron: 12. 23

Peter Martyr.

The Mystery.

1 Chron. 12.
V. 38.

Note.

1 Chron. 12. 39

THEN all the Tribes of Israel came to David to Hebron, and anointed him King over all, and he made a league with them, that is, with their Elders who led the rest, and therefore of the Elders it is said, that they anointed him, 1 Chr: 12. 23. they of every Tribe, that came to Hebron to make David King, are particularly numbered, of the Tribe of Judah 6800, for of them needed no greater number seeing they had already received him for their King; of the Tribe of Levi 4000, of Simion 7100, &c. And by all the Tribes that came to David here these are meant, who came for all. The league, that they made with David, the Rabbins say, was, that hee should not punish any of them, for taking part with Ishbosheth against him, but Peter Martyr, that hee should rule according to justice and equity over them, and that they would bee loyall and true obedient Subjects unto him: for thus all Kings, when they come to their royall dignity, doe commonly sweare to rule according to the lawes of the land, and not as they lust. And this league is said to bee made before the Lord, both because they sweare by the Lord, and happily before an altar that was there, being of old built by Abraham. For that they used still to offer sacrifice here to this day it appeareth, by Absoloms desire to have leave to to goe and pay his vow in Hebron, ch: 15. 7. Touching all the Tribes comming to David to make him King, see also 1 Chr: 11. 1, 2, 3.

In this voluntary comming of the Tribes unto David, Christ was notably figured out, who subdued not Peoples and Nations unto him by force of arms, but raigeth over them, that willingly submit themselves unto him, with whom hee entereth into a firme Covenant of Grace and Mercy for ever, and they are, as the Tribes here say to David, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, Eph: 5. This being the difference betwixt him and other Monarchs of the world, not onely the Assyrians, Persians, Greekes, and Romans, but also the Truke and Pope, who by strong hand have sought to bring all under their obedience, hereby shewing, that their kingdoms are not divine, but humane, tyrannicall, and devillish, and so shall perish againe. Now besides all those that came to David, it is said, all the rest, who came not, were of one heart to make David King. 1 Chr: 12. 38. so that their subjecting of themselves to Ishbosheth all this time, was in a manner enforced by Abner, for their owne consciences told them, that they did not well herein, as it is not to be doubted, but that inforceth with many of the Church of Rome at this day. By this time then David saw how constant God was in his word, to performe so fully and freely all that he had promised him, although by the way he met with many things that might make him doubtfull, and so it shall be done at the last to all Gods faithfull people, wherefore let us alwayes patiently wait upon him, and not waver through unbelife in the most evill day. Lastly it is shewed, that all those, who came unto David, continued with him three dayes eating and drinking, and lest any man should doubt how provision could bee made for so great a multitude in one City, for they were betweene 300000 and 400000, it is said, that their brethren, that dwelt nigh, of Zabulon, Issachar, and Nephthali, brought in provision abundantly, both of bread, flesh, and figges, &c. such a universall joy there was at this inauguration of King David: so amongst those that consented together to set up Christ for their King, there was great joy, Act: 2. and abundant bringing in of worldly things for the reliefe of the multitude, Act: 4.

David

David was 30 years old, when he began to raigne, at the very age, that Christ began his ministry, and he reigned 7 yeares and 6 months in Hebron over Judah, and 33 in Hierusalem, &c. But the whole time comming to bee summed up, it is said to be 40 yeares together, whereas indeed it is 40 yeares 6 months. The reason, saith R: Solomon, why the 6 months are left out, is either because he fled 6 months by reason of Absalom, who usurped the kingdom so long, or because he was 6 months sicke in Hebron, which is not therefore put into this summe. But I thinke rather, that it is so put, because hee reigned onely 40 yeares compleat, and the sacred history doth not use to reckon upon months, see 1 Kings: 2. 11. Ch: 11. 42. Ch: 13. 22. &c. He was first made King over Judah, saith the Glosse, and then over Israel, to figure out Christ received by two peoples, the Gentiles and Jewes at severall times, and he reigned 40 yeares, which is foure times ten, signifying perfection, to shew, that Christs raigne should bee a perfect time even for ever and ever.

And the King went with his men to Jerusalem to the Jebusites, who inhabited that land, and they said unto David, except thou takest away the blinde and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither, thinking David cannot come in. The inferiour part of Jerusalem, saith Comestor, was delivered to David by Ornan the Jebusite, but the upper was held still by the rest of the Jebusites, and there a Tower was so strong that it was thought impregnable, thus he; but all the rest of the City standing upon Mount Moriah, Mount Acra, and Mount Bezetha was in the Israelites hands before, and onely Mount Zion, which was highest, held by the Jebusites, Josh: 15. 63. By the blinde and the lame, some thinke, that such were meant, as were set to defend this Tower, and this impotent crew was set to defend it in derision, because they thought, that with the weakest defence, that might be, it was safe enough against all his power: some by the blinde and lame thinke, that they meant Images set up there, which have eyes and see not, and feet and walke not, for even those Images, which were able to doe nothing, were in their judgement a sufficient defence against him. Lastly some, that they meant themselves, because the Jewes accounted the blinde and lame uncleane, and so the Jebusites being an uncleane people, were held by them to be as the blinde and the lame, touching whom, because the keepers of the Temple would not suffer such to come in, saying that the blinde and the lame should not enter, it grew into a proverb, the blinde and the lame shall not enter, when they meant any uncleane persons: that the blinde and the lame might not enter into the Tabernacle, see Levit: 21. Or they called themselves the blinde and the lame, because David thought them as unable to defend themselves against his power, as blinde and lame persons. Thus also Hugo, but Lyra following R: Solomon, after the first opinion commemorated, saith, that two Images, the one blinde and the other lame, representing Isaac and Jacob, were placed upon the wall, in remembrance of the Covenant made of old by Abraham with Abimelech the King of the Philistines, whose posterity these Jebusites were, there being engraven upon them the oath taken by Abraham to Abimelech, and in saying, that he should not come in, except hee tooke away the blinde and the lame, they meant, except he would bee perjured by breaking that oath; and whereas the blinde and lame are put in the plurall number, hee saith although there was but one blinde and one lame, it might bee so said, for of the golden Calf which was but one it is said, these bee thy Gods. Now for David, that hee might, notwithstanding the foresaid league lawfully invade the Jebusites, which Joshua in his time could not doe, whereby it came to passe, that although this City were given to the Tribe of Judah and Benjamin, yet it could not be gained wholly from the Jebusites till this time, it is proved, because the time, that the league was to last, was now expired, the posterity of Abimelech being all dead. This is by Martyr suspected as a fable and confuted, and the like see before upon Josh: 15. 63. the Chald Par. except thou takest away sinners, thou shalt not come in. That the Jebusites themselves cannot all be understood by the lame and the blinde, according to the second opinion is plaine, because it is said, who so smiteth the Jebusites and the lame and the blinde,

V. 455.

Lyra.

Glos: 2<sup>da</sup>.

V. 6.

Schol. Hist.

Lyra.

Exod: 32.

Josh: 15. 63.

by which words the lame and blind are distinguished from the Jebusites, neither can it bee understood of their Idols, for they would never bee so unreverent towards them to call them by so vile a name, no not according to the opinion of others, and it agreeth not to Idols to bee smitten but to bee broken downe, wherefore the words are literally to bee taken; and yet I doe not thinke, that lame and blind persons were set in derision to defend the walls, as Josephus and Theodoret will have it, as Theod. also saith, that the Tyrrians sometime set Pygmies in scorne to defend their Citie against the enemy; but that such poore people were confined to some place neare the entrance of the Fort, and not suffered to dwell amongst others, and of these the Jebusites spake in scorne to David, except hee cut them off, who were least able to relift him, which they thought hee could not possibly doe for the great strength of the place hindering any power from comming at them, hee should never bee able to deale with them, or to hurt them, who had both their sight and their limbes, and so were better able a great deale to keepe them out. But notwithstanding this brag, David tooke the strong hold of Zion, and called it the Citie of David, for it was a spacious place, viz. 2000. Cubits long, and 2000. Cubits broad, so that it might well beare the name of a Citie. Junius differing from all others rendreth it thus: Thou shalt not come hither alive, but when some one hath taken thee away, the very blind and the lame saying, David shall not come hither, and the Hebrew may well beare this reading, for it is יְרוּשָׁלַם כִּי but thou being removed, that is, by death, whereby was meant that if hee attempted to enter, hee should die for it, and the very blind and lame insulted over him, whereby hee was so much exasperated against them, as followeth. Then hee said, Who so getteth up to the gutter and smiteth the lame and the blind hated of Davids soule, hee shall bee Captaine, but these last words, he shall be Captaine, or chiefe are not in the Hebrew, but are left out to bee understood, being supplied, 1 Chron. 11. 6. where it is also said, that Joab smote them, and for these words, hated of Davids soule, Hebr. it is, Davids soule hating him or them, but in the Margin, hating Davids soules, and so the vulgar Latine readeth it: if it bee taken this last way, it is to bee understood, that hee meant, they were his greatest enemies, and haters, because they so petulantly upbraided him, and did him such a despight; if the former, that hee had them in greatest abomination therefore. For these words who so getteth up to the gutter, Junius hath quisquis pertingens ad illud emissarium, Martyr expoundeth the getting up to the gutter or water-pipes of the breaking of them off. Josephus saith, that the neather Citie being taken, but the tower holding out still, David promised to him that could first get up into the Tower by the valley under it, that hee should bee Captaine; it seemeth that there was some secret way, by which a man might with great difficultie ascend to this high Fort, viz. a gutter whereby the water used to run downe, and by this way Joab first got up thither, wherefore they said, the blind and the lame shall not come into the house, the Vulgar Latine, it became a proverb, the blind and the lame shall not goe into the Temple, these words, they said, being as much as it became a proverb. But the Temple is ill put for the house, as if now first the blind and lame were kept from comming to serve there according to Levit. 21. 18. for this cannot bee, seeing it was so ordained long before, but in remembrance of this affront given unto David, and this notable victory here obtained, hee made a decree, that none either blind or lame should come into his house in Sion, and hereupon the proverb arose, as a monument of so noble a victory to continue throughout all ages. In other Kings Courts of the Nations, such as were deformed any way were kept from comming into the sight of the King for good lucks sake, but from David onely the blind and lame, and not thus superstitiously, but onely for a remembrance tending to thankfulness: So Junius. But Martyr thinketh rather, that this proverb was used in case of that happening to one, which hee expected should have befallne another. I subscribe rather to Junius, for it was a most memorable thing, and worthy of some monument, that the strongest place

*Joseph. Antiq.
lib. 7. c. 2.*

Junius.

Peter Martyr.

place in all the Land of Canaan, and the chiefest and most hely, destined to bee the peculiar place of Gods worship, being hitherto invincible, and therefore in all the time of Sauls reigne not once attempted, should bee at the first taken and subdued by David, and in this was David a type of Christ, before whom none could take and possesse the Kingdome of heaven, typified by mount Sion, and bring in his people thither: And as David went from his inauguration to Sion to expell the Iebusites, so Christ from riding on an Ass, when to inaugurate him they cryed Hosanna, went immediatly to the Temple and expelled the buyers and sellers. For this great exploit now done by David, hee tooke the opportunitie of having such great Forces together ready armed to enure them to warlike affaires at the first, and to make them have the greater hopes of subduing other places, this most strong place being once gotten, and to terrifie the enemy the more. Now for the order of the history, although it bee first said, that David tooke that strong hold, and then that hee propounded the reward to him, that could first get up to smite the blind and the lame, yet it is to bee held, that this proposition was first made, and therefore Iunius renderth it well, David had said, by the preterpluperfect tense, for which and the preterperfect the Hebrews have onely one and the same word. The ordinary Glosse saith, that the Citie Jerusalem was first built by Melchisedeck, or Melchisalem, and called Salem, then by the Iebusites inhabiting there, Iebus, which two words being put together, one letter being changed make Jerusalem, and in Solomons time, an addition being made from his name it was called Ierusalem. And for the Mystery, saith Rabanus, in David expelling the Iebusites out of Sion, Christ was figured out, who expelled the contrary powers out of mens hearts that are faithfull, for hee did not onely get himselfe a Trophee of glory by destroying all the power of the Devill by his Crosse, but also gave power to his faithfull over all such power, for which cause hee saith, behold I give you power over Scorpions and Serpents; and by his dwelling in Sion, and calling it *David*s Citie, when hee had cast out the blind and lame, Christ dwelling in the heart by faith was set forth, all blindnesse of mind, and vice which is as lamenesse to the soule being expelled, for hereof it is said, lest that which is halting bee turned out of the way. His taking of the high Tower of Sion signified Christs taking of the primacy of the Church, the Scribes and Pharisees who were as the blind and lame, being first cast out. Thus the Glosse, saying also, that they are spoken of as hating his soule, because through hatred they sought to have him crucified: but it vices bee understood by the blind and lame, Christs soule truly hateth them, and all such as live and trade therein.

And David built round about from Millo, and inward; Millo, saith Lyra, was a certaine vorage or deepe pit before the Tower of Sion, betwixt which yet and that Tower there was a space of ground to build upon, and thus also Hugo, who addeth, that his building was of a wall round about the Tower within the gulf, and another without, so as that it was compassed with a double wall, but Lyra is for the building of a Citie in this place, which hee saith, was afterwards called by the name of Millo, but the Glosse expoundeth it also of a double wall. Peter Martyr saith, that some will have Millo indeed to bee a great deepe gulf, but filled up in Solomons time, and hence called Millo by anticipation, for Millo signifieth filling. David Kimbi saith, that Millo was a spacious place before the Tower, to which the people assembled, when any speech was publicly to bee made unto them, and because it used to bee filled with people at such times, it was called Millo. Ben. Gerson saith, that it was a place alwayes full of water, and therefore thus called, 1 Chron. 11. 8. David is said not onely to build the munition about, but also the Citie, and Ioab the rest of the Citie, which hee built not; next here is a capitulation made of *David*s worthies, 1 Chron. 11. 10. which followeth in this book, Chap. 23. 8.

Then Hiram King of Tyrus sent messengers unto David, and Cedar Trees, and Carpenters, &c. David being settled in his Kingdome at Jerusalem, now preparreth

Glosa Ordin.

Rabainus.
The mystery.

Heb 12

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Peter Martyr.

V. 11.

Peter Martyr.

reth to build him an House fit for a King; and because in the Kingdome of Tyrus was the greatest plenty of the best timber, viz. of Cedars, which never rotteth, and so the best workmen for building; hee had such timber and workmen sent him from thence by Hiram the King, with whom hee was in amity. Tyrus was a City in an Island inhabited by the Phenicians, who dwelt before by the Red-sea, but being driven from thence by earth-quakes, they built and inhabited here; the City was but meane at the first for Fishermen to dwell in, but afterwards it grew great and sumptuous, and from thence sprung divers others, as Caribage, Leptis, Utica, &c. and in this Countrey were both cedars and stones, and most expert workmen, which were wanting in the land of Israel. So that it was not of small availle for David to be in league with a King so mighty and usefull for him to supply him with necessaries.

Glos. Ord.
The Mystery.

The Ordin. Glosse applyeth this mystically to Christ, for whom Doctors amongst the Gentiles, as workmen doe build an house, that is, the Church.

V. 12.

Lyra.

V. 13.

And David knew that God had establisht him for King; that is, partly by the successe which hee had, and partly by the inward certification of his spirit; as Lyra. Then hee tooke him more concubines and wives of Jerusalem, &c. and hee had more sonnes and daughters borne unto him. It being before shewed, how David strengthened himselfe by the friendship of a foraine King; now it is shewed, how hee strengthened himselfe by contracting affinity with the Princes and Lords of that part of his Kingdome which hee last obtained, which hee did not through any distrust in God, but because hee would use the meanes of confirmation. His concubines were his wives also, but called by another name, to intimate that they were secundary wives, and not the principall, see 1 Chron. 14.

Clos. Ord.

3. And it was then tolerated to take wives and concubines for a mysticall signification, as David's wives signified more Churches of Jewes and Gentiles joyned by faith unto Christ, when hee commeth to reigne over all; and his concubines sects of Heretiques in these Churches; and more children borne unto him, more now converted to the Faith: and their names agree, Samua, boldnesse; Sobab, turning; Jabzar, hee hath chosen, &c. so the Glosse: but now to have more wives is not tolerable. Peter Martyr maketh a question whether it were tolerable for David to take so many, for besides eight wives, wee see afterwards that his concubines were ten; where it is noted, that Abshalom went in unto them, because the King is forbidden by the Law of God to multiply wives, and that which hee did now swallow downe with so great pleasure, hee was made to vomit up againe, when Abshalom having gone in to his concubines, hee shut them up, and would never company with them any more; neither could this great company of wives and concubines satisfie him, but hee committed adultery with the wife of Uriah also. For the word concubine, hebr. פלגש in Latin pellex, yet it is rendred concubina, because such were wives also, but of an inferiour rank, and servants to the wives, neither did their children inherit. Between pellex and concubina, some make this difference, amongst humane Writers, that pellex was of a married man, concubina of a single. Yet Suetonius contrary to this, saith, that Vespasian after the death of his wife, when he was now not married, took unto himself, multas pellices. For the names of his children, two more be, 1 Chron. 14. 4, 5. viz. Noga, and Elpalet, and Beliada, for Eliada, but those two happily were borne unto him afterwards, and one might bee called either Eliada, or Beliada. Kimbi thinketh, that here the children of his wives are reckoned, but there, of his concubines, but why then are no concubines there spoken of, but wives onely?

P. Martyr.

Deut. 17. 17.

Jurisperit.

V. 17.

Hugo Card.

Peter Martyr.

Then the Philistines hearing that David was anointed King, they came to seeke him, and hee went downe to the Hold. The cause of their comming against David, saith Hugo, was for that they feared now, hee being King, that they should lose their Tribute in Israel, which is not improbable, because when they fought against Saul, and overcame him, the Israelites were made subject unto them. Peter Martyr saith, that having been quiet all the time that there were warres between David's house and Saul's, for they thought then that they would not meddle with them, but suffer them to consume one another, which if they should have stirred against them, they would not have done, but rather being forced hereunto, joyned together against the common enemy. But now seeing them to agree together to make David King over all the Land, they thought it high time to renew their warres against them, lest they should grow too mighty. And herein the providence of God wrought singularly in bringing them out, that they might reape the just reward of their former insolencies, when they had gotten the victory, in that they vaunted so much of it, and ascribed it to their Idols, who were also now taken by David, and burnt, as followeth, v. 21. There was also a Providence, that David made not warre first upon them, lest hee should have seemed ungratefull for his entertainment in times past amongst them. Touching the Hold that hee went unto, when hee heard of their coming, it was either the Tower of Sion, or some other, whither hee went, not for feare, but to stay till hee had direction from the Lord in so weighty a businesse, thus Martyr: but it cannot bee the Tower of Sion, to which David now went, seeing it is said, hee descended; and by the description of an adventure made by three of *David*s mighty men; 1 Chron. 11. 15. it may bee gathered particularly, that this Hold was the cave of Adullam, not farre from Jerusalem, neare unto which was the valley of Rephaim, because it is said there, that the Philistims were then in the valley of Rephaim, and David in this Hold, thirsting for some water at Bethlehem. Junius saith, hee descended out of the strong Hold of Sion, to the foot thereof, and stayed there till hee had inquired, and the words will beare this reading, Hee descended out of the Hold, for the particle hæ here used, doth not onely signifie ad, but sometimes de; but I preferre the former. Here David inquiring of the Lord, received answer, that hee should goe against the Philistims, and they should bee delivered into his hands; and then going to Baal-Perazim, hee smote them there, but this name is given to that place by anticipation, for it was before called the valley of Rephaim, being about 3 miles from Jerusalem, and in the way to Bethlehem; it was thus first called by David in remembrance of this victory, that the name might bee a monument of his continuall thankfulness, Baal-Perazim signifieth the Plaine or field of divisions, because the enemies were there forced to flee divers wayes when they were overcome, as before in coming to the warre, they had been united in one body. And David in giving this name, saith, That God had divided them as waters, to shew, with what facility this was done, even as waters are easily divided.

And there they left their Images, and David and his men burnt them. 1 Chron. 14. 12. they are called their Gods; and it is said, that David gave a commandement that they should be burnt there. They brought them with them to the battail, saith Lyra, hoping by their help to get the victory. The Vulg. Latine hath it onely, David and his men tooke them, but Lyra confesseth these words, they burnt them, to bee in the Hebrew, and therefore in expounding it, supplyeth them. Hugo will have this place Baal-perazim so called from those Idols, because Baal is the name of Heathen gods, from which they were now divided. But because David himselfe who gave this name, rendreth the former reason, it is to bee preferred. David in burning these Idols did according to the Law, Deut. 7. which commanded it, and that no use should be made of the gold and silver of them, and so Moses burnt the golden Calf.

And the Philistims came again to the valley of Rephaim, &c. having gathered new forces, and strengthened themselves more, they now made account of better successe; but David againe inquiring of the Lord, was bidden to fetch a compasse, and to hide himselfe and his men behinde them, behind the Mulberry trees that grew there, and when hee heard a sound upon the tops of the Mulberry trees to come upon them, for hereby hee might know that God was gone out before him to destroy them, that is, saith Lyra, by his Angels. Some say, that the sound was of winds raised up to terrifie the Philistims: Ben Gerson, that a noise was thus made, that David coming upon them with his Army might not bee heard; but it is plainly said, that it was the signe of the Lords going out before him, for it was the sound of one going upon the trees, so that

Junius.

V. 19, 20.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.V. 21.
1 Chron. 14. 12

Lyra.

Hugo Cardin.

Exod. 32. 10.
V. 22.

H.B. Patriarchs
travailes.
1 Chr. 14.
15, 16.

Glossa Ordin.

Lyra.

that the Angel of the Lord went and smote the Philistims, and so they fell from Geba unto Gazar, the first of these places being neare to Kireathjearim, the other 18 miles off. Junius saith, that Geba was Gibeon in Benjamin, and thus it is called, 1 Chron. 14. 15. and it is further added, that David now grew famous in all lands, and they were afraid of him v: 16. The Vulgar Latin, for Mulberries, hath Peare-trees, pyrorum, vel flentium, as Gloss: Ordin: and that it was called the place of men weeping, because they had left their Idols there, which Idols doe give to such as serve them nothing, but occasion of sorrowing and weeping, when as expecting helpe from them they finde none, and they bring them to everlasting weeping in Hell. This double overthrow of the Philistims by David, saith Lyra, doth morally signifie the double overthrow of the Jewes by Christians, first in their owne, then in other Countries.

CHAP. VI.

V. 1, 2.

1 Chron: 13. 1.

DAVID having assembled together 30000 chosen men of Israel goeth with them to fetch the Arke of God from Kireathjearim, to the City of David, &c. The history is set forth 1 Chr. 13. before his two victories over the Philistims, for they follow ch. 14. and it is there more full, he consulted first with the Captaines of thousands and hundreths, and with every leader, and then spake to all the Congregation, about the bringing of the Arke from Baalab, which is Kireathjearim in Judah, but here it is said onely, that they went to bring it from Baal of Judah, and v: 4. they brought it from the house of Abinadab in Gibeah, which was another name of the same place, or may be taken appellatively, as it is by Junius, rendering it the hill, and there also David is brought in saying, that they enquired not at the Arke in the dayes of Saul, which is here omitted. But betwixt that relation and this there may seeme to bee a manifest difference, because here onely 30000, who were all the chosen men of Israel were assembled to conduct the Arke with honour, there all Israel from Siber of Egypt even to the entring in of Hamath, v: 5. that is, from the uttermost part of the land from the South to the North. But this is easily reconciled: for at the first 30000 onely were assembled of the chiefe, then all the rest, to call whom together messengers were sent out into all parts. And for the difference in the time, happily so soone as the Jebusites were expelled out of the strong fort of Sion, he entered into consultation with his Commanders about this bringing of the Arke up thither, and it being agreed upon, that after preparation made for it, viz: a Tabernacle built to place it in, of which see, v: 17. those warres with the Philistims might happen in the meane season, and so soone as they were ended, according to this history, these things were done, but consulted about before, according to 1 Chr. 13. for which cause, that consultation being mentioned, that which followed is also there related together by anticipation. By this care, which David had about the Arke, so soone as he had gotten the place, which he knew by the Spirit, that the Lord would choose to set it in, his great piety appeared, farre beyond that of Saul, who set his minde upon no such matter, that all Kings might learne by his example, and in that hee would not doe this without the advise of his Lords, he set downe a right way of proceeding in matters of Religion, viz: the councill of all the States of the Land being herein used, contrary to which is the manner of the proceeding of the Church of Rome, which excludeth Emperours and Kings and Princes from being of the Councell, or being such, as that their consent is necessary to the constitutions made therein.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

V. 2.

In speaking of the Arke he calleth it the Arke of God, whose name is called by the name of the Lord of hosts, that dwelleth betwene the Cherubims, 1 Chron. 13. 6. the Arke of God the Lord, who dwelleth betwene the Cherubims, whose name is called on it, thus our new translation: But the Vulgar Latin more agreeably to the Hebrew, upon which the name of the Lord of Hosts, who sitteth betwene the he Cherubims, is called. For thus the Hebrew, upon which the name, the name of the Lord, &c. and thus there is no difference from that, 1 Chr. 13. 6. and the meaning is, according to Maryr, that the Arke was called by the name of the Lord, because it was an holy sacrament or signe representing the Lord, (see the like saying, Iosh. 3. 11. the Arke of the Covenant, the Lord of the whole earth, so likewise saith he, the Altar set up Gen. 17. is called by the name of God, and Gedeons Altar, and Hierusalem, Ezek. 18. August. ad Bonifacium Epistola, saith, that sacraments doe commonly beare the name of the thing represented hereby. Cyprian Serm. de cena Domini, the same name is common to the signes and to the thing signified. Cyril: lib. 4. in Johan: cap. 10. the fathers did eate Christ when they eate Manna, which was so called, and Theodore and other Fathers speake to the same effect, which maketh against them, that will have no trope in these words, this is my body.

And they set the Arke of God upon a new cart, &c. Thus the Philistims had sent the Arke home before, 1 Sam. 6. wherefore it displeased God, that his people should doe after the manner of those heathens, and not carry it upon mens shoulders, as was appointed by his law, and therefore he smote Uzzab that he dyed, when the Arke being shaken he put forth his hand to touch it. For the Hebrewes doe generally hold, that not his touching of the Arke was the cause of this judgement, but the manner of carrying it. Whereas it may seeme otherwise, because he was not smitten, till he touched it, it is answered, that then first the error appeared in setting it upon a cart to be drawne, when it was shaken, which had not happened, if it had beene carryed upon mens shoulders. If it be further objected, then Abio one of the guides of the cart should have beene smitten as well as his brother Uzzab. Answer: Uzzab was the principall that would have it thus carryed, and therefore he onely was made an example, thus Lyra. Jerom in tradit. in Paralip: saith, that Abinadab bade Uzzab carry the Arke, but hee despising his command set it upon a cart. Comestor saith, that the Hebrewes affirme, that he lay with his wife the night before. Iosephus, that he was smitten because he touched the Arke being no Priest: but Comestor, that when hee touched the Arke, his armewithered, wherewith hee should have carried it, and so hee dyed. Peter Martyr also speaketh of this, as the cause, why Uzzab was smitten, and hee applyeth it allegorically to the Church, which the Bishops should beare, as it were, upon their owne shoulders, whereas they contrariwise cause it to be carryed by substitutes, who are many of them, as stupid and ignorant, and sensuall, as brute beasts, they themselves in the meane season living in idlenesse and pleasure, but God will surely judge them also therefore, and not onely them, but all others that eate the fat of the flocke by getting the best benefices, but expose the Arke of Christs Church to danger, by committing it to weake and vicious curates. Hugo indeed, because he was a Bishop, applyeth it otherwise, by the Arke understanding a Bishop, being as that, all golden within, which is when hee is without all scruple of conscience, and without, when hee is without scandall of life: againe the Bishop should have within him, as the Arke, the Tables of the law, and Deuteronomy, which is, when hee hath the knowledge of the old and new Testament, the rodde of Aaron, by modest, discreet and profitable discipline, and the pot of manna, that is, consolation. This Arke is drawne in a cart, when the Bishop is provoked to wrath by the murmurings of his subjects, and Uzzab stretcheth out his hand unto it, when any of the Bishops subjects proudly reproveth him, who is not, as Gregory saith, to be smitten with the sword of the mouth, no not when he doth things worthy of reproofe; but this favours of the pride of Rome. Et si Papa innumeras animas secum in gehennam trahat, nemo audeat dicere, Domine Papa cur ita facis? Lyra recounteth also another opinion of some, that Uzzab was smitten, because hee touched the bare Arke with his hand, but this he sheweth is improbable, seeing the Arke was never wont to be carryed, but being first wrapped about with cloathes by the Priests. I rest in the first, which is the more confirmed because v. 13. it is the next time carryed by men, 1 Chr. 15. 15. And here I cannot omit Peter Martyr.

V. 3.

Numb. 4. 15.

7. 9.

Lyra.

Schol. Histor.

P. Martyr.

An allegory.

Hugo Card.

Lyra.

Glos: Ord.
The Allegory of Abinadab.

mit another allegory of the Ord: Gloss: holding, that the Arke was a figure of the Church, the abiding thereof in private in Abinadab's house along time setteth forth the true faith and Church being long within the family of Abraham, and this was the same faith of the Church, which is now preached, being then embraced by the followers of Abraham; and it was in an hill, because of the high example of vertue given by those beleivers. But when David, that is, Christ, came to raigne under the Gospel, it was brought forth with great joy by 30000 chosen, setting forth the elect amongst the Jewes, but afterwards they shall all come to the Arke of faith, and so all Israel accompanieth it, to set forth which also, the Arke had two bringings out, 1. to the house of Obed Edom, 2. sometime being interposed to the City of David. The musicke with divers sorts of instruments made before the Arke, when it was carryed out upon a new cart, figured out the divers graces of the Spirit given to divers when the faith was first published, a new right of baptizing being instituted, filling them with wonderfull joy: the comming of it to the threshing floore of Nahor, that is, prepared, where the Oxen shaking it, Uzzab put forth his hand, &c. the Churches going forward by increasing, untill it came to the Gentiles, who were as a floore purged, according to that, hee shall thoroughly purge his floore, at what time the preachers of the Gospell shook the arke by speaking freely against the rites of the Law, as Circumcision, Sabbath keeping &c. expounding all mystically and spiritually, whereat the Jewes being offended, sought so eagerly to uphold them, that they fell into the judgement of infidelity to their owne destruction.

Gregory.

Gregory from the three examples of David humbling himselfe to play and dance before the Arke, Michal despising him proudly for so doing, and Uzzab rashly putting forth his hand to the Arke, faith, that morally humility is commended, because humble David had soone after a promise of the perpetuity of his kingdom in Christ, that should come of him; pride is condemned, because Michal was punished with barrennesse; and rashnesse in putting forth the hand to receive the Lords body by the unworthy judged, and such are they, that presume to come unprepared, because Uzzab was smitten with death for rashly touching the Arke, and the same is affirmed of unworthy receivers 1 Cor: 11. 30. Again he applieth the fact and fall of Uzzab to such, as not understanding the actions and speeches of the learned, presume rashly to judge them, saying, oft times the doings and sayings of the better displease the worser, but they are not rashly to be reprov'd of them, which they cannot understand. For this is with Uzzab rashly to reach out the hand to the Arke, seeming to him ready to fall, and so as he, thinking to helpe, lost his life, the infirme reprove the doings of the strong, and are cut off from the land of the living, for what is the minde of the just, but the Arke of the Testimony, seeing it is therein contained? And thus onely doth Gregory speake against a mans presuming to reprove the Bishop, when hee seemeth to him to erre, but indeed doth not. Upon this carrying of the Arke from place to place in state, the Papists ground their pompeous carrying about of the Hoast: for when the Pope, saith Martyr, goeth out of Rome, it is carryed in a pike upon a most white horse, and on either side are men appointed with wax candles and bells, and the horse is so instructed, as that when hee is led to the Temple, he goeth up to the High Altar, and there kneeleth downe upon his knees, untill the Hoast bee taken off againe and there placed, intolerable idolatrous madnesse. For the Arke was by Gods commandement to be carryed in state, but the bread in the Sacrament onely to be received and eaten, and not to be carryed about. Much honour indeed may seeme by this circumgesation, to bee given unto it, but it is besides the ordinance of our Lord, and therefore to bee condemned as well as this new device of Uzzab, to carry the Arke upon a new cart, which the Lord never appointed.

Hic intuentum est, quantum delinquit, qui ad corpus domini reus a c. dit, si ille morie multatur, qui arcam, corporis Domini figuram, minore, quam debuit veneratione corripuit.

Levites adjuvans manum extendit sed delinquens vitam perdidit, quia dum infirmi fortium facta corripunt, ab ipsa viventium forte reprobantur.

Peter Martyr.

And

And when they came to the threshing floore of Nacbon, 1 Chron. 13. 9. the threshing floore of Chidon, another name saith Junius and Lyra of the same thing: Martyr thinketh, that it was so called because there Joshua had lifted up his speare, and Nacbon, because there the Levites were prepared of God, and endued with new strength to carry the Arke, but these hee passes over as not worthy the standing upon, here the Oxen were disordered in their going, it being Gods will that it should bee so, to teach men their errors by the brute beasts, as Balaam was taught by his Ass. And hee saith, some of the Hebrewes thinke, that Uzzab was smitten, because hee beleaved not that God was able to uphold his owne Arke from falling without his helpe, but hee resteth upon these two causes, touching which an expresse charge is given, Numb. 4. 15. 1 For that they did not carry it upon their shoulders. 2 Because hee touched it, which was forbidden upon paine of death. And to carry it upon mens shoulders was commanded, lest if it were carried otherwise, it should sometime fall, and so a conceit come into the peoples mindes of impotency in God. How Uzzab was smitten, it is not said, some thinke with a Thunder-bolt, some as Jerom following Josephus, so as that his arme and shoulder withered. August. his breath being suddenly stopped, as by an Apoplexy. It is not to bee thought yet but that Uzzab was a good man, although he erred at this time, for even the holy fathers of the Church have had their errors, that wee may take heed of following any man in every thing. The Pope applied this once against the Emperour seeking by his edicts to reforme some things that were amisse in the Church, threatening him with destruction, as it befell Uzzab; but herein hee grossly erred, seeing Hezekiah, Josiah, Theodosius, Arcadius and Honorius, godly Kings and Emperours, did the like and were commended. Thus the Donatists, as August. sheweth tooke it ill, that their controversies should come to the knowledge of the civill Magistrate, but hee upon Psal. 2. Bee wise yee Kings, serve the Lord, &c. sheweth, that they cannot serve him better, or more, then by helping and restoring the Church of God.

Then David was angry, because God had made a breach in Uzzab, &c. Hee was not angry saith Martyr with God, who punished, but because the Levites had erred from the prescript rule of Gods Law, whereby hee was provoked to this severitie, and happily at his owne sinne, who had suffered the Arke so to bee carried, and that others might for ever after bee warned by this example to goe in every thing about holy matters according to rule, and feare to follow their owne phantasies, hee gave the place a new name, Perez Uzzab, that is, the breach in Uzzab. And David feared the Lord in that day, &c. that is, he was afraid that this judgement might proceed further, even to him also, and to his Citie in Zion, if the Arke were carried thither, as sometime the men in Bethshemesb were destroyed for the Arkes sake. And hee feared and was troubled the more without doubt, because the people might now begin to thinke, that hee was not in so good grace with God, in that at the very first he was so crossed in that, wherein hee thought to have gotten him the greatest credit, viz. in shewing to have a care of Religion and to further that, and to honour the Arke of God all that hee could. Lyra also saith, that David was not angry with God, but for the error of these men, but this is assigned for the cause of his anger, because God had made a breach, and not because the Levites, under whose charge the Arke was, did so rashly, wherefore I thinke rather, that David sinned here of infirmitie, as any holy man might doe, and that great discontent wrought a while with him to make him desist from his enterprise of carrying the Arke into his Citie, and to place it by the way in the house of Obed-Edom the Gittite. Thus also Peter Martyr, who saith, that either David knew certainly from God, that the Arke was to bee removed to his Citie at that time, and if so, hee could not bee free from fault, in that he proceeded not, or else hee attempted this of his owne head without any warrant from God, and then he sinned, because hee did it without faith. Now for his causing of the Arke to turne aside into the house of Obed-Edom; hee also inquireth whether it bee justifiable in him, to expose him by meanes of the Junius.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

Note.

Aug. Contra, Donatistas.

V. 8.
Peter Martyr.

V. 9.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Arke to the hazzard, which hee himfelfe declined, and answereth, that this man moſt probably being a good man and full of faith, deſired that it might bee brought to him, nothing fearing any ſuch danger, but accounting it an happineſſe to receive ſo holy a thing into his houſe. This Obed-Edom was a Levite, as appeareth 1 Chron. 16. 5. but whether Abimadab, in whoſe houſe it was before, were a Levite or no, is uncertaine, but it is to bee held rather, that hee was, and ſo it hath been held by all antiquitie; yet when I conſider 1 Chron. 15. where David calleth the Levites to carry the Arke, acknowledging an error to have been committed before about it, I cannot but thinke it juſtly a queſtion. And a Gittite hee is ſaid to bee becauſe as Lyra hath it, hee lived a baniſht man in Gath of the Philiftims country, as being one, that fled thither to David. Peter Martyr ſaith, hee might bee called ſo either becauſe hee was borne there, when the Philiftims ruled over Israel, or hee might by them at that time bee ſent for and placed there for the execution of ſome office, quod vix credo.

Here the Arke continued three moneths, and God bleſſed Obed-Edom, &c. The Hebrews, ſaith Comestor, will have this bleſſing to bee in proliferation, his wives and concubines all conceiving, and his cattell bringing forth Twinnes, but this is uncertaine, onely it is certaine, that hee began ſuddenly to encreaſe extraordinarily in worldly things, ſo that his neighbours perceived it, and told David of it: ſo Laban was bleſſed, when hee had Jacob in his houſe, and Potiphar, when hee had Joſeph; God will not bee an unprofitable gueſt to ſuch as entertaine him, the widow that entertained Elijah, his ſervant, was hereby preſerved in Famin, and the Shunamite that entertained Eliſhab was bleſſed with a ſonne; to give entertainment to ſuch is to give harbour, as it were, to the Arke of God as Obed-Edom, and ſo to bee in the way of receiving a rich bleſſing.

David hearing how greatly Obed-Edom was bleſſed by reaſon of the Arke, after that it had aboad there three moneths, hee fetcheth it with joy to his owne Citie. In theſe three moneths ſpace, Martyr thinketh that David had thoſe other ſignes of Gods favour, which are related betwixt his firſt attempt to remove the Arke unto him, and this, 1 Chron. 14. viz. Hiram ſending unto him Cedars and workmen, and the two great victories over the Philiftims, whereby hee being more confirmed put away all feare and brought the Arke home unto him. And whereas theſe things are in this booke ſaid to have been done before any mention made of the Arkes remove, hee thinketh, that order is not herein kept. But it ſeemeth rather to mee, that order is kept in this booke, but not, 1 Chron. 13. 14. becauſe it is not likely, that David immediately after the great feare and trouble of mind, into which hee was caſt upon the death of Vzzab, would reſolve, that God had now eſtabliſhed the kingdom unto him, and multiply his wives, as is ſaid 1 Chron. 14. 2. and neither in this booke nor in Chronicles is it ſaid, that his great victories were any motive in part to bring the Arke unto him, but onely Gods bleſſing upon the houſe where it was. How that in Chron. may bee reconciled with this for order, ſee before upon Verſ. 1. And 1 Chron. 15. 1. that which is briefly here ſpoken, that David tooke the Arke out of the houſe of Obed-Edom and brought it into his owne Citie, is more fully ſet forth thus. A place being prepared for the Arke of God, and a Tabernacle made, hee ſaid, none ſhall bring the Arke but Levites, &c. and here it is to bee underſtood, that hee did not now firſt make a Tabernacle, but this was done before his firſt attempting to bring the Arke home unto him. Wherefore Comestor ſpeaketh of this before the Arkes firſt remove, ſaying, that David made a Tabernacle for the Arke neare his owne houſe, and tooke for it ſome of the old Curtaines, and reſerved the former Tables, Pillars, and Baſes, although the making of this Tabernacle bee not here ſpoken of, till Verſ. 17. where it is mentioned notwithstanding, as made before, for they are ſaid to have put the Arke in the Tabernacle, which David had made. This, as Lyra admoniſheth, was not the ſame, which Moses had made, but another, for that ſtood ſtill at Gabaah, being a long time diſjoynd from the Arke, and happily being now too old to bee removed David made another

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

V. 11.
Schol. Hiſtor.

Note.

V. 12.
Peter Martyr.

1 Chron. 15. 1.

Schol. hiſtor.

Lyra.

another for the Arke. Then hee assembled all the Israelites againe to Jerusalem, &c. and the sonnes of Aaron and these Levites, of the sonnes of Kobab, Uzziel and his family 120. &c. then David said unto the chiefe, Sanctifie your selves to carry the Arke, for because wee did not so at the first, the Lord brake in upon us, &c. And the Levites bare the Arke upon their shoulders, that is, saith Theodor. not some going before and some behind, for so the backs of those that went before should have beene towards the Arke, but going with their sides one against another and the Arke in the midst. This gathering together of so great a multitude was both to carry the Arke to his place with the greater honour, and also as Martyr noteth, that all being present before the Arke might bee quickened the more to devotion, and by their presence shew, that they would bee obedient in their severall rankes and orders to God, a signe of whose presence the Arke was, both Levites, souldiers and other people, as at the inauguration of Kings a great multitude of their subjects from all parts must come and attend in token of their subjection, yet the way was not farre, that the Arke was now carried, for Obed-Edoms house was, as Lyra saith, in the suburbs of Jerusalem, for which cause the people were gathered thither together, and are not said to have gone to any other place for it, whereas the Levites are said to beare the Arke, Verf. 15. Sallianus contendeth, that these Levites were Priests, herein following Josephus: for when the Arke at any time was carried with greatest honour, it was done by Priests, as over Jordan, about Jericho, and into Solomons Temple, neither doth it make against it here, that the children of Levi were said to carry it, because the Priests also were the children of Levi, and whereas it was committed to the Levites, that came of Kobab to bee carried, Numb. 4. 7. hee saith, this was meant commonly in the Wildernesse from station to station, but when it was to bee carried in more state, the Priests were the men, that must carry it, as Deut. 31. 9. they are spoken of, the Priests that beare the Arke of the Lord. Whereas in bidding them to sanctifie themselves and their brethren, of the Priests onely Zadok and Abiahar being named, but of the Levites many, it is to bee understood that there were notwithstanding many Priests more, but these two were the chiefe, for 1 Chro. 24. they are distinguished into 24. orders.

And when God helped the Levites that bare the Arke, they offered seven Bullocks and seven Rammes: When they that bare the Arke had gone six paces, hee sacrificed Oxen and Fatlings; the vulgar Latine, they sacrificed an Oxe, and a Sheepe, and a Ram, and this helping of the Levites who carried the Arke Lyra understandeth according to some Rabbins in making it to feele so light, that they which carried it seemed to themselves as carrying nothing. But this is rejected by Tostatus, and some others, holding that God helped them by giving them alacritie in this worke extraordinary, even when they first began to take the Arke upon their shoulders. Pellican saith that God helped them, when hee shewed them mercy and smote none of them, as hee had done Uzzab before, and some Rabbins, that Uzzab had beene smitten, when hee had gone but six paces, therefore they now being all safe at the sixth pace make a stand and offer sacrifice. But to let this passe as a conjecture, it is to bee thought, that by Gods helping the Levites at this time is not onely meant his sparing of them, or giving them alacritie, but extraordinarily strengthening them in this worke, so as that by reason of their great strength, or because a divine power invibly supported the Arke together with them, it seemed light unto them. At which signe of Gods speciall presence thus giving approbation to this enterprise, they were so moved, that they stood still, till sacrifices were offered unto God in way of thanksgiving. But whereas they are said to have sacrificed seven Bullocks and seven Rams, but according to the vulgar Latine, 2 Sam. 6. 13. a Bullock and a Ram; Sallianus the Jesuite saith, that this difference may bee reconciled thus, there was a Bullock and a Ram sacrificed in every company of the Levites, which were seven; of the sacrificing of one of which companies onely it is taken, 2 Sam. 6. 13. but of all, 1 Chron. 15. and this hee groundeth upon the vulgar Latine also, wherein it is said immediatly before, there were with David

1 Chron. 15. 3.

V. 12.

P. Martyr.

Lyra.

Sallianus.

1 Chron. 15.

26.

2 Sam. 6. 13.

Lyra.

Tostatus.

Pellican.

Sallianus.

seven companies and the sacrifice of a Calfe, but this, as Lxx well noteth, is not in the Hebrew, but hath beene by some ignorantly inserted, although hee bee therefore taxed by Sallianus for greater rashnesse in putting it out, then the inserters for ignorance in putting it in. But cleaving to the Hebrew, wee shall not need any such device to reconcile the histories, seeing in that tongue there is no difference. And truly this is but a poore one; for if seven sacrifices were at one time offered in seven companies, there must needs bee seven Altars, whereas certainly there was but one altar of the Lord before the Arke.

V. 14.
1 Chron. 15. 27

And David danced before the Lord with all his might, being girded with a linnen Ephod, David was clothed with a robe of fine linnen, and all the Levites which bare the Arke: His Kingly robes being put off, hee arrayed himselfe now like one of the Levites out of his great humilitie. Now although there were some Ephods of linnen for the Priests which were holy, and therefore not to bee worne by any but Priests, yet it was free for any man else to make him such an upper garment of linnen, and to weare it, and it was commendable in ministring about the Arke so to doe. For even the Levites voluntarily in imitation of the Priests did weare Ephods, and not by vertue of any precept of the Law; wherefore Theodore saith, there were Priestly super-induments and there were common, and without doubt David being a godly King would not dare to put on the Priestly but the common.

Theod. in 1 Chron.

V. 17.

And they brought the Arke and set it in his place in the midst of the Tabernacle that David had pitched for it: what Tabernacle David had made for the Arke is not said before, but that hee built himselfe an house, Chap. 11. 12. it must therefore bee understood, that it was within his owne palace, yet in such a place there, as that the people might from all parts freely resort unto it. For that it was within the limits of his owne habitation appeareth, because hee had before said, how shall I bring the Arke to me, Chap. 6. 9. Tostatus thinketh, that this place was a great Palace with a large Hall, and Porch before it, and lodgings about it for the Priests, Singers and Porters that served there. But why did hee make a Tabernacle or Tent for the Arke and not an house? Peter Martyr answereth, that hee knew that the Arke must bee removed againe, and hee had it then in his mind to build a Temple, wherefore in the meane season hee thought it best to place it in a Tent, as Moses at the first had done.

Peter Martyr.

V. 19.

And David blessed the people, and dealt to every one, both men and women, a cake of bread, a piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine; this blessing was by praying for them, as Solomon afterwards did, and this munificence was more, then wee read of to have been done at his inauguration to the Kingdome, shewing, that he was more joyfull for the Arke of God brought home unto him, then for his Kingdom; and this bounty tended greatly to the reconciling of all his subjects minds unto him, who had been before divided, and therefore hee did most wisely herein. Some say that his blessing of the people, was not onely a praying for them, but also a praising of them for their chearfull attendance about this service in transporting the Arke, as wee are said to blesse God when wee praise him. Now before the dismitte of the people mentioned at the end of v. 19. it is further shewed at the same time, 1 Chron. 16. 4. that David appointed Levites and Priests by name to minister before the Arke by singing and musick, and blowing of Trumpets, delivering to Asaph the Psalmes to bee sung continually in praising God, verse 7, 8, 9, &c. and the Priests and Levites that should serve at the Tabernacle in the High-place at Gibeon, ver. 39, 40, &c. But when or how the Tabernacle was brought to Gibeon, is not recorded. It was set up in Shiloh by Ioshua, and there it abode till Elies death, from thence wee read of no more remove made thereof, but doe gather that it was removed after that the Arke was taken by the Philistims, from 1 Sam. 21. where the High-priest and the Shewbread are spoken of, as being at Nob, and therefore the Tabernacle. And happily before that it was carryed to Mizpeh, for thither the people by Samuels direction assembled to seek the Lord, and to make Saul King.

Sallianus.

1 Chron. 16. 4.

V. 39. 40.

Ioshs. 18.

King.

King, and from Mizpeh to Gilgal, where they met to renew the Kingdome, and many sacrifices were offered, and from thence to Nob where it is next found, and from Nob to Gibeon, as here appeareth; and in this place what Priests and Levites should attend to sacrifice, and to doe other service required by the Law, David now directeth, and what at the place newly erected for the Arke to praise God daily there. So that from henceforth to the building of Solomons Temple, it seemeth, that there were two places for publique adoration, but the sacrifices were offered at the Tabernacle, for which cause Solomon is said there to have offered a thousand burnt-offerings. And this might well bee, whilst the Arke and Tabernacle were disjoyned, because either of them was made to bee an holy signe of Gods presence, and the Law against sacrificing in divers places, was not hereby transgressed, sith the meaning was to avoid the worshipping of false Gods, of which there could hereby bee no danger, whether sacrifices were offered at the Tabernacle, as they were daily, or before the Arke, as they were also sometimes, 1 Chron. 16. 1. Touching the Psalm of praise henceforth to bee sung continually before the Arke, the first part taken out of Psal. 105. unto these words, Touch not mine anointed, say the Hebrews in Seder Olam, were sung in the morning; and the other part beginning with these words, Sing unto the Lord all the earth, taken out of Psal. 96. in the evening. These things being thus ordered, the people departed, and David returned to blesse his owne house, that is, to pray for a blessing upon them of his owne house in particular, as hee had done for all in generall, and with them to praise God and to feast, and make them good chear, for so Abigail, when she brought some good refreshing to David, prayed him to take that blessing.

Then Michal came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the King of Israel to day, who uncovered himselfe, &c. It was said before, that shee saw him leaping and dancing before the Arke, and despised him in her heart, v. 16. David to expresse his joy in the Lord, would needs bee one amongst the Levites, that should play upon an Instrument and dance as the Arke passed on, thus shewing his great humility. But Michal his wife most bitterly upbraided him by it, as not becoming a King. Indeed amongst the Romans, Nero and Caligula Emperours, are both blamed for dancing publiquely, and it was counted a cursed thing to be a dancer amongst them, and a certain Noble woman is accused by Cicero, because shee could sing and dance elegantly. Yet Livy saith, that Salii were the Priests of Mars, who indeed were Senators, and by the institution of Numa, they went through the City carrying heavenly armes, singing and dancing, and herein chiefly stood their solemnities, when they sacrificed. But howsoever it was amongst the Heathen, David being rapt with heavenly joy, made these expressions unblamably before any; but Michal swelling with pride, and mad by reason of her Royall blood, as Gregory speaketh. Yet shee hath found some to joyne with her in blaming David, as Tostatus, who saith, that David was worthy to bee blamed for two things: 1. Because hee leaped and danced, which was a point of childish levity, and not of grave manners. 2. Because hee put off his Kingly apparell and put on an Ephod, and therefore Michal was in a manner justly angry with him; and Cajetan expoundeth his making of himselfe naked by his being uncovered his armes, his legs, and his sides, which was undecent, for the Ephod covered not these parts. And Theodoret and Procopius say, that Michal was a good woman, neither was her barrenness laid upon her for this, but because if shee had had a childe by David, it is most likely that the people would have stood for him to bee King, who did shine on both sides with the glory of his stock, whereas the Lord would have none to reigne any more of the seed of Saul. But all other Expositors, although they acknowledge Michal otherwise a good woman, and a good and most loving wife to David, for shee adventured her owne life to save him from Saul, preferring rather her love to him, then to her father, yet they do herein altogether justifie David, as committing no indecorum, and blame her for thus bitterly deriding him. Shee thought indeed that it did not become his royall Majesty to consort thus with the common sort, but that hee should

1 Sam: 7.
1 Sam: 10. 17.
1 Sam: 11. 15.

1 King: 3. 4.

Seder Olam.

1 Chron: 16.
43.

1 Sam: 25.

2 Sam: 6. 20.

Suetonius.

Cicer: pro Mar.
Livius 1. 1.

Gregor. Mor.
l. 27. c. 27.

Tostatus.

Cajetan.

Theodoret.
qu. 11. 2 Reg.
Neque enim propter hoc mansit sterilis, sed ut nullus
regnaret ex eo se-mine, est enim verisimile po-pulum praela-rum eum qui utrinque generis claritate fulgeret.

Lyra.

V. 23.

have gone in his Royall ornaments in state at this solemnity, and that to doe otherwise was a great dishonour to him. And this made her to despise him in her heart, and to hasten to meet him returning home, that shee might upbraid him by it; and shee said, hee uncovered himselfe in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as a vaine fellow. Lyra thinketh, that by these handmaids, shee meant his Concubines, and whereas hee answereth, that amongst them hee should bee had in more honour, hee understandeth it, because they should bear him children, which would make for the honour of his house, whereas shee should never more bear him any. But because shee speaketh of the handmaids of his servants, it cannot bee so understood, but of women of a servile condition; and of women shee speaketh rather then of men, because, as it is more shamefull for a woman to doe any thing ridiculous and undecent before men, so it is for a man to doe thus before women. *David*s answer to her was, as shee well deserved, most bitter, for that hee remembered to her, Gods rejecting of her fathers house. Touching her going without a childe to the day of her death, it is ridiculous which the Rabbins deliver, that shee had a childe, but dyed the same day that shee brought forth: neither is it of more credit that others say, that shee had children before by her other husband, or by David, but after this none; for it is plaine here that shee never had any, and yet the words of the text doe not imply, that for this mocking of David shee was punished with barrenesse, for although it bee in our translation, therefore to Michal was no childe borne; the Hebrew may as well be rendered, and to Michal, &c. shee was barren before, and happily for the reason brought by Theodores, and the continuance of her barrenesse is here commemorated, as comming for this sin against her husband.

CHAP. VII.

V. 1, 2.

Deut. 12.
Lyra.Tostatus.
Tornellus.
2 Sam. 8.Hieronym. in tradit. Hebr.

V. 3.

Vhen David had rest from all his enemies round about, hee said to Nathan, I dwell in an house of Cedars, but the Ark of God within Curtaines. By these words hee intimated, that hee was desirous to build an house for the Arke of God, not for any precept which the Lord had given to build one, for hee had onely spoken of a place which hee would choose, whereby yet Lyra gathereth, that David understood an house to bee meant, and that not without cause, for v. 10, 11. it is said when they should have rest from all their enemies, God would choose him a place, and this time he thought was now come; but *David*s motive was the indecorum that seemed to bee in it, that hee should dwell in a stately Palace, and the Arke in a Tent, a like speech unto which is afterwards used, Haggai 1. 4. And it was great piety in David, that hee purposed thus to doe out of thankfulness to God, who had so highly promoted him. For the time, it is generally thought to have been soone after the bringing of the Arke into this City, if it bee said, hee had warres after this with the Philistims, Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites: Tostatus answereth well, that when it is said, hee had rest from all his enemies, it is not meant, that hee had no warres with any enemies more, but after the double overthrow given to the Philistims which was before mentioned, all his enemies did so feare him, that none durst fight against him any more, but hee went and fought against them, and subdued them, and enlarged his Kingdome more then all that went before him could doe. Touching the Prophet Nathan, with whom hee consulted, some thinke that hee was Jonathan the sonne of Semmai the brother of David, one of *David*s worthies, being otherwise called Nathan, but it agreeth not to a military man to bee a Prophet; wee read no more of him, but that hee was a Prophet, and very familiar with David, but of what kindred hee came, as Gad also, is uncertaine.

Nathan said to David, Doe all that is in thine heart, for the Lord is with thee: thus hee said at the first by humane conjecture, and not by inspiration, as a Prophet, and therefore hee was sent againe the next day to reverse it. Whence

Martyr

Martyr noteth, that even a Prophet may erre, if hee speaketh any thing of himselfe, and not by the direction of Gods Word. So Samuel erred, when hee thought Eliab the eldest sonne of Isbail to bee the Lords anointed, but the true Prophet is soone made to see into his errour, and to recant. So Nathan the same night was better informed, the Lord deferred not to let him understand his will herein, because David was so earnestly set upon this worke, that it was not likely that hee would long deferre the going about it, unlesse hee were soone warned to the contrary, especially upon Nathans encouragement, making a vow without delay to provide a resting place for the Arke, as Psal. 132. so Martyr. But according to Junius it is rather to bee held, that hee made that Psalme when hee brought the Arke into the Tabernacle, which hee had prepared in Zion, and therefore hee speaketh not of an house, but of a Tabernacle, v. 5. and of bringing the Arke from Kireath-jearim, v. 6. yet, as Lyra saith, the Lord knowing David to bee very forward, made haste to restrain him from building a Temple, because the time of building it set by God, was not yet come; and something there is in that Psalme intimating it to have been made now, as v. 12. where the promise of God concerning Dauids sonne is recited, which was not made till this time. The reasons against his building now were: 1 Because the Lord never spake word to any of the Judges of Israel about building him an house, nor yet to David, but was content to walke in a Tabernacle; and till such time as the Lord giveth order for the building of a Temple, no man ought to attempt it. 2 Which is not mentioned here, but 1 Chron. 22. 11. Because David had fought many battailes, and shed much blood, in the speech of David to Solomon, and in the speech of Solomon to King Hiram, 1 Kings 5. 3. because hee made many warres against his enemies round about; which two places being compared together doe shew, as Tostatus gathereth, that Dauids many distractions by reason of his continuall warres, were the cause why hee could not build this house, especially because as is added, 1 Chron. 22. 9. Thou shalt have a sonne who shall live in peace, whose name shall therefore bee Solomon, hee shall build mee an house; so that meerly his shedding of blood in battaile was not the cause hindring him from this worke, for God himselfe directed him to fight these battailes, and fought for him, and shed this blood, but because a most peaceable time was necessary to goe about it. If it bee said, God could have given David certain yeares of peace if it had pleased him wherein hee might have built: It is true, but it seemed good rather to him to respite the building of his house, till the reigne of one, all whose time should be peaceable, to intimate the universall peace which should be in the world when Christ should come, who was figured out by the Temple, and the peace of conscience coming by him. And accordingly it fel out, for he was born in the dayes of Augustus Caesar, in whose time there was peace 40 yeares, and being justified by faith in him, wee have peace with God, who is therefore called the Prince of Peace. For the omitting of this reason here, it was left out to bee afterwards supplied, and therefore all the words now spoken by Nathan to David are not here set downe. Now in prohibiting David to build him an house, lest he should bee discouraged, as thinking himselfe therefore not so much favoured by God, he addeth further a most gracious message to him, telling him, how much he had done for him, in raising him from a shepheard to be a King, destroying his enemies, and giving him a name according to the names of the great ones upon earth, that is, not of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as some thinke, but of great Kings reigning farre and wide, and bringing under their obedience many peoples: for so David came to have a name by subjecting his enemies. And this the Lord spake not by way of upbraiding David by his benefits, but to enflame his heart the more with his love. And to shew this, he promisseth in the next words to appoint a place for his people to resort unto for divine worship, and that they should be settled in their country, and not be afflicted againe, as in former times, and in the dayes of the Iudges, which, as Martyr hath it, is to bee understood partly, that for a long time, viz. during the reigne of David and Solomon his sonne, they should bee

Peter Martyr.

V. 4.

Junius.

Lyra.

V. 5, 6.

Tostatus.

V. 9.

V. 8, 9.

V. 10.

Peter Martyr.

bee free from their enemies tyranny, so as they never had beene before in the time of al their judges, and partly upon condition of being obedient unto him, for if they had continued to walke in his law alwayes, they should never have beene removed, as for their disobedience they were in the Babylonish Captivity, &c. And that David might not thinke this motion of building God an house displeasing unto him, although hee was not permitted so to do, it is said 1 King: 8. 18. Whereas it was in thy minde to build me an house, thou didst well, which is here omitted, the Lord approved it expressly as a pious intention in David. And lastly because he bent his minde to the building of an house for God, the Lord promisetb to requite him with the like, and to build him an house, as it is said he did for the Midwives of Egypt, he built them houses, and v. 16. that his house should stand for ever, and that his kingdome should bee everlasting, the last words serving to explaine the former, for by his house is meant his kingdome, that should continue in him and his posterity throughout all ages, the accomplishment of which was in Christ, who came of David. But whereas it is said, thy kingdome shall bee established for ever before thee, Vatablus understands it, thou living and seeing it, Cajetan, for thee, Sa, thou seeing it, when thou art dead, because the soules of the faithfull see after death those things, that concerne their state, The Vulgar Latin, to take away all doubt hath it, before my face, but Hebr. it is plainly, before thy face, and the meaning is, this shall bee begun to bee done, thou living and seeing it, for David himselfe raigned after this 30 yeares, even as long as naturall strength permitted him to live, and saw his sonne Solomon made King in his stead, and so his house and kingdome was made sure before his face. For the meane how David's house should bee made firme, hee saith v. 12. When thou shalt sleepe with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, &c. and he shall build me an house. 1 Chron: 22. 9. hee shall live in rest and his name shall bee called Solomon. More particularly describing that sonne of his, which should raigne after him in a most glorious manner. But it is doubted by some, that Solomon was not meant in this place, because one is spoken of, that should bee set up after David's death, whereas Solomon was made King, David yet living, 1 King: 1. Thus Ambrose, this could not be spoken of Solomon, for it must be one that was borne and made King after David's death, and the Lord speaketh of a faithfull house, which hee would make him, as hee did not to Solomon, for hee himselfe erred grossly by idolatry, and hee erred, that wee might not erre in thinking Solomon to bee here meant, but know that all this was spoken mystically of Christ. Thus also August: who saith, that he began to raigne, his father yet living, that wee might know that hee was not meant, and the Jewes themselves doe yet expect the accomplishment, of this in their Messiah to come. But as Peter Martyr saith, it is made so plaine 1 Chr: 22. 9. that this was spoken literally of Solomon, as that it cannot bee denied, and hee was borne after this prophesie, and did not raigne any time to speake of, till after David's death, although he were anointed King before, for the settling of the State, and indeed David was in a manner dead, when he was made King. All this then was in part fulfilled in Solomon, and perfectly in Christ, who was typified by him: for he truly is King over all Countries and Nations, and Solomon onely over all the Nations about him, and hee and his posterity raigned a long time, which in Hebrew is commonly set forth by these words לעולם for ever, but Christ for ever and ever world without end. Lyra distinguisheth the things that are spoken of Solomon thus, some that hee did, were not figurative, as his Idolatry, some meerely figurative, as that his kingdome should extend to the ends of the world, and bee for ever, for this is spoken onely figuratively of Solomon, and some both figurative and really agreeing to his person, as the building of the Lords house, his admired wisdom and glory.

And thus that must bee peculiar to Solomon, which is said, Vers: 14. If bee commit iniquitie, I will chasten him with the rod of men, but my mercy will I not take from him. For Christ was without all spot of sinne. By the rod of men Theodore understandeth such evils, as are wont to be laid upon the bodies of men here

V. 11.
Exod: 1. 21.

Vatablus.
Cajetan.
Sa.

V. 12.
V. 13.

Ambros. l. 3. in luc.

Aug: l. 18. de
Civir: c. 10.

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

V. 14.

Theodore.

here. Josephus, unfruitfulnesse of the earth, and sicknesses. Hierom, the sword of the enemy. But experience sheweth, that it was trouble by warres sent upon Solomon in his age. By his mercy, that hee would not take from him, understand the mercy of preserving him from everlasting destruction, whence it may bee gathered, that Solomon repented and was saved, although some understand the mercy of being establisht in his kingdome and not put downe, as Saul was, who is therefore by and by mentioned, and it is promised that hee should not bee dealt withall as Saul was. And all this Nathan is said to have spoken to David to shew that hee was not ashamed to recant his former error, whose example wee must follow, and not in stead of recanting seeke to maintain any error that wee have false into: So Martyr.

Then went King David in and sate before the Lord, &c. that is, saith Lyra, into the place of prayer neare the Tabernacle, hee is said to sit according to the Glasse by humilitie, when he quietly disposed himselfe thus to pray & to give God thanks, saith Pellican. Some saith Martyr hold, that hee sate to figure out Christs sitting at Gods right hand, some, that all things have their being from him, and some to shew the quietnesse of his mind, but for as much as the gesture in praying is not prescribed, wee shall not need to question it, whether hee did well or no in sitting. Thus also Augustine: Let not this move thee, that hee is said to have sitten praying, for Elias did the like when hee prayed for raine, by which examples wee are admonished, that it is not prescribed, in what gesture of body wee pray, so that the mind bee present doing the true intent unto God. Vatablus saith that none might sit before the Lord, but the King. But Iostatus and Dionysius expound sitting by abiding long and quiet; Cajetan, hee sat more in mind then body. Iunius saith, it is a cataphresis. Josephus, hee went unto the Arke, and falling downe upon his face hee worshipped, and I thinke, that his sitting is not properly to bee understood, because other holy men are said expressly to have kneeled, as Solomon, and Paul, and Christ himselfe, whose example must bee our imitation; and to kneele wee are invited in that saying, Come, let us worship and fall downe and kneele, &c. And for Elijah, hee is not said to sit, but to cast himselfe downe, and to put his face betweene his knees by an extraordinary propheticall gesture, as the Spirit moved him. Yet it is not absolutely necessary alwayes to kneele in prayer, for betwixt Easter and Whitfuntide of old it was forbidden to kneele and commanded to stand praying in token of Christs resurrection: and a man may pray walking, lying in bed, and riding, for hee must pray continually, but at the set times of doing our devotion publicly or privately wee ought to preferre kneeling, as the most humble gesture before the highest majesty. Who am I (O Lord) and what is my house, that thou hast brought mee hitherto? The greater Gods gifts were towards David, the more hee humbleth himselfe before him, as contrariwise the more the wicked are lifted up, the prouder they are; that thou hast brought me hitherto, that is, to bee a King who was before so meane.

But this was a small thing in thy sight (O God) for thou hast spoken of thy servants house for a great while to come, and is this the manner of man O Lord God? these last words saith Martyr are by some read affirmatively, making this the sense, this is the state and condition of the most excellent and greatest men in the world to enjoy kingly honour themselves and to leave it to their posteritie generation after generation. R. Kimbi alledgeth, 1 Chron. 17. 17. to prove this to bee the meaning, thou hast regarded mee according to the state of a man of high degree, this is thy manner of dealing with men of greatest dignitie, whereby thou dealt with me: R. Solomon reading it as wee doe, interrogatively, will have this to bee the sense: Is this thy manner of dealing towards man to embrace him with so much love? that is, saith Martyr, that Christ the sonne of God should come of my stock. And for the former sense, hee saith, it may bee referred to Christ also, thou respectest me for that excellent mans sake Christ Jesus, and not for my owne merits. Lyra, this is the manner of man, that every one is sollicitous for the good of his posteritie. Hugo hath both this and another, that hee should give thee thanks for thy great benefits, and a third, that hee should

Hierom. i. iuradiu. Hebr.

V. 18.

*Lyra.
Clef. Ord.
Pellican,
Peter Martyr.*

*August. l. 2. ad
Simplician.
Non esse prascripiendum, quo-modo corpus ad orandum constituatur, modo animus Deo praesens peragat inten-tionem suam.
Iostatus.
Cajetan.
Iunius.
Josephus.*

Peter Martyr.

V. 19.

R. Kimbi.

R. Solomon.

Lyra.

Sallianus.

should serve thee in simplicitie and puritie of heart, and thou shouldest deale with him in mercy: Sallianus following the vulgar Latine, hec est lex Adami, saith that the meaning is, herein thou dealest with mee, as with Adam, upon whom thou conferredst happinesse not for himselfe onely, but for his posteritie throughout all ages, conditioning yet with mine, as his, if they sinne, to punish them, but yet not to take thy mercy from them for ever, as thou didst not from the posteritie of Adam, for only the Angels sinning fel from mercy for ever, man sinning was reparable again by grace. Junius saith, he meant, that he dealt familiarly with him, as one man with another. For my part, seeing 1 Chro. 17. 17. maketh it plain which is here delivered obscurely, I following the author of that book, as the best expositors do resolve, that the meaning is nothing else, but that Gods dealing towards him, was as towards the greatest, the word Adam, man, being put here for a most eminent man, and חורר signifying a command, or law, for the manner or condition. And the rather, because the Lord had sent by Nathan to tell him, that hee had given him a name like the great ones upon earth, now David in these words answers to that in his thanksgiving by acknowledging the state and condition of the greatest and happiest man upon earth by Gods goodnesse to be his condition.

Junius.

V. 20.

Lyra.

And what can David say more unto thee? that is, by way of petitioning, for thou hast done more already for mee then I could have presumed to aske: so Lyra. But was it so great a matter to reigne temporally, that David found such a full complacency herein, that hee could not tell how to aske any thing greater? Answer. He meaneth onely for temporall things, hee could not desire greater happinesse, and this being bestowed upon him in mercy did certifie him of the future happinesse, especially Christ the eternall King being prophesied of in the premises to come of him, in whom all nations are blessed, for thou Lord knowest thy servant, that is, by doing for mee and promising mee so great things shewest, that thou takest notice and care of mee, then which what greater happinesse can I attaine unto?

V. 21.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

For thy word sake and according to thy owne heart hast thou done all these great things to make thy servant know them; that is, not for any merits of mine, but because thou didst promise them, and that freely being moved by the goodnesse of thy owne will onely, and hence it came, that so great favour hath bene shewed unto mee, as to make mee know all this, as of old the Lord would not hide, but shew unto Abraham, what he meant to do for that great familiaritie with himselfe, into which hee had received him. Lyra, and Martyr somewhat more exprelling the word, say according to thy promise made unto mee by Samuel and Nathan, and Martyr, by his making knowne these things unto him understandeth his giving him to consider them, as many doe not when they receive great benefits from God, 1 Chron. 17. for these words, for thy words sake, is, for thy servants sake, that is, for thy love unto him moving thee to promise.

V. 22.

Lyra
Peter Martyr.

Wherefore thou art great (O Lord God) Lyra, Wherefore thou art magnified, according to the vulgar Latine, that is, art magnificent, for this the greatnesse of thy gifts doe argue being given to the unworthy, Verf. 23, 24. Gods goodnesse is further amplified by recounting what hee did for his people Israel both in bringing them out of Egypt, and expelling the inhabitants of that Land before them, as is explained, 1 Chron. 17. 21. 22. The rest of this Chapter from Verf. 25. is spent in praying, that God would doe for him and his house as hee had spoken, the veritie of Gods word being insisted upon againe and againe, as the ground of his confident asking this. There are two causes saith Lyra, why David prayed thus earnestly for that which was promised him. 1 Because all good which the Lord hath promised is to bee attained by prayer; 2 Because all men are subject to sinne, and Gods promises of good are conditionall, that such as to whom his promises are made may bee contained in obedience, or having sinned repent, and so bee made capable of these promises. For any revelation made now unto David touching the place and the forme of the Temple, which his sonne should build, nothing is here said, yet 1 Chron. 28. 11, 12. 19. David giveth Solomon a patterne of all things, and gold and silver silver to make each thing, saying, that hee had them delineated to him from the Lord. And this most probably was done now for his greater comfort, as Tostatus thinketh, although Theodoret and Lyra, not till after his numbring of the people, and the threshing floore of Araunah the Jebusite pointing out unto him for sacrifice.

V. 25.

Touching David's sonne Solomon, of whom somewhat hath beene already said, that most probably notwithstanding his great sinning, hee was finally penitent and saved; It is objected that it is improbable, because for his wickednesse, it is threatned that the kingdome should in the greatest part bee rent from his sonne, which was not reverfed, as it should have been, if he had been penitent, as the sentence against Nineveh. I answer, David after his great finnes of murder and adultery was penitent, yet hee and his house suffered temporally notwithstanding, wherefore this is no argument of Solomon's finall impenitency, to make us the more fearefull of offending, God doth severely punish even the penitent here, whose soules hee saveth hereafter.

CHAP. VIII.

After this David smote the Philistims and subdued them, &c. The cause of this warre is not here set downe, some thinke that the taking of Methegammah here spoken of out of their hands was the cause, expounding it the bridle of tribute or the bridle of a river. But this cannot bee, because it followed after their subduing, neither is it to bee thought, that there was any particular cause, but the Philistims having twice before come against David, hee now to breake their great power, by which they were from time to time most infest to the people of Israel, that hee might leave a quiet kingdome to his sonne after him, as God had said, that hee should live in peace, went against them to make a full conquest over them, and to bring them under his obedience. And for the same cause it is most probable, that hee fought against other peoples also, and that with their spoyle hee might provide gold and silver and other things necessary for the building of the Temple. For although hee was restrained from building himselfe, yet hee was both acquainted with the matter, forme and ornaments about it, and accordingly prepared for it, as afterwards appeareth, 1 Chron. 22. 14, 15. 1 Chron. 28. 19. Whereas David is said here to have taken out of the hands of the Philistims Methegammah, 1 Chron. 18. 1. It is said, Gath and her townes, so that Gath was this Methegammah, the bridle of tribute, it was one of the chiefe Cities of the Philistims, by the power whereof especially the Israelites had been in times past held under tribute, but now being taken the Philistims became tributaries to David. Hieronym saith, that all the five Cities of the Philistims are meant by the bridle of tribute, but seeing Gath alone with her townes is set forth to bee this Metheg, wee must rest rather in this. Verf. 2. Hee smote also the Moabites, measuring them with a line to cast them to the ground, hee measured with two lines those that hee would put to death, and with a full line those that hee would save alive, the vulgar Latine, hee measured them with a line equalling them to the ground, and hee measured two lines, one to kill and the other to keepe alive, that is, saith Lyra, casting downe their strong holds, and laying them levell with the ground, that they might not bee able to rebell any more, and hee ordained two wayes of proceeding against them, one against the more blamable killing them by way of justice, the other towards the lesse blamable to save them alive by way of mercy: yet hee saith, the Hebrew hath it: Hee measured two lines to put to death, and fulfilled a line to save alive, which the Hebrewes expound, hee slew two parts of them, and saved the third part alive. The cause of which severity was for that the King of Moab had slaine his father and mother being left with him, when David returned into Judah out of his Countrey, to which hee had fled, when Saul persecuted him, as 1 Sam. 22. Junius likewise, hee died the people of the countrey into three parts, and hereof hee slew two, and saved

Tostatus.
Lyra.
Theodoret.

Of Solomon.

V. 1.

Lyra.
Iosephus.
Hieronym. in radin. Hebr.

V. 2.

Lyra.

Junius.

Scholast. hystor.
P. Martyr.

Peter Martyr.
Deat. 2. 9.

Tostatus.

Beda.

Sallianus.

V. 3.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

saved one alive. But this, saith Lyra, is to bee understood of the souldiers, for the rest of the people are said to have bene put to tribute, or made tributaries unto him. Comestor by his measuring of them with the line, and equalling them to the ground understandeth his bringing of them very low, so that to whom hee would he gave possessions there, and his measuring with two lines, &c. of his slaying whom hee would, and saving the rest. Thus also Peter Martyr, who enquireth into the reason of *David*s going against the Moabites, seeing the Israelites had been forbidden before to goe against them, and answereth, that this was to be understood unlesse they came against Israel, but this they did, Judg. 3. and oppressed them, and were continually their enemies; wherefore David might wel make warre upon them. Tostatus inquiring into the reason, why such severitie was now used against them, saith, that most probably the particular reason was, for that they invaded and did much mischief in some parts of the Land, thus provoking David to goe against them, and to slay so many of them. But for so much as the Philistims had dammified and been infest to the Israelites much more, and the Moabites not long agoe deserved well of David, when hee and his father and mother were harboured amongst them from the fury of Saul, there must needs be some other more speciall reason, some extraordinary foule fact committed against David by them, & this I cannot but incline to think was the murdering of his father & mother, whom he left with the King of Moab, 1 Sam. 22. unlesse it shall be thought that David raged thus against them, because being allyed to Israel they unnaturally turned such great enemies; although many reject it, as a fiction of the Rabbins. And for *David*s measuring them with a line, Tostatus saith, that hereby is meant his abusing of them after the manner of beasts, which are taken with snares and nets. And Beda, be measured them with a line to make them equall to the ground, that is, by an hyperbole, hee abused them, and trod them under foot as the ground, as being without all strength to resist, so mightily did hee bring them under. Or because a line is used to measure Land withall, it is meant, that hee having gotten Moab into his possession gave portions thereof by measure, to whom hee pleased, saving those alive who submitted themselves unto him for this purpose, and slaying the contumacious. The Reader may follow which of these expositions hee pleaseth; But I preferre that of Lyra, hee determined with himselfe, as if hee had measured with a line, how farre to proceed in demolishing their strong holds, and for the people, how many to preserve and how many to kill, viz. to kill two for one. Thus, as one noteth, David extended his kingdom eastward on the other side of the river Jordan where Moab stood, as by conquering the Philistims Westward, and afterwards he went North and South also in his conquests.

David also smote Hadadezer King of Zobah as he went to recover his borders at the River Euphrates, 1 Chron. 18. 3. hee is called Hadarezer, and hee is said to have been smitten unto Hamath, when hee went to establish his dominion by Euphrates. Lyra saith, that hee was King of one part of Syria. Peter Martyr of the part called Sapheza betwene both the Armenians, and hee saith, that hee now passed over Euphrates to enlarge his kingdom by getting the Land of the Israelites, whose borders extended even to Euphrates, and happily hee pretended a title to it, because Abraham was a Syrian, and the Israelites were once under Cushan-rishathaim in the dayes of the Judges, and hee was King of Mesopotamia in Syria. But David went against him, and overcame him and tooke 1000. Chariots, and 700. horsemen, and 20000. footmen, the vulg. Latin hath it 1700. horsemen, & so it is Hebr. no mention being made here of Chariots, but because, 1 Chron. 18. 4. it is 1000. Chariots, and 7000. horsemen, our translators from thence supplied the word Chirriots. But it is better leaving it out here to read it, 1700. horsemen. And whereas, 1 Chron. 18. 4. it is 700. horsemen it is to be understood, that even at this day three horsemen are given to every Cataphract, which being the principall horseman is onely here numbered, and those three omitted, but all numbered together, 1 Chron. 18. 4. which is the cause of this diversitie in the numbers, every one being foure, and so 1000. 4000. and 700.

2800. which together come not much short of 7000. Thus Martyr, and Tostatus, and Kimbi not much differing say, that these 1700. were the chiefe, who had Armes adorned with gold, and commanded the rest. Lyra, that both are true, 1700. horsemen at the least were taken, thus saith one, but the other casting up the count more exactly saith 7000. or which resolves it best of all, Sam. reckoneth up onely the horsemen belids those, that rode in Chariots, Chron. having spoken of the taking of Chariots, which Sam. doth not, numbrell together with other horsemen those that rode upon Chariots also, because they werenot footmen, and so not unaptly to be counted amongst the horsemen. Here is no mention made of any slaine, but onely taken in this warre, but Josephus saith, there were 20000. footmen slaine and 5000. horsemen, neither is it unlikely, that very many were slaine, but he saith nothing of those that were taken, nor of *David*s houghing the horses, wherein he might seeme to have done unwisely, seeing he might have otherwise made a great benefit of these horses. But herein he followed the charge given before to Josua, only whereas he houghed all the enemies horses, and burnt their Chariots, David reserved 100 Chariots. This houghing of the horses saith Peter Martyr, was to make them unserviceable for warre, but not for husbandry businesse, it being the Lords will, that the People of Israel should not fight on horsebacke, to prevent trusting in horses, that they might trust in him onely. Whereas it is here said, David smote Hadadezer, as hee went to recover his border at the river Euphrates; This going to recover his border hath bene before expounded of Hadadezer, and so it is taken by Vatablus and others commonly, yet because the word hee may as well have reference to David, as to Hadadezer, Cajetan, Dionysius, Freculphus, and some others understand it of David, as hee went to establish the border of Israel at Euphrates: for thus farre it was promised, that their land should extend, Jos. 1. 3, 4. and therefore the time being now come, David might justly seeke to enlarge it thither. But I assent rather to the former exposition, because David had other enemies nearer to him, as the Ammonites, and Edomites, and Syrians of Damascus, before the subduing of whom, there had bene no policy to goe against enemies so farre off. It is therefore to be conceived, that Hadadezer being a mighty King and ambitious of a larger Dominion, was the first, that stirred in this warre, but to his owne overthrow.

And when the Syrians of Damascus came to helpe Hadadezer, he smote of them 22000. This King, saith Josephus, was named Adad, from whom all his successors had the same name, the third from him was Benhadad, of whose warring against Israel, it is spoken afterwards. Damascus was the chiefe City of Syria, wherefore Esay saith, the head of Syria is Damascus. Thus Martyr out of Josephus, and an old writer Nicolaus followed by him, who also saith, that this *Adad*s kingdome, continued to the 10 generation. But neither was Benhadad the third from him, but rather the fourth, for hee lived 150 years after, and Hazael his servant, not his sonne got his Kingdome after him.

The Syrians being overcome by David, hee to keepe them in subjection, placed Garrisons in that Country, and made them Tributaries unto him. And the shields of gold, which *Hadadezer*s servants bare, tooke David, and much brasse from Beerah and Berothai. But 1 Chron. 18. 8. from Tibbath and Ghur, Cities of Hadadezer, wherewith Solomon made the Brazen sea, &c. happily they were other names of the same Cities: all these riches did David dedicate unto God for the use of his sanctuary, as by whose helpe he obtained these victories.

To the King of Hamath hearing of *David*s victory against Hadadezer sent to congratulate it. There were two parts of Syria, saith Pellican, Sabab, of which Hadadezer was King, and Hamath the kingdome of Toy, who because Hadadezer was his enemy sent thus unto David, and by his son whom he sent golden and silver and brasse vessels unto him, all which he dedicated to God, together with all the spoiles of the enemies, whom he subdued, Syrians, Ammonites, Moabites, Philistims, Amalekites, and Hadadezer, 1 Chron. 18. 11. Edom

Tostatus.

Lyranus.

Joseph. antiq.
lib. 7. c. 5.

Josa. 11. 6.

Peter Martyr.

Vatablus.

Cajetan.
Dionysius.
Freculphus.

V. 5.

Peter Martyr.

V. 6.

7. 8.

1 Chron. 18. 8.

Pellican.

V. 9.

10.

11.

12.

13.

1 Chron. 18. 12

Peter Martyr.

Hieronym. in
2. Reg. 10. statim.

Lyr.

V. 15.

Josh. 1. 3, 4.

Peter Martyr.

V. 16.

17.

18.

also is numbred amongst the Nations subdued by him. And whereas here it is said, David got him a name, when hee returned from smiting the Assyrians in the valley of Salt being 18000, there it is, Abisbai the sonne of Zerviah slew of the Edomites in the valley of Salt 18000 men, Ps. 60. mention is made of Joab returning after his strife with Aram Naharaim, and Aram Zobah, and slaying in the valley of Salt of the Edomites 12000. To reconcile these differences, it is to be understood that Samuel saith not expressly, hee slew of the Aramites or Syrians 18000, but when hee returned from his smiting Aram in the valley of Salt 18000 men, it being left to be understood by smiting and then burying 18000 he got him a name, but of what country they were it is not said in Samuel, but 1 Chr. 18. it is further declared, that they were Edomites. And by that, which followeth here, v. 14. be put Garrisons in Edom, &c. it is plaine, that the Edomites were the 18000 said here to be slaine, whereas Abisbai the sonne of Zerviah is said to have slaine them, but here David Abisbai the sonne of Zerviah was a great Captaine under David, and so his victory is referred here to David. Touching Joab the chiefe Captaine, to whom the slaughter of 12000 is ascribed Ps. 60. that was happily at another time, or as Peter Martyr will have it, hee slew 12000 of these, and Abisbai 6000, and if so, it must be held, that the whole number is ascribed to Abisbai, 1 Chr. 18. 13. because hee began the slaughter in one wing of the battle, and by the helpe of his brother Joab comming on, so many thousands fell, as being exactly divided, amounted to 6000 for Abisbai, 12000 for Joab. But it is better to hold with Cajetan, that the slaying of 12000 by Joab, was at another time, when the Edomites had cut off the Garrisons left there, to revenge which Joab was sent, as may be gathered 1 King: 11. 15. & Ps. 60. Of the slaughter made by Joab in Edom read more 1 King: 11. 15, 16. where hee is said to have buried them, and for this pious act towards an enemy, saith R: Solomon, David grew famous, of which it is here said, he got him a name, others, that he set up a trophee of his victories. But his name getting at this time is doubtlesse to be referred to all his foresaid victories, for hereby he was made famous, and especially for that in him, the Prophecie touching Jacob the younger brother, that the elder should serve him, was now fulfilled and never before. For his causing the Edomites to be buried, that was not in the valley of Salt, but in Edom, and there be some, that thinke, and that probably, that these dead whom Joab buryed, were not Edomites, but his owne Country men, left in Garrison in Edom, whom the Edomites had slaine; and a trophee of his victory, to get glory to himselfe, hee would not certainly erect, for that had beene vaine glory. Of the valley of Salt, see before Gen. 14.

And David reigned over all Israel and executed judgement and justice to all the People. Having shewed, how David subdued and reigned over all his enemies round about, he now sheweth, how well he ordered the Common-wealth of Israel under him. As hee had no enemies unsubdued abroad, so there were none in all the kingdome of Israel, but lived in obedience to him, and the bounds of this kingdome were now extended also to the uttermost, as they were set before, and he did well provide for the upholding of his kingdome in peace, in that hee executed judgement and justice to every one, hee did not, after his great conquests, as Alexander after his great victory over Darius, give himselfe to riot and intemperance, or as some other Kings, to all manner of pleasure, but hee applyed his minde to the righteous and well governing of the whole kingdome, as a good King ought to doe; and to this end hee had others in severall offices under him, as Joab over the Host, Jehoshaphat recorder, Zadok and Abimelech Priests, and Serviah scribe, Benziah the sonne of Jehoida, the Cherethites and Peletites, and David's sonnes Princes. For the executing of judgement and justice, the first is by dictating, the second by executing, and doing according to that which was dictated, so Martyr; but some he saith, by judgement understand that which was according to the written law of God, by justice that which was done in other cases according to equity and right. Touching Jehoshaphat the recorder, hee saith, that his office was the same with our Master of the Requests, to keepe a Register of mens petitions to the King, and and to remember him thereof, so likewise Tostatus. The two Priests here named, were not High-priests, for there was but one, named Abiathar, and these two were the chiefe next unto him, beings, as some thinke, the Kings Chaplaines, and they were of two chiefe families, Eleazars and Ithamar, being thus made equall in honour, that the one might not envy the other. And Seraish the scribe, he saith, either wrote downe the accounts of the Kings revenues, or the acts of judgement done from time to time. And the Cherethites and Pelethites were a band of men about the Kings person, but both they and the Kings sonnes are said to be Princes, Hebr: כהנים by the the Vulgar Latin, rendred Priests, but the word signifieth not only Priests, but Princes, and Priests David's sons could not be, because they were of the Tribe of Judah, of which Tribe not any might serve at the Altar as a Priest, but of Levi onely. Yet the same name being given to Princes argueth the Lawes to be sacred, to see to the execution whereof they are set. What the Cherethites and Pelethites were, divers conjecture diversly. The Chald: Paraph: saith, that they were casters with slings and archers, some, that they were names of families, some, the Sanedrim or great Councell of Judges, some, that they were such, as David had made a league withall, and illustrious men, as Chereth and Pela signifie; some, that they were men of neighbouring Nations, whom David had chosen to bee the keepers of his body, as Achish had sometimes said, that he should alwayes bee to him, and as some Kings now adayes use the Scots and Helvetians. But P. Burgensis, to whom Martyr agreeth, that they were set, the Cherethites to cut off, and the Pelethites to deliver, according to the signification of the word Chereth, to cut off, and Peleth to deliver. And all this out of Peter Martyr. But to returne to the two Priests againe, and then to come to the Cherethites and Pelethites, about whom it is most doubted, Josephus and after him Tostatus say, that they were two High-priests, Zadock made by Saul, and Abiathar by David, and 1 Chron: 15. 11. Zadock and Abiathar are said to bee the Priests; whereas Abimelech the sonne of Abiathar is named here, it is to be understood that both the father and the sonne had both these names, as hath beene shewed upon 1 Sam. 21. 1. There were not then two principall priests under Abiathar the chiefe priest, as some affirme, for that Abiathar, otherwise called Abimelech, was slaine by Saul's command long before this, and his sonne Abimelech, otherwise called Abiathar also, who escaped from that massacre to David, was one of the priests here spoken of. And hee and Zadock seeme to me to have beene both High-priests at this time, for the extraordinary occasion that then was of two chiefe, the one to serve at the Tabernacle in Gibeon, and the other before the Arke in Zion, as is appointed 1 Chr: 16. howsoever ordinarily before that time there was but one. And Solomon within a few yeares after putting downe Abiathar, reduced the chieftie to one againe. Touching the Cherethites and Pelethites, that they were great men, and of great valour, who alwayes were about the King, as a guard, is plaine, because they are noted to have beene with him, when he fled from Abshalom, and went with their Captaine Bensaiab to anoint Solomon King, when others followed Adonijah, and they did execution upon Adonijah and Joab, who were the greatest in all the kingdome. But that they were no Israelites, but men of some other Nations, I deny, as Peter Martyr doth, because David would not certainly thus preferre strangers above his brethren, the Israelites, it being against piety so to doe, for so much as the Israelites were peculiarly chosen above all other Nations. Neither doth it make for this conceit, that the Cherethites are spoken of 1 Sam: 30. 18. for even those Cherethites might be one family in Israel, and the Pelethites another, as Vatab hath it.

1 King. 2. 17.

2 Sam. 15. 18.
1 King. 1. 41.
1 King. 2.

CHAP. IX.

David now beginneth to remember his Covenant with Jonathan the son of Saul, and therefore enquireth whether any of his posterity were yet living

Josephus.

1 Sam. 24. 21.
Sam. 23. 18.

Peter Martyr.

Note.

V. 8.

V. 9, 10.

Tostatus.

Lyr. Dionys.
Cajetan.

2 Sam. 19. 16.

Josephus Comestor Sebast. bistor.

living, that hee might shew him kindnesse for his fathers sake, and then; he is certified of Mephibosheth, one lame of his feet, that dwelt with Machir in Lodebar. It was not through any neglect of his friend, that David thought not upon shewing kindnesse to Jonathans sonne hitherto, but because he was taken up with other weighty affaires of the Common-wealth. But now having a time of freedome he enquired after some of Sauls race, yet intending particularly Jonathans, for the posterity of Jonathan was Sauls. Wherefore Josephus going according to the meaning, saith, that hee asked after some of Jonathans posterity. There was an oath indeed taken by David to Saul, as well as to Jonathan, but that was forced, this free, that not to root out Sauls posterity, this to doe good to Jonathans, yet in doing good to Jonathans sonne hee did it unto Sauls. How Mephibosheth came to bee lame, see before 1 Sam. 4. 4. This Lodebar where Mephibosheth lived was a City, as saith Adrichom. in Gilead in the Tribe of Gad on the other side of Jordan, where Ishbosheth his uncle had raigned, wherefore he was first brought to this place for his greater safety, and Machir seemeth to have bene a man of note of Manasse, to whose protection hee had committed himselfe. This Mephibosheth is called Meribbaal 1 Chr. 8. 34. but as Martyr saith, his name was happily turned to Mephibosheth for some deformity that happened to his face. Zibab Sauls servant, of whom David enquired for him, seemeth to have bene no Israelite, but a stranger, because hee was a perpetuall servant to him, and his, otherwise David could not justly have appointed him to serve Mephibosheth. The kindnesse shewed by David to Mephibosheth was in restoring Sauls land unto him, which fell unto David by the Rebellion of Ishbosheth against him, and setting him at his owne Table as one of his owne sonnes continually. Hee feared that he was sent for to bee put to death, as the childe of Saul *David*s enemy, wherefore hee bade him not to feare and made him these gracious promises for his fathers sake. Thus good fathers provide better, that it may goe well with their children after them by their goodnesse, then they that leave them great riches.

Mephibosheth hearing *David*s offer of so great kindnesse, humbleth himselfe as most unworthy, and saying, that he was a dead dogge. But how could hee justly, saith Martyr, speake thus of himselfe, seeing hee was a man, and that an Hebrew, and of a Kingly stocke? and Answer: that hee meant in comparison of David with whom hee heard hee should sit at Table, and of the benefits bestowed now upon him by David. For he came both of a rejected stocke, and was lame. Yet hee saith, that some in detracting from themselves unreasonably doe sinne through pride, their end being, that they may by others bee praised. The same phrase was used before by David unto Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 14. see also, 2 Sam. 3. 8. 2 Sam. 16. 9. Hereby was meant a man most execrable, for a dogge was an uncleane creature, and being dead was good for nothing, therefore when the Jewes would set forth a prophane and execrable person, they used to doe it by this phrase, Mat. 7. 6.

Then David told Zibab, that hee had given his masters sonne all that had bene Sauls, wherefore hee commanded him to till the Land for him, and to bring him the fruits, that hee might have food to eate, and yet hee saith, that hee should eate at his Table continually, as one of his owne sonnes. Wherein there may seeme to bee a contradiction: for if hee did eate alwayes at the Kings Table, what need was there to bring him the fruits, that hee might have food? Answer: Some say, that by his masters sonne here spoken of, Michab the sonne of Aephibosheth was meant, for Mephibosheth afterwards calleth Ziba his servant. David then, say they, would have him nourished with these fruits, and Mephibosheth to live with him. But it is plaine, that Mephibosheth was meant by his masters sonne, for hee was not yet his master, till David had made him so, and appointed him to serve him, as hee had before served Saul, his Grandfather. And wherefore hee speaketh of his having food, the meaning was, that hee should have the revenue arising of the Land for the maintenance of his wife and children and family, and for his other occasions, so Josephus and Comestor. Thus Ziba and all his house consisting of 15 sonnes and 20 servants served served Mephibosheth, and hee did eate continually at the Kings Table. Touching Ziba who being a servant had servants, it was a thing, saith Martyr, not usuall for some servants to have servants, viz: for those, that were called ordinarii, but the mediastini had none. Some have held, that hee eate bread at Ziba's table, meate being brought from the Kings table thither, and that out of a mistaking of the last words, v: 11. holding them to bee the words of Ziba, because it is not expresse, that the King spake them. To avoid which the Vulgar Latin rendereth it, at thy table. And Ziba said, According to all that my Lord the King hath commanded his servant, so shall thy servant doe. And Mephibosheth shall eate at thy table as one of the Kings sonnes. But both Hebrew, Chalde: and Sept: have it, at my table. It is an ecclipt: speech, these words being left to bee understood, then said the King. So Lyra, and Vatablus, and Josephus, and Theodoret conclude, that he lived with the King.

Mytically by Mephibosheth understand the contemptible in this world, and unable to manage secular affaires: for such Christ typified by David vouchsafeth to shew grace unto, and to set them at his heavenly table, being the sons of grace, as hee was of Jonathan, signifying grace, or the gift of a Dove, the embleme of grace.

V. 13.

Sa.

Lyra.
Vatablus.
Josephus.
Theodoret.
The Mystery.

CHAP. X.

Nabash the King of the Ammonites being dead David sendeth an Ambassage to his sonne Hanun to comfort him for the kindnesse, which hee had formerly received from his father, and as Josephus hath it, to signifie, that hee would continue in amity with him, and helpe him, if any enemy now at the beginning of his raigne should molest him. What kindnesse the old King had shewed to David, is not said. The Rabbines say, that when he left his father and mother and some other friends with the King of Moab, that King slew his father and mother, and then the King of Ammon did courteously receive the rest, that fled unto him. Jerom, that David himselfe fled unto him, before hee came to the cave of Odullam, and was kindly entertained. Comestor, that David went to him, when hee fled from Achish, and was kindly entertained. And David living now in peace set his minde upon requiting old kindnesse, which he had received at the hands of any, and therefore having done somewhat for Mephibosheth within the land, hee now sendeth out to requite another kindnesse. Whereas it is forbidden, to seeke the peace of the Ammonites for ever, against which David might seeme now to transgresse, the Rabbines say, that hee did, and was therefore punished with disgrace done to his Ambassadors; but Tostatus, Martyr and others, that hee did herein nothing unlawfull. Hee was prevented with kindnesse before by the King of Ammon, it was therefore a point of gratitude in him, to seeke to requite it, hee onely shewed himselfe willing to continue in amity with this King, but not to make any league with him, which onely was unlawfull. Whereas ch: 8. 12. mention is made of spoiles taken from the children of Ammon, implying warres made before this against Ammon, and if so, how doth this ambassage rightly follow? Answer: That was spoken by anticipation, for the warre with Ammon was not made till afterwards upon the occasion here declared. For the kindnesse shewed by Nabash unto David, it is most probable that hee did it, because Saul, who persecuted David, was his deadly enemy, and his hatred was great against him ever since the overthrow, which hee had given him at Jabesh Gilead, therefore Saul being a common enemy to them both hee thought it fit to joine in friendship with David against him.

This kindnesse of David being misconstrued by Hanun's servants, who suspected that hee sent to spy out the Citie, and to overthrow it, hee being very credulous, as if it had been so indeed, tooke David's servants, and shaved off halfe their beards, and cut off their garments by the buttocks, and sent them away greatly ashamed. 1 Chron. 19. 4. it is said, hee shaved them, which may be

V. 1, 2.

Hieronym. in lib. Reg.

Deut. 23. 6.

Tostatus.
Peter Martyr.

V. 3.

understood, as a further indignity here omitted. Of the shaving halfe their beards the ground might bee, that amongst the Egyptians this was wont to bee done in derision, as may bee seene in Euterpe Herodoti, and amongst the Greeks in Agesilao Plutarchi. A long beard, as also long garments, were counted an honour, therefore to shave off any part of the beard was counted a great disgrace, and likewise to curtaile their garments, especially so as that their shamefull parts might appeare, and their circumcision to bee derided. That long garments were counted an honour, appeareth, because in all Nations though farre disjoyned, learned men, and presidents, Senatours and Counsellors have used Gownes. More particularly for shaving it was a custome amongst the Ammonites in mourning for the dead to shave themselves, as wee may gather from that which is expressed by the Prophet Esay touching their brethren the Moabites, who speaking of their mourning, when many should bee slaine, saith; Atoab shall howle, upon all heads shall bee baldnesse, and all beards shall bee shaven, and likewise, Jer. 48. 37. and herein the Israelites were forbidden to doe like the heathen, when they mourned for the dead. Now because these servants of David pretended sorrow for the death of Nabash, Hannun in scorne shaved them, and cut off halfe their beards, from which hee knew they much abhorred by reason of their Law. Peter Martyr thinketh, that they cut their garments, because the Leprous amongst the Israelites rent their garments, and inquiring into the reason why Hannun suspected David, hee saith, 1. that the Ammonites being a wicked people were alwayes of most infest minde against Israel, as wee may see in the speech of Nabash to the men of Jabesh Gilead. 2. Hee knew that the Israelites were forbidden by their Law to seeke the peace of the Ammonites for ever. 3. They being wicked had guilty consciences, which alwayes suspect the worst, as is intimated Eccles. 7.

David hearing of it went to meet them, and to bid them stay at Jericho, till their beards were growne. The Israelites, saith Pellican, did never shave their beards, it being a thing to them forbidden by Gods Law, and therefore one part being cut off, they abhorred from cutting off the other, and to come home with halfe a beard they were ashamed, wherefore they are willed to come no further into their owne countrey then Jericho, where happily they then were, it being about the confines of their Land, till the part cut off were growne againe: Peter Martyr saith, it is noted by Oibo to bee a signe of an effeminate man to shave his beard, and yet Dion writeth, that Adrian was the first of the Roman Emperours, that nourished his beard. But August. saith, that the beard is a signe of strength and fortitude: Yet Council. 4. Carthag. decreed, that Clerkes should not nourish their haire or beard. Newes of this indignitie offered to his servants it is likely came to *David*s eares by messengers whom they sent before unto him, being ashamed to come themselves. Jericho, saith Joseph. was 150. forlongs from Jerusalem, and 60. from Jordan is the way to the Ammonites countrey, and at that time had few inhabitants in it, so that they might well bee there without being seene of many.

And when the children of Ammon saw that they stanke before David, they sent and hired of Syrians of Beth-Rehob, and of Zoba, 20000. men, and of King Maacab, 1000. &c. 1 Chron. 19. 6. when they saw that they had made themselves odious to David, Hannun and the Children of Ammon sent 1000. talents of silver to hire Chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, Syria, Maacab and Zobab. So they hired 32000. Chariots, and the King of Maacab, who came and pitched before Medeba, &c. the vulgar Latine, when they saw, that they had injured David; Peter Martyr, that they had done a foule thing to David, but the best expression is that, 1 Chron. 19. 6. By the indignitie offered to *David*s Embassadors they gathered, that hee was highly offended with them, and therefore expecting now some revenge they prepared to defend themselves, happily first hearing, as Josephus hath it, that David prepared to come against them. But Tostatus thinketh that David meant to have passed it over, till that hee heard of their preparations of this warre. The words, they saw that they had made themselves odious to David, doe rather imply the threatnings of David; as Josephus saith, to bee revenged, coming

Esa. 15. 2.

Deut. 14. 1.

Peter Martyr.

1 Sam. 11.

V. 5.

Levit 19. 27.
Pellican.Peter Martyr.
Dion in Trajanica
vita.
Aug. lib. 2. contra Pel.

Josephus.

V. 6.

1 Chron. 19. 6.

Tostatus.

ming first unto their eares. For the divers peoples hired by the Ammonites, for the first of Beth Rebob, Chron. hath Mesopotamia, happily that Rebob was the chiefe City of Mesopotamia, some thinke it the name of the father of Hadadzer the King of that countrey, because hee is called the sonne of Rebob, but hee is said to bee the King of Zoba, which is here distinguished from Rebob, as another Province. These were then two parts of Syria in Mesopotamia. Touching Maacah, hee was also another King in Syria, and happily his province was called after his owne name. For Istob the last in Sam. Chron. hath Syria, but that part of Syria under King Tob is meant, of which Tob see in the history of Jephthah, so Vnablm. The name of Istob, say the Hebrewes, commeth of Ish a man, and Tob, the man or Prince of Tob. The Syrians had been before brought under by David, wherefore Hannun thought surely, that they would most readily take this opportunitie to bee revenged upon him, and this moved him to hire them. As there bee foure names here, so the Greekes, saith Martyr, distinguish Syria into foure parts, which they call, Comagena, Damascena, Calosyria and Phenicia. For the numbers hired Sam. saith 20000. footmen and 12000. men, which together make up 32000. but Chron. 32000. Chariots. To reconcile this, Lyra saith, 32000. men fighting in Chariots are meant. Vatablm. likewise, the continent being put for the content, when 32000. Chariots are spoken of; Tostatus 32000. men comming with Chariots, the number of which is not expresse. Junius to avoyd difference hath it 32000. footmen, Chariots, and the King of Marchab. But it is plainly said 32000. Chariots, and 1000. talents were sent to hire Chariots and horsemen, which is such an huge masse of money, that therewith might well bee hired so many Chariots. For a common Talent was 3000. common Shekels, every Shekel 15. d. so that one Talent was 187. l. 10. s. and 1000. Talents 187500. l. that is 6. l. for the hire of each Chariot or thereabouts. For the solution brought by Lyra, and Vatablm. it agreeth not, because Sam. saith 20000. footmen which were certainly no Chariot men. I thinke therefore, that Chron. omitting what was related in Sam. sheweth what great forces more were hired, which Sam. spake not of, so that besides the footmen 20000. and 1000. and 12000. so many Chariots were hired also and men to manage them called horsemen. And this wonderfull great preparation tendeth to the magnifying of the victory the more, which God gave unto David, and to shew how deare Hannun paid for the ignominy done to David's men, that all may take heed how they render evill for good, and upon meere suspicion deale as if the thing were certaine, 1 Chron. 19. 7. all these forces are said to have pitched before Medeba, that is, the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites, whither the comming of David's Army was expected.

David hearing of these preparations was nothing dismayed, but sent Joab with his men against them, being, as may be conjectured, no great Army, because no gathering together of men is spoken of; as afterwards. He sent then such, as he had in a readinesse, and when they came to the enemies Country, the Ammonites set themselves in battaile array before the gates of their City, & the Syrians were in the field, so that the Ammonites were before them and they behinde with their multitudes ready to inclose this small Army, as Pellican thinketh, being laid in ambush. The Ammonites came not farre from the City to fight, that if neede were, they might soone retire. Joab perceiving how the enemies were divided into two parts, divideth his Army also into two, leading one part of the most valiant against the Syrians, in whom, as being most mighty, and so wonderfully prepared with men and chariots, the Ammonites placed their greatest confidence, and committing the other to his brother Abishai, to fight with the Ammonites.

This being done, and an exhortation made to bee valiant, hee presently put the Syrians to flight, and the Ammonites seeing that, fled before Abishai. How many were slaine is not said, neither is it likely that there were very many: for the enemies would not stay to fight, and flee they could in their chariots faster then the Israelites could pursue them on foot. Moreover Joab's Army being but small

2 Sam. 8. 3.

Vatablm.
Iudg. 11. 3.

Peter Martyr.

Lyra.
Vatablm.
Tostatus.
Junius.

Note.

V. 7.

Pellican.

V. 13.

V. 14.

H. Bunting Pa-
triar. 3. v. 16.
V. 15, 16.

H. Bunting Pa-
triar. 3. v. 18.
V. 18.

1 Chron. 19. 18

Lyra.
Iofatim.

V. 19.

small, hee was content with the victory, and returned. Medeba to which he went to this battail, saith one, was 60 miles from Ierusalem.

The Syrians being thus put to flight, gathered themselves together againe, and more Syrians brought from beyond the River, that is, Euphrates, by Hadarezer were joyned unto them, and so a greater Army being made, they came to Helam, which is thought to bee a City in the Syrians Countrey, one saith, that it was but 20 miles from Ierusalem, so farre were the Syrians come to incounter with David. Then hee gathered together greater forces also, even all the valiant men of Israel, and came in person to Elam to fight against them, and slew the men of 700 chariots, and 4000 horsemen, &c. 1 Chron. 19. 18. he slew 7000 men in chariots, Hebr. it is here, 700 chariots, the continent being put for the content, the chariots for the men in them, and if 10 men be allowed to each chariot, their number was 7000, as Chron. hath it, or because that number may seeme too great for 700 chariots, it may bee said, that all the men that fought in 700 chariots were slaine, and so many more in other chariots, wherein some escaped, as made up 7000. Moreover 1 Chron. 19. 18. hath it 40000 footmen, but here it is 40000 horsemen: But as Lyra and Tostatus say, herein is no contradiction, onely that which was wanting touching the number of footmen in Sam. where none are spoken of, is supplied in Chron. and because the horsemen were numbred in Sam. they are omitted in Chron.

The Syrian petty Kings that fought under Hadarezers Captaine, as being Tributaries happily to him, seeing the victory to fall to David, who had also slaine Shobach their Captaine with his owne hands, saith Iosephus, they fled, saith the Vulg. Latine, 58000. and came and made peace: but Hebr. no fleeing or number that fled, is spoken of. Being so often overcome, they now yeeld to bee Tributaries to David, and covenant not to help the Ammonites any more, whereby it may bee gathered that they came to battaile this second time, being againe solicited by them.

CHAP. XI.

V. 1.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.
1 Chron. 20.

V. 2.

Pellican.

Peter Martyr.

AFTER the Syrians subdued, David sendeth Joab against the Ammonites, and he is said so to have done at the time of the yeare, that Kings use to go forth to warre, that is, saith Lyra, and Martyr, in the Springtime, when there is grasse for horses, although in these dayes, saith Martyr, any time is taken: Pope Julius went against Mirandula in a deep snow: Callis was taken in January, and Francis the French King in February. But the Spring time is the aptest for the souldiers to lye abroad in the fields, the aire being more temperate, and the dayes growing long, and the time of the yeare continuing fittest for action five or six moneths together. This yeare is generally thought to have beene the 49. of *David*s age, the 19. of his reigne, 1 Chron. 21. 1. hee had not yet taken revenge upon the Ammonites, and the former yeare was so farre spent in warring against the Syrians that hee wanted time then, wherefore in the rising of the yeare hee setteth forth against them, and having wasted the rest of the Countrey they came to the chiefe Citie Rabbah. He staying at home, when his men went to battell, by chance saw faire Bethshebab washing herselfe from the Battlements of his house, where hee walked in the evening, and burning in lust towards her hee sent for her and lay with her, &c. Hee should as Pellican saith, have gone forth himselfe with his men, and not have rested idly at home: for it is the part of Kings, not to live in pleasure and idlenesse, but in warlike labours to goe before their subjects, and to encourage them, and because David now, and at some other times of late intermitted to doe so, hee is assaulted and shamefully overcome at home, that had alwayes beene so victorious abroad. And Peter Martyr aggravateth his fault further, in that hee gave himselfe to sleeping in the day time in the midst of those troubles, when the Commonwealth that hee should have watched over, was in hazzard, taking occasion hereupon to shew the evill that commeth of idlenesse. Hence

Ovid

Ovid sheweth, that Aegisthus became an adulterer, quia defidiosis erat; and Otia si tollas, perire Cupidinis arcus; Ambrose saith, as the Oyler lying open against the Sunne quietly to bee refreshed therewith, the Crab commeth and casteth a little stone between, hindering it from closing againe, and so devoureth it: so when a man lyeth idly, his soule is exposed to the devouring of the Devill, who casteth in filthy thoughts; and idlenesse was the sinne of Sodom, Ez. k. 16. The woman whom David saw washing herselfe, dwelt as must needs bee gathered next unto the Kings Palace in Zion, wherein might well bee many other dwelling houses besides David, being in compasse, according to Willalpandus, ten furlongs, and so saith Adrichomius. Shee washed herselfe most probably by reason of her legall uncleannesse in her garden, as Susanna is said afterwards to have done. The time of the day was in the afternoone, when David after dinner having slept, according to the manner of those hot countries rose up and went and walked upon the Battlements of his house, and the place must needs bee neare, or else hee could not have discerned her beautie. Having seene her he sent, saith Lyra, to know whether shee were a maide or a wife, thinking, if shee had beene a maid, to take her to wife, but although hee heard the contrary, lust being let in by the windowes of his eyes could not bee quenched, but burnt the more in him, as the saying is, per vestitum nefas ruimus Cupimusque negat.

Shee is said to bee the daughter of Eliam, and the wife of Vriah the Hittite, 1 Chron. 3.5. she is said to bee the daughter of Amiel, but, as Jerom hath it, here is no difference, but onely a transposition of the Letters, both the names being of the same signification, for Eliam signifyeth my God the people, Amiel, the people my God. This Amiel or Eliam was the sonne of Abitophel, 2 Sam. 23. 34. and was one of David's worthies, as also Vriah was, Verf. 39. so that Bethshebah was of an honorable house and honorably married. The Hittite Vriah is called, saith Theodoret, and after him Procopius, because hee came of the children of Heth, but was a Profelyte, for hee saith, that Vriah a stranger being wronged, God who is gracious to all, tooke his part against an Israelite and punished him therefore: But Tostatus saith, that hee was not of the Hittites of Canaan, who were appointed to bee destroyed, and with whom the Israelites might make no marriages, but that hee had the name Hethite or Hittite either from some exploit that hee did against the Hethites, or from his dwelling in a place so named. Adrichomius saith, that there was a place in Judah, in Hebron, neare Abrahams Sepulcher called Heth, and because Vriah was borne there, hee was called an Hethite or Hittite, so likewise Jerom: thus Isai from his Towne, was called the Bethlehemite, Achitophel the Guilonite, &c. Vatablus is indifferent for either, I rather subscribe to Theodoret, because the name doth so agree to those strangers, the Hittites. Whereas his marrying with an Israelite is objected, it was not unlawfull, seeing hee was a Profelyte and so a Jew in Religion, no more then for Salmon to marry Rahab, and Boaz Ruth. For the reason of interdicting such marriages, viz. lest they should bee insnared with Idolatry, ceased in him, and therefore hee might marry an Israelite. The woman being sent for commeth, and resisteth not David's unchast motion, that wee read of, no not in word, as if shee thought that a King might doe what he would. Shee was not moved by the Covenant made with her valiant husband, nor with the odiousnesse of the sinne of adultery, or the punishment thereof, which by the Law of God was death, and Nebuchadnezzar hearing that one Achab and Hezekiah Jewes had defiled other mens wives, caused them therefore to bee broyled to death upon a Grid-yrone.

David having lye with her, shee is said to have been purged from her uncleannesse, according to the common exposition, because shee now conceiving with child, her monethly flowers straight way ceased, which used to make a woman uncleane. Rupertus saith, that her barrennesse was her uncleannesse, which now was done away. But this is no where so called. I rather thinke, that a Legall purging or sanctifying, as the vulgar Latine hath it, is here meant,

Willalpandus.
Adrichom.

Lyra.

V 3.
Hierom.

Theod. qu. 15. in 2. Reg.

Tostatus.

Adrichom.

Hieronym.

V. 4.

Rupert. in
Mat. 1.

meant, according to Levit. 15. 18. where it is said, when a man lieth with a woman, they shall both bee unclean untill even and wash themselves with water. For according to this it is said, that shee sanctified herselfe Hebr. and so Martyr rendreth it. Junius renders it, shee purged herselfe, and noteth upon it, that shee was the more apt to conceive, as if this purging had been, before she came to the King. But it was after, as the order sheweth, and if the crafing of her uncleannesse by monethly flowers had been meant, it would not have bene said, shee sanctified herselfe, for this implyeth some act of sanctification done by her, and it is a very unfitting phrased to expresse this by the word sanctifying: for then David's adulterously lying with her must bee granted to have availed to her sanctification, which is absurd.

V. 5, 6, 7.

Pellican.Josephus.Chrysost.

V. 11.

V. 12, 13.

Lyra.
1 Sam. 4.

The woman then conceived and signified it unto David, fearing doubtlesse the danger of the Law, if it were not prevented. Hereupon David sendeth for Uriah to come home, &c. Hee added, as Pellican saith, one wickednesse to another, for hee attempted the substituting of a Bastard to his faithfull servant Uriah to bee his heire. But hee by a singular providence of God ruling herein, that this soule sinne might not goe undiscovered, refused to goe and lie at his owne house, but kept watch with the Kings other servants about the Court. David seeing that this would not take effect, presently fleeth to another more pernicious, for hee wrote to Joab to set Uriah so in the battell, as that hee might bee slaine, yea and to the end that hee might bee slaine, hee would have some others of his most valiant men, whose lives hee should chiefly have tendered, exposed to the danger of death also, because in making an assault hee could not bee slaine alone. Josephus saith, that shee went to the King and told him, that shee had conceived, desiring him to provide some way, that shee might bee preserved from the danger of death, which would follow, if it were discovered. And Chrysost. saith, that shee would not commit this secret to any other, but went herselfe unto the King, and said, O King, I am undone, I am with childe, the fruit of my sinne buddeth, I carry an accuser within mee, my betrayer is in my wombe, if my husband come and see mee, what shall I say, what excuse shall I pretend? Then he sending for Uriah to come home, and seeing, that the first night he would not go to his wife, yea, Ver. 11. hearing him sweare, as thy soule liveth, I will not do this thing, when as the Arke, and Israel and Judah abide in Tents, and Joab and the Kings servants lie in the open fields, I will not goe to my house to eat and drinke and lie with my wife, hee bad him stay another night, and then hee would shew more kindnesse unto him, for hee feasted him at his owne Table, and profered him in shew of extraordinary kindnesse so much wine, that hee made him drunken, thinking, that when hee was in that case hee would goe home to his wife, whatsoever he had sworne to the contrary. Thus to cover his owne foule sinne, he increased it more & more by making Uriah to sin by drunkennesse and seeking to make him forsworne. Touching Uriah, it was strange, that he having been now long from home, and having a faire young woman to his wife, could refraine himself from going in unto her, especially being also heat with wine and good cheare, of wch the saying is, sine Cerere & Baccho frigui Venus, & seeing both she and her friends might think, that he bare no love unto her for this great neglect whereby they might bee exasperated against him. But this must bee imputed to an higher power restraining him, that so great a sinne might not be smothered, unlesse that secretly by some man hee understood, what had passed, or some private discord had reigned before betwixt him and his wife for her seeming levitie. As for Uriah, it may bee conjectured, that hee was godly, and a true lover of his Countrey, because hee mentioned the Arke, and Israel, &c. vowing to sympathize with them, as Daniel and his fellows, when they might have fared daintily, refused it, and would live upon pulse, because their countrey-men being Captives lived generally in great misery. In that hee speaketh of the Arkes being in Tents, Lyra gathereth, that it was carried out to the Army for their encouragement, and so hee gathereth, that it was in Saul's time, 1 Sam. 14. as it had been done in the time of Eli. They carryed the Arke into the field, saith

Martyr,

Martyr for two causes. 1. That the souldiers might have a certaine symbole of Gods presence. 2. That the Captaine might have the oracle neare unto him to consult with, when need required. By Israel and Judah, hee meaneth the whole Army, and hee calleth Joab his Lord, because, as Josephus saith, hee was his armour-bearer. For his oath, as thy soule liveth, it was much like unto that of Joseph, by the life of Pharaoh, Gen: 42. 15. of which see upon that place.

Then David wrote a letter to Joab and sent it by Uriah, to this effect, Set Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle and retire from him, that hee may bee smitten and die: and Joab did accordingly, and so Uriah was slaine, and some others of David's men also. David seeing that hee could not colour over his wickednesse, found himselfe to bee in a great straight; for Bathsheba, whom hee had abused, was in danger to bee stoned to death, and hee to bee made publickely ignominious and odious amongst the people for bringing her to such a miserable end. Wherefore hee now breaketh out into murder, and that not of one valiant and faithfull subject alone, but of others also with him. A strange alteration, hee that in times past had spared his enemy, Saul, and rustically Nabal, by whom hee had bene so provoked, was now so degenerated, as that his prilline virtue seemed altogether to bee lost, hee spared not treacherously to destroy the innocent, that had well deserved of him. Thus hee that openeth a gap to sinne, hath a troope of sinnes breaking in upon him, and differeth not from one mancipated to sinne and Satan. For his letter to Joab, Josephus saith, that hee wrote, that Uriah had deserved to dye, and therefore hee should provide that hee might bee slaine, yet so, as that it might not seeme to bee the Kings act, but by accident. Joab hereby might gather, that hee had some way offended David, for which hee was worthy to die, although hee knew not in particular what his offence was. Uriah in carrying this letter, carried the letters of Bellerophon, and put a sword, as it were, into Joab's hand to cut his owne throat, as Theod. hath it, abiit ferens gladium sue cedri. So Lysander carried letters from Pharnabazus to the Ephori of Lacedemonia against himselfe.

Then Joab sent a messenger to certifie David of his proceedings, and that Uriah was slaine, &c. Josephus saith, that Joab to execute the Kings command and to bring Uriah to his end, said unto him, that there was a piece of service to be done against Rabbah by the most valiant, amongst whom David counted him one, wherefore he exhorted him with all alacrity to goe about it, for the credit, wherein hee was with the King, and when hee and others of the most valiant had made a breach in the wall, he promised to come on with the whole Army to second them, but secretly hee spake to such as were to joyne with him, to retire in the time of danger, some few onely excepted, to whom hee spake not. Then Uriah proceeded with courage, and so was slaine with the rest, which knew nothing of the policy, and therefore stucke to him in fighting against the Ammonites and slaying many of them before their death.

David hearing this, dissembleth his joy for the death of Uriah, and sendeth a comfortable answer to Joab, whom, the messenger might conceive, that the King would thinke greatly troubled, because Uriah a man so much beloved, as it might seeme, by the King, and one of his worthies, was slaine by his oversight.

The wife of Uriah hearing that her husband was dead, mourned for him, and when the time of mourning was past, David sent and tooke her to wife, &c. It is generally thought, that Bathsheba her mourning and putting on mourning apparell was fained, for shee was doubtlesse glad to heare of his death, as being now out of the danger of death for her adultery, seeing, as R: Solomon saith, her husband had returned from the warre about the time of her conception and shee was in hope now to bee made a Queene. For the time of her mourning, Lyra saith, it is uncertaine, Peter Martyr conjectureth, that amongst Hebrewes it was but one month, this being grounded upon the time appointed in the law, for a captive woman to mourne, before that an Hebrew married

Peter Martyr.

V. 14.

Note.

Josephus.

Theodoret.

V. 18.

Joseph.

V. 25.

V. 26.

R. Solomon.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr. 3.
Deut. 21. 13.

Cajetan.
Tostatus.
Iosephus.

Theodores.

Illud quidem erat vehementis cupiditatis, quæ rationi corpori induxerat, hoc autem etiam rationis assen-sum habuit.

married her; neither could it bee much longer, because so the Adultery could not have been covered. Amongst the Romans a woman might not marry againe after her husbands decease till after ten moneths, and Theodosius increased this time to a yeare, before the expiration whereof if any married againe, he saith, that shee should be probrosis iniusta notis, & nobilioris ac honestioris decore & jure priuatur. Cajetan thinketh, that shee mourned long, after the manner of noble matrons, but Tostatus onely seven dayes, according to the time set, Eccles. 22. 11, 12. Iosephus saith, shee mourned many dayes, that is, as was said before, happily 30. dayes, according to the time, that they mourned for Jacob being dead, and for Moses. And this is most probable, because David would make haste, and might thinke to marry to advance her house so greatly, although sooner then ordinary, would bee no dishonour unto her. And Theodores saith, there was little time given to mourning: and whereas Vers. 27. it is said, the thing that David did displeased the Lord, both hee and Propertius say, that this displeasure was chiefly against this marriage, for God was more offended at this then at the adultery, because that came from a most vehement lust, which stupified reason, but this had the assent of reason. But all are here put together, his adultery, murder and marriage, as one thing; yet that this marriage was more hainous then the adultery seemeth probable, Ch. 12. 9. where the marriage is spoken of, but the adultery not.

CHAP. XII.

V. 1.

Sallianus.
Iosephus.

Note.

ROM. 10.

Theodores.

Note.
2 Sam. 14.

BUt the Lord sent Nathan to David, who said, There were two men in one Citie, one rich, and the other poore, &c. The vulgar Latine before the proposition of the parable hath it, Responde mihi iudicium, but these words are neither in the Hebrew, Septuagint, nor Chaldee Paraphrase, and they are left out, saith Sallianus, in the amended Latine Copies. Iosephus saith, that whilst the King was overjoyed with his new marriage and issue, the Lord appeared to Nathan in a vision by night, who comming to David next day concealed for a time the sharpe message that hee had to doe unto him, first, insinuating into him by relating somewhat touching another man, that in another the King might condemne himselfe, and so bee the more convinced of the foulness of his fact. The time was not immediatly after the thing done, but after the birth of the child, which was, Chap. 11. 27. that is, after ten moneths. The reason why God let David to goe unreprieved so long, might bee partly to shew, how out of measure full even the best man is, if hee bee left unto himselfe, and partly how efficacious prophesying is, and how little all other meanes doe availe without this to bring to repentance. For David before this went on in adding sinne to sinne, and slept securely without being moved with any contrition, and yet it is not unlikely, but that hee prayed and read, and heard the Word read in this time. One must bee sent by God to reprove and convince men of their wickednesses, as the Preacher is, for how can they preach except they bee sent? For the parable, whereby Nathan sought to make him condemne himselfe taken from a rich man, and a poore dwelling neare unto him, the one having many sheepe and oxen, &c. the other but one Lamb onely, and when a stranger came to the rich mans house, hee would not take one of his owne sheepe, but the poore mans Lamb to entertaine him: it is to be thought that this was spoken to him in private, so Martyr, although Chrysost. as hee saith, thinketh that it was spoken when his Nobles stood about him: and the Prophet began thus, because, as Theod. saith, wee behold our owne finnes one way and another mans finnes another way, for we give just sentence against others, yea we oft-times over-judge them, but when wee sinne, wee either cast away the sense of the mind altogether; or easily pardon our selves when wee see our sinne. And generally speaking by parables or similitudes is most moving, and therefore the woman of Tekoah dealt with David by parable also in the case of Absolom, and Jotham, the youngest sonne of Gideon, Judg. 9. 7. and and the Prophets and Christ himself. By the rich man was meant David, by the poor, Uriah, who was poor in comparifon of him even in wives, his Lamb, wch he fo much tendered, was his wife, the ftranger wch came to David, was ftrange luft after another mans wife, wch is called a ftranger, faith Chryfoft. becaufe David had not ufed formerly to commit the like fin : others fay the devill is meant becaufe he was caft out of heaven, and ever fince remained as a ftranger to that blessednes.

Then Davids wrath was kindled, and hee fware that the man which did this, fhould die, and reftore the Lambe fourefold. This may feeme to be unjust, becaufe the punifhment of thefe ought not to be death, but fourfold reftitution. To this Martyr anfwereth, that fome think, it was left to the Judge to aggravate the punifhment, as he fhould fee caufe, but for fo much as this were an adding to the word of God, which is forbidden, he anfwereth, that fome theft, viz. that which was with violence might be punifht with death, Exod. 22. 2. and this taking of the poor mans Lamb, which hee fo much loved, could not be conceived to be done without violence. Some think, that David in his rage fpake hyperbolically, to aggravate the fin, & to fhew, what he deserved, not intending to inflit the punifhment of death upon him, as if a Judge in deteftation of a moft foule fin fhould fay, he that did this is worthy of a thoufand deaths, therefore Hebr. it is not, he fhall die, but is the fome of death; fo Testatus, and Cajetan, and this is the beft, for although a thief taken breaking into an houfe might bee flaine at the instant, yet power was not hereby given to the Judge to flay him. Whereas Prov. 6. 31. fevendfold reftitution is fpoken of, which alfo exceedeth the Law, it is answered, that by fevendfold, a perfect reftitution is meant, the number of feven being oft ufed to fet forth perfection. For fourfold, Hebr. is the duall number, and therefore rendred by Martyr twice fourefold, but the Hebrews render it fourefold, and Junius juftifieth it from a like ufe of this word, Efa. 30. 26.

And Nathan faid unto David, Thou art the man: and when David had given fentence in another mans cafe againft himfelfe, Nathan hearing him fay as much as hee defired, fo that hee could not but acknowledge himfelfe much more worthy of death, for what is robbing to adultery and murder? hee was bold plainly to charge him with the finne which hee had committed. God had beftowed upon him great riches, fo that hee every way abounded, as it followeth, Thou faith the Lord, I anointed thee King over Ifrael, and delivered thee out of the hand of Saul, and I have given thee the houfe of thy Lord, and the wives of thy Lord into thy bofome, &c. Here Martyr moveth two doubts; 1. How the Prophet could upbraid David by Gods benefits, feeing it is faid, God giveth liberally to all, and upbraideth no man: and answereth, that hee upbraideth no man for his offence feeking to him, but fuch as ungratefully abufe his benefits hee upbraideth, to bring them to repentance, as hee did David. Ob. 2. How it is faid, that hee had given his mafters wives into his bofome, feeing Saul was his father in Law, and fo it was unlawfull for him to marry any of his wives: and answereth, that it is meant onely, that hee gave David power over them to doe with them what hee would; or that by his Lords wives may bee underftood thofe women that Saul had power over, as Michol his daughter, and others of his kindred: but fome, hee faith, by his Lord will have God meant, whole all his wives were. The firft is moft commonly received. Hugo thinketh, that hee took fome of them, although it bee not recorded. I fubfcribe rather to this, that they were in his power to bee taken, becaufe there was no man that could hold them from him; and for the Law, Levit. 18. it forbiddeth onely the fathers wife, within the compaffe of which that wife of Saul, who was Michols mother, might happily bee brought, but not the reft: but that hee actually took any of them, I cannot thinke, becaufe they were too old.

Wherefore haft thou defpised the word of the Lord to doe evil in fight, &c. a grievous charge, but hereby appeareth, that who fo tranfgreffeth the Law of God is counted a defpifer of it: for it is out of a contempt or fighting of the Law of God that any man finneth. Thou haft killed Uriah with the fword, and taken his wife, Hee killed Uriah, becaufe hee appointed it to bee done by the fword of the Ammonites, as is here further expreffed, and by faying fo hee made

Mm

Chryfoft.

V. 5. 6.
Exod. 22. 1.
Peter Martyr.
Deut. 4. 2. 12.
32.

Testatus.
Cajetan.

Peter Martyr.

Junius.
V. 7.

V. 8.

Peter Martyr.
Obj. 1.
James 1. 5.

Obj. 2.

Hugo Card.

V. 9.
Note.

Psal. 51. 4.

Qu.

Concil. Tribur.

August. de Nuptiis & Concup.
l. 1. c. 10.

V. 10.

V. 13.

Peter Martyr.
Note.

Prov. 28. 13.

Lyr.

V. 14.

Note.

1 Cor. 11. 32.

made it appeare to David, that the Lord knew of his foule adultery, and letters written to Joab, to strike him the more, as indeed it did, witnesse that confession, against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight. For his objecting this to him, that hee had taken the wife of Uriah to be his wife, it seemeth hereby, that to do so was unlawfull, because hee is indicted for this as well as for murder, and if so, why was hee not required to put her away againe? Ans. There is no law of God, whereby an adulterer is forbidden to marry an adulteresse, the reason might be, because adultery by his law is death, which being executed, there could bee no marrying of such, and so there was no need of any law against it. If adultery then were secretly committed and so the offenders escaped, as in the present case, and married together, this very marrying was a sin, because it was an abusing of Gods Ordinance to colour over adultery, but the persons so married were true man and wife, and ought not to bee separated. But since, the punishment of adultery not being death, considering that many women have plotted the destruction of their husbands, that they might come to new marriages with the adulterers much more desired, and adulterers likewise have murdered those womens husbands, with whom they have committed this wickednesse, it hath seemed good unto the Church altogether to forbid such marriages, and to pronounce them nullities, if any such bee made, as Concil. Triburiensi cap. 40. If a man in the life time of his wife commits adultery with another woman, & afterwards marryeth her, this Matrimony shall not bee of force. And August. disalloweth marriages betweene the adulterous.

Therefore the sword shall never depart from thy house. The punishments threatened for this his great wickednesse were four, 1. As hee had slaine with the sword, so his house should bee wasted with the sword, and that, not for a time, but alwayes, that is, as is commonly expounded, generation after generation, a very long time, as the word לעולם rendred for ever, is often taken, and this was verified, when Amnon was slaine by Absalom, and Absalom by Joab, and in Solomon time, Adonijah by Solomon, and in the raigne of other Kings of his line afterwards, there being many warres betweene the kingdom of Israel and Judah. 2. As hee had taken another mans wife, so many of his wives should bee taken by another. 3. This should bee done openly to his greater confusion, as was fulfilled, when Absalom went openly in to his ten Concubines. 4. The death of the childe, that was now borne unto him.

And David said to Nathan, I have sinned. Saul said as much as David, 1 Sam. 15. 24. and yet could obtaine no pardon, although his fault was lesse, but David, was pardoned, the reasons see there. And Martyr saith, that Cain also, and Judas, and Simon Magus confessed likewise, so that not every one that confesseth is pardoned, but hee that confesseth and forsaketh sinne, and as hee saith, having faith to make him flee to God and to cleave unto him. And this turning to God is by his gift, 2 Tim. 2. 25. and the will and desire, Phil. 2. 13. This confession first made to Nathan alone David afterwards published, and so confessed openly, Ps. 51. to put himselfe to more shame, and that it might appeare, that he was truly penitent.

Nathan told him that God had done away his sin, that is, saith Lyr., in respect of the guilt, and of the proper punishment, viz. death, thou shalt not die. But because hee caused the enemies of God to blaspheme, hee saith, that the childe should die, that is to say, that God had rejected Saul, and set up one to bee King more wicked then hee, and therefore he regarded not, what wickednesse men committed, for to say this to blaspheme. Hereby wee may see, that sinne shall not goe unpunished even in the most penitent, but they shall beare the smart of it in this life. The guilt is remitted, and the eternall punishments, but not the temporall, so Moses and Aaron were without doubt forgiven, but they were punished for their disobedience at the waters of Meribah by being cut off before their entrance into Canaan. And when we are judged, saith the Apostle, wee are chastened of the Lord, that wee might not perish, speaking of some amongst the Corinthians, that were smitten with death. Punishments then here abide the best if they sin ne, but these through the mercy of God are turned into chastisements for their greater good.

the

The Lord then strooke the childe which Uriahs wife bare to David, that it was sicke, the Vulgar Latin, for these words, was very sicke, hath it, bee despaired, which is by Lyra expounded thus, hee seeing the childe smitten so, as that it was incurable by any naturall meanes, despaired of helping it so, and therefore sought unto God for it by fasting and prayer, because hee knew not yet, whether the sentence of death against the childe were definitive, or such as upon repentance might bee revoked, as afterwards the sentence against Nineveh. The word וַיָּנ may bee taken either way, he was weake, or despaired, but it is best rendered very weake or sicke.

David therefore besought God for the childe, and fasted, Hebr: fasted a fast, and went in, and lay all night upon the ground. Hee having obtained by his former humiliation, pardon for his owne life, was not out of hope at the hands of the same mercifull God to obtaine pardon for the innocent childe also, hee prayed, and fasted long, viz: all day and all night, Iosephus saith seven dayes, but although the childe died not till the seventh day, it is not likely that hee eate nothing all that time, neither is it said so here, but that hee would not eate with them. Hee did not onely afflict himselfe in his fasting by forsaking his bed and lying upon the ground to take his necessary rest all this time, but hee debarred himselfe from all pleasure of company, when hee did eate any thing. Neither is the seventh day wherein the childe died, saith Martyr, according to all Hebrew expositours to bee under stood of *David*s fasting, but from the birth of the childe, whereupon it is gathered, that hee died without circumcision, and yet this troubled not David, as fearing, that because hee dyed without this sacrament, hee was damned. Circumcision was then an holy sacrament indeed, and so necessary, that it was threatned, that the person uncircumcised should bee cut off, as baptisme now is also to bee esteemed of, and therefore is by all, that would bee saved, most earnestly to bee desired. Yet if any bee prevented by death, before they can bee baptized, wee ought not therefore to despair of their salvation, for God can otherwise save such as hee hath appointed unto life, although this bee the onely ordinary way, which wee are bound to goe.

In the time of this fasting and praying it is thought, that David uttered the words of Pf: 51. which hee afterwards published, and another penitentiall Psalme, viz: the 32. and being stricken with a grievous sicknesse soone after, two penitentiall Psalmes more, viz: the 6. and 38. This humiliation of David notwithstanding, the Lord executed his sentence given by the Prophet in striking the childe with death, and herein, saith Theodore, hee provided for the honour of David, because, if hee had lived, hee would have beene a continuall argument of his wickednesse, therefore it was hereby provided, that David should not all his life be exposed to opprobry and confusion. And another saith, that it was most convenient that fruit gotten furtivo concubitu, by a theewith copulation, should not by him bee enjoyed, but taken from the theefe againe and restored to the Lord, that he might not have any comfort of the fruit of his wickednesse. The punishment then was not the chilles, but *David*s, seeing when God striketh with death, hee doth but take away what hee hath given to be taken againe when he pleaseth.

The Childe being dead, David arose from the ground, and washed and anointed himselfe, and changed his apparell, and went to the house of the Lord and worshiped, &c. Hee mourned no more for him being dead, neither prayed for him, as the Papists doe for their dead. Ob: Hee mourned for Saul and Jonathan, for Abner and Abisalom, who were men, although he mourned not for a childe, who went not to Purgatory, but to limbus infantum. Sol: He mourned indeed, but prayed not for them, and his mourning was for the losse which the Commonwealth had by their deaths, and the triumph that the enemies made. As for the place which they call limbus infantum, Peter Martyr saith, that Pelagius was the first inventer of it, because he would not, that children dying without

V. 15.
Lyra.

V. 16.

*Peter Martyr.*Gen: 17.
John: 3. 5.

V. 18.

Theod. qu. 16. in 2. Reg.

V. 20.

Peter Martyr.

Numb. 19. 14.

Note.

V. 22, 23.

2 King. 4.
1 King. 17.

Sallianus.

V. 24.

Lyra saith,
then it was revealed unto him that this sonne should reigne after him.

Lyra.

baptisme, or of old without circumcision went either to heaven or to hell. For his going to the house of the Lord, that is, the Tabernacle made for the Arke, which was neare to his owne house, hee did not in this contrary to the law, which pronounceth them uncleane that bee in the tent, where a dead body is seven dayes: for he came not into the roome, where the dead childe was, but having heard by his servants that it was dead, went to the house of the Lord. This shewed the great piety of David, in that he ceased not to worship and put his trust in God, although hee seemed to neglect him, and would not grant his desire for the life of the childe, as Job said, that hee would trust in God, although hee should kill him, and sought every faithfull person to doe. His worshipping here stood in three things, 1. praising of God for his goodnesse towards him in pardoning his great sinnes, and sparing his life; 2. confessing his owne wickednesse; 3. praying that the crosses further to come upon him might be lightened, or that he might be enabled to beare them, and to profit thereby, thus Martyr.

After this hee returned to his owne house and did eate, which when his servants wondered at, he answered, that whilst the childe lived, hee was not without hope of his restitution to health, but now hee could not bring him backe againe, I, saith hee, shall goe to him, but hee shall not come to mee, whereby he shewed his hope of the resurrection of the body, and of the life to come, yet afterwards some that dyed, were called backe to life againe, as the Shunamites childe by Elisba, and the widowes of Sarepta by Elijah, but none, the recovery of whose health the same holy men had prayed for before and could not prevail. Whereas wee from David ceasing to fast and pray, when the childe was dead, bring an argument against praying for the dead, the Jesuite seeketh to avoid it, by saying, that David ceased not to pray but onely for life to be restored againe in this world, whereas it is not said so, but seeing this could be the onely end of praying and fasting now, there was no reason why he should continue so to doe, sith there was no hope of this. It came not then surely into his minde, that any other good could come to a soule departed by his praying for it, neither did any of the faithfull thinke upon any such matter then, but this was in an invention broached many yeares after.

And David comforted Bathsheba and went in unto her and lay with her, &c. The Hebrewes to make this passage to agree the better, saith that Bathsheba was so troubled at the death of her childe, that she feared, if she should have any more children by David, that they would all be soone stricken with death also, wherefore shee refused to lie with him any more, but hee understanding by revelation, that hee should have a sonne by her, who should be the happiest and wisest upon earth, and that the Messiah should come of him, told her of it, and sware unto her, that hee should raigne after him, and this was his comforting of her here spoken of, for which cause she alleadgeth the oath, that he made unto her, 1 King. 1. 17. This, as Martyr saith, wee cannot tell, whether it were so or not, and yet it is not to be doubted, but shee was touched with the conscience of her sinne, and afflicted with sorrow, for which shee had need of comfort by being told, what the Prophet had said unto David, that hee should not dye, and that God had done away his sinne, and if his, then hers also. And it is not improbable, but that hee might then sweare unto her for her greater comfort, that if God would give him another sonne by her, hee should succeed him in the kingdome, and this hee could not well doe without particular direction from God, seeing hee had sonnes already, to the eldest of which the kingdome of right belonged after him. And that the sonne who should have the kingdome, was not yet borne, seemeth to be intimated ch. 12. in the speech of Nathan unto him, and more plainly 1 Chron. 22. 9. where Solomon is named, and so here the sonne borne is called Solomon, and it is said, the Lord loved him. Now this going in of David to his wife Bathsheba is not to be thought to have bene but some good time comming betweene, because her purification was not ended, till the 40 day after puerperity. The Lord, saith Lyra, is said to love the childe for the great grace which he gave unto him in his youth, although

though hee erred in his old age, or for the excellent parts both of body and minde, which he bestowed upon him; And hee sent by the hand of Nathan and called him Jedidiah, that by him, hee might bee holily brought up and taught and so made the more fit for the kingdome, thus Lyra. But Martyr who although hee agreeth with him as touching the Lords loving of him, this is spoken for the great gifts and graces bestowed upon him, and for that hee was made King before his elder brethren, and lived in peace and all worldly glory, yet comming to speake of Nathans being sent to call him Jedidiah, hee saith, that this is added, as a reason of the former speech, the Lord loved him, this shewed that hee loved him, because hee sent by his Prophet to call him Jedidiah, that is, the beloved of God, as the same was also further declared afterwards by the singular favours done unto him. Hereby, as also by the example of Jacob it appeareth, how freely and without any precedent merit of his God loveth man, because hee loved Solomon, before that hee had done either good or evill. This speaking of Solomon, as of Jacob, that the Lord loved him, saith Hugo, is taken for an argument of his election, but even reprobates, saith hee, are beloved of God for a time, but how this may bee proved I thinke no man can tell; to bee beloved of God, and in token thereof to have a name given him of God, and that in the infancy, is so rare, as that I dare not; but take it for an argument of Solomons election, as also because hee was a figure of his beloved sonne, and a penman of holy scripture. It may seeme strange, that considering in what an infamous manner David and Bathsheba came together, the issue of this marriage should bee so graced; but this was not done to encourage others to doe the like, but to shew the infinite mercy of God towards penitent sinners, and to confirme the marriage, which otherwise might have bene suspected, whether allowable before God or not, that when Solomon should come afterwards to raigne, hee might without all doubting bee by the people received for King. And it is to bee noted, that not any other, but the same Prophet, who was sent to taxe David before, was now againe sent to confirme him touching Gods favour reconciled to him upon his penitency, that there might bee the more assurance, whereas otherwise one might have seemed to speake against another. And it is thought by expositors that Nathan had the education of Solomon committed unto him.

And Joab fought against Rabbah of the children of Ammon and tooke the royall City, &c. Hee had lien long at the siege of this City contrary to *David*s accustomed manner, viz: about a yeare, for the childe begotten after this warre begun was borne and dead, and David repented and was to God reconciled, and comforted his wife Bathsheba. Whilst hee lay in his sinne at home, his Army could not prosper abroad, as of old; till the sinne of Achan was expiated, Israel could not prevaile against  Ai. But now his Captaine Joab prevaieth and taketh Rabbah, and sendeth word to David, that hee had taken the City of waters, willing him to hasten thither, that hee might take the City. If Joab had already taken it, how could David come and take it? Some answer, that of this City there were two parts, which were as two Cities, one the City of waters, which is also called the royall City, because the King commonly kept his Court there, as being the most pleasant, this was now taken, but not the other, which by taking of this yet was made easie to be taken, because happily water was conveyed from hence in the other, without which it could not long subsist, and because the strength of all lay in the waters, which made it the more inaccessible, being in that part defended by the river Jabbon as Adrichomius saith; Others expound the word tooke it, thus, he was now ready to take it, or he had in a manner taken it, and then sent to David, because the next words in the Vulgar Latin are, capienda est urbs aquarum, the City of waters is now about to bee taken. I subscribe to the second, because David, when hee had taken the City, tooke the Kings Crowne from his head, therefore hee tooke the royall City, and not Joab before his comming, seeing that must needs bee the royall City, where the King lived. Moreover the Verbe rendered I have taken, may as well bee rendered, I take, for the Hebrewes have but one tense for both the present and preterfect tense. When Joab saw that

V. 25.
Peter Martyr.

Hugo Cardin.

V. 26.

Note;

Peter Martyr.
Cajetan.

Tostatus.
Hugo Card.
Lyra.
Josephus.

that the Ammonites could hold out no longer, he sent word to David, I doe even now take or am taking the the Citie, in which worke I must goe on without delay, unlesse thou comest speedily and takest it; this is plainly his meaning, and if it bee thus understood, wee should not need to goe upon conjectures of two parts of the Citie, both called by the name of Citie; which is uncertaine; and if one of these two had been taken already, how should the calling of that at the least after Joabs name bee avoided? to avoid which, and so the envy that hereupon might follow in David against him, hee sent so hastily to David to come away. For hee had scene before in the example of David envied by Saul for the praise given unto him, what a dangerous thing it was for a Captaine to have more ascribed unto him, then the King. And he would have David to come with new forces, when as those that were there already were sufficient to take the Citie, that it might seeme the more probable, that hee with his new forces had done it, and so he might have all the glory of this great victory. Josephus describing the state of the Citie, before that David was sent for, saith that their waters were all cut off, wherewith they used to bee supplied from the River Jabbok, and now they had but one little spring left, which yeelded them water so sparingly, that it was delivered out by measure, and they were also oppressed with famine, so as that Joab conceived now, that it would bee an easie matter to take the Citie, and of this hee by Letters certified David. And by this wee may gather the reason, why Rabbab was called the Citie of waters.

Josephus.

V. 29.

David then gathered all the people together, and came and fought against Rabbab, &c. By all the people here understand all that remained about Jerusalem who were fit for warre, for neither was it necessary to send further to gather them, neither would the haste required permit him so to doe. And with these hee tooke the Citie, and tooke the Crowne from their Kings head, which weighed a Talent of Gold. 1 Chron. 20. 1. it is said, that Joab smote Rabbab and destroyed it, so that when the King had for his honours sake taken it, Joab prosecuted the victory with slaughter and destruction. Touching their Kings Crowne, there is a difference amongst expolitours, some following Jeroms translation, and interpretation according to the traditions of the Hebrews, saying, that their Idoll is here called Melchom their King, say that this Crown was taken off the head of their Idoll Moloch or Melchom, for so was the Idoll of the Ammonites called, 1 King. 11. 5. And they reason from the great weight of it being 25. pound, and so too heavy for any man to weare, and from this that it was taken off his head, whereas their King certainly abroad not now with his Crowne upon his head, but fled to hide himselfe as lightly as hee could: others rejecteth this, because if it had been the ornament of an Idoll, it had not beene lawfull for David to take it, but it should have beene burnt with fire, according to Law: and P. Martyr saith, that the word here used is Malchom, not Milchom, as the Idol was called, wherefore it was the Crowne of their King, in the taking away of which, hee noteth, that hee was punished because he had so grossly abused David's messengers, now he payd deare for his derision. I subscribe to this, because the Crowne was taken off this Kings head, and set upon David's head, which if it had beene the Crowne of an abominable Idoll, should not certainly have beene done: Moreover if Milchom had beene meant, something should have beene further added for expression, as their God, or their Idoll. For the other argument, from the unlawfulness of taking the golden ornament of an Idoll, is answered by Kimhi, and by Lyra, that it is to bee understood of Idols of the seven Nations, who were to bee destroyed, and not of other heathens, wherefore much gold and silver was brought by the Israelites from the Midianites, who were not of these nations, and yet it was to bee purged by the fire, to intimate, that otherwise it had beene uncleane by reason of their Idols, to whom happily a great deale of it had belonged. Tostatus rejecteth this, holding, that onely that was commanded to bee burnt, wherein there was danger of drawing them to Idolatry, which was not in the Ornaments of Idols; or in the Gold or silver of them, their forme being altered

Hieron. Lyra, Huges, Schol.
Hist.
Testatus in 1
Paral. 20.

Deut. 7. 25.
Peter Martyr.
Cajetan, Arias,
Pagninus Vatablus, Testatus in 2 Reg. 12.
Josephus.

Numb. 31.

Tostatus.

red. But this is plainly against the Text, Deut. 7. 25. Thou shalt not covet their gold nor their silver, but burne them with fire, so that the object of coveting was to be burnt, and not onely that, which might draw to Idolatry. Some Hebrewes answer that argument most ridiculously, that they might not possesse any thing belonging to Idols, which themselves had taken, but if it had been taken by another and given to them they might, and this Crowne was taken by Ittai the Gittite, and given to David. For the objections brought against our tenet, that it was too heavy for a man to weare, that cannot bee, because how then did David weare it afterwards upon his head? 2. That their King had no time now to weare his Crowne being in such danger, for if so, how did Saul weare his in his last battell against the Philistines? hee might now have it on, either to die in his royall ornament, or to animate his men the more to the last.

And hee brought forth the people and put them under Sawes and Harrowes of Iron, the vulgar Latine hath it, hee sawed them, and drew Iron Harrowes over them, and divided them with Knives, and put them into the Furnace of Bricke. Our translation, under Axes of Iron, and made them to passe through the Brickkilne, and thus hee did to all the Cities of the children of Ammon. Hereby is meant, that hee put them divers wayes to tormenting deaths, but it is not, saith Lyra, to be understood, that hee did so to all, but to such as were of that conncell, which would have David's messengers abused. Pellican saith, to the chiefe of every Citie both for this and other great wickednesses committed by them, whereof hee had bene certified by Joab, who thought not himself therefore sufficient to punish them, but would have David to come and take order for this, they had burnt their children to Molech, and therefore it was just to make them to passe through the fire, and happily they had blasphemed the God of Israel and his people, for which it was just otherwise by extraordinary tortures to put them to death, for all things that were done are not recorded. They had cut their garments off by the middle, therefore they were sawne insunder by the middle, and as they had carried them about upon Sleds drawne from place to place in derision, so they had Harrowes drawne over them, and as they had with Razours shaved off the haire of half their heads and beards, so they had their heads and faces halfe cut off with sharpe knives or Swords. If this shall be thought to be too great crueltie, Theodoret saith, it ought to be remembered, that once they would have put out the right eyes of all the men of Jabish Gilead, and therefore they were now punished in their kind. But it is not likely, saith Tostatus, that this was now done in revenge of that, both because it was long before in the beginning of Saul's reigne, neither was there then such a thing done, but offered to be done, neither was it done meere to revenge the indignities offered to David's messengers, because punishments ought to hold some proportion with the offences committed, otherwise it is crueltie: but partly for that, partly for requiting David's good will with evill, that others might feare to abuse Ambassadors of so mighty Kings, and lastly because they had stirred up the Syrians and other nations against David, whereby they had put him to a warre of long continuance to the expence of great summes of money, and the losse of many of his subjects lives, and if in this time any of them fell into their hands, they did doubtlesse use all barbarous crueltie towards them. Thus also Martyr, who saith, that crueltie hath the name acruore, from blood, and it is when the blood of any man is shed without just cause, a delight being taken herein, or the measure being exceeded, for that saith Seneca, is cruelty, whereby the measure of the offence is exceeded in the punishment. But David did not exceed for the reasons before going, as neither Gideon, when hee toare the men of Succoth to death with Briars and Thornes, because it is Gods will that this severitie should sometime be exercised against the wicked, as a preludium of the torments to come for ever upon them at the last day without all mercy.

That all in every Citie of the Ammonites were not now destroyed, as was before said, appeareth, because one sonne of Nabab lived still in Rabbah, 2 Sam.

2 Sam. i. 10.

V. 31.

Lyra.
Pellican.Theod. in 2 Reg. qu. 20.
1 Sam. II.Tostatus.Peter Martyr.Seneca lib. 2. de Clementia.

The Morall.

17. 27. and succoured David, happily being by him made King in his mother's stead.

Morally as Job would that David should have all the honour of the victory, which hee indeed had gotten, but warring under David, so must wee ascribe all the glory of our prevailing against sinne unto Christ, who, and not wee, taketh the City: and the Crowne taken off the Kings head and set upon David's head, figured out the glory that redounds to Christ by his Saints overcomming the Devill, for all the honour hereof is his alone.

CHAP. XIII.

Lyra.

V. 1, 2.

3, 4.

5, 6.
Joseph.

7, 8.

9, 10.

11, 12.

13, 14.

Levit. 18. 9.

2 Sam. 3.

P. Martyr.

2 Sam. 3.

AFTER the finnes of David and punishments threatned therefore, and secretly executed by the death of his child, now follow his open punishments, saith Lyra, and first in the deflowring of his daughter Thamar, as hee had deflowered Uriah's wife, and then in the murder of his sonne Amnon, as hee had murdered Uriah. Amnon burnt in lust towards Thamar, Abfolom's sister, for by the same woman that David had Abfolom hee had Thamar also, and therefore shee was called Abfolom's sister, but how to doe any thing to her hee knew not, that is, for the satisfying of his filthy lust, because the Kings daughters which were Virgins were kept close, so as that no man could come to them, and so were other Virgins also, to prevent all danger; a Virgin was therefore called עלמה from hiding; and this made him to pine away, for the passions of the mind if they bee excessive, as of love, hatred or feare; doe macerate the body. Jonadab his friend, and cosin german, a subtle man to doe evill, seeing this and understanding the cause, giveth him wicked counsell, to faine himselfe sick, that under the colour of that hee might obtaine her company alone to make something for him, which hee should feigne that he longed to have her to doe. This counsell hee deferred not to follow, and so gat an opportunitie to force her, shee resisting all that hee could, and dissuading him from this vile attempt, and willing him if his love were so great, to speake to the King that hee might have her, who shee said, certainly would not deny her to him. But of this it is doubted, seeing a brother might not marry with the daughter of his father or of his mother. The Hebrews answer, that Maacab the mother of Thamar was taken in warre, and David having married her according to the Law, shee brought forth this daughter being begotten by a former husband, and if so, there was no nearenesse of blood to hinder this marriage. But this seemeth to bee a fiction of the Rabbins, who are bould to feigne any thing; rather it is likely, that Thamar spake thus, as willing to say any thing to keepe him from this foule sinne, as Josephus hath it, for shee could not bee ignorant of the Law not onely forbidding, but cursing such a marriage, Deut. 27. 22. Amnon certainly knew it, and because shee was his sister, hee had no hope of obtaining her. This was a grievous punishment to David, for Amnon was his eldest sonne, and so by his birthright should have succeeded him in the kingdome, but God foreseeing this, and the miserable end, that hee should come unto, disposed otherwise of it, and it was so much the more grievous, because by the subletie of Jonadab, he himselfe was made an instrument, though ignorantly, to helpe to the committing of this sinne, in that hee sent Thamar to Amnon's house: shee being come, and having prepared for him to eate, hee first refused, as if hee had been very sicke, and so bad all to goe out, then hee called for her againe, and having her alone forced her. To put away this unlawfull lust, saith Martyr, Amnon should have prayed unto God and taken him a lawfull wife, but not doing thus hee continued subject unto it. The heathen prescribe three remedies, ἄμωρ, that is, fasting; 2. χρόνος, time, to deferre and not suddenly to seeke to have it satisfied; 3. ἑστῆς, that is, an halter. And hee saith, that both David's adultery was now punished, and his marrying of a daughter of the uncircumcised, for such was Maacab, the mother of Thamar, viz. the daughter of the King of Geshur.

Then

Then Amnon hated her exceedingly, this may seeme strange, and contrary to the common manner, that having injoyed her, whom hee so much desired, hee should now have his most ardent love turned into extreame hatred, for Shechem having defloured Dinah had his soule made hereby to cleave unto her, and it falleth out to many others likewise; yet Phædra, as the Poets faine, did likewise hate Hippolytus, and Nero his mother, after that hee had lien with her. The Rabbins yeeld this a reason, that in forcing her hee had hurt himselfe, and because shee spake most vilely to him; Cajetan, that his desire being satisfied, there was a turning of the humours, and so of the affection: but then it would bee so commonly. Peter Martyr better, that hee was pricked in conscience and ashamed for his horrible sinne, and so grew into an hatred of her, with whom hee committed it; and through the judgement of God against David it came thus to passe, that it might bee knowne to Davids griefe, and to make way to further calamity unto him, when hee should heare of Amnon being slaine for this, whereas if Amnon had not turned to this hatred, it might have been concealed.

Thamar seeing his love to bee turned into so great hatred, in that hee commanded her to bee put out of the Chamber forthwith, and the doore to bee bolted after her, expostulated with him, saying, that this was a greater evill then the former. But hereby shee meant not, that the incest and this putting of her away in hatred being compared together, it was greater, but both being done to one person, the evill was aggravated, for hee should rather now have comforted her and spoken kindly to her, and suffered her to stay till night, that then shee might secretly have departed, and so her credit being preserved, shee might afterwards have notwithstanding this wrong, injoyed some good marriage, whereas by sending her away presently, the crime was made notorious by reason of many about the house, which beheld her as shee went away. Happily shee thought, if his love had still continued towards her, the King her father might in such a case have dispensed with the Law, and married her unto him, or otherwise have provided for her honour, sith it was at his command, that shee went unto him, and hee might some way have beene excused, as being mad in a manner through love, and so doing hee knew not what, thus Martyr.

Then Thamar cried and put ashes on her head, and rent her garments of divers colours. Shee cryed not out before, although Josephus affirmeth it, for if shee had, there was company neare that might have broken in to rescue her, but now like one growne desperate, as not caring what became of her, shee made known by her crying, what a shamefull thing had been done, and shee goeth not to her father, but to her brother Absalom, as if shee thought him her best friend, and were in her mind exasperated against her father for sending her to Ammons house, where shee had been so grossly abused. Touching her party-coloured garment it is said, that with such the Kings daughters, who were virgins, used to bee apparelled; but not other Virgins, who were of an inferiour ranke, for it is fit, that diverse degrees should bee distinguished by diversitie of apparell, thus Jacob sometime apparelled his sonne Joseph. Lyra saith, that it is not to bee understood, that Thamar at her first going out from Amnon put ashes upon her head &c. but after that shee was come into Absoloms house, lest by doing so publicly shee should manifest her shame; so likewise Tostatus, but Josephus, that shee went crying out in the midst of the Citie, and Chrysostome, through the street, which is most probable, and that exclaiming against Amnon and saying, that hee had ravished her, lest shee should bee thought to have beene put away as an whore. Thus Amnon through the just judgement of God by putting away Thamar in hatred bewrayed his owne wickednesse to the indangering of his life. Absalom comforteth his sister, bidding her to hold her peace, and telling her, that it was her brother, whereby hee meant not, that in this respect hee might doe this unto her, but that the lesse blame could bee laid upon her for being alone with him, whom shee could not suspect that hee would offer her this wrong, and by holding her peace shee might the better provide for

V. 15.

Gen. 34.

Cajetan.

Peter Martyr.

V. 16.

Peter Martyr.

V. 19.

Lyra.

Tostatus.
Josephus.
Chrysost.

V. 20.

V. 21.

Qu.
Tostatus.
Peter Martyr.

Levit. 20. 17.
Cajetan.

Deut. 22.

Lyra.

Hugo Card.

Pellican.

for the credit of their family, to all which so foule a fault, was a great blot being once divulged and not to Amnon alone.

And when David heard of all these things, hee was very wroth, the vulgar Latine addeth, and hee would not grieve the spirit of Amnon, because hee greatly loved him and hee was his first borne: thus also the Septuag. and Iosephus, but the Hebrew hath it not. But it seemeth, that it should be understood, seeing it is not said, that David punished Amnon for it, or reproved him, wherefore it seemed good to the LXX. Interpreters to adde it, that the reason, why hee was onely wroth but did nothing, might appeare. There was a great reason why David should be much affected at hearing this, because they were both his children, and so it redounded greatly to his dishonour, that such wickednesse should be committed amongst them, he also being in a manner the occasion of it in sending Thamar. But whether ought hee not to have done more then be angry or grieved for his foule fault? Some say, hee should have judged Amnon according to the Law, for so much as hee was the supreme Judge upon earth, to judge and to see execution done for offences committed against the Lawes of God, according to which Lawes Amnon should have bene put to death, both because hee was incestuous, and because hee lay with her by force: For this last, saith Cajetan, they should both have died, if any had prosecuted the Law against them, hee for the rape, shee because being in an house shee cryed not out. And therefore David is by some condemned, as sinning againe herein. But for the Law touching rapes, Cajetan is much mistaken, seeing death is not appointed, but in case of being betroathed to an husband, as Lyra well noteth. As for incest in Amnon, hee denyeth it, but against the consent of all other expositors, that hee might cleare David. Hugo cleareth him, because Amnon was greatly grieved already and penitent, but this is against all probabilitie. It was his over-indulgent affection to his sonne Amnon, seeing him looke so thinne and wanne, that hee was unwilling to grieve him more by speaking or doing any thing against him, thus for the present, but as Lyra hath it, hee did doubtlesse afterwards, as a father, reprove him in secret. Pellican, because those words touching his love to Amnon are not in the Hebrew, rejecteth them, but justifieth David in his doing no execution, because he considered his owne sin, and this as a punishment laid upon him therefore. Wherefore hee could do nothing more advisedly, then anxiously Quomodo filium acerbe, ut meruerat, punire possit, qui seipsum cognovit majori suo crimine admissionem huius in filio suo commisisse: Et non tam peccatum esse in filio iudicavit, quam pena peccati in se patre commissi. Nihil ergo consultius fieri potuit, quam impendentem Domini manum anxie expectare, & humiliter amplecti, &c.

to expect the hand of God hanging over him, and humbly imbrace it, and pacifie Gods clemency by prayers; to which, as the best, I subscribe. And so we shall not need to argue either as Lyra doth, that there being no accuser, nor witnesse produced, but Thamar herselfe being silent, after shee came to Abolom, David could doe no execution, nor with Peter Martyr in seeking to take this away, that the King hearing of so foule a crime should have searched it out, and punished it; for considering what had gone before, and was threatned against him, hee might well think himselfe unfit to stirre in this matter.

V. 22.
Peter Martyr.
Cajetan.
Dionysius.
Tostatus.

Abolom the brother of Thamar in the meane season conceived great hatred against Amnon, but hee spake nothing either good or bad unto him, that is, as is generally held, touching the injury offered to his sister, but by his silence passed it over, as if hee had not seemed to regard it: For if hee had spoken unto him nothing at all by way of communication, hee could never have had such an opportunitie to be revenged upon him, because hee might well have knowne his hatred against him. In not speaking then hee dissembled it, and made Amnon to thinke, that his brotherly affection was never the lesse towards him, till the time came, wherein hee meant to be revenged. And hee was prickt on the more, saith Martyr, to take this revenge upon him, because he was his elder brother, and if hee were taken out of the way, hee should be in the more hope of attaining the kingdome, Vers. 23. At the end of two yeares, when Amnon

V. 23.

suspected

suspected nothing, Absalom made a feast at his sheepshearing in Baalbasor neare unto Ephraim, to which hee invited Amnon, and all the Kings sonnes, &c. For his feasting, it was a thing commonly used amongst the Hebrewes at their sheepshearing, because their forefathers were shepherds, as wee may see before in Nabals example and that of Judah, for the place it is said to bee neare Ephraim; Joseph and Adrichom: and Tostatus say, in the Tribe of Ephraim, others in the borders of Benjamin, next unto that Tribe, but that conjecture is rather to bee approved, that by Ephraim here is not meant a Tribe, but a City called Ephrem, or Ephraim, as Jerome saith, of which City mention is made Job: 11. 54. and this stood in the Tribe of Judah, where Absaloms possessions mult lie, seeing hee was of that Tribe; H.B. saith, it lay 8 miles from Jerusalem in the way to Jericboneare to mount Ephraim. At this place was his sheepshearing, and hither hee desired both the King to come and all his sons, that there might be no suspicion of his ill meaning towards Amnon. But it was a very bold enterprise, to thinke to kill him even in the Kings presence. But David refused to goe, lest hee and his company should bee overchargeable to him, and hee was hardly entreated to let Amnon goe, whom hee specially desired to be there, pretending doubtlesse the greater grace to bee herein done unto him, because hee was the eldest and represented the King, but secretly intending to murder him.

Absalom having prevailed, and the King promising to send all his sonnes, he gave a charge to his servants, when Amnon should bee merry with wine, at his bidding instantly to smite and kill him, which they did accordingly, and then all the Kings sonnes fled each one upon his Mule. Hee was so cowardly and effeminate, saith Pellican, that hee durst not doe it himselfe, but propounding to his servants that if Amnon were taken out of the way, hee should bee heire to the Crowne, hee promised to save them harmelesse and well to reward them, and to take the fact upon himselfe, having a purpose then also in his minde without doubt afterward to murder his father. Some conjecture and that not improbably, that these servants of Absalom were Geshurites of his mothers country, and so were the lesse afraid, because they had nothing there to lose, if they should forthwith flee away with their master to Geshur, as v:37. The rest of the Kings sonnes stayed not to revenge their brothers death, for if they had so done, they might all have bene endangered, but they fled upon their Mules, which is a mungrell kinde of beast comming of an Horse and an Asse, such as it was unlawfull for the Israelites to breed, saith Martyr, but Aristotle saith, that in Syria there were Mules of another kinde more swift in travaile then these; howsoever, although the Israelites were forbidden to breed the first sort, yet they were not forbidden to use them.

Newes then was brought to David, that Absalom had slaine all his sonnes, which strucke such sorrow into him, that hee rent his garments and lay upon the earth, &c. and indeed how could hee doe otherwise, considering his great love to his children, the author of the murder, the treacherous manner, his causing of them to goe, and the hand of God herein against him for his sinne in murdering Uriah, hee had heard of that with pleasure, now hee heareth of the murder of his sonnes to his extreame sorrow. Thus great griefe is sometime caused by children, that a man may wish with Augustin Cesar, that either hee had lived alwayes a single life, or bene without children. But same in this, as commonly it doth, exceeded the truth, Amnon onely was slaine, as Jonadab the sonne of Shimeah Davids brother told him, seeking hereby somewhat to mitigate his sorrow; This hee spake not out of a certain knowledge, but conjecturally, as hee was witty and privy to the occasion of Absaloms hatred against Amnon, as being the man that had counselled Amnon to that wickednesse, for which hee was now slaine, and happily as Martyr hath it, Absalom although hee bare his malice against Amnon in secret, yet to Jonadab hee might at some time discover it. It is false then, which the Hebrewes saigne, that hee was Nathan the Prophet, having two names, and so knew by the Spirit what was done, for so holy a man would never have given so wicked counsell, as hee did to Amnon before v. 5.

1 Sam: 25.
Gen: 38.

Hieron: de locis
Hebr.
H. Bunting Pa-
triar, travails.

V. 28.

Pellican.

Лыраш.
Толшм.
Дионисий.

Peter Martyr.
Levit: 19. 19.
Aristot: l. 8. de nat animal: c. 24.

V. 30.

V. 32.
Лыра.

V. 34, 35.
36.

As Jonadab foretold, so David by and by seeth it verified, for all his other sonnes returned, and wept, and then David wept also and his servants; they for the losse of their brother, and that hee was slaine by their brother, thinking also upon the ignominy of their siller Tamar; the King for his son perishing in his drunkenness to the hazzard of his soule also, who was most deare unto him, and for his owne sinne, the cause of all this; and the servants out of compassion, seeing so flourishing a family of their Lord and Master so suddenly brought to such misery.

V. 37.

As for Absalom, hee thinking it not safe for him to abide in the kingdome after this fact, fled to Geshur to Talmai the King, to whom hee was nearly allyed by his mother, as ch: 3. 3. for Maacah his mother was daughter to Talmai, where Geshur lay, see 1 Sam: 27. 8. Hee thought happily by his mediation, that David's wrath might be pacified towards him, or keeping a farre off for a time hee might more easily be afterwards reconciled. Wherefore hee carryed in Geshur 3 yeares.

V. 39.
Lyra.

In the mean season David having mourned his fill for Amnon began to long to see his sonne Absalom againe Lyra faith, hee by this time considered in his minde, that Amnon perished justly for his wickedness, and so hee ceased to mourne any more for him. But it is rather to be thought, that hee ceased mourning, because hee could not by mourning bring him backe from death againe, which is intimated also in the last words, hee was comforted touching Amnon, seeing hee was dead. But what is meant by the former words, his heart longed to goe forth to see Absalom? the Vulgar Latin, Sept. Vatab. Mont. David ceased to persecute Absalom, and there is nothing signifying his soule or heart, and if hee would faigne have seene him, Josab should not so hardly have obtained leave for him to returne, neither should hee after this have beene kept from his sight two yeares. The vulgar therefore is here to be preferred, David at the first was much enraged and would have slaine Absalom, but in this long time his anger was so appeased, that hee persecuted him no more, onely he meant that hee should live in perpetuall banishment, and never come in his sight more, but hee should indeed have continued still in his first resolution to execute the law upon him, the word חל also signifieth, hee made an end, Junius, cum consummarat desiderium exequendi.

The Morall.

Morally wee may learne by Amnon to take heed of sinfull pleasures, the end whereof is so bitter, for although wee hate our sinne, as Amnon did Tamar, whereby wee may be in the way of forgiveness, yet if wee fall into another great sinne, as Amnon into drunkenness, wee shall not escape deserved punishments.

CHAP. XIII.

V. 1, 2, 3.
H. Bunting Patriarchs travails.

Amos I.

Iosab perceiving how David stood affected towards Absalom, sent for a subtle woman of Tekoa, which was a City in the Tribe of Judah, 8 miles from Jerusalem, it signifieth the sounding of a Trumpet, and was so called for the victory obtained by Jehoshaphat by sounding the holy Trumpets, for this was in the Wildernesse of Tekoa, 2 Chron: 20. 20. of this City was also the Prophet Amos. By a subtle woman is meant one that could speake well and wisely. For this woman therefore hee sent, and having given her instructions what to say, shee came in to the King in the habit and countenance of one, that had long mourned for the dead.

V. 4.

Lyra.

Then shee fell downe before him to the ground, and said, Helpe O King: and hee asking what the matter was, shee said that shee was a widow, that had two sons, but they falling out and fighting in the field, the one slew the other, and now the whole family requireth him that liveth to be put to death. Her meaning was, faith Lyra, that thus they said, who sought to have him slaine, and therefore shee spake not, as confessing it to be true, for it could not be proved either by witnesse, or by her sonnes confession, neither was hee convicted of this murder murder in judgment, but they sought his life, that the inheritance might fall to them, not out of the love of justice, or zeale thereunto. The King hearing this, said unto her, Goe to thy house and I will give charge concerning thee. But shee not satisfied herewith replied, (My Lord O King) the iniquity bee on mee and on my fathers house, but the King and his Torone bee guiltlesse, that is, thou halt many businesse, through which it may come to passe, that I may easily bee forgotten by thee, no order through forgetfulness being taken for my sonnes safety, and it so, hee shall still bee in danger, which if it befalls him, I and my fathers house must beare this iniquity, as being the onely persons in fault for not dealing more effectually for his preservation, but thou, because it was of forgetfulness, shalt bee cleare, wherefore I pray thee give better security to mee and my sonne.

Then the King bade her to bring forth him that pursued her sonne, and he would take order with him, that her son might bee safe, which, the case being as was before related, the King might justly doe.

The woman replied, I pray thee let the King remember the Lord thy God, &c. which is, as if shee had said, the revengers of blood are many, and therefore if I should bring one or two unto thee, my sonne might still bee endangered by others, wherefore I pray thee sweare unto me, and so cause it to bee published immediately, that none may dare to doe him any hurt: Then the King sware unto her, As the Lord liveth, there shall not one haire of thy sonne fall to the ground, that is, hee shall not onely bee safe from the danger of death, but from any the least hurt.

Then shee said, having first asked leave to speake, wherefore hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? for the King speaketh this thing as one which is faulty in that he doth not fetch home againe his banished. Now shee beginneth to shew, that shee spake all this parabolically, by her selfe meaning the King, by her two sonnes, his two, Abshalom and Amnon; by the kindred rising up to seeke her sonnes life, Ammons friends, which would have Abshalom put to death. And as the King had given sentence for her pretended sonne being in danger, so Abshaloms case being the like, shee seeketh to move him to take the same order for his safety. 1. Because hee was now for feare of danger constrained together with his men to live in an idolatrous country, to the hazarding of their soules, if by being there they should bee inclined to idolatry also, in these words, wherefore hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? that is, Abshalom and his followers, who were Israelites.

2. Because Amnon being dead could not bee restored to life againe, whatsoever should bee done against Abshalom, that slew him, in the next words, wee must needs dye and are as water spilt upon the ground, which cannot bee gathered up againe. 3. Because God the great judge of all, whom earthly judges ought to imitate, is not implacable towards these that sinne against him, but is ready upon their repentance to receive them to mercy, in these words, neither doth God respect any person, yet hee doth devise meanes, that his banished bee not expelled from him. She calleth sinners his banished, because they are carried away captive by the Devill, as it were, and kept in his kingdome.

Now therefore that I am come to speake of this thing to my Lord the King, it is, because the people made mee afraid, &c. The Vulgar Latin for these last words, hath these, the people being present, which Lyra expoundeth thus, that the sentence to bee published touching mee and my sonne may bee published before all the people touching thy sonne.

For the King will beare to deliver, &c. v. 17. then thy handmaid said, The word of my Lord the King shall be comfortable, The Vulgar Latin, let thy handmaid say, that the word of my Lord the King bee as a sacrifice, that is, doe so, as that I may truly say thy word is as pleasing as a sacrifice to God. Hitherto Lyra, who also in concluding this dialogue, objecteth, that this parable agreed not to Ammons case, for Abshalom slew him openly, and answereth out of R. Solomon, that although it were before many, yet they were so neare to Amnon, that they were not competent witnesses, or out of others, although the murder bee evident, yet if the

V. 8.

V. 9.

V. 10.

V. 11.

V. 12. 13.

V. 14.

V. 15.

V. 16.

Peter Martyr.

nearest of kin bee content to grant peace to the offender, the King, who is the common father of all, may grant it without offence to the Law, and such was her case, shee was nearest to her slaine sonne, and David to Amnon, so that if hee were willing, he might save Absalom without offence. Peter Martyr contrariwise is so farre from defending the congruence of the parable as that hee sheweth it to differ in very many things, which the King might easily have perceived, if hee had benee willing. 1. Because shee had but two sonnes, the King many. 2. Her husband was dead, but David's wives were living. 3. One brother killed another, as they strave together, not premeditating his death, Absalom bare malice to Amnon two yeares together, neither did Absalom fight for his life. 4. That was done in secret in the fields, none being present, this openly before many. 5. Absalom fled not to any Citie of refuge, but into another countrey, hereby condemning himselfe of wilfull murder. Wherefore the King should by no meanes have been drawne to spare him, for if such wickednesses be spared, God himselfe will execute judgement, as hee did afterwards upon this murderer, and that by the hands of Joab, who now interceded for him, and upon Joab himselfe in the reigne of Solomon. Orestes amongst the heathen, who had slaine his mother, but escaped punishment, was pursued by the Furies Nere, after that hee had done the like, was stricken after a sort with madnesse. Antoninus Caracalla having slaine his brother Geta, would have it defended by Papinianus, a Lawyer, hee freely answered, parricides are more easily committed then defended, and it is not the part of a good patron to defend them. For these words, Vers. 9. upon mee bee the iniquitie, &c. hee also bringeth two other expositions. 1. If there should be any iniquity in sparing of my sonne, I will take it upon me, and the King shall bee free. 2. If thou dost not defend mee and my sonne, some great punishment of so foule a fault must needs come, but I pray, that this may be upon me, and not upon the King.

V. 9.

V. 11.

For these words, Let the King remember the Lord, having expounded them, as Lyræ, hee addeth, that some understand them of remembering the Law made in Numbers, that such as did slay others unawares should flee and bee saved in some City of refuge, but it is plaine, that David understood her, as desiring his oath, because hee presently sware unto her.

V. 14.

Wee must needs die, &c. This hee also expoundeth of Absalom, and not as Lyræ, it will not bee long before Absalom dieth, and death is not a thing to be haltned, but which we should labour to keepe away: Or thou, O King art mortall, and if thou diest, not having first benee reconciled to Absalom, hee may happily make warre. Neither doth God respect any person, that is, to exempt him from the stroke of death, of what degree or condition soever hee bee. Yet doth he devise meanes, that is, by appointing Cities of refuge to save mens lives, Vers. 15. the people made mee afraid, that is, they told mee, when I was comming, that I should but lose my labour in speaking to thee, thou wouldst not regard such a poore woman as I am, and hereby, as by another argument shee sought to move him, that hee might be the better thought of amongst the people, and compareth him with an Angel of God, to insinuate the more into him.

Note.

Note how diligent and carefull Joab and this woman were in patronizing a bad cause, that wee may learne much more to endeavour to defend a good cause. And Kings may learne of David here to bee easie for their subjects to have access unto them, and patiently to heare them.

Touching Joabs imploying of this woman, and not speaking himselfe for Absalom, although hee perceived that David's affection was now againe towards him, because hee spake no more of Amnon, in way of lamentation, but was more chearfull and ceased to speake against Absalom, hee did it, lest, if he himselfe should speake and have a repulse, it might turne to his disgrace, as being a signe of little favour, wherein hee was with the King, which would have been a thing very grievous to so great a man, and because women are more apt by their flattering speeches to insinuate into men. And hee imployed not this woman, because there was none in Jerusalem to bee found fit for this purpose for their wit, but because it was necessary, that a stranger and one un-

knowne

knowne to David should come in this manner unto him. And hee would have him speake by way of parable, that the King not thinking his owne case to bee propounded, might the more readily give sentence, from which hee might afterwards bee ashamed to goe backe, when the end of it should bee explained; and thus Nathan had dealt with him and prevailed before. Touching the sense of the words, as much almost hath been said already out of Lyra and Martyr, as any other expositours say. Whereas shee prayeth, that the iniquitie might bee upon her, &c. Pellican will have the meaning to bee, if her living sonne had committed any iniquitie worthy of punishment, shee would beare it. And whereas shee desireth him by and by to remember the Lord, shee meant to stand to, and not to goe from his word, seeing God is ready to take vengeance upon those that falsifie their serious premises. For these words, why hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God, he also bringeth this as the sense, how shall the people, over whom thou art set, bee periwaded, that thou hast decreed such a thing touching my sonne, when as thou wilt not doe the like by thine owne? Junius upon these words upon mee bee the iniquitie, saith, shee meant, that shee held her living sonne so innocent, as that if there were this iniquity in him, shee would willingly beare it. And these, why hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God, that is, the people of Israel, whose hearts are towards Absalom, as thy eldest sonne now living, and thy successour in thy Kingdome, desiring to have him called home againe? And these, wee must all die, wee are all about to die, that Absalom being absent, wee count our life no better then death, and all the kingdome is out of course, like water spilt upon the ground: For Chitab the next sonne to Amnon was dead, and so Absalom the eldest. And for Gods devising meanes, &c. hee expoundeth it of his preserving him alive hitherto, and stirring up this longing desire in the people after him.

Pellican.Junius.

And these, the people made mee afraid, hee expounds of her feare, lest some hurt should come to them, if the King did not call home Absalom. It is too long a worke to compare these expositions together, and to approve some and reject others, and without much erring wee may follow any, wherefore I leave it to the judicious Reader to choose that which seemeth to him most probable.

The King having heard the woman hitherto, now chargeth her to tell him, whether Joab did not direct her in this businesse; shee comfelleth it, and applaudeth the wisdom of the King in discerning this, saying, that it was as the wisdom of an Angell. Hee conceived that Joab was her instructor, partly for the great love, which hee perceived to bee in Joab towards Absalom, and partly because hee knew him to bee witty, and apt to invent, and happily hee brought her in to the King, and lastly hee knew, as Pellican hath it, that Joab was forward to put himselfe into such actions all wayes, as whereby hee might curry favour with the King and with Absalom, who was the next heire to the kingdome. For the womans ready disclosing the authour of this counsell, hee taxeth her therefore, although it succeeded well, and generally the levity of women, that men may beware how they commit their secrets to them. But shee seemeth rather according to others, to have done nothing herein worthy taxation, because happily shee knew that Joab was willing, if shee should see the King tractable, that shee should disclose it, and by his countenance and manner of speech shee perceived his readinesse to yeeld. Moreover if being asked shee had denied it, and afterwards, it should have beene knowne to come from Joab, shee might feare to bee taxed for a lyer.

V. 18, 19.

PellicanPeter Martyr.

Then David called for Joab, and told him, that hee had granted his request, for which hee gave the King great thanks, and went and fetcht Absalom to Jerusalem, but the King would not have him brought into his presence, but turne to his owne house, lest, as Lyra saith, by seeing him his griefe should bee renewed for the death of his first borne Amnon. Martyr addeth three other reasons. 1. That David might not seeme to have remitted so foule a sinne, but punishing it with banishment from the Court, it might appeare how 22, 23, 24.

V. 21.

Lyra.
Peter Martyr.

greatly hee still distasted it. 2. Left the Kinsmen of Amnon by the mother being moved by the sight of Abfalom should bee provoked to revenge his blood. 3. To stirre up Abfalom to a sight and sense of his sinne, that hee might bee moved to repent.

V. 25.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.

Plutarch.

Josephus.

Pellicano.

V. 27.

Peter Martyr.

Theodoret.

Testam.

2 Sam. 18. 18.

Now that it might appeare, what power David did shew himselfe to have over his affections in refraining from the sight of Abfalom, his beantie is described, being sufficient to draw any eye unto it, hee excelled all in the whole kingdome in beantie, &c. and touching the haire of his head, it is said, that hee did sheare it once in the yeare, Hebr. saith Lyra, it is, at a set time in the yeare, for it may bee that hee cut his haire oftner, as Lyra, so some Hebrewes say, that hee polled his head oftner, viz. once a moneth. But Hebr. it is קצו וקצו at the end of dayes, that is, of the yeare, and it is absurd to hold, that his haire could in a shorter time grow to so great abundance; it weighed 200. shekels of the Kings weight, which is added, because to have no baldnesse in the head, but to have an head full of haire, is a great part of comelines. But why did hee weigh it? Some Hebrewes say, because hee sold it by weight to such women as would adorne their heads with it; but to this Lyra excepteth, because hee was the Kings sonne, and therefore would not bee so base as to sell his haire, and because it could not bee growne long enough in a yeare for such an use; Martyr thinketh, that Abfaloms beantie is spoken of, as a præludium to his insurrection, which followeth in this history not long after, hereby hee was puffed up, & came into great grace amongst the people, who thought him being so goodly a man most worthy of the kingdome, and his pride caused by his beauty made him aspire unto it. Thus foully do some abuse this gift of God to their owne destruction, so that it had beene farre better for them to have wanted it, as his sister Thamar also, and Dinah, Jacobs daughter; it brought great trouble upon Joseph and Sarah and Rebecca; and Plutarch saith, that a certaine beautifull Bride, when shee was led away by her Bridegroom, another lover came and laid hold upon her to pluck her from him with such violence, that her husband also striving on the other side to hold her, shee was miserably rent in peeces. They that are beautifull, saith Isocrates, but voyd of vertue, have a good Ship without a governour, and so are in continuall danger of shipwrack. Chrysost. calleth them whited Sepulchers, like unto poyson tempered with Sugar to fooles, as the goodly Oake, which beareth no fruit, but for Swine, so they afford pleasure to impure persons, but the weake and deformed Vine yeeldeth sweet and pleasant grapes. For his haire, the same Martyr also saith, that some Hebrewes thinke him to have beene a Nazarite, and therefore hee thus nourished his haire, and whereas it was against the Law of Nazaritisme to cut it, they say, this was an exception in case it should grow too heavy: but Kimbi better, hee delighted in his haire, and therefore thus nourished it, which indeed was a shame, 1 Cor. 11. and amongst the Romans they abhorred from it. But the Lacedemonians, as Plutarch saith, nourished their haire, and Licurgus made a Law for it, because to such as were beautifull it added a greater grace, and the blacke were made hereby more terrible to their enemies. Aristotle saith, that long haire was a signe of libertie, because they that labour as servants are troubled with long haire. Josephus yeelds another reason, why Abfaloms beantie is here spoken of, viz. because hee had lived long in banishment, to shew, that his beantie was no whit impaired hereby, and hee saith, that 200. Shekels, which was the weight of his haire, was 5. pounds, and therefore it is spoken of, as being a quantitie so extraordinary. Pellican saith, that being about to speake of his wickednesse, his great pride is first intimated by describing his extraordinary beantie.

Hee had also three sonnes, and one faire daughter Thamar, who the Hebrewes say, was afterwards wife to Reboboam. His children are spoken of most probably, as another cause of his pride and ambition, but they all dyed inglorious, as became the children of such a father. And this may bee gathered according to Theodoret and Tostatus, because hee set up a pillar to continue his name, for so much as hee had no children to continue it, and yet he lived not above two yeares after this, which argueth, that these children of his died soone after his returne from Geshur. Yet Josephus saith, that hee set up a Pillar to continue his name, because his children were mortall, and so could not long continue it. But wee must rather beleve the Scripture, which saith, that hee had then no children, and no lesse doth Josephus erre about Thamar Absaloms daughter, who hee saith, was wife to Rehoboam, and mother to Abiam: but although there may seeme to be some colour for this in Scripture, because, 1 King. 15. 2. the mother of Abijam is said to be Maachab Absaloms daughter, yet the same man who was father to this Maachab, is called Uriel of Gibeab, 2 Chron. 13. 2. and shee Michaiab, to shew, that hee was another man, and not Absaloms Dauids sonne borne in Hebron of Judah. But more grossly hee erreth in writing about Absaloms polling of his haire, saying, that it was so much that it could not bee done in lesse then eight dayes. For the weight of his haire, Tostatus alledgeth and rejecteth one opinion, that it is not meant, that his haire weighed five pound, but was accounted so much worth: but because it may seeme incredible, that one mans haire should weigh so much, there bee others that approve of this exposition, & indeed it seemeth most probable, for things are estimated according to the price, that vaine persons who have money enough, set them at; and for the selling of it, that might bee done by his servant that polled him for his own benefit; and hee weighed or estimated, may be taken for, it was estimated, as well as these words, hee polled his head, for it was polled. When Absalom had lived two yeares in Jerusalem, and was not admitted into the Kings fight, hee sent for Joab twice, but hee refusing to come, hee caused his Barley field nigh unto him to bee set on fire, at the hearing of which hee came with speed unto him, &c. It seemeth, saith Pellican, that Joab being a grave man and wise, and a great warriour, disliked the pride and effeminatenesse of Absalom, and therefore had rather, that hee should keepe away from the Court then come unto it, and this made, that hee was so hardly drawne to come unto him about this businesse: Or, as Martyr saith, because hee thought that the sight of him would bee displeasing to the King, whom hee was unwilling to offend. Absalom seeing that Joab would not come unto him waxed angry, as thinking himselfe contemned, and burnt the Corne in his field, hereby shewing, what a wicked mind hee still bare: here the vulg. Latine, and Sept. adde, Joabs servants seeing this came with their garments rent and told Joab, but this is left out in the Hebrew to bee understood. Joab commeth and expostulates with Absalom about this wrong, touching satisfying him, for which wee here find nothing sayd, yet it is probable, that hee by faire promises of satisfaction sought to reconcile his favour towards him, that hee might the more willingly deale with his father for him. That which is exprest, Absalom said unto Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, come hither, that I may send thee to my father, and say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? it had bene good for mee to have bene there still, now therefore let me see the Kings face, and if there bee any iniquitie in me, let him kill mee, the vulg. Latine, but if hee bee mindfull of mine iniquitie, let him kill mee? having respect rather to the sense then to the words, for his meaning was, if hee would not pardon, but still keepe in his mind his iniquitie, as it seemed that hee did by banishing him from his presence, let him slay mee. Ah deepe dissimulation! in this long time of his living idly at home hee had meditated upon mischief against his father, as the sequels doth declare, but now hee feigneth, as if his love and desire to live in his fathers presence were such, as that to want it were more grievous then death unto him. Hee counted it no benefit, but worse for him that hee came from Geshur, if hee were still thus debarred from comming to the King, for in that hee would not endure the sight of him, it was conceived by the subjects that his father had him in abomination, and therefore they all must needs contemne him and vilifie him also. In Geshur hee was had in honour, and was not so sensible of his fathers indignation, saith Martyr, because hee was as farre off, but now hee was neare, and that which was granted to the meanest subject, viz. if they had any cause, to come before the King, was denied unto him, as if hee were the worst of all men, whereas hee

not

Tostatus.

Tostatus.

V. 29, 30.

Pellican.

Peter Martyr.

V. 32.

Peter Martyr.

V. 33.

Note.

thought himselfe to bee without fault, it was because hee held the killing of Amnon upon such an occasion to bee none. Then Joab went to the King, he is brought before him, prostrateth himselfe, and his father kisseth him in tokens of reconciliation. But for so much as this was to an impenitent person, and contrary to Gods Law, see Chap. 15. what troubles followed unto David. The sparing of a malefactor that deserveth to die, is but an hardening of him to more villany.

CHAP. XV.

V. 1, 2.

Iosephus.

Tostatus.
Theodoret.
Hieron. de tra.
dit. Hebr.

Peter Martyr.

Sallianus.

Pellican.

Iosephus.

Absalom being now at the Kings Court beginneth to lay a foundation to his intended usurpation of the kingdome, hee prepared him Chariots and horses, and 50. men to run before him, and by his affabilitie to every man, and curtelie hee wonne the hearts of the people. This, saith Iosephus, was done in the fourth yeare after his returne to Ierusalem, for having lived privately two yeares, and after his coming into his fathers presence, a yeare in feigned dutie and obedience, in the fourth hee made this preparation. Tostatus, in the fourth yeare after his perfect reconciliation to his father, and likewise Theodoret; Ierom, in the sixth yeare after his fleeing to Geshur. But because the time is not expresse in Scripture, it is uncertaine, onely it is probable that hee stayed a yeare at the least before hee tooke this pompe upon him, for it had been too great audacity to have done so at the first, neither could the peoples hearts in a shorter time be so generally wonne unto him. The causes, saith Martyr, of this his aspiring to the Crowne might be, 1. His feare, that if hee stayed till his fathers death, another should bee made King, viz. Solomon, of whom happily hee had heard somewhat, that David promised to make him his successour, and Bathsheba his mother was most beloved, and his owne mother was a stranger, but in the Law it was provided, that the eldest, although the sonne of a wife not so greatly beloved, should bee heire to his father. 2. His long banishment and indignitie then offered unto him might still stick in his mind and exasperate him to revenge. 3. His mother also being a Kings daughter might happily put him on, and his extraordinary beauty apt to draw mens affections towards him, and to puffe him up with pride. His preparation of Chariots and footmen served to ravish the mindes of the people, not being wonted to such things, for men are apt to bee taken with novelties, and David indeed should not have permitted this, as being contrary to their Law, which forbad them horses and Chariots. But some thinke, that Absalom provided him not these Chariots, till afterwards, seeing otherwise his rebellion would at the first have appeared: but I rest in the former, his glorious going forth was one of the engines which hee used to make himselfe glorious, and to bee thought by the people worthy of the kingdome, and because he was the Kings eldest sonne, hee through his indulgence towards him, permitted it without controule, so also Pellican. Amongst other meanes which he used to alienate the hearts of the people from his father, and to winne them to himselfe, hee lyngly said to suters that came to the Court, your cause is good, but none are appointed by the King to heare you; for that this was false, appeareth, 2 Sam. 8. 28. David reigned over all Israel, and executed justice and judgement to all the people. Wherefore Pellican putting all his vices together saith, hee was most wicked, for hee was ungratefull, ambitious, arrogant, an hypocrite, a lyer, a contemner and persecuter of his father, a subverter of the people, a deflowerer of his mothers, being made a sacrifice to the devill in his haire, an example and monument of rebellious sonnes, and of all that persecute Gods servants. Iosephus saith, that hee used this speech to such, as against whom the judgement went, meaning that the Judges deputed by the King were corrupt, for which hee seemed to bee much grieved, wishing, that the burthen might bee laid upon him for the good of the people, whom the King so neglected, and would heare none of their causes himselfe.

At the end of 40 yeares Absalom sayd to his father, Let mee goe I pray thee, that I may pay my vow in Hebron. Here because it can hardly bee determined, what 40 yeares bee meant, the Vulgar Latin hath it 4 yeares, following Josephus, but this is against both the Hebr: Sept: Chald: and Jeroms translation, followed by Lyrus, in all which it is 40 yeares, and Jerom giveth warning against that reading, wherein it is 4 yeares, saying, it is a corrupt copy. But what 40 yeares are meant, is not without cause much doubted. Some thinke from the peoples first asking of a King. Some from the destruction of the Priests made by Saul, whereof David was the cause in that hee deceived Abimelech, and was now punished for it. Some from the beginning of Davids raigne, which Pellican labourerh best to make it agree, saying, it is meant, when hee had reigned about 40 yeares, for the scripture itandeth not precisely upon a yeare or two, so that although David lived 2 or 3 yeares after, yet it might bee said, at or about the end of his 40 yeares raigne. Hebr: at the end of 40 yeares, so that if wee take 40 yeares here together for the whole summe of his time, it is as if it had bene said, when the time of his 40 yeares raigne was now almost determining. And with this exposition the time agreeth well, if we count it by Solomons age, when hee began to raigne, who was then very young, for David called him at that time a childe and tender. Hee was borne before the defiling of Thamar by Amnon, after which Absalom passed 2 yeares in silence, then 3 in Geshur, 2 after his returne before hee came into his fathers presence, and 2 or more before his rebellion, altogether 9 yeares, so that hee might now bee 10 or 11, and by the account of all expositours hee was, as some say, but 12, some 13, when hee was crowned King, at what time an end was put to the raigne of David.

Therefore this was not long before, as also the following part of this history intimateth, wherein nothing is recorded to have bene done till Solomons crowning, but what might well bee done in two or three yeares. Some by these 40 yeares understand the age of Absalom at that time, and some reckon from Samuels first anointing of David to the Kingdome, which they say was at 20 yeares of age. But as Martyr saith, that time is concealed in Scripture, and therefore not probable that any reckoning is made therefrom; and as for Absaloms age hee could not be 40 when David dyed, because hee was his third sonne borne in Hebron, after that he began his raigne, 2 Sam: 3. 2. And touching the two former opinions, the first also falleth by the same reason, for it is not recorded in what yeare they asked a King, and the time doth not agree, if Saul, as is commonly held, reigned 18 yeares, for Davids raigne must needs bee now above 30 yeares, seeing Absalom his third sonne was a man growne and had a family 9 yeares at the least before this. And for the second there is no colour of reason, seeing this affliction befell David not for the Priests, from whose bloud hee was free, but for his murder and adultery, as Nathan foretold. It was then about the end of Davids raigne when hee was aged about 67, or 68. so that it was thought that hee could not live much longer, being now very crazy through the great troubles and turmoiles of warre, which hee continually endured, therefore Absalom ambitious of the kingdome, thought it necessary, to take this time, lest if hee stayed a while longer, hee should bee prevented by another, who might bee made King. Hee asked leave therefore under a colour of piety to goe to Hebron, to pay his vow, which hee had made in Geshur for his safe returne to Jerusalem. Hebron was the chiefe City in the Tribe of Judah, where David was anointed King and Absalom was borne, and there was an high place, whereupon they might lawfully yet sacrifice, till the Temple was built, as also in other high places, because no certaine place was yet chosen for the Arke to abide in. And this place was famous for the Sepulchers of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob there. Yet it is not rightly gathered from hence by the Jesuite Sallianus, that they went in pilgrimage to the reliques of Saints departed, under their patronage, as it were to offer their devotions: for then it might have bene so done still after the building of the Temple, and this was not the thing, whereby the people were then moved to resort thither, but because there was an high place there. It was, saith Martyr, distant from tradit: Hebr.

Hieron. de
Varabian.

Hieronym.
de tradit: Hebr.
Peter Martyr.
Junius.
Pellican

2 Chr. 29. 1.

Tostatus.
Sallianus.

V. 8.

Peter Martyr.

De officio Prae-sidis.

V. 10.

from Jerusalem 15 or 16 miles. By this pretext of devotion the King was easily moved to give him leave, for what godly father would hinder his sonne from performing his vow? In Pigeſſis, a president of a province is required not to goe out of the bounds of his province, yet to performe his vow hee is permitted.

V. 11.

Thus Abſalom pretended devotion, but hee intended rebellion, for hee sent secretly throughout all the parts of Israel to signify, that when they should heare the trumpets sound, they should say, Abſalom reigneth in Hebron, that is, in every place proclaim him King.

Comeſtor.
Toſtatus.
Lyra.

V. 12.

And there went with Abſalom from Jerusalem 200. men in the ſimplicity of their hearts, being invited &c. At the times of ſacrificing they were wont to make feaſts, at which great men uſed to have many friends with them, ſaith Martyr, and ſo did Abſalom at this time, hee tooke with him 200. friends, telling them of nothing, but the ſacrifice feaſt, ſo that they knew no more of his intended rebellion, then David himſelfe, and therefore were at the firſt guiltleſſe of it, unleſſe they took part with him afterwards. Theſe, it is likely, were of the principal men of the City Jerusalem, by the policy of Ahioſophel, as it is thought, taken with him, that other Cities thinking, that Jerusalem was for Abſalom, might be drawne to follow their example, and to follow him alſo. But that ſubtle foxe ſtayed at home in his owne City, till hee was ſent for, that if things ſucceeded not, hee being not amongſt them might ſeme to bee guiltleſſe. Now though theſe 200. only are ſpoken of as going with Abſalom to Hebron, yet it is not to be thought, but he had many more with him of his ordinary retinue that were of his counſell.

V. 13. 14.

The news was brought to David of this conſpiracy who fled hereupon afoote, leaving 10 concubines to keepe the houſe, but all his ſervants went with him, and the Cherethites, and Pelithites, and Gittites, thoſe 600. men, that came with him from Gath, theſe were then 600. and ſo continued ſtill, but it is moſt likely, as any dyed, others were put into their roomes, they were called Gittites from Gath, becauſe they had lived with David there. Although his owne ſonne conſpired againſt him, yet his ſervants remained faithfull to him. Who the Cherethites and Pelithites were, ſee before ch. 8. 18. the Gittites were thoſe, that had in times paſt fled unto him, and lived with him in Gath, and Ittai, the Gittite, who is next ſpoken of v. 19. is thought by ſome, ſaith Martyr, to have bin the King of Gath's ſonne, who was now become a Proſelyte and lived in Jerusalem for Religions ſake. He left his 10. Concubines or inferior wives, to keepe the houſe, not againſt the enemy, for that they were not able to doe, but happily, it being an office, that belonged unto them, ſuppoſing that Abſalom would not doe any hurt to weake women. But God had an hand in this, as the ſequelle proved, when Abſalom went in unto them, that the threatning of God by Nathan might be fulfilled. What he did with his other wives, is not ſaid, but moſt probably he ſent them to other places, where they might bee kept in more ſafety. In David's fleeing thus out of the City that the people might not bee ſmiten with the ſword, appeared his great care of the good of his ſubjects, yea greater then of his owne honour, for hee had many valiant men with him, by whom the City might have bene a long time defended againſt Abſalom, and to flee in this caſe, before the approach of the enemy, might ſeeme ignominious unto him: but he did doubtleſſe looke at the hand of God, whereby this judgement was brought upon him for his ſinnes, and ſo quietly ſubmitted himſelfe to beare it, whoſe power hee knew, that if his forces had bene farre greater, hee could by no meanes have withſtood, and his quiet ſubmiſſion further appeareth in that he uſeth no reproachfull termes againſt Abſalom, but called him the King, as Theod. noteth, and in that hee went barefooted, when hee fled, v. 30. Neither did he for all this caſt away his hope and faith in God, but truſted in him againſt all his enemies, as appeareth Pſal. 31 which was made upon this occaſion, as the title ſheweth.

Lyra.

Theodor.

Peter Martyr.
Theodores.

Touching Ittai the Gittite, hee is thought by ſome to have bene the Captaine of the 600 Gittites, who came but lately to David, being drawne by his piety piety and vertue, and now in his necessity did sticke unto him, when his owne subjects rebelled with Absalom against him. But the 600 Gittines are said to have come with David from Gath, and to have now gone before him, but Ittai with his men came lately to him, and went not before him, till that after some parole hee bade them goe before. And how many there were of them is uncertaine, but the whole company that went with David, consisted partly of Gittines, that went before him, then of Ittai with his men, and lastly of David's other servants, and the Cherubites and Pelethites, who went as a guard to the King about his person. And they abode in a place a farre off, that is, farre from all houses, that they might bee seene, that David's friends might thither resort unto him, and that they might see what was done by the enemy, and yet bee out of his danger. And here when hee would have dismissed Ittai and the men with him, being strangers, who came in love to dwell under David with their families, drawne as it seemeth by his vertue, of which there had bene former great experience in Gath, but hee refused, resolving most lovingly and courageously, with David to live and dye, hee caused him to passe over the brooke Kedron before him, thinking to flee into the Wildernesse, where in times past hee had lived, when he fled from Saul, as being a place well knowne unto him, since that time. The brooke Kedron, was without the City Jerusalem in a valley, saith Martyr, and the Wildernesse to which hee directed his course, is thought to bee the Wildernesse of Jericho.

Then the whole land wept, that is, all that wished well to David, seeing his sudden misery so unworthily brought upon him by his owne sonne, were so stricken with sorrow, that they lamented exceedingly, those that were with Absalom in the meane season rejoycing and triumphing. Whereas David caused all to passe over the brooke Kedron before him, Lyra noteth it to have bene done, that hee himselfe might bee in the greatest danger if Absalom should pursue him, hereby acknowledging that all this came to passe for his finnes. And whereas Ittai a stranger and his friends with him, cleaved so constantly to David in this time of his danger, Pellican noteth the singular providence of God herein, in that when his owne rebelled against him, strangers were stirred up to this fidelity towards him to his great comfort.

Zadok also and the Levites came after him out of the City with the Arke, and Abiathar &c. Zadok and Abiathar are said before ch. 8. 18. to bee the Priests, where enough hath bene said of two High-priests together. The Arke is brought after David that hereby hee might consult with God and have direction, what place to goe unto, saith Lyra, and because the Priest to shew his fidelity to the King, would partake with him in his banishment, and the Arke might not bee left without the Priest, hee brought that also with him. But David biddeth him to carry it backe againe, and both Zadok and Abiathar to abide in the City, that from them hee might have intelligence. Hereupon it is inquired, why David did thus, seeing the comfort of the Arke being present might bee more unto him, then the endeavours of any friends in Jerusalem, as being a symbole of Gods presence, whereby the Israelites had bene so long guided and protected in the Wildernesse, and great miracles had bene wrought. Some Hebrewes and Jerom after them say, that Abiathar consulted with God by the Arke for David, and had no answer, and therefore hee dismissed it; but this is onely a conjecture, and not probable, because in the next words he speaketh of his hope to bee brought backe againe to the Arke, and by that which the Hebrewes themselves further deliver it is confuted. For whereas David speaketh to Zadok and not to Abiathar, saying, thou art a seer, they say, that when Abiathar had consulted without answer, Zadok consulting had answer, and so hee was thenceforth preferred as appearing to bee more gracious with God, then hee. For if the Lord gave answer by the Arke to Zadok, the not answering by Abiathar could not bee the cause of his sending it backe, yet this is followed by Lyra, Hugo, Comestor, Tostatus, &c. Others say, that hee sent it backe, as disallowing the removing of it out of the place where he had set it in Sion, where it should settledly abide; but against this maketh the removing of Tostatus.

Peter Martyr.

V. 23.

Lyra.

Pellican.

V. 24.

2 Sam. 11. 11.

Theodore.

1 Chr. 16. 39.

Dionysius.

V. 27.
Varablin.

Cajetan.

Glof. Ord.

Peter Martyr.
Pellican.

Junius.

V. 30.

1 Cor. 11.
Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

of it before to the siege of Rabbah, and afterwards to the Temple in mount Moriab, after which indeed it might no more bee removed, but yet it might. Others therefore say, that hee did it to prevent the danger which might happen to the Priests, if Abshalom should prevaile, as before for his sake in the daies of Saul it had happened. But Theodore giveth the best reason next to that in the Text, David lent the Arke backe, because hee knew it would not profit the wicked, and such as God was offended withall, but rather hurt them, as in the dayes of Eli 70 years before, and such hee acknowledged himselfe yet to bee, as perceiving by Gods judgments against him, that hee was not yet pacified, but offended with him for his finnes. Touching Zadok to whom David speaketh, and who is first mentioned, and then Abiathar, it is not necessary, as the Hebrewes doe, to gather from hence, that Abiathar now began to bee in disgrace, for before this, ch: 8. 17. hee is named after Zadok, and 1 Chron: 16. 39. 40. where Zadok is appointed to attend upon the Tabernacle, hee is not mentioned at all, and at this time happily hee came to David after Zadok, who most probably holpe to bring the Arke, and Abiathar with the rest of the people followed. It is certaine that Abiathar was High-priest before Zadok, and therefore his superiour, but hee being set to serve, as chiefe at the Tabernacle, whilst Abiathar attended upon the Arke, hee was made in a manner equall to him, and so for a time there were two High-priests as I have shewed before. And either because hee was a Prophet, as Dionysius thinketh, from the words following, where David calleth him a seer, or because David knew that Abiathar, as being of the family of Eli, should be put downe by Gods just judgment, and Zadok set up, hee graced him most, and likewise the holy Scripture, when hee is named at other times before Abiathar.

And the King said to Zadok, Art thou a seer? This is understood by Varablin, as if he meant, that hee was a wiseman and a man of counsell, and so might doe him more good being in the City with Abshalom, then abiding with him, likewise Cajetan, hee might see there for *David*s good, and advertise him. The Ord: Glof: because hee prophesied when hee had consulted with God, and Dionysius as hath beene shewed. Or because hee was over those, that prophesied in singing praises to God. Peter Martyr and Pellican say, that hee meant, hee was both godly and wise, and as a prophet knew the will of God, and therefore hee would have him judge of it, whether it were not best for him to goe backe to the City, and that so hee might doe him most good. Junius, thou art a seer, that is, a man, that should not follow mee privately fleeing, but returne and see for the publike good. I thinke, because a Prophet is called a seer, 1 Sam: 9. David meant that hee was a Prophet, who might consult with God for him, and pray for him as well in the City, as if hee were with him in the Campe, for it was not usuall for an High-priest to prophesie, as wee may gather from that passage touching Caiaphas, Job: 11. 51. hee being High-priest that yeare prophesied, wherefore it being not necessary for him to goe with David, seeing hee might doe him as good service absent as present, hee would have him returne, and if either by revelation from God he knew any thing tending to his good, or by observing Abshaloms proceedings, to certifie him thereof by his owne sonne or by Abiathars.

Then David went up the Mount of Olives weeping, and his head covered, &c. His head was covered, say some, because it was the manner of those that mourned thus to shew their subjection to God afflicting them; and the woman must have her head covered in token of her subjection to the man. But Martyr saith, it was that their eyes being thus kept from any other objects, they might have their minds the more settledly fixed upon the thing for which they sorrowed, and that their teares might not bee seene by others, but by God onely.

David did not weep and goe thus, as one saith, out of effeminate cowardlinesse, for hee was most valiant, but for his finnes, whereby hee had brought upon himselfe this misery, and therefore hee added unto it and punished himselfe with going barefooted, and great contrition of heart. The People wept together together with him, their heads being covered out of a sympathy towards their King being in misery.

And one told David, saying, The hand of Achitophel is with Absalom, then David prayed, O Lord insatuate the counsell of Achitophel. By Achitophel taking part with Absalom, Davids danger was much increased, because wise counsell, such as Achitophel was, is of more force, then all other warlike preparations without it, according to that saying, parvi sunt arma foris, nisi sit consilium domi. But David in praying to God to insatuate his counsell tooke a right course to have it frustrated as foolish, as it was indeed, when it was not followed, although it were very wise. Hee acknowledged God to have all mens hearts in his hands to turne them, as it pleaseth him, as hee hath indeed, and accordingly directed his prayer, and had this comfort, even when hee was under the rod, that God heard him. For Achitophels being with Absalom, and against David, it is thought to have bene caused through an hatred, which hee bare against David ever since his adultery with Bathsheba his Grandchild, and the murdering of Uriah her husband.

Then David went up to the top of the Mount and prayed there, &c. Hee went to the top to pray, saith Mart. that from thence he might looke towards the Arke, when hee prayed, which hee could not have done in the valley or upon the side, for one place was then consecrated for prayer, before which a man might bee sooner heard, then elsewhere; this Mount was famous since, for Christs praying there, of whom David was a type. What he prayed for is not said, but most probably it was for deliverance from Absaloms conspiracy, for the pardon of his finnes and the confounding of Achitophels counsell, thus Martyr; but the third Psalm sheweth plainly what his prayer now was, and against both Absalom and Achitophel and all his partakers, Psal. 55. And here see the effect of his prayer, Hushai the Archite came unto him, an honourable man, as it seemeth, and one of Davids counsell, by whom God confounded the counsell of Achitophel, as is afterwards shewed. He is thought to bee called the Archite from the City Arach, in the Tribe of Joseph, Josb. 16. 2. so Junius, some from Arachis in the land of Sennaar or Coelosyria, holding him to have bene a Syrian, but a profelyte in religion, wonne unto it by Davids vertue.

Whereas it is said, that Hushai met with David, it may bee doubted how this could bee, if hee came out of the City after him. It is answered, either hee was in some other part before, from which hee hastning to David towards Jerusalem met him here, or if hee came out after him, when David turned himselfe upon the top of the Mount to pray towards the Arke, hee came up against his face, and so met him, and this is the most probable, because v. 34. hee willett him to returne into the City, whereby is implied, that hee came out from thence to follow David. Hushai is called Davids friend, v. 37. and so 1 Chron. 27. 33. and he reposed trust in him, as in a most true friend, sending him backe to Jerusalem, that hee feigning himselfe to bee also for Absalom might through his wisdom confound the counsell of Achitophel. But whether David may be justified in willing him thus to doe, or Hushai in so dissembling is doubted. Martyr, after the question generally determined touching officious lying, bringing many arguments to prove it a sinne, concludeth, that if by this meanes God would have the counsell of Achitophel frustrated, it was warrantable, because God can dispense with his owne lawes, otherwise it was a sinne. Other excuse it, because Hushai in thus keeping Absalom from the most heinous sinne of parricide did him the best service. But there needes no such excuse in this case. It was a thing commonly practiced by David before in case of necessity, when hee fled to Achish, he fained himselfe mad, afterwards comming to Gath againe with his men, hee told the King that hee had gone against the south of Judah to make him the more confident, that hee was quite false from the Jewes, when hee had gone against their enemies, and when hee was ready to goe to war with him against Saul, and to Abimelech, and not only he, but divers others of Gods holy servants have dissembled to save themselves or others, of which see before upon Josb. 2. 3. Whereas David in sending him backe

V. 31.

V. 32.
Peter Martyr.

1 Chr. 27. 33.

Lycanus.
Tostatus.
Junius.
Adrichom.
Sallianus.

Peter Martyr.

V. 33.

Lyra.

back faith, if thou goest with mee, thou shalt bee a burthen unto mee. It was meant in respect of the trouble, that would bee to him for the danger to which he should bee exposed, because David was not at this time more sollicitous for himselfe, then for his friends, so Martyr, but Lyra, because hee was no warriour, so likewise Hugo Card. Hushai therefore returned to Jerusalem, and Abalom came to Ierusalem.

CHAP. XVI.

V. 1, 2, 3.

When David was a little past the top of the mountaine, Ziba Mephibosheths servant met him with two Asses laden with 200. loaves, &c. Hee tooke this opportunitie to shew kindnesse to David for his owne benefit, and not out of love unto him, thinking that David would finally prevaile, and then reward him bountifully. Being asked for his master Mephibosheth, hee most treacherously belied him to David, saying, that now hee hoped the Kingdome would bee restored unto him, whereupon David gave him all that was Mephibosheths. A most rash and unjust sentence to condemne a man unheard, upon an accusation so improbable. For the stirring of the people now was not to advance the house of Saul, but to make Abalom King, and Mephibosheth could not in reason bee thought to have any such imagination in his mind, being a man so impotent and unfit for government, yet *David*s credulitie was such, that hee beleaved it, either because through his present troubles his judgment was confounded, or being overcome with Zibah his kindnesse in this time of his misery, wherefore in this fact hee is thought generally to have erred greatly, in condemning so rashly the sonne of his deare friend Jonathan, contrary to his oath, being also innocent; neither did hee afterwards, when hee knew the truth, reverse the judgement, as hee should have done. Hence wee may see, what the power of gifts is, that all Judges may take heed of them; and againe, that even the best are subject to erre grossly, that wee may not imitate them in all things.

Note.
Pellican.

V. 5.
Adrickom.

Peter Martyr.

Then David went on to Baburim, and Shimei, a man of the house of Saul came out and cursed him, &c. Baburim was a Citie of the Tribe of Benjamin, somewhat more then a mile from Ierusalem, of it mention was also made before, Chap. 3. 16. and hee is said to bee the sonne of Gera, who came of Benjamin, 1 Chron. 8. 3. which doth further confirme, that his Citie was in Benjamin, and in that hee was of *Saul*s house, and a sonne of Jemini, Verf. 11. Whereas Chap. 19. 20. hee speaketh, as if hee were of the house of Ioseph, for hee saith, I came the first of all the house of Ioseph, Martyr answereth, that hereby hee meant that hee came the first of all Israel, as Israel was commonly counted by it selfe, and distinguished from Iudah, and was a severall kingdome under Ishobabeth the sonne of Saul, the head tribe whereof was Ephraim, one of *Ioseph*s Tribes. Hee seeing the King now in great misery, and fleeing before Abalom thought, that his Kingdome was at an end, and therefore was bold thus to vent his malice against him. And hee did not onely curse, but cast stones at him, not that hee could hereby hurt him, but the more to shew his hatred and contempt. And in cursing hee called him a man of blood, because Ishobabeth and Abner had been slaine by those, that were on his side, but hee laid this to his charge unjustly, as is manifest by their histories before going. Hee called him also a man of Belial that is, most wicked, happily because of his adultery, and murdering of Uriah: but although these his sinnes were most hainous, yet his study generally was to live according to Gods holy Lawes, and therefore hee could not rightly for them bee called a man that hath cast off Gods yoake, as Belial signifieth. And hee added, the Lord hath rendred unto thee all the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned, hee taxed him as usurping the kingdome, and now justly punished therefore, when as the Lord had taken it from *Saul*s house, and given it unto him, and for this hee saith, that God had againe taken the kingdome from him, and given it to his sonne Abalom when when as he attained it by usurpation. And all this, hee saith, hee suffered for his owne wickednesse, so that his humiliation would not profit him, wherein hee said true indeed, but not in the sense wherein hee spake it, for David suffered not for any sin against Saul or his house, but against God in the matter of Bathsheba, for which hee now suffered, and came to this misery.

V. 8.

Abishai hearing him speake thus was so moved through love to David, whose kinsman hee was, as Shimei of Saul, that hee would have gone to cut off his head, calling him a dead dog according to the phrase familiarly used by the Hebrewes, when they would debase themselves, or others, 1 Sam. 24. 15. 2 Sam. 3. 8. 2 Sam. 9. 8. But David would not suffer him, saying, What have I to doe with you, yee sonnes of Zeruiah? whereby hee meant both him and his brother Joab, both valiant Captaines, and as it seemeth consenting to goe and take this revenge upon Shimei, although Abishai onely bee named; so Martyr; or else remembering the bloody fact of Joab before against Abner hee spake in the plurall number, seeing Abishai offering to kill one in love to him also, as Pelican, who saith, that hee spake thus, because Joab was the author of that bloodshed of Abner, wherewith hee was charged by Shimei. Hee hath cursed because God hath bidden him to curse David, &c. Hee looked at an higher hand, which brought Shimei thus forth against him, as by his finnes hee had deserved, wherefore hee patiently submitted himselfe to beare it, and would have no revenge for the present taken upon him therefore, but afterwards hee appointed Solomon according to his wisdom to judge him, as hee did, 1 King. 2. 46. But if God bade him curse, hee seemeth not to have sinned, and so hee ought never to have been punished for thus doing. Lyra answereth, here were two things considerable, 1. The spirit and boldnesse of Shimei, thus to come forth alone against the King, being guarded with so many valiant men, who would doubtlesse bee ready to take revenge upon him; and to doe this, the power came from God. 2. The malice of his mind out of which hee so railed upon him, and this came from himselfe, and so hee sinned: even as hee that hath a lame legge, in that hee goeth with it, this comes from God, but his limping is from his owne imperfection. It was then Shimei his malicious heart against David, that put him upon this desperate adventure, but God by his virulent and slanderous tongue justly punished David for his former finnes, as hee well conceived, and now gave him occasion to exercise the vertue of patience: wherefore Shimei for his sinne was worthy of punishment, although hee did not utter these curses without God, who wrought herein justly for David's further humiliation; thus likewise Hugo and Testatur, God did not infuse this corruption of malice into Shimei, but being in him inclined it towards David for his punishment, and Theod. wee must know, that neither the incest of Amnon, nor parricide of Abshalom, nor cursing of Shimei, as hee might have added, were of the working of God, but David not being protected by the divine providence against these evils, his house was like to a ship without a government, and assaulted by vehement warres of mad devills. Hee is said to bid him curse because hee laid open a way unto him, as another saith; God worketh in sinfull actions, see Peter Martyr at large upon this place. And if this were the cause why David would not have Shimei slaine, then Josephus erred, who saith, that hee forbade it lest by his death occasion should bee given of new stirres and troubles: And here is to bee noted, how rightly David was punished by Shimei his railing tongue for his hearkening so readily to the wicked flattery of Ziba; as hee had hereupon spoiled Mephiboshab unjustly of his goods, so hee was now spoiled unjustly of his honours; and as hee had hearkened to a servant rising against his master, so hee was now forced to heare his subject rising up against him; and lastly as hee had heard a slanderous tale of Mephiboshab aspiring to his kingdome, so hee now heareth a slander laid upon him of usurping the kingdome of another: and so God will punish all his servants in their kind, if they sinne in this world, that they may bee saved in the world to come. But to this end wee must beare his judgments patiently, as David did, whose patience was most admirable, hee being

V. 9.

V. 10.

Pelican.

Lyra.

Josephus.

Note.

V. 11.

V. 12.

Peter Martyr.

Arnobius.
Brugensis.V. 14.
Josephus.

V. 15, 16.

Peter Martyr.

herein a very type of Christ, who when hee was reviled, reviled not againe, although it was not secretly, but openly before all his servants, and the calumnies were most intolerable, and that when hee had power immediatly to take revenge upon him; unto his railing words, the throwing of stones and dust also against him being added, and that not once, but Shimei going along over against him and continuing so to doe, to provoke him the more, Verf. 13. And hee used besides this, that God bade him curse, two Arguments more as grounds of patiently bearing it; 1. Because his owne sonne was risen up against him, whose rebellion hee did beare, and therefore much more, the railing and indignities offered to him by this sonne of Iemini, who was nothing allyed unto him, nor of his Tribe, and the kinsman of Saul, in zeale to whose house, being as hee tooke it, unjustly put downe by David, hee offered this indignitie to him out of a naturall affection which hee bare to his owne family. 2. Because happily God would doe good unto him for this his unjust malediction, hee committing the matter wholly to him, and not revenging himselfe: which hee spake not, as if hee thought that his patient bearing of this injury were meritorious faith, Martyr, but because this is the order, whereby God in his mercy is wont to proceed, after affliction to send comfort, and it may bee added truly, that hee rewardeth afflictions patiently suffered with future good, yet not for the merit thereof, but out of his mercy. Some, because the seventh Psalm agreeth so fitly to Davids case at this time, doe thinke, that it was penned upon this occasion, although in the title it is said to have been made upon the words of Cushi, the Benjamite, for Cush signifieth an Ethiopian, who is blacke, and happily Shimei for his black and evill conditions might bee so called: but Iunius applyeth it to some man not before named in Sauls time, but intimated in Davids speech to Saul, 1 Sam. 24. And some apply to this occasion also, Psal. 37. Whereas David may seeme to speake doubtfully, saying, Peradventure God will looke upon this mine affliction, it was not because hee doubted of good from God in the world to come, but of his restitution to his kingdome, which hee knew not whether it would please God to doe or not.

Then David and all the people with him being weary came and rested there, that is, in Babrim, which was before spoken of, although Iosephus saith, that contemning Shimei he went right on to Jordan and rested there, but that was too farre a journey in one day, for it was from Ierusalem to Jordan 15. miles, the time being so much delayed, as it was, in dismissing the Arke, and Hushai, and speaking to Ittai, and Zibab, and touching Shimei, and going barefoot, and worshipping upon mount Oliver by the way, neither doth it agree to the proposition made before unto Zadok, that hee should send unto him into the Wilderness neare by, yet it seemes by that which followeth that his stay was but short in Babrim, for when the messengers came thither from Hushai, hee was gone, and the same night when they had done their message to him hee went over Jordan with all his traine. Hushai Davids friend in the meane season cometh to Abisalom, and offereth his service to him upon this ground, be whom the Lord shall choose and all Israel with him will I be, and I will serve his sonne now, whose father I have served. In all which hee dissembled for the good of David, as the present necessity required. But whether is his argument good or not? and when one King is unjustly put downe and another set up, whether the subjects ought to serve that King, is a question? Martyr answereth, if the state generally accepteth him for King, hee is to bee served, the other King being dead, because a commonwealth cannot stand without a supreme Magistrate, so the Romans obeyed Iulius Caesar, and the whole Empire Phocas, after that hee had murdered Mauritius, but the case of David was not such, for hee was living, neither did all Israel, but the rebellious in Israel follow Abisalom, and therefore the argument were fallacious. Nay, saith Hushai, meaning that hee would not continue his friendship with David any longer, and hee spake thus to deceive Abisalom, as hee had before deceived his father, that hee believing him indeed to approve his proceedings, as hee seemed by his words to doe, might might the more confidently follow his counsell to the benefit of David, and his owne deserved ruine.

Then Absalom said to Achitophel, Give yee counsell, what we shall doe, for though hee onely be named Hushai was meant also, who when Achitophel gave that devilish counsell was enforced to dissemble and to give way unto it, lest if hee had opposed him at the first, hee should have bene suspected touching his fidelity to Absalom, and so have bene prevented of doing good in some other counsell of greater consequence.

Achitophel counselled him to goe in to his fathers concubines openly, that all Israel hearing it, their hands might be strengthened with him, that is, saith Theodore, and others after him, by this conceiving, that the difference between the father and the sonne would thus be made irreconciliable, whereas before they might feare a future reconciliation, and so be alwayes fluctuating and wavering in their mindes about their following of Absalom, betwixt whom and his father, if a reconciliation should happen to be made, they should be in danger many of them, of paying deare for this their rebelling with him. This counsell was most wicked, yet hereby was that fulfilled, which before was threatened, as a punishment to come upon David for his sinnes. 2 Sam: 12. 11.

Now the counsell of Achitophel was like the oracle of God, this is added, to shew, in what great danger David was, seeing he had so politicke a man against him, and that the working of God for David, as he prayed, might be the more remarkeable, when Achitophels counsell, which was alwayes wont to be followed in *David*s time, and in Absaloms, as most certaine, should be forsaken, and another mans counsell bee preferred. But how could his counsell bee like Gods oracle, for so much as he was a man, and so might erre, and sometime his counsell was most wicked, as at this time? Martyr answereth, that it is spoken hyperbolically, or hereby no equality is meant, but some similitude for certainty, or it is shewed, how naturall men esteemed of his counsell in all things. But it is said to have bene so accounted in *David*s time, and therefore even by David, who was no naturall man, therefore it is meant only for certainty to bring any thing to effect, he had an insight into the way beyond all others, as if he had a divine spirit within him.

CHAP. XVII.

After his first devillish counsell, Achitophel giveth voluntarily another most dangerous to David, I will, saith he, take 12000 men and pursue David this night, now that he and his company are weary, &c. which Absalom and all the elders of Israel well approved. But forsomuch as God had said to David, thou shalt not dye, but otherwise limited his punishments, it was vaine, seeing there is no counsell against God. Yet this was the way according to humane reason to worke his destruction, seeing by celerity the victory is often obtained, and delaying loseth it, as Cesar writeth of Pompey. And Achitophel seemeth also to have bene valiant, in that hee offered to goe against David to effect what hee had counselled, which other counsellors seldome doe.

This counsell of Achitophel, although it were approved by all Absaloms friends, yet he did not follow it, or rest in it, but would heare the counsell of Hushai also, then he boldly against all others spake against it, saying, that it was not good at this time. Wherein his fidelity towards David, and courage did wonderfully appeare, that hee durst for the good of David oppose so great a counsellour and that after the hearing of his counsell approved by Absalom and all. For hee might have feared, that this would have bene taken as a signe of an hollow heart towards Absalom, to the endangering of his life, y<sup>e</sup> hee, all feare being laid aside, adventured himselfe. But hee used great art, 1. By implicitly approving the wisdom of Achitophel, in that he said onely, that his counsell was not good at this time, hereby intimating, that it was good

V. 20.

V. 21.

Theodore.
Lyra.
Pellican.

V. 23.

Peter Martyr.

V. 1, 2.

V. 5.

V. 8.

at all other times, and excellent, but now onely he failed, as the wisest may sometime doe, according to that, aliquando etiam ipse dormiat Homerus. 2. By shewing divers probable reasons against it, as 1. That David and his men were most valiant and now so provoked, that they would be like a Beare robbed of her whelpes most fierce, and so not likely to be overcome by such an army, as Achitophel spake of, he having so many worthies with him, and one of them able to deale with one, two or three hundreth enemies, cb: 23. 18. 2. That David being a man exercised in warre from his youth, was not without warlike policy for his owne better safegard, happily lying not with the army, but apart in some secret place in the night, where they could not finde him, because Achitophel had propounded the comming upon David in the night and slaying of him onely. 3. That through the valour of David and his men, if it were otherwise, Absaloms men were likely at the first many of them to be slaine, which if it happened, all Israel would be dismayed, because the report happily would presently goe, that Absaloms army was overthrowne, and so for feare they would be in danger of turning againe and reconciling themselves to David.

V. 11.

The third way, whereby Cushai shewed his art, was by perswading Absalom to gather all Israel together, and so to goe against David in his owne person, that the victory being obtained it might not be ascribed to a Deputy, but to himselfe, of which glory hee was ambitious enough. And so, saith he, we will come upon him with a multitude as the dew in the morning, overwhelming his little company so, that none shall escape; and hee spake in the first person, as if hee would make one, that should lead forth such an army, that hee might bee thought no lesse to bee against David, then Achitophel, because hee had offered himselfe, if his counsell had bene followed, to goe with that army. And he addeth against that which might bee objected, whilst this great army is in gathering, it may bee, that David will get into some City of strength, out of which hee cannot bee soone expelled againe, if hee bee gotten into any City, all Israel shall bring ropes and pull it downe and draw it into the river, till that a stone thereof is not left, but this is hyperbolically spoken. The word רמל rendred ropes, as Martyr noteth, signifieth also a troope, according to Lyra, a society, and if it be so taken, the meaning is, that they should all joine together as one to demolish that City: but the former reading doth better set forth the facility of doing this, which was the thing that he aimed at. This counsell being heard was preferred before Achitophels, but it is said, that it came of the Lord to overthrow the good counsell of Achitophel, where by good understand profitable to attaine to that end, which Absalom aimed at, for otherwise it was not good, but evill and wicked, and therefore the Vulgar Latin for bonum hath utile. But how was Hushai his counsell beneficiall to David? Ans. Because whilst Absalom delayed to gather so great an army to come against him, hee had time to passe over Jordan and to prepare the greater forces to fight against him, and to take a place of greatest advantage to fight in, as is afterwards shewed that he did.

V. 13.

Peter Martyr.
Lyra.

V. 14.

V. 15.

Then Hushai certified Zadok and Abiathar of all these proceedings in counsell, that by their care David might be certified, and not stay neare to Jerusalem, lest if Achitophels counsell should be followed, there might be danger to him of perishing by the sword.

V. 17.

Peter Martyr.

Pellican.

Schol. Histor.
Tostatus.
Lyra.

The Priests then by a maid send to Jonathan and Ahimaaz their sons, who were placed for the purpose neare to Enrogel, or the well in Rogel, a well somewhat out of the way, saith Martyr, and therefore a fit place to lurke in, it was the boundary of the Tribe of Judah, nigh to Jerusalem, Iosb: 15. 7. This Well Pellican will have to be the same, wherein they hid themselves, when the woman spread a cloth over it and layed ground corne thereon, v: 18. But this is both contrary to the course of the history, and to all others, who say, that being gone from this Well, they came to that in Baburim. They could not come into Jerusalem to take their intelligence immediately, because they were known to be Absaloms professed enemies, and to take part with David. This maid most probably went out to this

Well

Well, as if thee had gone to fetch water, or to wash some cloathes there, and so went unsuspected, but a boy saw them, and came and told it to Abfalom, who by the same expositours is held to have beene her sonne, and thought by this meanes to come into great favour with Abfalom: but the scripture leaveth it uncertaine who he was. They then perceiving, that they were sought for, for Abfalom sent some immediately to apprehend them, went to a Well in a mans yeard in Baburim, and were hidden there by the care of a woman. How they perceived the danger comming is not said, but happily they had some inkling given them hereof, by some friend that perceived it. Sallianus saith, that Abfaloms messengers pursuing them on horsback: might be heard by them afar off, who feared the worst upon any sound made, and therefore hid themselves, but how they being footmen could do this so suddenly, and the Well be covered, and that device used by the woman to lay on a covering and ground come upon it, I cannot see. Abfaloms messengers comming thither, happily upon notice given, that they went into that mans yard, the woman, as another Rabab, to save them from danger, said, that they were gone in haste, having drunke a little water, and so they ceased to pursue them, so the Vulg: Lat: but the Hebrew they are gone over the river of water, that is, over Jordan: A wonderfull providence of God over David and his friends thus to move the hearts of some to worke for their good, and to worke such remissness in these pursuers, that they sought no further after them; so well doth hee provide even beyond their expectation, for the good and safety of those that goe in a right way.

Then these two men hastened to David, and hee with his company after this intelligence had with all speed went over Jordan the same night, which could not but bee a wonderfull great trouble unto him, after his weary journey in the day to have no time to refresh him in the night, but yet hee had one comfort, not one of his company forsooke him in this danger, or miscarryed in passing over the river in the night, for it is said, that there was not one, but was come over by the appearing of the next morning unto the other side.

Then Achitophel seeing that his counsell was not followed, hanged himselfe, viz: because he foresaw certaine destruction to come upon Abfalom, and that the victory would fall to David, which if it did, he was in danger of being put to a shamefull death: A just reward for so wicked a man, who being indued with such excellent wisdom employed it so ill, whereas hee should rather have devised how to make Abfalom humble, and reconcile himselfe againe to his father, so Lyra, and others. And Josephus saith, that hee spake to this effect to those of his house, that David would reobtaine the kingdome, and hee should bee hanged, wherefore it was better for him to prevent it, and manfully to dye with his owne hands. It is likely also, that discontent wrought with him, forsomuch as his counsell, which had hitherto beene held as an oracle, was now so sleighted. But hee was punished in his kinde; hee that would have lifted up his hands against his Lord David, lifteth up his hand against himselfe, and is by a just judgement given over to a sinne so much greater then common murder, by how much his owne life was nearer unto him then another mans. And in this, as in other things, hee is rightly held by some to have beene a type of Judas, who also gave counsell against his master Christ, and so came to the like shamefull end.

Then David came to Mahanaim, that is, saith one, a City in the land of Gilead, of the Tribe of Gad, 44 miles from Jersalem, this place had this name given it from Jacob, Gen: 31. because here Tents of Angels were scene about him to guard him when hee was in danger by Esaú his comming against him. This saith Josephus, was a most faire and well fenced City, to this Isboseth betooke himselfe also, when hee tooke the kingdome upon him, ch: 2. 8. David had not long rested here, but hee was pursued by Abfalom, who brought his army over Jordan after him. And hee made Amasa Captaine of his army, who was the sonne of Ithra by Abigail the daughter of Naas, the sister of Zerviah, *Job*s mother, so that hee and Job were sisters children, and both Nephewes

V. 18.

Sallianus.

Note.

V. 21.

V. 23.

Lyra.Josephus.

V. 24.

H. Bunting Patris travailes.Josephus.

V. 25.

Junius.

Hieron. de tradit. Hebr.
R. Kimbi.

V. 27.

2 Sam. 17.

2 Sam 9. 4.

Note.

to David, for so much as Naas was otherwise called Ishai, the father of David, wherefore many greeke Copies, for Naas have Jesse, and both Josephus and Jerom affirme him to be the same, which also is confirmed, because Zeruiab her sister was Ishai his daughter. But Amasaes father is called an Israelite, and 1 Chro. 2. 17. an Ishmaelite, this by Iunius is reconciled thus, he was an Ishmaelite by birth, but an Israelite by profession, because he embraced the true Religion. The vul. Lat. hath it a Jezraelite, as if hee had been borne in Jezreel, and an Ishmaelite, saith Jerom, hee is called, because hee was such in condition in his sonne Amasa, who fought against David, as the Ishmaelites against the people of God; R. Kimbi saith, that hee lived among the Ishmaelites, and therefore was so called, but an Israelite, because he was so borne; some Hebrews, that the title of an Israelite is added to him, because that although hee rebelled against David, yet this his fault was expiated by his death, when Joab slew him, after his returning to David, I subscribe to that of Kimbi as most probable.

And when David was come to Mahanaim, Sobi, the sonne of Nabash of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Barzillai the Gileadite, and Machir of Lodebar brought beds and other provision, &c. This Sobi is thought to have beene constituted King of the Ammonites in the roome of his brother Hanun, by David, after that hee had subdued him. His father had beene kind to David whilst he lived, in the time of his exile by Saul, and now his sonne sheweth him kinnesse likewise in his great distresse. R. Kimbi thinketh, that this Sobi was an Israelite of the foresaid Rabbah. R. Solomon, that hee was Hanun himselfe, whom David subdued, called also Sobi, who turned to the true Religion, and dwelt now in Israel. But the first is best and followed by Jerom, and most generally. Machir of Lodebar was hee, with whom Mephibosheth had been brought up, and Barzillai was the chiefe man of his Citie. These men by a singular providence are stirred up to furnish David and his men with all necessaries after their weary travaile, which could not but bee a great comfort unto him. But by the things bought unto him wee may see in what great want hee was of all things, not onely food, but household stufte and beds; Thus soone may even a great and glorious King bee brought to extreame povertie; and to bee glad of reliefe by the almes and charitie of loving friends, such as these shewed themselves indeed to bee, and herein was David a type of Christ, who being Lord of all, had not whereupon to rest his head.

CHAP. XVIII.

V. 1.

Josephus.
scholast. hist.

Tostatus.

David hearing of Abisalems comming towards him with a great Army stayeth not in Mahanaim to expect his approach thither, but mustered his men, and placing Captaines over them sent them forth to encounter with Abisalem. For it agreed not with his courage and the courage of the men that were with him, to shut up themselves in a Citie and to bee besieged by the insolent enemy, and hereby they might have been much disheartened. Wherefore dividing his Army into three parts, hee set Abisai over one, Joab over another, and Iui the Gittiu over the third. And although the number of men that were now for David bee not here set downe, yet because Verf. 4. it is said, that they went forth by thousands and by hundreths, it appeareth, that hee was greatly increased in his number, since his comming to Mahanaim, the men of those two Tribes and an halfe beyond the river, flocking to him from all parts, as being more faithfull to their King then the Tribes which dwelt neare about him. Josephus saith, they were 4000. Comestor 7000. but happily they were many more, according to others, for where the Scripture is silent, nothing can certainly bee determined. It seemeth, that they were a sufficient Army, because David spake to the Captaines as nothing doubtfull of the victory, to entreat Abisalom kindly for his sake. Yea Tostatus saith, that hee knew he should have the victory, because Achitophels counsell was brought to nought already, as hee had prayed, and therefore hee gathered certainly, that Gods far your your was now againe towards him, and that hee had accepted of his humiliation and patience towards railing Shimei, and would doe him good therefore.

To this warre David offered also to goe himsele in person, although hee was now aged, because hee would not seeme to expose his men to danger, and feare comming into it himsele, as cowardly and voluptuous Emperours have done, as Nero, Commodus and Galienus, and David himsele formerly. But his men would not suffer him to goe. 1. Because the enemies would ayme altogether at his destruction, who if hee should perish, their cause must fall, and they all should bee undone, whereas if many of them were destroyed, the King being safe, there might yet bee hope. Therefore they adde, 2. that hee abiding in the Citie might bee a defence unto them, that is, both because if they should flee at this time, they might returne unto him, and the Army being repaired set upon the enemy againe with better successe afterwards, and also because when the enemies should see, that hee was not amongst them, they would have no heart to fight so earnestly against them, and they would still feare that David would bee ready to come forth with a fresh Army upon them, when they should bee weary with fighting, for they would verily thinke, that the King was not left behind alone, but with a strong guard of men about him. And Theodore, and after him Martyr addeth, that they feared, if David were in the battell hee would bee too favourable towards his sonne Absalom to their great disadvantage.

David meekely submitteth himsele to the will of his men, but as they went forth hee stood in the gate, and willed them to intreat Absalom kindly, that is, as the vulg. Latine hath it, to save him alive, lest, as Lyra saith, if hee should die in battell against his father, hee should die in a mortall sinne unrepented of, and so bee damned everlastingly, and as Pellican, because David considered his sonne stirred up by the judgement of God against him for his sinnes, wherefore hee was the rather sollicitous for the good of his soule, to have him reserved to bee judicially proceeded against, that thus, time being given him, hee might bee brought to repentance. Thus also Ben. Gerson, but Martyr, that hee was carried with a naturall affection towards him, which wrought so, that he was unwilling to have him slaine, although his attempts against him were intolerable. It was out of his great love and lenitie even towards his enemies, as Shimei, Abner and Saul, which generally is commendable in private persons, but if hee would have him spared, and not put him to death at all, it was a sinne in him being King and Judge. Josephus layeth a greater asperision upon David, in that hee saith, that hee threatened, if they slew Absalom, to lay violent hands upon himself: wherein he did doubtlesse greatly wrong him, because if it had beene so, it should not have beene passed over in silence in the holy Scripture, and it is improbable, that so holy a King should have so wicked a thought. For as Augustine saith, if I should kill my selfe, I should not kill one innocent, because this very purpose maketh mee guilty in mind, before that I kill my body.

Then the battell was made in the wood of Ephraim, and Israel was smitten by David's men unto 20000. &c. Both the Armies being beyond Jordan, and the Tribe of Ephraim situated in the land of Canaan, it may bee doubted, how any wood here could bee called the wood of Ephraim. Lyra saith, it was so called, because it was over against the Tribe of Ephraim, the River onely running betweene, but in the topography of Adrichomius it is placed right over against Issachar. Vatablus, that the Ephraimites did bring over their Cattell thither to pasture. Cajetan taketh the word Ephraim appellatively for increase. Tostatus, that it was called the wood of Ephraim, because Oreb and Zeeb were slaine there by Gideon, the glory of which victory hee ascribed to the Ephraimites.

V. 2.

V. 3.

Theodore.
Peter Martyr.

V. 5.

Lyra.

Pellican.

Peter Martyr.

Josephus.

Augusti. lib. 3. de Civ. Christi. c. 11. idem, si pinceretur cum occidi prohibuerit, ut edomito servaretur paritendi locus. Et quia non potuit, non orbitatem ejus interitu doluit, sed quia noverat in quas penas tam impie adultera, et parricidialis anima raperetur.

Aug. lib. 1. contr. Gaudens. c. 13. Cum me occido non innocentem occido, quia ipsa voluntate, qua me occidere statuo reus effector animo priusquam corpus occidero.

Vatablus.
Cajetan.Vatablus.
Cajetan.
Tostatus.

mites

Pellican.
Peter Martyr.
Judg. 11.
Lunim.

mites to pacifie them. Pellican agreeth with Vatablus and Lyra, saying, that it was indeed in the Tribe of Gad. Peter Martyr, that it had the name from Ephraim, because there they fighting against Iephtab were slaine unto 40000. so likewise Junius, who placeth it in Manasseb, and this is more probable, then that of Iosaphat, or any other, unlesse Adrichomius erred, and it was an wood over against Ephraim.

V. 8.

And the wood deuoured more that day then the Sword, that is, say Junius and Martyr, by their falling into pits and ditches which were there, and by running against the trees, so likewise Lyra, who saith, that there were many great pits, the Chald. by wild beaſts, which kept in that wood; but this is not so probable, because beaſts, although most fierce, would not set upon men armed in troopes as they were. It is to bee held then, that they fleeing away in haſt, fell some into pits, being thus bruised and maimed, and not able to get out againe, and some into thickets of trees and bushes, whereby they were torne, and held so fast, as that they strove in vaine, till their strength failed them to goe away, as Absalom was hanged in a tree, and could not get loose againe, thus alio Pellican. And that there were great pits there appeareth, because Absalom was cast into a pit and a great heape of stones brought and laid upon him, Verſ. 17. Thus all things wrought against them, that rebelled against their King to destroy them, that all other subjects hearing might feare to doe the like.

Chald. Paraph.

Pellican.

Note.

V. 9.

Lyra.

And Absalom met the servants of David, riding upon a Mule, and his head was caught in the thick boughs of a great Oake, &c. that is, being in the wood where hee knew not when hee went towards his enemies, and when hee fled from them, when hee thought that hee had fled from them, hee unawares came upon them, and here seeking to escape them through an unbeaten way, whilst hee haſtned, hee was caught in this Oake by the haire of his head, which superabounded, as was before noted, and he was not a little proud of it, and therefore it was now justly made the meanes of his destruction, that at once hee might pay for his pride, murder of his brother, and treason against his father, as Pellican in part, and in part Lyra, who saith, that hee might hasten his flight the more, hee had put off his head peece, and so was caught by his haire. Martyr prosecuting this further saith, that hee had taken great pride in his haire, now hee was hanged by the haire of the head, that whereby a man sinneth, by it hee shall bee punished; hee was cursed for his wickednesse, and therefore hee had his reward accordingly by being hanged upon a tree, as hee sought to destroy the Lords anointed, upon whose head was the holy oyle, so his head now was apprehended; and lastly as hee ambitiously sought to bee on high, hee was lifted up betweene heaven and earth. Josephus also saith, that hee was hanged by the haire of his head, but Theodoret and Chrysost. speake of his hanging in the Oake, as if his head were caught betweene the boughs closing so about his neck, as that hee could not get out, neither doth the Scripture make any mention of his haire in this place. A marvailous thing, saith Chrysost. that hee did neither hold his Mule from going under this tree, and when hee was intangled, that hee was so stupified, as that hee took his hands from thence, to helpe his head out, thus suffering the beaſt in the meane season to goe from under him. Thus God insatiate them that are hatefull to him for their sinnes, that they may come to their deserved destruction. A wicked rebell, whom his father through his indulgence would have spared, although hee had so greatly wronged him, and was the author of sinne and death to so many of his subjects, yet the vengeance of God would not suffer him to live. Then Joab was certified of it by a young man, whom hee blamed for not killing him, and hee went himself and thrust him through the heart with three darts, and ten men that bare his armour compassed him about and slew him. The man that told Joab, feared to kill Absalom because of the charge given by the King to the contrary, but Joab seeing that Absalom was incorrigible, having twice before reconciled him to his father, had rather incur the Kings displeasure, then to suffer such a pest of the Commonwealth to live any longer. For there needed no iudiciall proceeding against him, hee was in armes against

Pellican

Peter Martyr.

Note.

Theodoret.
Chrysost.

Note.

V. 10, 11,
12, 13,
14, 15.

against the King, his crime was manifest before all Israel, many thousands were by him brought to destruction, and God had now apprehended him, and offered him to bee slaine. Wherefore he as a true lover of the Commonwealth hastned to doe execution upon him to prevent further bloodshed in Israel, and thrust him into the brest with three darts because hee had deceived him, the King and the Sanedrim, the 200. Elders of Jerusalem that went with him to Hebron, and then ten servants beat him, untill all the life which remained in him quite departed, because hee had defiled the ten Concubines of David, thus Pellican. But Martyr and others censure Joab as sinning grievously in this doing, because hee was a subject, and so was bound to obey his King, and not to take upon him a Judge to doe this execution. Neither will it excuse him, that hee feared there would bee more civill warres if hee were spared: for neither mult evill bee done that good may come of it, and by taking him captive and bringing him to his father, the further feared warre might have beene prevented. Moreover, hee knew not what the Kings end was to have him spared, happily, as hath been said, that his judgement being respited, hee might bee brought to repentance. T. Manlius Torquatus having commanded his sonne not to fight, but onely to goe forth, to espy, because hee did not onely so, but fought, contrary to his command, cut off his head. And David dying took order, that execution should be done by Salomon upon Joab for this, as Tostatus thinketh, although it bee not mentioned, it being implied in these words, thou knowest what Joab, sonne of Zeruiah did to mee. Absalom being thus slaine, Joab founded a retreat, that no more blood might bee shed, and Absalom's body was cast into a great pit there, and covered with a great heape of stones, and thus it is noted in Tradit. Hebr. and by Lyra to have been done according to the Law, Deut. 2. 18. Joab would have him thus cast out and overwhelmed with stones, as unworthy of a buriall, and that his father might not bee grieved with the sight of his dead body.

But Absalom had set him up a pillar in his life time in the Kings dale, &c. The vulg. Latine, for (pillar) hath title, and it was called Absalom's hand. Whereupon the Hebrews feigne that hee being taken downe from the Oake craved respite before hee died, that hee might make him a title for a remembrance, because hee had no sonne worthy to reigne after him, and this being granted, hee made the figure of his hand in this title. But to leave this, as a foolish fiction and contrary to the sacred history, seeing hee was pierced to the heart, whilst hee hung in the Oake, the Hebrew word indeed whereby that is called which Absalom set up is מַעֲבָה a title or statua, a pillar with an Image upon it, hee also gave it the name of יָד אֲבִיסָלוֹם the hand of Absalom properly, and metaphorically the place of Absalom, or as Martyr, the worke of Absalom; who also saith, that Josephus affirmeth it to have been a Pillar, others, a Pyramis of great cost, such as the Egyptian Kings built to continue their remembrance. This Absalom had built in his life time, not now at his death, but here mention is made of it, that wee might note, how God crossed him in his pride, when hee out of the haughtinesse of his mind thought happily within this building to bee buried, and to leave a glorious remembrance behind him, he was through the just judgement of God laid in a base desolate place, as a dead beast cast out of the way, and another monument of a most rebellious sonne, a great heape of stones laid upon him, that who so should afterwards come by that way and see it, might have him in detestation, and all proud persons and disobedient persons, learne by his example, to what confusion they are tending, thus also Pellican. Whereas Absalom is said here to have had no sonne, but Chap. 14. 27. hee had three sonnes, this is there resolved, they all died, after his returne from Geshur. God would not have him to live in his children, who had so wicked an heart towards his father. The Kings dale, where Absalom had set up his Pillar, was according to Josephus, two furlongs from Jerusalem, a place where the Kings used to recreate themselves, and to see pastimes, therefore publique, and such, as wherein Absalom thought that his monument should bee continually in view.

Pellican.Peter Martyr.Tostatus.1 King. 25.V. 16.V. 17.V. 18.Peter Martyr.Pellican.
Note.

Then

V. 19.
20, 21,

Tostatus.

Iunius.

August. l. 3. de Dell. Christ.

Peter Martyr.
V. 33.

2 Sam. 24.

Then Abimaaz, the sonne of Zadok desired of Joab, that hee might run and tell the King of the victory obtained, but he would not suffer him at the first, because the Kings sonne was dead, but sent Cusbi, &c. Joab would not have Abimaaz, a good man, and one whom hee greatly loved, the messenger of such newes, as might bee displeasing to the King, but when hee had any thing onely pleasing to tell, hee said, that hee should carry the newes: yet hee urged him to let him run, because hee thought it could not but bee welcome newes to David to heare of the debellation of his enemies, and the victory by his men obtained: but Joab, who was better acquainted with the Kings disposition, and remembering the charge given to save Abisalom, knew, that it would be a great grief unto him to heare of his death. He therefore sent Cusbi, who was not Cusbi the Archite, spoken of Chap. 15. although Tostatus thinketh so, for he was with Abisalom, and if not, as hee thinketh, but fled from him in the way to *David*s part, yet hee was too great a man to bee employed in this service. This Cusbi was then another man of an inferiour ranke, but one of *David*s servants, a Blackamore as Junius rendreth it, yet in Religion a Profelyte, whose acceptance before the King Joab did not so much regard. But hee glad of the imployment posteth away, nothing doubtfull but that hee should have thanks from the King for so good tidings. Then Abimaaz was instant with Joab againe, and ran, and did outrun Cusbi, but in his newes hee dissembled *Abisalom*s death, lest the King should bee offended, leaving that to bee told by Cusbi. Then hee cometh and telleth it, but not plainely, onely hee spake so, as that David easily understood that hee was dead, whereupon hee was so stricken with griefe, that hee went apart and mourned, never asking how hee came to his end, whether being slaine amongst others or willingly by any man, or as Saul desperately killing himselfe. If it shall seeme strange that hee should bee thus greatly grieved, when hee heard that Abisalom was dead, but hearing before of the death of the child begotten in adultery, hee ceased mourning. August. answereth, it was because hee knew that Abisalom perished eternally both in soule and body, but when the Infant died there was no suspicion of eternall damnation. And for this cause hee saith in another place, Abisalom afflicted David more dying, then living and rising against him, because then there was hope of repentance and remission, but now all hope was past. And it grieved him the more, saith Martyr, because hee considered his owne sinnes as the cause of all this misery. In lamenting *Abisalom*s death, hee named him divers times, the Hebrewes note eight times, by seven of them bringing him out of the prison of hell, and by the eighth rayling him up to paradise, but this is one of their purd fables. In lamenting hee wished that hee had dyed for him, but whether this bee justifiable or not, is a question; it may bee said, that hee being in the state of grace beleaved, that God would receive him dying into his heavenly kingdome, and if Abisalom had lived still, hee might have repented and beene received to mercy also, wherefore this wish of his was pious, as that of Paul, to bee Anathema for his kinsmen, the Jewes, and by the like piety hee was afterwards moved, when hee desired rather, that Gods hand might bee against him then against the people perishing by the Plague. But it is objected, that if pietie moved him, it would have moved him also to lament the 20000. people, that perished with Abisalom in the same rebellion. Sol. His sonne was dearest to him, and therefore his death affected him most, and although no mention bee made of the rest; yet it is not unlikely, but that hee grieved for them also. Ob. When Nabal died in sinne, and it was told to David, hee grieved not for the losse of his soule, but rejoyced and gave God thanks for avenging him of his enemy. Sol. Hee was a stranger to him, and therefore there was not the like reason, neither did hee so certainly perish everlastingly. Ob. If David had had his wish and Abisalom had lived and hee had been slaine, the case of the Commonwealth had been miserable, and of all *David*s faithfullest friends and servants, therefore it was an ill wish. Sol. The perishing of one soule is more then the misery of a Commonwealth, and David in wishing that Abisalom had lived and hee had died, meant, to repentance and amendment. Thus Peter Martyr.

Martyr, who yet doth not excuse him finally from all blame, because his sorrow was excessive and intemperate now to the indangering of all his people, who it might be feared, would hereupon have forsaken him and set up a new Captaine over them. But if the eternall perdition of Absalom was the thing, that so much affected David, I see not, but that hee may well be justified, because in the case of Gods glory disparaged, or mens soules indangered, true piety and zeale knoweth no measure in grieving, and hath no eyes to looke at any thing else for that time.

Mytically by Absalom riding upon a Mule, wee may understand the Pharisees intiting upon the carnall sense of the law, persecuting and stirring up the people against their owne Messiah, but they lost both their kingdome and lives, being ignominiously exposed and covered with an heape of stones by hardnesse of heart. David mourning so much for Absalom figured out Christ weeping for Jerusalem, foreseeing their miseries to come.

Morally David setteth forth a vertuous man fighting against sinne, his army being divided into three parts, the first consisting of interiour meditations, the second, of acts of charity, both corporall and spirituall, the third of modesty in gestures and speeches, the King of vices is pride, as Absalom so exceedingly proud, of these enemies against whom David fought. The Mule, upon which Absalom did ride, is worldly glory, which passeth away, as the Mule, and pride is left hanging in Hell, as Absalom in an Oake, where he is pierced with three arrowes or darts, the fire, the worme, and the losse of the sight of God for ever, as Absalom was pierced with three darts by Joab.

The Mystery.

The Morall.
Lyra.

CHAP. XIX.

THE mourning of David for his sonne was told to Joab, as he returned joyfully with his army, and then all their joy was turned into mourning, happily Joab was certified hereof by the messengers, Abimaz and Cushi, and so the newes going amongst the Souldiers, they all were as men confounded and afraid to come into the City where the King was, as supposing him to bee angry with them, although not for slaying Absalom, yet for casting stones so contemptuously upon him; wherefore they came into the City not as men that had gotten the victory with the voice of joy and triumph, but as men overcome, by stealth and in great silence. And indeed if there had beene no cause in the Kings sorrow and offence, yet they should have had little cause to triumph for this victory, wherein so many of their brethren perished: for even amongst the Romans they never triumphed for any victory obtained in a civill warre. The Vulgar Latin hath it, the people declined that day to enter the City, even as a people fleeing before their enemies, Hebr. stole themselves away in entring, and therefore it seemeth best rendred by the Vulgar Latin, they came not into the City by stealth, but shunned thus to doe, withdrawing themselves through griefe and discontent to other places. And this is further confirmed by Joabs speech to David, v: 7. Goe out and speake comfortably to thy servants, for if thou dost not, there will not one tarry with thee this night. Whereby it is intimated, that they came not in, but were going away: and also by that which followeth, v: 8. when he went out and fate in the gate, they came before him, that is, in entring into the City. Thus also Tostat. rendring the words thus, the people stole away, that they might not enter the City. They would not enter to mourn, when they rather expected joy in the King, they refrained from entering that day, because they thought the King would be changed by the next morning and then they would come in.

Then Joab went in to the King and very boldly upbraided him, for this his behaviour, whereby hee shewed so great discontent for Absaloms death, with the whole Army, when as they by adventuring their lives for him, had deserved better, charging him that one Absalom was more to him then all his faithfull servants, and requiring him to come out and spake comfortably to them, &c.

Josephus

V. 1.

V. 3.

V. 5.

Josephus

Josephus addeth, that hee asked him if hee were not ashamed to bee thus affected with sorrow for a sonne, that had bene of so hostile a minde against him, and bade him come forth and speake kindly to the people, and give them thanks, threatening that if hee did not, he would deliver the army and kingdome to another. But this is more then in the holy Scripture. Hee dealt thus boldly, First, being puffed up with the present victory. Secondly, because of that estimation that hee was in amongst the people. Thirdly, because of his neare alliance to David. Fourthly, because it was for Davids good that hee spake, and hee knew, that hee had bene alwayes faithfull to him, and by his great experience knew what was best to bee done. Sixthly, above all, because hee had slaine Absalom and so was the cause of all this trouble, wherefore hee would have the King come forth and by a cheerfull countenance shew, that hee accepted well of all that was done, because that by doing contrarywise hee disparaged him before the people, seeing they all knew, that it was Joabs act, which dejected the King with so much sorrow. Thus the meek King suffered himselfe to bee reproved and commanded by his subject, and hereupon made a shew in his face to the People of being well pleased, when the griefe of his heart was rather augmented then lenified by this ill usage. But now it was no time to castigate the petulancy of Joab, hee deferred that therefore, and referred it to his sonne Solomon, that no Subject might be animated by Joabs example to such audacity towards his Sovereigne in what extremitie soever.

Note.

V. 9, 10.

V. 11.

The people of Israel, who had bene for Absalom, seeing that hee was now dead, consult about bringing backe David to Jerusalem againe, recounting his former benefites towards them. They were now ashamed of following Absalom, and of their infidelity towards David so well deserving, and are angry with themselves that they made no more halte to go and submit themselves unto him againe. Thus all the other Tribes of Israel, and this being told unto David he sent to Zadok and Abiathar to speake to Judah, as v. 11. for more expression of which, the Vulgar Latin addeth to the Text, and the counsell of all Israel came to the King, and whereas v. 11. it is said, seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the King even to his house, the Vulgar Latin, but the speech of all Israel came to the King to bring him backe to his house, because the King had said, Thus ye shall speak to the people, &c. respecting more the plaine making of the sense, then the rendering of the words verbatim. For so it is to be understood, when David heard of the consultation of the men of Israel hee sent to Zadok to speake to Judah, and these words, yee are my brethren, my bones and my flesh, v. 12. are the words which David willed Zadok to use unto them. Moreover, because Amasa, Davids sisters son, was of greatest power amongst them, hee willett him and Abiathar to deale with him in particular, who might well feare, that the King was irreconcilably offended with him, as being the chiefe against him. And hee sought to draw him, 1. By the same argument which he used to the men of Judah, thou art of my flesh, &c. for both they and he were neare unto him in the flesh. 2. By swearing to make him Captaine in Joabs stead. And in thus seeking to his Subjects, who should rather have sought unto him, David was an example of wonderfull clemency, in that hee prosecuted not his victory against such rebellious subjects to the destruction of many more of them, but as unwilling to have more blood shed, reconciled himselfe gently unto them. And herein hee was a true type of Christ, who seeketh to his rebellious Subjects in all places for reconciliation by his ministers, 2 Cor: 5. 20. But whether was it just in David to offer this dignity to Amasa and to take it from Joab, seeing Joab had alwayes bene faithfull to him, but Amasa rebellious? And Joab by adventuring himselfe against the Jebusites, 1 Chr: 11. 6. obtained this honour? Hee was indeed over bold in speaking to David, and rash to doe that, which hee forbade, in slaying Absalom, but it was for Davids owne good. Some say, that David would have made Amasa Captaine onely under Joab, as Lyra, and some, Joab being now old, that hee might rest from the toyle of warres in favour to him. But the sequel sheweth the contrary, and it is improbable that Amasa would bee drawne by the offer of an inferiour place being as neare to David

in in blood as Joab. It is therefore rather to be held, that David had in his minde adjudged Joab to death for transgressing so manifestly against his command and charge, and after this comming in so malapertly unto him and vexing him more, when hee was mourning, and for his murdering of Abner long before, and being determined to cut him off, hee wisely sought to draw Amasa unto him, who was of great power withall Israel, and offered to make him his chiefe Captaine, which being once effected, hee might the more easily doe execution upon Joab, which otherwise hee could not doe safely for the great power, that Joab was of, having all the army at his command. For be it that Joab merited and so by promise came to that dignity of Generall, yet transgressing so greatly, the King might justly deprive him of this dignity againe, and his life also. For the Magistrate beareth not the sword in vaine, and every soule is subject to the higher powers to be punished for doing evill. If there were any error then in David in this matter, it was in that he offered this dignity to a wicked man and a rebell, whereas hee should rather have put a godly man into Joabs place. And through the just judgement of God Amasa was prevented, being slaine by Joab, so as that hee never attained it, and Joab met with his deserved punishment in Gods due time afterwards.

But Amasa in the mean season inclined all mens hearts to David, and they lent him word accordingly, willing him to returne. But yet an higher hand, viz: of God, is herein to be looked at, who brought it about about, that *David*s enemies thus soone became his friends and willing to subject themselves againe unto him, Prov: 16. 7.

Then the King returned to Jordan, and the Tribe of Judah came to Gilgal to meet the King and to conduct him. This Gilgal was neare to Jordan, where Joshua had in times past circumcised the Children of Israel. Hither they came, saith Josephus, but not staying here they went to Jordan and made a bridge over it, for the King and his company to passe over, that is, saith Martyr, of boates, others as Lyra hath it, say, that they did ride on horsebacke before him to finde out where the waters were shallowest, I hold rather with Martyr, because the King with his company was on foot. To Gilgal the Tribe of Judah came first, as a place at which they agreed to meet from all parts, and so together to goe to the King. Now here is no mention made of the other Tribes, whereby it seemeth, that the King neglected them, although they ought rather to have bene first certified of the time of the Kings returne, because they sent first unto him, and the Tribe of Judah not till after that the King had solicited them by Zadok and Abiathar. Wherefore hee is blamed by Tostatus, as over partiall to his owne Tribe, which gave occasion to the contention following betweene the men of Israel and these of Judah, v: 40. 41. where yet it is said, that halfe the men of Israel were with the King also, when hee passed over Jordan. And hereupon followed the insurrection of Sheba, chap: 20. which caused a new trouble.

Then Shimei came and 1000 men of Benjamin with him, together with the men of Judah, and Ziba with his 15 sonnes, and 20 servants. The men of Judah comming through the Tribe of Benjamin, Shimei had a fit opportunity to goe with them and to offer his service to the King, and therefore hee went in hope that the King would hereby be moved out of his lenity to pardon him. Whether these thousand men of Benjamin were any way under him as their captaine, is not said, but it may seeme probable, because he was of the house of Saul, and so happily a great man in his tribe. And what did they to shew their officiousnesse to the King? It is said, they passed over Jordan before him, that is, as some thinke, on horsebacke to finde out the safest way, and then the boate followed, which was prepared to carry over the King and his household. Touching Ziba, hee came to shew his thankfulnessse for the benefit lately received from the King, and he came with the Benjamites as belonging to that Tribe also. Then Shimei, who was the foreman and chiefe of this company, fell down before the King craving pardon of his former misdeameure towards him, and pleading that he came unto him the first of all the

Pp

Rom. 13.

V. 14.

V. 15.

Josephus.
Peter Martyr.
Lyra.

Tostatus.

V. 16.

V. 18.

Peter Martyr.

V. 22.

Tostatus.

V. 23.

Pellican.

V. 24.

V. 25.

the house of Ioseph, touching whom Abissai againe spake, that hee might be put to death, but David sware that he should not dye, checking the sonnes of Zerviah as he had done before Ch. 16. 10. In what sense he spake of the house of Ioseph, seeing he was of Benjamin, see before upon Ch. 16. 5. and it may further bee added according to Martyr, that Benjamin, and Ephraim, and Manasse dwelt neare together, being thus made, as it were, one people, and Numb. 2. 18. 24. this Tribe in marching is reckoned under Ephraim, which was of Ioseph, and lastly Ioseph had two Tribes, wherein hee excelled all others, wherefore the rest of Israel were named by Ephraim, as their head afterward. And as Pellican further addeth, because Ioseph and Benjamin came of one mother and had bene alwayes brought up together, it may be said, that Ruben being put from his birthright, it was conferred upon Judah and Ioseph, and so all Israel were called by them two, one part by Judah and the other by Ioseph. Now Shimei his oration to David was very effectually to move him to pardon him, when hee pleaded, that hee came to submit himselfe the first of all the house of Ioseph, as if hee had said, I have given example to others in Israel to doe likewise, and if thou shalt pardon mee, they will be the forwarder to come in also, and submit themselves, but if otherwise, such as bee not yet come, fearing thee to bee implacable, seeing all rebelled against thee, will keepe away, and those that are comming, out of the same feare will bee ready to withdraw themselves againe. And in this respect it was that David said to the sonnes of Zerviah, ye are adversaries to mee. As for Ziba it stood him in hand also to come, because his fraud was likely to be discovered. Touching these words v. 18. Shimei fell downe before the King as hee was come over Iordan: they are understood by Tostatus and some others, as if it were meant, that after the Kings comming over hee did thus. But this doth not stand with reason, but rather this word hee is to bee referred to Shimei, hee passing over Iordan did thus humble himselfe, and deferred not, till the King was come over, because that had bene too much remissness in him, and v. 39. the Kings passing over with all his family followed after this and his communication had with Barzillai.

For David swearing to Shimei, that hee should not dye, it may seeme, that he kept not his oath, because he tooke order afterwards so, as that Solomon put him to death. Here wee may not say with some, that hee meant onely, that hee should not dye at that time, or with others, for his rebellion, but he meant not that he should not dye for his cursing of the King, or with others, that he would not put him to death, not meaning yet, that no other judge afterwards should. For any of these wayes hee had deluded him and taken the Lords name in vaine. For hee desired pardon not onely for that time, but for ever, and not of his rebellion so much with others, as of his peculiar sinne in cursed speaking, and that hee might not bee committed to any other judge to bee put to death therefore, and David must bee understood to have sworne according to his meaning. It is therefore to bee held, that he meant verily, that hee should not dye for that offence onely, but he secured him not in respect of other lighter punishments, as imprisoning by Solomon in Ierusalem, which was by confining him to that City, and if herein hee should transgresse, for this hee might justly, notwithstanding this oath, be put to death. Hee meant, saith Pellican, that hee should take heede, that hee did not afterwards transgresse against any edict of the King.

Mephibosheth also, the sonne of Saul came to meete the King, &c. This history seemeth to bee misplaced by an Hysteron-proteron: for hee did not meete the King, till his comming to Ierusalem v. 25. where our translation hath it, when he was come to Ierusalem to meet the King, the Vulgate without any mention of Ierusalem, when he had met the King; Junius, he met the King, when he returned to Ierusalem; in the the Hebr. Ierusalem is mentioned, but nothing affixed to signifie, so, wherefore it may best be rendred, when Ierusalem went to meete the King, that is, all the inhabitants of the City, as it is likely they did at his approach unto it, Mephibosheth comming amongst them, because hee was able to goe no further, for his lameness, the King challenged him, as is here said. That of Barzillai then was in time done before this, although it bee placed after, because Ziba his going out, when Shimei went to meet David at Jordan was before spoken of, that the history concerning him might be fully set forth before the relation of other things. For to this end Mephibosheth comming and *David*s dealing with them both, after that hee had heard him, must needs bee here set downe. Some following the Vulgar Latin, thinke, that forsomuch as his accuser went to Jordan, hee might use meanes to goe thither also to meet the King, that there before his face hee might cleare himselfe from his calumniation, but this is against the originall verity, where expresse mention is made of Jerusalem. Touching the manner of *Mephibosheth*s comming, it is said, that hee had not washed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, &c. since the King went away till his returne in peace. Here because Hebr. it is, hee made not his feet, the Rabbines faigne, that his wooden legs are meant, wherewith hee used to goe, as Jerom hath it in Tradit: Hebr: but this is counted ridiculous by all men, for if by the word שֵׁשׁ to make, bee implied the making of feet, the same word being used, when his beard is spoken of, that must also bee taken according to the sound of the word, hee made not his beard, but if this bee absurd, then wee must understand, that it is meant, hee did not to his feet or beard, as men commonly used to doe, hee washed not the one, nor kembed the other, or cut off the exorbitant haire, but continued a most sorrowfull man for the exile of his great friend the King all the time of his absence. And this is here inserted, that his words following might the rather bee beleaved, and Ziba his false dealing with him bee the more manifestly discovered.

Sallianus.

Him being come forth of the City with the inhabitants thereof, the King first speaketh unto, and challengeth for not going with him, hee excused himselfe by his lameness, and told the King how Ziba deceived him, when hee would have prepared to goe with him upon his Ass: all which Ziba hearing could not contradict, yet by his flattery hee so prevailed with the King, and by the present, which hee had brought him before, that instead of punishing him, as a most perfidious servant, as hee ought to have done, hee gave him halfe *Mephibosheth*s land. For which the Hebrewes say, that God afterwards punished him in his posterity, by dividing part of the kingdome away to Jeroboam a servant, but this is plainly a fiction of their owne, and that a voice was heard from Heaven, Reboam and Jeroboam divide the kingdome. For that division happened not for *David*s sinnes, but for the sinnes of Solomon as is expressly said. In the Pandecks, setting forth the Imperiall lawes, a servant may not bee heard against his Master, but onely in case that hee pleadeth for his liberty, or in things concerning the Common-wealth. But David both heard Ziba against his master, and was so swayed by him, that when hee knew his fraudulent dealing, hee yet to the injury of his master rewarded him. Wherefore hee is herein condemned by all men, as dealing most unjustly, so that even the holiest of Gods servants have their errours and are not by us to bee followed in all things. It seemeth that David was so prepossessed by Ziba his tale, that hee would not beleve Mephibosheth, and therefore cutteth him off so short, saying, speake no more of this matter, that is, I cannot but thinke there was some fault in thee, but I will sift it out no further, if I should, happily it would bee worse for thee, therefore take halfe the land, that I may bee short, and bee thankfull, and let Ziba have the other halfe. Thus Maryr, who also saith, that some excuse David, understanding him, as if hee had said, speake no more to mee, hee shall have halfe the land and I will otherwise provide for thee. But no such thing is intimated in the text, but rather as hath beene said before, that David spake to him in anger. Come for thus, I gave it all first to thee, and then I gave all to Ziba, but yee cannot both have all, therefore I decree now, that yee divide.

V. 25.

Note.

Peter Martyr.

Tostatus and Dionysius note that David sinned greatly, and that many wayes.

1. In rashly giving away all his lands. 2. In that when he knew his innocency

Tostatus.
Dionysius.

hee restored unto him but a moiety againe. 3. In that he punished not his false accuser, but made his false accusation gainfull to him, as merchandizing, to nourish boldnesse in the wicked to doe the like. 4. In that he went not by the rule of any Laws, but meerly of his owne will.

V. 30. 32.

The businesse of Mephibosheth and Ziba being thus related, the Historiographer returneth to the setting forth of other passages, and first touching Barzillai the Gileadite, who was one of the three men, who had brought provision to David, Chap. 17. 27, 28. for his use and his peoples. The other two, it seemeth, were either sick or dead, or otherwise hindred, that they could not accompany the King in his returne, and therefore are no more spoken of; some suspect, that David neglected them, and onely affected Barzillai, because afterwards also hee commended his posteritie onely to Solemon, 1 King. 2. 7. and said nothing of them, but hee might bee beneficent to them also, although it bee not related, seeing all things that passed, are not set downe; but Barzillai, although very aged, viz. 80. left not the King, till hee had brought him over Jordan, but then he craved leave of David to returne home, who offered to take him with him to Jerusalem and there to requite his kindnesse. This hee refused because hee was so aged, that hee had not long to live, and his senses now began to faile him, wherefore hee desired leave to returne to his owne, that he might quietly spend the rest of his time there, and bee buried in the Sepulchers of his fathers, which would bee most contenting unto him. But hee commended Chimham his sonne to the King to goe with him, and hee was accordingly accepted of. In thus seeking to requite Barzillai his kindnesse in supplying his wants in the time of his necessitie, David was a type of Christ, saith Martyr, who will recompence any kindnesse shewed to him in his members being poore and in want. And Barzillai may bee an example to aged persons now especially to mind their death and by sequestering themselves from the delights of the world, and serving God to prepare for it, and to provide for the good of their children. Plutarch relateth a story of Craffus, who going against the Parthians, met with King Dejotarus an old man, who was building of a new Citie, and asked him, why hee in the 12. houre of his age gave himselfe to building, hee answering said, And why dost thou (O Emperour) not being very young goe against the Parthians to warre? thus taxing each other from seeking troubles to themselves in their old age.

Peter Martyr.

V. 40.

V. 42.

In the next place the Kings passing on to Gilgal is declared, and it is said, that hee was conducted by all the men of Judah and halfe the men of Israel, who hearing of the Kings returne hastned unto him, and as it seemeth, received him on this side Jordan, when hee was come over, and soone after, hee being come to Gilgal, all the rest of the men of Israel came to him also, that is, all they, that in the name of all the other tribes were sent out to doe this service to the King. They seeing that the King was already brought almost home by the men of Judah, before that they could come to him, were greatly offended, that they stayed not for them, but ambitiously sought all the honour to themselves of restoring the King unto his kingdom, and therefore expostulated with the King, saying, why have our brethren, the men of Judah stolne thee away, &c. the men of Judah stayed not to heare the Kings answer, but answered themselves, that they were nearer of kinne to the King, &c. Then the men of Israel replied, that they had ten parts in David to their one, and therefore their advice ought to have beene had in bringing the King back, whereby they meant, that in case a King were to bee elected, they should beare ten times as much sway as Judah, being more then so many voyces to one. Comester addeth, and wee are the first borne, wherein hee followeth the Septuagint, but this is not in the Hebrew, it is meant in respect of Reuben who was one of them.

V. 43.

Tostatus.

And the words of the men of Judah were fiercer then the words of the men of Israel, what they said more is not related, the Rabbins conjecture, that they told the men of Israel, that they lied, and that they came not in love to bring the King home againe: but Tostatus more probably, and more ad appositum, that they had no part in David, for from hence it seemeth, that the Rebelle Sheba replied, wee wee have no part in David, Chap. 20. Lyra saith, that the men of Israel thought themselves contemned and sleighted, because they were not called to helpe and conduct the King, especially having dealt first about his restitution. And whereas they say, that they were greater by ten parts then Judah, and that David belonged more to them, for so the vulg. Latine hath it, hee understandeth it in respect of succour and helpe against his enemies, or any support of which hee had more by farre from them, then from Judah being but one Tribe. For their fiercer words he saith nothing, but onely that being of the Kings blood they were prouder, and so spake more disdainfully, as scorning to bee thus challenged by them. Whereas the King said nothing, some blame him, as Tostatus for want of deferetion; some thinke, that the contention was so great and tumultuous, that hee feared to interpose himselfe, or refrained, because hee leaped too much to his owne Tribe: and some, that he spake, but could not bee heard.

Lyra.Peter Martyr.

CHAP. XX.

VPon the contention before spoken of, the men of Israel being discontented separated and withdrew themselves from the King, leaving him to the men of Judah onely to bee conducted home. This one Sheba of the Tribe of Benjamin seeing and thinking it a fit opportunitie to bring back the Kingdome to that Tribe againe, blew a Trumpet, and as Ierom hath it, when all were silent at the hearing of it, he spake unto them, saying, What part have wee in David, &c. to your tents (O Israel;) upon which they all followed him. Hee is said to bee a man of Belial, that is, wicked, and one that shak't off the yoke, and most probably was a Prince of the Tribe of Benjamin, and so a man of great authoritie, otherwise the people would not so readily have followed him. By his speech which hee used to them hee meant, that they should provide themselves of another King, seeing they were so sleighted by David. Martyr and others thinke this Sheba to have beene of the kindred of Saul, and that hee was never well affected to David, wherefore now having an opportunitie hee declareth himselfe, happily thinking, that hee might bee made King over Israel, as Isboseth had been. But the hand of God was also herein to punish David yet somewhat more with the troubles of sedition, as hee had conspired against Uriah, and it may be, that this came upon him for his unjust dealing with Mephiboseth. But God who turneth evill into good to his faithfull servants permitted this also for David's good. 1. That the seditious and falsehearted might bee rooted out of the Land. 2. That seeing the instabilitie of men hee might not trust unto them, but to God onely. 3. That hee might ascribe the reestablishing of him in his kingdome not to men but to God and give him all the praise.

V. 1, 2.

Hieronym.Peter Martyr.

Then David coming to his house put those ten Concubines, which hee left to keepe the house inward and fed them, but went not in unto them, and they continued in Widowhood to the day of their death; which is spoken, not because their husband was dead, but as it were dead unto them, because hee never went in to any of them after this. The reason why hee did thus unto them was because Absalom had defiled them by incest, neither is it said, that they did strive against that unlawfull attempt, but rather, as may bee conjectured, they consented being drawne by his great beauty and present kingly dignitie. And if they committed this foule sinne willingly, they were worthy to be put to death, but for so much as this was uncertaine, David would not use so great rigour, but onely punisht them by imprisonment, and restraining them from the libertie of marriage, which other women divorced have. Theodoret saith, that David would not suffer them to marry to any other man, lest it should turne to an occasion or pretext of aspiring to the Kingdome, as was judged of Adonijah afterwards, when hee asked Abisag to wife, 1 King. 3. And as Martyr saith, hee suffered them not to goe abroad, lest by being seene the memory of Abfaloms foule act should bee renewed to his disgrace. If it be demanded, what if they could not live single, might they justly be debarred from marrying again? Martyr answereth, happily it was done by their consent, because they had once been unlawfully known by a man, they were willing henceforth to persist in holy chastitie to the end of their lives, & being separated from the company of men to serve God continually. Lyra saith, that they were separated à thoro, that is, from the bed but not à vinculo, that is, the matrimoniall band, and this was done, as necessitie required, because Dauids son had lien with them, whereby they became, as it were, one flesh with him, and consequently his daughters-in-law, and by the Law of God a man may not go in to his daughter-in-law. And forasmuch as they were a Kings wives, (as appeareth by this, that they are said to live in widowhood) they were of two great dignitie for any subjects to marry them, although by a Bill of divorce the matrimoniall bands had been dissolved. Pellican saith, that hee shut them up that they might bewaile their foule sinne past all the residue of their lives, for they should rather have died, then yielded to Abfalom in so great wickednesse, which was aggravated by the impudency in committing it so publicly.

V. 3.

Theodoret.Peter Martyr.

Lyra.

Pellican.

V. 4, 5.
6, 7.

Lyra.

Peter Martyr.
Pellican

Iosephus.

V. 8, 9.

Then David commanded Amasa to assemble all the men of Judah unto him within three dayes, and when hee stayed longer, David bade Abishai to goe with his Lords men after Sheba immediatly, saying, that otherwise the danger might bee greater, then that by Abfalom. Wherefore hee went forth with Joabs men, &c. Lyra for the clearing of this place saith, that Dauids whole Army consisted of three parts. 1. Of the men of Judah, who alwayes cleaved unto him, and over them Amasa was Captaine, as there was a particular Captaine over the men of every other Tribe. 2. Of Dauids servants, and such stipendiary souldiers, as alwayes were kept about him, as a guard, and over these was Abishai. 3. Of other valiant men of all the other Tribes of Israel, who cleaved constantly to David from the very dayes of Saul, as is shewed, 1 Chron. 12. and over these as the greatest Army was Joab. Amasa therefore was employed to gather the men of Judah, and Abishai, when hee deferred his coming, was appointed without delay to goe forth with the Kings men, Joab being in the meane season busied in gathering together his Army out of all the other Tribes to joyne with Abishai, as appeareth, Verf. 8. where Amasa is said to have met with them, that is, Joab and Abishai, and Verf. 7. Joabs men went out with him. Martyr and Pellican contrariwise say, that the King having promised Amasa that he should be Captaine in the room of Joab now began to put him into this office, meaning that Joab should not bee any further employed, and this Martyr conjectureth to bee the reason, why Amasa stayed longer in gathering the men of Judah together then the time set him, because they were affected to Joab, and therefore would not willingly submit themselves to a new Captaine. And when Amasa stayed, the King being yet unwilling to imploy Joab, sendeth out Abishai, but Joab voluntarily with such men as hee had went with him, and having slaine Amasa resumieth his chiefe captainship againe, not expecting to bee called unto it by the King. And this seemeth to agree best, seeing no mention is made of Joabs going out to gather up men, and therefore that of Lyra is rejected both by Dionysius and Tostatus, as founded upon a false ground, viz. that Amasa was made Captaine under Joab. Iosephus erroneously saith, that it was spoken to Joab, which is here said to bee spoken to Abishai, that he should goe out with the Kings men. But why the King feared more danger by Amasa his delay and Sheba his rebellion, then by Abfalom, all agree, that it was because hee began now to suspect Amasa, as not being true hearted towards him, and when Abfalom rebelled, they went with the sonne against the father, many of them doubtlesse unwillingly, but now being exasperated, if they should make his professed enemy King over them, they would fight more desperately and resolutely against him.

Abishai and his brother Joab being gone as farre as the great stone in Gibeon to pursue Sheba, Amasa came unto them, this was saith Iosephus 60 furlongs from Ierusalem, and here Joab pretending to salute Amasa in love slew him, with the right hand taking him by the beard, as if hee would kisse him, and in the meane season taking up his sword with his left hand, which when hee bowed himselfe fell to the ground, that Amasa perceived not, he smote him under the fifth rib, as hee before had done Abner, that hee presently fell downe dead. This murder was committed by Joab, that hee might not lose his chiefe Captainship, to which David now began to advance Amasa, but his pretence might bee, that hee had not dealt well with the King, in staying longer, then he had appointed him, and because hee tooke part before with Absalom. For this indeed Amasa was worthy to be cut off, and although the King intended him honour, yet the vengeance of God would not suffer him to live to enjoy it, yet Joab was worthy also for this to die as a murdurer, as hee did under Salomon. But in the meane season hee went unpunished and returned to his former dignitie, taking upon him the leading of the Army, as in times past, whereby hee was so strengthened, as that David could not indeed doe execution upon him, as he deserved.

the

